The second day of the trial was very uninteresting. Most of the testimony was from the clerks of different counties about their returns. They had each mailed three certified copies of the vote on the salaries amendment to the secretary of the state, another to state treasurer and the third to the state treasurer and the third to the governor. They were shown one of these and swore that the others were similar and were then required to com-pare the figures with the figures as re-corded in the books of the secretary of state's office. In each case the latter fig-tures were wrong. Several county clerks
