POISON INFORMATION CENTERS

Chemicals play an important part in turf management. Many of the chemicals used on golf courses are labeled "POISON", and therefore an element of danger in exposure, handling, or use is involved. When used in accordance with the manufacturer's directions, chemicals are perfectly safe; however, where the human element enters into the picture, there is always some chance for error.

Agricultural chemicals are often compounded from rather complex materials. Many of them are commonly known only by trade name. For this reason, physicians may be unable to immediately determine the proper remedy. Should a man on your golf course become ill after handling a chemical material, take him to a physician, tell him the trade name of the chemical used, and give him this list of Poison Information Centers. The physician should then be able to provide prompt and proper treatment.

Keep this list handy. When calling any of these centers, ask for the "Poison Control Center".
