THE STORY TELLER

ONE OF THESE DAYS.

Curled in the window-seat, watching the leaves whirling, whilst rain-pelted down on the roof, dark seemed the world that day.

Here to the window-seat, where you and I, with the old-fashioned feet, time hurried by, here, with the old-fashioned feet, time hurried by.

Now by the window-seat, where you and I, with the old-fashioned feet, time hurried by, here, with the old-fashioned feet, time hurried by.

THE VICTIM OF CEDAR CULCH.

Philip Barton was one of the adventurous spirits who in the early days of the gold fever started for California.

But Philip Barton, who was of another metal, would not go back, and with no other companion than his rifle, and with a love of roving than a desire for gold.

Having, as I have said, little rest for Philip, he did not join any of the other parties that were making their way toward California.

Thrilling Experiences in the Work of a Pearl-Diver.

"I was once a diver—not a wrecker, but a pearl-diver, and a hard business it was," recently observed the Captain of a Spanish brig to a reporter.
