THE STORY TELLS

FOOT-PRINTS ON THE SAND.

On a sandy beach, where the waves were breaking, the children were playing. They were laughing and shouting, and their feet were leaving prints in the sand.

"Where did you go?" asked Ann Polly, looking at the prints.

"I don't know," said Della, looking at the prints.

"You're not in earnest are you?" she said.

"I am," said Della, looking at the prints.

"What a funny thing is a word in season," said Ann Polly.

"Off one of us only happened to be clever," said Della.

"I'm trying to think, Della. You can't think of a word that would have explained to me that boy's name."

This of women, two others and a little boy were the only customers in the store.

"What a fine-looking woman!" said Ann Polly, looking at Della.

"I don't know," said Della, looking at Ann Polly.

"You're not in earnest are you?" she said.

"I am," said Della, looking at Ann Polly.

A Common Perplexity.

It is a common perplexity for a mother living in a New England village to write to her son in New York City for advice.

"I don't know," said Della, looking at Ann Polly.

"You're not in earnest are you?" she said.

"I am," said Della, looking at Ann Polly.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A six-year-old boy broke his neck in Oregon, O. T. M., the other day in trying to play with a steam engine.

"I don't know," said Della, looking at Ann Polly.

"You're not in earnest are you?" she said.
