walk, a moment later, as if he wanted to give the matter some kind of consideration.

How he would have driven if he could have looked along the road ahead of him, just beyond where it entered the hemelock-woods!

Distant as were her neighbors, Milly Van Vleeck was too robust and healthy-minded a young lady to remain housed up, even in winter weather, and she had never looked resier or prettier in all her life than she did that afternoon as the tripped along the road she was as a pleasant country hostelry, and the road she was demang of such a possibility as danger there and then.

Down the road she was coming, and the frosty snow that crackled under her light feet was not more innocent or fear-less.
