The small farms are, therefore, at a disadvantage in the use of machinery, and, for this reason, are sold to the larger proprie-tors, while the small independent farmers are becoming relatively fewer relatively fewer year by year. The result is not favorable to education or the advancement in civilization of this class. Large farms lessen the population on a given area of view to discouraging them from making land, and, therefore, render it more difficult to maintain schools. But this is pendent laborers. The aggregation of small farms into large ones is to be deplored, and the effective means to prevent this result is an intelligent co-operation among small farmers in the purchase of such laborsaving implements and machines as are necessary to perform every agricultural operation most economically. If a farmer of 400 or 500 acres can afford to purchase machines that cheapen farm labor, then eight farmers of 50 acres, or five farmers of 50, and two of 75 acres, or an aggregate of scres, made up of any-sized farms, can quite as well afford to use in common these machines. These farms should be contiguous, and nearly in a square body, so as to lessen the distance When this is the case, the machines cost no more per hundred acres; and as each farmer takes a share in proportion to his acreage to be worked, he is placed upon an equality with the most favored large farmers, and can compete with them in the production of the same crops. These small farms usually furnish ample labor to occupy the owner and his family, and with the sid of the eo operation here mentioned he might, having a little active zeal in his occureach a much higher proportional production than the large farmer.

Let us suppose that the expensive agnicultural machines required to work 400 acres will cost $1,000; this would make the share of a fifty-acre farm $125—a sum that any well-worked farm of that size could well afford. It may

-At the meeting of the Northwestern Ohio Teachers' Association recently the current of discussion set in the direction of practical improvement in the public schools. Moral training was advocated and the abolition of demanded. One teacher declared that there is too much attempted in our schools, that there should be fewer studies, and that more time should be build up and strengthen character. He especially urged the teaching of pure English and the inconsistency of teaching advanced science when the pupil is scarcely able to frame a respectable sentence in the mother tongue.

Mammas have a pride in gratifying this natural desire on the part of their children, and pressure is brought to bear on the father of the family to grant the desired indulgence. If such natural desire extended only to dress, it might not work so much mischief, but it grows till it includes houses, furniture, equipage, the table, traveling, and all the rest.

Now, it requires a constant exercise of moral courage on the part of both parents and children in moderate circumstances to withstand influences so notent, and to live and dress and keep within their means. But it can be done, and it is done by those who will not allow themselves to be swept away by every breeze and carried away by every social current, by those who insist on doing a little thinking on their own account, not only withstanding the drift public sentiment, but, when duty calls, moving directly in the face of it.
