Three Deaths in a Burning Wreck.

Three trainmen met a horrible death on the Toledo, Ann Arbor & North Michigan Railroad at Hamburg Junetion. A north bound freight train jumped the track and the engine sunk in a sink hole. A coal and oil car immediately back of the tender caught fire and two of the victims were burned to death in the flames from these. The dead arc: J. H. Bealieu, engineer: George Roberts, fireman; Thomas Mulligan, brakeman. All were married and lived in Owosso. The engine was completely capsized

All were married and lived in Owosso.

The engine was completely capsized in a ditch, two oil tanks were piled on the engine and three cars of coal on top of the latter and the wreck took fire in a flash. The bodies of the fireman and engineer were burned to ashes. Three men who were in the caboose at the time of the accident were not hurt. The track was through a tamarack swamp and had recently been raised six or eight feet. The weight of the new dirt and the freight train sunk the track three feet or more. All trains have had orders for the past month, not to exceed ten or more. An trains have no orders for the past month not to exceed ten miles per hour in running over this spot. Engine 36 was running up grade at a slow rate when the accident

The fire was intense for a while. An attempt was made to reach the buried men before the fire caught them, but the heat was so intense that the resvere driven away.

Female Suffrage Law Knocked Out.

The supreme court in the mandamus proceedings brought to test the constitutionality of the act passed by the last legislature granting school and municipal suffrage to women, handed down an opinion written by Judge McGrath and concurred in by the entire bench, declaring the law wholly unconstitutional and void. The court says that the general rule is that the source of all authority to vote at popular elections is the constitution, that the electorate is constituted by the fundamental law; that the qualifications of electors must be uniform throughout the state, and that whereever the constitution has prescribed the qualifications of electors they cannot be changed or added to by the legislature or otherwise except by an Female Suffrage Law Kuocked Out.

The officers and men were taken completely by surprise, but armories at 6:15. The officers and men were taken completely by surprise, but they responded nobly. Each company has an admirable system for notifying the members on short notice, the companies being divided into squads in charge of sergeants and corporals, so that they can be assembled very quickly. As the non-commissioned officers received the word, the greatest avoitement prevailed. It was rumored officers received the word, the greatest excitement prevailed. It was rumored that a riot was in progress in Grand Haven, while other reports said that Mayor Stuart had been killed. The men where taken from their work in factories and offices, and they responded handsomely. At 6:15 Company B had 30 men in line, Company E 35 and Company H 22. They were already for business, and a half hour later every member in the city of the National Guard except 10 were under arms, making a total force of 140 men for the three companies, with ammunition in their cartridge boxes, haversacks and canteens filled. When the men were told that it was simply a sacks and canteens nied. When the men were told that it was simply a test call they were greatly disappointed but were assured that whenever they were called again it will be for business. The quick response was very satisfactory to all interested.

BANK CASHIER IN THE TOILS.

Nelson Bradley, of Lunsing, Charged With Making False Reports and a Shortage.

The latest sensation in the bank troubles of Lansing is the arrest of Cashier Nelson Bradley, of the Central Michigan Savings bank. He is charged with making a false report of the condition of the bank, the maximum penalty for which offense is 20 years in state's prison. When the bank was closed in April last State Bank Commissioner Sherwood asked for a special report. This was soon prepared. It told a rather flattering story of the bank's affairs, and Mr. Sherwood felt it his duty to investigate. He found that the amount of rediscounted paper, which Bradley fixed at $33,857.39, should have been $160,000. Overdrafts were reported at $40,009.48, instead of $81,240.15, as they should have been.

Receiver Stone makes still more damaging charges. If what he says is true, Bradley has been guitty of even a worse offense. Afr. Stone charges that during the past nine years he has misapplied something like $52,000 to his own use and benefit. The alleged modus operandi was to credit the interest and exchange account of the bank to his own account and make invesments in his own name. Norvell Farmers' Club.

The meeting with H. H. Raby on Saturday the 28th, was favored with a trial. good attendance."

Pres. Halladay called to order promptfor a select reading with "Poetry of the Farm." W. F. Jones presented some interesting press clippings, Miss Cora Halladay read an essay entitled "The standard to which we aspire." That we have a standard is essential to success. A purposeless life is a failure. The great Burke said that the power to observe and a disposition to improve would make any life a success.' Each of us has a work to do. It is not so much the kind of work as the way we do it that makes us what we are. How few realize a tithe of their anticipations. We should feel that it matters not who accomplishes great deeds only so the world is benefited. Let us act well our part, there the honor lies.

