He could not see them burn and in a clear, strong voice asked—"Boys, where is my barn?" Where is Mitley? Boys, where is my barn?" Some boy shouted that Miller was dead he sank back, burst into tears and wept like a child.

Pheasants are described very fascinating birds, tame, sociable, very fond of being petted, and wept at this touching manifestation of affectionate devotion to a fallen comrade.

How in a Dance House.

J. Lorenz keeps a saloon at Detroit city limits on Michigan avenue, and has dance halls connected with his saloon and dances. In addition to the usual programme on last Saturday, a raffle was announced to take place at 8 o'clock, a party of Ninth Ward roughs visited the place, ostensibly with the intention of raising a row. They were refused admittance but hung around the building till some opportunity occurred to gain admission. About 12 o'clock the raffle was finished, and during excitement the roughs slipped right through posts, and the gang worked themselves to Mixing with the crowd they began to quarrel, and the fight would quickly ensue, when a fight commenced. Lorenz was seven-tified to quiet the parties. The gang were prepared for and determined to have a fight, and soon became scattered, and pistols revolvers were displayed. One man was knocked senseless, Lorenz received a pistol ball in his thigh, and Mitley received a gash on the head. During the melee, an outsider, who was assaulted, fired at his assailant, the ballet whistling into the house and lodging under the ear of a man named Pennock, from Springwells. The wound is not serious, but painful. The scene overhead in the dance hall was exciting, women crawl through the windows on to adjacent roofs and than dropped down on to the ground. Finally, order was restored, the gang left, highly satisfied with the evening's entertainment.

FINE PROSPECTS.—A new mine has been opened near Sturgeon, called the Hoffing Mill mine, which the Journal pronounces the most promising of all the new mines in that vicinity. Two fine veins have been struck in this mine and ship the ore at a cost than almost any other mine in the district. The depot appears to be large and running along the ore for a high mile or half, presents unusual advantages for rapid and economical mining. Improved machinery is to be put in and must have been improved of the original. The ore is furnished to furnaces with the process, but it is in a position to second furnaces. The ore is a very fine quality of iron, with enough mixture of manganese, and consequently reduces easily. It is the intention to ship several thousand tons. Eight men are now employed, and it is the intention to employ every easy matter to run the daily product up to 400 or 500 tons.

One of the Iowa troolen in Indiana lately got a divorce on the ground that his intended his intention to decide against her. The lady, answer, began to shed tears. He was unmoved, simply edging his chair close to the whipped. Thus right, exclaimed the lady, "I forgive your decree." In less than ten minutes she was made a female man.

A Georgia paper says that Miss Kate Fark the woman without arms, who was lately married in Georgia, to Horace Greeley, had a groom Yankee. But she seemed happy, and we suppose she will be satisfied on examination in a court room.

THE ERIE RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

As reported by an Eye Witness.

The following account of an accident on the Erie Railway on Saturday evening was received by Sunday.

Monroe, Mich., June 24.—The locomotive of the express train on the Erie Railroad, due here at 12:30 last night, exploded her boiler 5 miles this side of Adrian, Michigan, instantly killing the fireman, fatally injuring John D. Hollister, who was riding on the engine, and a lady passenger.

An eye witness who was on the train at the time, gives the following facts, as published as some additional particulars in reference to the calamity.

Our informant describes the scene as fearful in the extreme. The train in the vicinity were cut down by pieces of the boiler, the track torn up, and the ties cut in two. The engineer whose name is Thompson, was horribly burned and scalded, one leg was broken 16 two places and the bones protruded through the flesh. It is next to impossible for him to recover. He leaves a wife and two children. The fireman was killed instantly, his neck being broken and his body mangled and burned terribly. John D. Hollister, who is reported in the above telegram as slightly wounded, is the son and partner of Hollister & Co., of Detroit. He is 1750 badly scalded. When the mud was washed from his face and neck the skin came with it, and he suffered from scalds in the thighs and legs. He has received no internal injuries he may recover. The lady mentioned above as being fatally injured was entirely unhurt.

The cause of the explosion is entirely unknown. There appeared to have been no lack of water in the boiler. The fireman, who examined the fragments attributes it to the extreme thinness of the boiler, the plates having apparently been both eaten by rust.

Immediately upon the occurrence of the accident, the conductor caused signal lights to be hung out on the rear of the train warn approaching trains of the danger thus presented the occurrence of a similar accident. It is said to have been secured, to conveys the wounded to a place of safety and physicians sent for. One circumstance in this connection deserves special mention. The Homeopathic College was aboard the train at the time, was entirely unhurt, and immediately on the alarm being given, the wounded were suffering untold agony and the cry went up for help, this fellow kept cool heads, took his pocket case and never offered the slightest advice or assistance, now let it be known that he was a physician.

Our informant states that the indignation was so great when his character was afterward found out that he would have been mobbed if he had ventured to show himself.

One of the most miraculous escapes on record occurred in the mail car. One half of the car, the whole of one side, was crushed into ten thousand fragments, and yet the mail agent and express messenger, both of whom were in car, escaped with not a scratch.

An affecting incident occurred during the removal of the engineer from the scene of the disaster. Although he was so badly scalded, he was able to walk a few rods, when he sank down on the grass and wept like a child. Fellow-sufferers, who were near him, pitied so some additional particulars in reference to the calamity.

A MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR

About 12 o'clock on Saturday night, a party of cigar makers were enjoying themselves in the garden attached to Loewer's saloon, corner of Antoine and Beaubien sts, Antoine street, Detroit, and soon after a young man named Henry Doerhing entered, but for some reason his company was not wanted, and he was ordered out. He was dismissed by the proprietor, who turned off the gas and turned on the disturbers. It appears that Augustus Geisler was one of the original party of cigar makers, and directed offensive epithets at Doerhing, who then left the garden, but soon was led into the saloon and separated, Doerhing and his crowd departing first, and were soon after followed by the cigar makers. In a few minutes after Doerhing was assisted into the saloon by two companions, Jno. Hobbnet and one Boenighausen, and gasping for breath he stated that he had been stabbed by Geisler. The accusation he refused to entertain the wounded man as he did not keep a hospital, and he was removed to the house of Dr. Elisteman's residence in the vicinity Officer Farrell discovered the crowd and in response of Doerhing limited up Geisler whom he charged with the offence. The accused was found on the steps of a neighboring house, also wounded in the thigh, by a stab cut and a slight wound on the temple, evidently made by a pistol ball. He was bleeding freely and was able to walk, and in response to the charge, he also replied the accusation. Geisler asserts that he was wounded by one or more of Doerhing's confederates but made no complaint against his accuser. It seemed impossible to procure surgical aid in that locality, as a certain physician thought it if he attended to the wounded he would appear in court, and the two men were removed to the Station. Doerhing was sinking rapidly from loss of blood and an examination by Dr. Lyster, who was sent for, proved that the instrument had entered the left lung and made a gash between three and four inches in length which permitted the air to pass through The wound was dressed and the man was removed to the residence of his mother, No. 234 Montcalm street, where he lies in a critical condition.

Doerhing is a cabinet maker and has worked in the manufactory of Simons, Clough & Co. He is aged about 20, and the attendant physicians express slight hopes of recovery.

It is said that Doerhing was seen to give Beaubighausen a pistol soon after the affray, and that after the affray both ran in opposite directions and have not since been seen. Geisler's actions are not dangerous and he will be detained until the wounded Doerhing's wound is determined. The row occurred in the middle of Antoine street, above Adams avenue, and from all accounts it appears to have been a free fight, indulged in by all hands, the participants of which can only be ascertained by an examination in a court room.
