MARQUETTE Mining Journal:

Some time last February two young gents of this city called upon a well-regulated, kindly woman about her daughter Fanny or her baccomist and informed him that they had made a wager of a box of cigars, and they would take them now and pay for them when the bet was decided. The tradesman readily gave them the eweeds as they were both responsible young and charged their account nine dollars therefor. The tobaccomist waited and waited and waited, still the boys didn't come around and square up; so one day last week he made out his bill and presented it to one of them who said he knew nothing about it and referred him to the other young man. he knew nothing about it and referred him to the other young man. But the other young man. But the other young man told him upon being interviewed that the bet had not yet been decided. "What is the bet?" asked the merchant. "Why I bet that when the steeple of the Presbyterian Church fell, it would fall to the north, and the other if held we it it would fall to the north, and the other in which he was imbedded, and where fellow bet it would fall in a southerly direction." An appeal to his honor Esquire (Keefe was the result of this autounding regulation, who decided that the boys must "come down" as the steeple naves."

BY MARY G. MORRISON.

Beyond the fields with summer glowing. I see a grave where flowers are growing, Where grateful hands are always throwin Bright laurels one by one.

A splendid heart at rest is lying,
A brave heart, victor in its trying,
That left humanity when dying,
A great work grandly done.

Within those fields with samilght burni His scanty living daily carning. A man the fragment hay is turning Late many a beap; Slow are the eyes his watch his raking Or idly signs of weather taking. The boart to impulse only waking. The root still dumb, alleep.

Which is the death? We are receiving:

New courage from a soul yet giving.

A bleasing from a heart yet living.

An inapiration still,

Which is the He? A dull, blind straying

A tell no grander though obeying?