The subject of the day, "The columbian exposition; how has it been a benefit to farmers: what have we seen and learned thereat?" was introduced by a rambling paper by A. R. Palmer. The anticipated financial benefit from the fair has not been realized. The crowd of foreigners who would leave their money here and consume our dairy, poultry and garden products did not materialize to any great extent. On the contrary the fair has taken many thousand dollars out of our state which would otherwise have been expended within her borders. Many have put off the payment of debts and postponed needed purchases that they might see the tair. In its educational and artistic advantages, farmers share with others, and the benefits received are neither few nor small.

Of things seen, he spoke of self-feeding threshers, grain headers, the corn husker, the road wagon propelled by electricity Palmer's great load of logs, Armour's

Messrs Jones and Mount agreed that the fair had not proved of financial benefit to farmer . S. W. Holmes said it had not been a financial curse. We have obtained as good prices for our products doubtless as though it had not been. If it paid to advertise. Michigan had made a mistake as her exhibits generally fell far short of what they might have been and did not compare favorably with those of other states. In but one place did he feel like crying Michigan my Michigan and that was beside the great load of logs. All through he noticed the comparisonbetween the old and the new and the valuable Jesson it taught. Beside the self-feeding steam thresher with its capacity of 2000 bushels per day, hung the old flail. By the Krupp gun that would ot 15 miles and pierce a 15 inch steel and the battering ram. Jas. Hay thought it probable our hard times were due to the fair, but a good thing to go. What we see we know. We cannot learn so well by reading.

F. Smith received benefit from the fairin many ways. L. D. Watkins has supposed that benefits arose from the contemplation of beauty and art, the comparison of products, the study of the works of man. Twenty years ago we talked of the day when electricity should be harnessed and made to serve the will matism I ever tried. I can cheerfully of man. Now we see it accomplished, recommend it to the public. and nowhere on so grand a scale as at the

Mrs. C. P. Holmes thought anyone ought to be benefited by what they could see there and spoke of her interest in the changes and improvements made manifest in the transportation building. "Trust to me, colonel, said I; "I'll not disgrace you."
"Twenty minutes late, Mr. Considine," said a short, red-faced little man, with a military frock and foraging cap, as he held out his watch in address.

"I can only say, Captain Malowney, that we lost no time since we parted; we had some difficulty in finding a boat; but, in any case, we are here now, and that. I opine, is the impor-

their conversation at the distance I was from them. They were discussing the last occasion that Bodkin had visited this spot, and talking of the fatal events which happened then. "Poor devil." said Bodkin, "it wasn't his sault; but you see some of the —th had been showing white feathers before that, and he was ablied to go out. Well, out he came. It was a cold morning in February, with the frost the night before going off in a thin rain. Well, it seems he had the con-sumption or something of that sort, with a great cough and spitting of blood, and this weather made him worse, and he was very weak when he came to the ground. "Take off your greatcoat, Ned,' said one of his people when they were going to put him up. Take it off, man. He seemed to hesitate for an instant, when Michael Blake remarked. Arrah, let him alone, it's his mother makes him wear it for the cold he

"They all begin to laugh at this, "They all begin to laugh at this, but I kept my eyes upon him. And I saw that his, cheek grew quite livid and a kind of gray color and his eyes filled up. I have you now, said I to myself, and I shot him through the

And this poor fellow," thought I, "Man this poor fellow," thought I, was the only son of a wildowed mother." I walked from the spot to avoid hearing further, and felt, as I did so, something like a spirit of revenuence rising within for the fate of one so untimely cut off.

"Chariey." said he, "I am to give the signal; I'll drop my glove when you are to fire, but don't look at me you are to fire, but don't look at me roared Considine, as he drew a pistoff from the case at his feet; "if you don't want some leaden bullast to keep."

The next instant we were placed, and I well remember the first thought that struck me was that there could be no chance of either of us escaping. "Now then," said the count. "I'll walk twelve paces, turn, and drop this glove, at which signal you fire and together, mind. The man who reserves his shot falls by my hand."

This very summary announcement seemed to meet general approbation, and the count strutted forth.

Notwithstanding the advise of my friend, I could not help turning my eyes from Bodkin to watch the retiring figure of the count.

At length he stopped—a second or two elapsed—he wheeled rapidly round and let fall the glove. My eye glanced toward my opponent; I raised my pistol and fired.

