The speaker dwell at leagth in the subject of representation; and of the unrequality of the voting powers in the House of Commons from large cities and towns, as compared with the representation of small buroughs. With regard for the cost of royalty he said; "We have first to deal with the sum of £373,000 per year expended ed upon the privy pures and upon the household, to which Fadd the royal bounts and royal atms, which amount to £13,000 making up the sum to £385,000." He continued to enumerate the various expenditures of royalty, showing that it cost at least £1,000,000 a year and probably much more. The responsibility of these oppressions upon the people, he consideted rested with the Queen. He said, in conclusion: "I doubt whether if the charges to which I have alleded to are all well founded, monarchy would not set its house in order. There is a wide spread bellif that a republic here is only a matter of education and time. It is said that some day a commonwealth will be our government. If you can show me a fair chance that a republic here will be free from the political corruption that hangs about monarchy, I say for my part, and I believe the middle classes is general will say, let it come. It is the doctrine of the Mormon Church that no woman can get to heaven without the aid of a man, except in very special cases. To be married and a mother in Israel is eternal salvation in heaven for the saintess. Without this, in the other world, the deceased saintess must serve as a kitchen-girl or waiting-maid to some resurected mother in Israel. This strange world doctrine is thoroughly helieved by the Mormon women, and hence their eager, hes to get married, either in or out of polygamy. A case illustrating this has come to ure knowledge. A beautiful young girl of seventeen was on her death-bed, and there in the presence of witnesses, the living and thus gain eternal glory in the kingdom of God. The elders complied with her wish, the editor reached the death-bed, and there, in the presence of witnesses, the living and the dying were united in the holy bonds of marrimony. The editor was already a married man, but his religion made him take the dying girl to wife. Instances of this kind are not rare. The speaker dwelf at length in the subject of representation; and of the manuality of the vorting powers in the House of Commons from large cities and towns, as compared with the representation of small burougns. With regard for the cost of royalty he said. "We have first to deal with the sum of £372,000 per year expended upon the privy purse and upon the household, to which fadd the royal bound and royal atms, which amount to £13,000 making up the sum to £335,000." He continued to enumerate the various expenditures of royalty, showing that it cost at least £1,000,000 a year and probably much more. The responsibility of these oppressions upon the people, he considered rested with the Queen. He said, in conclusion: "I doubt whether if the charges to which I have alleded to are all well founded, monarchy would not set its bone in order. There is a wide spread behit that a republic here is only a matter of education and time. It is said that some day a commonwealth will be our government If you can show me a fair chance that a republic here will be free from the political corruption that hangs about monarchy.
