THE REVIEW

The regular inflow of letters from readers requesting copies of the Review, since the inception of its publication three years ago, has been very encouraging to us. It indicates that our rapidly-increasing readers have found the Review useful.

In a bid to make it even more useful to our readers, we have decided to delete the Institute's Schedule of Seminars and Lectures and instead, beginning with this issue, include at least one long article in each issue in addition to the normal reports. One such article in this issue which readers will find interesting and informative is a paper on "African Studies in Germany Past and Present" read at the Institute by Professor Dr. E. Herberland, Director of the Institute of Ethnology at the University of Mainz, West Germany. In his paper Dr. Herberland gives a comprehensive survey of the development of African Studies in Germany from its early beginnings to the present day, mentioning in particular the four men - Diedrich Westerman, Car Meindof, Leo Frobenius and Herman Baumann - who have made invaluable contributions to African Studies in Germany.