My hat turned half way round man hat turned half way round apon ad, and Bodkin fell motionless to the earth.

I saw the people around me rush forward; I caught two or three glances thrown toward me with an expression of revengeful passion; I felt some one of revengeful passion; I felt some one grass me round the waist and hurry me from the spot, and it was at least ten minutes after, as we were "skimming the surface of the broad Shannon, before I could wall collect my scattered faculties to remember all that was passing, as Considine, pointing to the two bullet holes in my hat remarked: "Sharp practice, Charley; it was the overcharge saved you." "Is he killed, sir?" I asked.
"Not quite, I believe, but as good. You took him just above the hip."
"Can he recover?" said I, with a

"Not if the doctor can help it:" said Considine, "for the fool keeps poking about for the ball. But now let's think of the next step. You'll have about for the ball sur now let's think of the next step. You'll have to leave this place, and at once, too."

As we neared the land a strange spectacle caught our eye. For a considerable distance along the coast siderable distance along the coast crowds of country people were assembled, who, forming in groups and breaking late parties of two and three, were evidently watching with great anxiety what was taking place at the opposite side.

Now, the distance was at least a mile, and therefore any part of the transaction which had been enacting these must have been quite beyond

Considine cried out suddenly! Too infamous, by Jove! we're murdered

"Don't you see that?" said he, pointing to something black which floated from a pole at the opposite side of the

Here a tremendous yed burst from the mass of people along the shore, which, vising to a treefficery, sank gradually down to a low wailing, and then rose and fell several times, as the lrish death cry filled the air and rose to heaven, as if imploring vengence on a murderer.

The anjafling influence of the "keen," as it is called, had been funitar to me from my infancy, but it needed the awful situation I was pluced in to consumate its horrors. It was at once, my accusation and my doom.

"Quite right—very just indeed. Will you kindly present me to your young friend—very proud to make your acquaintance sir; your uncle and I met more than once in this kind of way. I was out-with him in '92—was it? No, I think it was '93—when he shot Harry Burgoyne, who by the byewas called the crack shot of our mess."

While Considine and the captain walked a few paces apart from where I stood I had leisure to observe my antagonist, who stood among a group of his friends, talking and laughing away in great spirits.

"Here they come!" said the other boatman, as he pointed back with his inger toward a large yawl which shot suddenly from the shore, with six suddenly from the shore with six suddenly from the shore, with six suddenly from the shore. With six suddenly from the shore, with six suddenly from the shore. With six suddenly from the shore with six suddenly from the shore. With six suddenly from the shore. "So it is."

"The manage to catch Bodkin's from the case at his feet; "if you don't want some leaden bullast to keep you so. Here, Charley, take this, and if that fellow stirs hand or foot—you understand me."

The two men sat sufficts in the sort tom of the boat, which now was actually flying through the water. Considine's object was a clear one. He saw that in sailing we were greatly overmatched and that our only chance lay in reaching the narrow and dangerous channel between the Oat rock and the shore, by which we should distance the pursuit, the long reef of rocks that ran out beyond requiring a wide berth to escape from. Nothing but the danger behind us could warrant so rash a daring. The whole channel was dotted with patches whole charger was noticed with packets of white and breaking foam—the sure evidence of the mischief beneath— while here and there a dash of spurting spray flew up from the dark water, where some eleft rock lay hid below

As if to add terror to the scene. Considine had scarcely turned the boat head of the channel when a tremendous blackness spread over all around; the thunder pealed forth, and, amid the crashing of the hall and the bright glare of lightning, a squall struck us and laid us nearly keel upperment the several minutes. permost for several minutes

Most certainly are we not to take the statement of red-hot partisanship as the real character of any man. From nearly all the great cities of this land I receive daily or weekly newspopens, sent to me regularly and in compliment, so I see both sides—I see all sides—an lit is most entertaining and my regular amusement, to read the opposite statements. "Sweet Charity."

In the Artists' Exhibition of 1893 at the New York Academy of Design, there was exhibited an oil painting by J. L. G. Ferris, and the west charity. Its richness of coloring commanded instant attention, while the lesson it taught was so impressive that one naturally returned to it for a second view.

Its subject is a young lady of colonial times who is on an errand to one of the second remaining face, which expresses with remarkable fidelity the entiment of hererard. There is not a hone that this charming picture will not ornament. It must be seen to be appreciated.

"Sweet Charity" was purchased by the Publishers of The Youth's Companion and has been reproduced in colors in large size,
