In rounding a sharp curve near the depot Friday night he saw a freight train standing on the track. He was a son of the late ex-conductor Charles Billings, who was a brother-in-law of James Weir, they having married sisters. Young Billings was reared in Jackson.

The Lake Shore officials gave out that the engineers had been notified that they must obey the village ordinance in regard to trains running through the village, but those who saw their special train, bearing the officers of the road, sweeping through at a high rate of speed last Saturday will have little confidence in what they say.
Dr. Kotts has been investigating a process invented by another dentist for the so-called painless filling of teeth, but has no hesitation in saying that it is nothing compared with his method and he is confident that he has the only successful method and is corresponding extensively with dentists who wish to use it. The Shipp Brothers English Bell Bingers Co., assisted by Miss Eva B. Macey, reader, banjoist and pianist, gave an entertainment at arboret hall last evening. Although it was the most stormy evening of the season, a fair-sized and appreciative audience gathered. The entertainment consisted of selections on the bells, zithers and banjos by the four brothers and piano and banjo solos and recitations by Miss Macey. Each selection was heartily encoored and obligingly responded to. Everyone voted it the best entertainment of the season and should they appear here again will be enthusiastically received.
Last Friday evening while Mr. & Mrs. Fred Brigel, who have just moved into the "Safe residence," corner of Vernon and Beaufort streets, were away from home someone entered the house, took a lamp from the table, unscrewed the top and going up stairs threw the oil upon the floor and in a small room, then set fire to a newspaper and departed, probably expecting that the house would be burned. Mr. & Mrs. Brigel returned home soon after 9 o'clock and were at home some 20 minutes and as it was very warm Fred discovered that two of the doors were unlocked which he was positive that he fastened before leaving the house. They then missed the lamp and in searching for it found the fire on the stairs which he extinguished with a pail of water. But little damage was done owing perhaps to the fact that the stair door was closed and there was no draft. Unless a person had a key to the front door, they could only have gained entrance by an up-stairs window which was unfastened. What anyone's motive could be for perpetrating such a crime is a mystery, as Mr. & Mrs. Brigel are quiet, peaceable people and are on good terms with all their neighbors. They had bargained for the house but the papers had not yet been signed and as their household goods were insured their loss would have been light.

AFTERWARD. And this is the sequel of loving. It means that the heart must ache. Only a walk through the meadows. And a ride on the moonlight lake.

HOW I WON HER.

When I graduated from one of the foremost colleges in this country, I was considerably in debt.

I secured a position as principal of the high school in W—, a thriving New England village.

I had been in the place somewhat less than a year, when the cashier, called to the bank at an unusually early hour in the morning.

The bank at once scattered circulars far and wide, giving a vivid description of the teller and offering a reward of $1,000 for information.

His father and numerous friends, who would not for an instant harbor the thought that he was guilty.

I had often thought I should like to be a detective, whose business is wholly in the line of the mysterious.

Going to the bank, in his private office I held an interview with the cashier, with whom I was on the most friendly terms.

"I cannot," was the reply. "His has always been a model life."

"So far as you know, has he ever speculated in stocks?"

"I know that he never has; that every cent of his savings he deposited in this bank."

"You think he robbed the bank?"

"Possibly, though I never knew him to do so before."

tendered a reception in the town-hall, which was crowded to overflowing by members of his church.

"The words had scarcely fallen from his lips when a man in the audience, rising exclaimed:

"Do you recognize me now?" he continued, waving a wig, a false beard and colored spectacles.

"I saw a light in the bank and we called to get out of the severe shower," said Mr. Ford.

"We came here not expecting to find anyone in the building; to rob the bank, which we shall do; and necessarily, compels us to make you our prisoner."

"Without going into all the details of my investigation, I will say that my various clues pointed to Mr. Ford as concerned in the burglary."

"I sat down and another painful silence ensued, which was broken by Mr. Ford, who arose, and in a firm, but sad voice, said:

"When the rebellion began my father was a wealthy farmer in the South; at its close I was a penniless orphan."

"I am guilty, as I have been represented, but not the absolute magnitude that you have reason to believe me. Please listen to my story, which will be brief."

"The trouble about America," remarked Duffins, "is that it lacks aristocracy. There is no privileged class here."

"No privileged class?" exclaimed Chamber. "Did you ever live in a Harlem flat with an imported janitor?"

"I intended, when I reached New York city to telegraph the cashier of the bank where James was and thereforward to be another than the Rev. Thomas Ford."

"I intended, when I reached New York city to telegraph the cashier of the bank where James was and thereforward to be another than the Rev. Thomas Ford."

"I intended, when I reached New York city to telegraph the cashier of the bank where James was and thereforward to be another than the Rev. Thomas Ford."

I think that every one who heard him, and all who later heard his story, pitied him; that not one of them withheld him brought to trial.

"I would not accept any reward for my services, but they led to a better acquaintance with James' sister whom I eventually married."

"I believe you are running away from home to go on the stage; there is something so romantic in your hazel eyes," he purred, sweetly.

"And really, now, really," he murmured, toying with his coffee-colored diamond, "you are on your way to see some charming beau, or else you would not be so cold and distant."

"Well, I declare, you are the strangest girl I ever met on the road. May I inquire, miss, where you are going?"

"You may," she said, looking him full in the face; "I am on my way to New York city where I am to arrange with my publishers as to my forthcoming book on 'Good Manners.'"

There was a member of the provincial parliament with the Canadian people who were in New York lately. I shall call him "the other M. P."

"Yes, by Jove, I would like to try some, for back where I live, don't you know, we never get a glimpse of any kind of sea food."

"I'll take a dozen raw oysters," said the New York man. "What'll you have? Just pick out for yourself, and he handed him the bill of fare, and pointed out the list of shell-fish."

"Well, you are taking a dozen raw oysters," said the other M. P., as he ran his eyes over the list.

"I should like to be excused this afternoon, as I want to take my sister out driving."

"The trouble about America," remarked Duffins, "is that it lacks aristocracy. There is no privileged class here."

"No privileged class?" exclaimed Chamber. "Did you ever live in a Harlem flat with an imported janitor?"

"I intended, when I reached New York city to telegraph the cashier of the bank where James was and thereforward to be another than the Rev. Thomas Ford."

The Argument Used

BY the makers of the second-class baking powders to induce the dealer to push them off on Royal consumers is that they cost less than Royal and afford the dealer much more profit.

But you, madam, are charged the same price for them as for the absolutely pure Royal, which is perfectly combined from the most highly refined and expensive materials.

Do you wish to pay the price of the Royal for an inferior baking powder, made from impure goods, of 27 per cent. less strength? If you buy the other powders, insist upon having a corresponding reduction in price.
