

So I'm Cheryl P. Johnson, I am a servant leader here in Detroit, called to serve some of the most vulnerable people in our community. I am blessed to be a 58 year old woman who has lived life on purpose and with no regrets. I love that... that if I die today, I was I have no regrets.

At Croydon School in Kalamazoo, Michigan. I worked with autistic kids. There was a little guy named Kyle and he could not speak. By the end of the three months in working with him, I remember him saying, "My name is Kyle"... that literally changed my whole life – that I could impact a child. If I could do that, then I could impact the world and move it. And so that catapulted me into always doing something where I can have an impact and change lives and improve the quality of life. And I've been blessed to be able to do it my entire life.

I think we have... I know we have some of the most resourceful, resilient people who work really, really hard, not just in order to see success, but to see success for others.
