EARLY SWEET CORN.—An intelligent farmer says: "I prefer the Minnesota to any sweet sort I have yet tried, because the stalks grow about five feet high. I is an abundant producer and the ears are larger and have larger kernels of them than any other of the earliest kinds. I do not like the dwarf sorts, the stalks of which scarcely grow above three feet high. The ears of such are so small as to be scarcely worth cooking. and if they come a few days earlier than Minnesota, Concord and others, this does not compensate me for the diminutive size.
