A POEM OF REMEMBRANCE-TO BELLE. BY ST. GEORGE BEST Atthough I wander for and wide
From summy isle to frozen sea,
I dwelt in memory by thy side,
My thoughts are only thoughts of these I roam where Briton's daughters shine I muse on France's vine-clad hills, I fly where rippling waters lave My feet on fair Italia's shore;

Her maidens framed so witchingly, Are not so castly forgot, it thinking as I do of thee,. The charm that binds me sin Daniel, you are certainly the awkwardest man lever saw. What makes you go I stray where Grecian heroes bled, stumbling along without looking what you're up to? Won't you ever learn to Where Grecian women elsewhere at I stand with bared and reverent head On far-famed, deathless Marathon. I haste where Moslem women veil Their beauty from the curious gas Where love is life, and not a tale Told in a few unhappy days.

What though I fly to balmy shores. Where'er I journey there thou art.
E'en though it be from pole to pole;
A well-loved country claims my heart.
And thou my love, my life, my soul.
