KATE'S ADVENTURE.

"Nell, do tell me who owns the adjoining grounds. Ain't they just lovely?' asked Kate Ashton, as standing near the hedge she peeped through the interstices into the yard beyond.

"They belong to one Gerald Egerton," replied Nell, "and are considered superior to any in the neighborhood." "Is Mr. Egerton married?" was

"I will investigate immediately. Such golden opportunity must not be lost," replied Kate, threading her way among a maze of tangled weeds which she assured Nell must be at least of a century's. erowth.

The gate was found, and, after many vain endeavors to open it wide enough to gain admittance, they at last succeeded. Kate passed through the opening, bidding Nell follow her, but, being of a rather timid disposition, she refused.

Wending her way alone through the serpentine walks, under huge elm trees, past flower-beds in all the splendor of their summer bloom, toward the grand old house, flanked on each side by grim and sturdy caks. grotto, formed in the side of a hill, and covered with large stones. It looked like the work of nature rather than art, so irregular was the construction.

"What a picturesque little spot! Here I shall spend the greater part of my time until the ogre's return," she said, ter having explored the interior. Large stones, rough and unhewn, formed resting places within; several of them being placed in close proximity formed a wide bench. At last, having satisfied her curiosity for one day, she returned.

Archdescon Denison, of the Church England, has written the following let ter on the subject of cheese making:

ice to you in this matter. Where farmers have come to know that cheese factories are a great mistake, as I have always judged them to be, they are recalling cheese making into their own families, which was the way in which all good Cheddar cheese used to be made, and must be made, if it is to preserve its character and price. Home making and elements of good cheese making. It is almost inconceivable that any farmers in the Cheddar cheese country should have monopoly by allowing themselves to be deceived by the American example into artificial-drying and rapid sale. A real Cheddar should not be eaten until eighteen months from date of making, and is best at two years from it. No American or factory-made cheese smells sweetly after six months, when it is a race between the men and the maggots. The public generally have been taken in because ninety-nine out of a hundred who buy cheese never buy a whole cheese, but a hunch of cheese, and then eat it up before they find out how badly made and how nasty it is. There is no country in Europe, or out of it, that can make prime Cheddar cheese except Somerset, and it is the worst folly to go and throw away a monopoly, being a natural gift. We had better go back and, if need be live on bread and water two years that in the third year we and our customers may be able once more to five on bread and real Cheddar cheese. There is no better food in the worldfew foods so good, and we have been throwing it all away like idiots."

EQUAL TO THE EMERGENCY. A father started for the West from Maryland, with his daughter, to get her away from the young man whom she wanted to marry. They stopped at Harper's Ferry to change trains. The father left the girl in the waiting-room while he went out to mail a postal-card informing his wife that the journey was proceeding satisfactorily. When he re turned she was gone, and, when he found her half an hour later, she was married to the suitor, who had followed closely with a marriage license. The license having been issued in Maryland, the ceremony could not be performed on the Virginia side of the river. To cover this point, the lover had stationed a clergyman on the bridge, andto him they lost no time in hurrying. A similar technical difficulty interfered with a Connecticut wedding. The couple took out a license for a marriage intended to take place in an adjoining town. The clergyman struck the wedding party-aghast by announcing the blunder, but then suggested a trip afect across the boundary. The knot was ac-

It is a treat to see a Parisienne cross a middly street. She advances on tip-too to the edge of the pavement. There she poises like a bird ready for flight, and then deftly she raises her dress no more than enough to show her snowy, embroidered skirt, the dainty hose and elegant bottines, and without more delay she trips across, too and heel barely touching, and mud refusing to cling to the fairy feet that hardly leave an impression on it. they are found traceable to a violation of hygienic laws. If the ravages of cholera, or yellow fever and typhoid may be controlled in a great measure by the observance of such laws, why may not scarlet fever, measles and whooping cough be prevented, or very much limited? The prevailing sentiment that all children must necessarily have these diseases once finds no support whatever in the nature of physiology, or in the principles of hygiene. The fact is already well established that the spread and violence of scarlet fever, by isolation, cleanliness and ventilation, are very much modified, and, in some instances, entirely prevented. We believe the time will ome when scarlet fever, measles and whooping cough, which now destroy such multitudes of children, will become, in a measure, things of the past It is not only the great amount of sick ness and no riality occasioned directly ty these diseases, but the impaired con stitutions and other complaints conse quent upon them, that may also be prevented. When the community realizes fully that the means of preserving health, especially in early life, are placed, in a great measure, in its own hands, a far higher estimate will be placed upon the value of human life, and the responsibility for its preservation will be found to depend in a great measure upon human efforts.

Many of the agricultural journals are sorely troubled to know whether a hen sits or sets.
