

ARABIAN SUPERSTITIONS

Among the many cruel and superstitious customs practiced by the ancient Arabs, and one to which Mahomet actively put a stop, was that of burying their female children alive, which was apparently most often done to avoid the expense of their maintenance, though sometimes from a mistaken idea of sparing them a life of doubt or disgrace. The following observations: "An excellent son-in-law is a grave," and "To bury daughters is an act of mercy," sufficiently indicate Arab feeling on this point; and the prophet then said, "Behold, I have showed how many children have been killed by only enumerating his sons, for," said a Sinai Arab once said to the writer, their eyes—El Benat batteloh—daughters are good for nothing." A terrible story of the death of Kais ibi Asim, one of the rulers of Tadmor, who, finding one of his daughters was abandoned at birth— and brought up in her family unknown to him, got possession of her and buried her alive. They relate that the only tears that this man ever knew to shed was when he buried his little daughter before coming to his death. He then, they say, he brushed the grave dust off his beard.

THE KING AND THE MADMAN.

A certain King went to visit a madhouse and found there an intelligent young man, who, after replying sensibly to a number of questions put to pressed the latter, saying: "You've asked me many things; I will now give you one. At what period does a sleeper enjoy his sleep most?" The King reflected awhile and said: "While he is actually sleeping." "That can be," said the madman, "for he has no perception while he is sleeping. When he goes to sleep," said the King, "How can one enjoy anything?" "That," said the madman, "before it comes!" "Then," said the King, "after he has fallen asleep." "Nay," said the madman, "a man can not be said to enjoy a thing until he has perceived it. So I said was the King with the other's that he determined to make a communion of him, had a table set out in

At the window of the madhouse, he bade his attendants hand a cup of wine to himself and one to his mad brother. "You are young," said the latter, "that you may become like me—if I drink mine, whom shall I like?" The King, on hearing this speech, threw away the cup, and remained a total abstainer for evermore.

A CUNNING FOX.

Two travellers had walked in the forest, and had just killed a couple of birds for their dinner. Before they could dress the birds the hour of prayer came, and they turned like good students to their devotions. A fox, who had been skulking in the neighbourhood, seeing the travellers engaged in prayer, suddenly entered the forest.

fowls before their eyes. Prayers were then begun lamenting their loss, and to their amazement, they beheld relief at a little distance, dragging the fowl submissively behind him, and then the owl fell in his mouth. He then deposited it in the ground, and took away, with every sign of repentance and contrition. They at once perceived the occurrence as a miraculous answer to their own piety, and ran back up the fowl which had been deposited near to them. On reaching that spot, however, the fowl had disappeared, and only restored the skin and the feathers on, and in the meanwhile slyly stolen around to their fireplace and made off with the re-

A certain shepherd had a dog of which he was very fond, and which owing to his great grief, died, was buried by him with every mark of affection and regret. The cadri of the village, whose ill-will the shepherd had long been nursing, informed him that he had been seen to bury a dog of his, and ordered him to be brought before him, on the serious charge of profanity in making mock-her the ceremonies of the Mohammedan religion, and buried an animal with sacred rites. On being asked what he had to say in his defence, the prisoner then addressed the magistrate, and in a few sentences was pleased to bear my store from

James House's man had a lively time here would offer a reward of $20.00 and a board of supervisors would offer a like amount for the discovery and apprehension of the Crouch murderers, that the guilty one would be brought to justice.

A recent change in the postal law makes it possible to re-forward third and fourth class matter sent to the post office at the office of delivery, instead of notifying the person to whom the matter is sent to forward extra postage for its delivery. This change will be a great convenience to senders of newspapers, and the only wonder is that the department hasn't made the reform before.

In speaking of the county officers, the Courier has this to say of two of our friends: "Hon. John J. Robinson, a great, powerful, built six-footer, with pleasing face and pleasant greeting—is Mr. subject of this sketch. His office story and practical life are full of interest and the only wonder is that the department hasn't made the reform before."

The Sunday school of the M. E. church are to participate in a sleigh ride to Manchester and partake of a dinner on their return, next Saturday, should the sleighing last, and indications at present point to no disappointment.
