Who knows how to make cracker crullers? In a dearth of dread, when Bridget has kicked over the traces, or mother is sick, or Aunt Sarah with her large family has unexpectedly arrived, try this experiment for a side dish to balance the plate of biscuit on the other side of the table. Split common cold water with a trifle of salt dissolved in it. Soak the divided crackers, one while the spider is heating on the stove and a small lump of butter melting within it. When the crackers are within it. When the crackers are partly swollen and are tender throughout, drain them quickly from the cold water, and lay them in the spider, there to sputter and brown on both sides. Serve neatly piled in a hot plate, and add more butter while eating, if the palate demands.

Pear pies are articles not known as familiarly as they should be. Unripe pears should not be used; but when those of any variety are nearly mellow enough to eat, then prepare a crust and line pie-plates as for apple pies The pears must be cored and sliced; they need not be pared unless the skin is leathery. Sweeten moderately, dot with butter and add a very little cold vater, according to the juiciness of the fruit. Use no spice. Be sure that the undercrust is sufficiently done; an in-fallible test is that of its slipping upon the plate. The crust should be brown and the filling, of honey richness. Eat

A hasty peach pudding may be made as follows. Durin the liquor from a can of peaches. Wet with it about a cupful and a-half of ceraline-more or less, according to the juiciness of the peaches. It should not be too thick to pour. Add two well-beaten eggs, a speck of salt, and a half cup of sugar, Pour this mixture into a buttered pudding dish. Now drop the reserved peaches into the center of the mixture and bake from fifteen to twenty-five minutes. No sauce is required, and this pudding is good hot or cold. WHEN AND WHOM TO MARRY. Rules That Have Been Tried and Seldor Found Wanting.

Whom to marry and when to marry are grave questions that confront many people who have not yet come to that marriage is a fottery, says the Bos-Heuce arise questions like the following.

1. How can I tell when I love? 2. Can I afford to marry if poor?

S. What sort of a person will I be appy with?

4. Will I always be loved? done much to abbreviate expression

5. Will I always love?6. Will I ever see somebody whom I ill love more? 7. Shall I marry young or shall I vait until Lam mature?

8. Should a man marry a widow? 9. Should a girl marry a widower? 10. Is it always well to marry if one loves?

Is there love at first sight? What is love at first sight?

And many others.
Ye who are married can best answer many of these questions. Only one who has made experiments in marriage in all its phases could singly answer all of them. And not unlikely the result of such experiment would prove any-thing but edifying.

I am therefore prepared only to give the result of my own venture in the matrimonial boat as a partial guide, completing the latter by giving the re-sults of other men's and many women's entures or marriages.

Probably the first approach of that ender feeling known as love is felt when at school a red cheek seems to the average boy lovely as a peach and he respects the possessor for her gift. Maybe a big blue eye strikes him prettier than any he has seen in the picture-book mother bought him for a bristmas present and he wishes that he might have this living picture-book near by to look at when he chooses. Now, she with the red cheek or she with the big blue eye now see across the aisle in the little school-room a bright little fellow whose clothes fit as nicely and look as pretty as those on the doll she takes delight in fondling at home. For a doll is the first object outside the immediate household for which your little daughter shows any liking. The doll is her beau ideal. To win the newspapers are now the chief her favor one must conform to that lost; it survives through - life. Behind culture in their service, and men of it all is the desire of possessing somethe highest literary qualifications are thing to respond to the feelings, and more inclined to seek newspaper utterfrequently take what does not satisfy And as our impressions of what we need are true or false, so will, possessions bring joy or sorrow; and, when the question comes to us. "Whom and when shall we marry?" we should inwhat sort of a partner will supply our reeds.

The question should never resolve tself into whether blonde should marry blonde, whether brunet should marry brunet, or whether partners marry brunct, or whether partners should be of different complexion. An investigation on the complexion hypothesis might prove entertaining, but would, I fear, bring us back to where we started. But to my answers: 1. You are in love when you absolutely need the object of your affect 2. A poor person can afford to marry if marriage will increase the possibilities of escape from poverty.

3. You will be happy with the one whose tastes, education, and moral views are similar to your own.

4. You will always be loved if you observe the above rules, and do not lo sight of the fact that "Still in mutual sufferance lies

The secret of true living:
Love scarce is love that does not from the sweetness of forgiving."

5. You alway will love if you realize that obedience to duty is the only medicine for conscience, and that perfect happiness, in this world at least, is but-the shadow of a dream.

6. You wil will love more when your sense of duty becomes blunted, which will only happen in case you have not observed the first rule laid down.

7. Marry young if your nature has developed fully; if not, wait until your nature has developed. Rather than marry when undeveloped never marry at all

8. Marry a widow according to rules laid down previously.
9. Same as No. 8.
10. Always marry if you truly love, but do not confound fancy or infatua tion with the noble passion.

sight, but its is simply a quick and mutual apprehension of similarity in tastes, education, and moral views. Cuban Women's Eves.

The Cuban woman goes through the world in an easy, shiftless sort of a way, lounges only too gracefully in a hammock or lolls in her rocking chair, her mind intent on only one idea how to keep cool says an exchange. grace of the woman is set off by the marvelous way with which she uses her fan. Not for a moment is it at rest: it flutters, waves tilly, is opened and shut in the space of a second, falls to the side and again rises to take part in the conversation. The type of the face which beams above every fan in Cuban high life is difficult to describe The complexion varies from olive to white; deep black hair is the prevalent hue; but the eyes! Luminous, dreamy so large, dark and vivid. La senorita, with her certain childlike frankuess, but with a provoking rich-ness and fire of nature in her features, ensuares many hearts as she sits a her open window twirling her fan and watching the curling smoke from her cigarette, and, while she is kept under the strictest surveillance, she is a wo-man and romantic, and many are the proofs that "stone walls do not a prison

A New Playwright.

Mrs. Mary E. Bryan, who draws the largest salary of any woman editor in the United States has written a comedietta in one act, entitled "His Society Play." It is the experience of a New York playwright with the scenes in the top story of a lodging-house. This quaint, nervous little woman is a Georgia product, unusually gifted, with as many whims as a child and a disposition quite as sunny. She is a tremendous worker, writes day and night most of the time sitting on the night, most of the time sitting on the floor Turk fashion, with her copy-paper on a lap-board, and the whole place littered with pencil chips.
