New Woman Pastor in Boston. The Rev. Helen Van Anderson, who was recently made pastor of the Church of the Higher Life in Boston. was ordained without ever having purned a course in theology. Her training for her work was gained through her connection with various transcendental cults of which the new church is the outcome. The new woman pastor was born in Iowa and is about 35 years old. She is fair and fashionable, and an interesting episode of her pastorate was a threat on the part of her followers that unless she should modify the gayety of her attire serious of-

and Pains, and How to Cure it.

Do you know what it is to have a back that is never free from aches and constant pain, a lame back, a sore back, an aching back, in fact, a back that makes your life a burden? What have you done for it? And does it still keep you from the happiness that perfect health brings to all? We have the way was different for mall if such its your condition. ness that perfect health brings to all? We know full well if such is your condition a cure for it will be a blessing you no doubt desire. Plasters won't do it, but may assist in bringing strength. Liniment won't do it; for, while it may give temporary relief, it does not reach the cause. The cause, there's the point; there's where to make the attack. Most backaches come from disordered kidneys, therefore you must correct their action if you would be cared. Read the following from D. D. Cook, whose address is No. 18 Michigan Street, Grand Rapids. He says:—

"I have used Doan's Kidney Pills and wish to say it is a truly great medicine. Thirty years ago I had nervous prostration while in the army, where I served for over four years. I think it was during this service that the seeds were sown which.

over four years. I mink it was turning this service that the seeds were sown which have caused all my trouble. Severe billious attacks bothered me, and at such times my kidneys were worse. It is almost impossible to describe the pain which so often lamed me. I have been so lame that to stand up after I had been sitting down required a great exertion. Walking was at times an impossibility, even at night I did not rest, being forced to get up during the night. I heard of Doan's Kidney Pills and wondered if they could make an almost lame man well. I got some, and soon after taking them began to feel their good effects. I used them for some time, my lameness all left me and I have not felt it since. Doan's Kidney Pills have done me an inestimable amount of good."

When they first saw Clotilde she was so young and timid they made up their minds to wait until Gaspard himself came, but one night as they sat around the great hall fire there was a great jingle of sleigh bells and the sound of swift runners on the crisp snow outside, and then that musical clash at the door which announced the stopping of the turnout and the arrival of the guests. Surely there was nothing uncommo in this, the coming of a party of merry people to a country house and on a magnificent moonlight night when the whole landscape was as light as day. Yet instead of looking pleased or sur-prised the ladies of the house sank back in their chairs, and covering their faces with their hands murmured

But little Clotilde had run joyously to the great hall door, and though no servant stood there to open it she swung it wide on its massive hinges. A hitter draft of cold air rushed in. with a dreary, wailing sound, and no sleigh stood outside, but even as the startled girl watched a clash of musical hells and the swift sound of the steelshod runners filled the area of snow. She turned whiter than a lily in the somber moonlight and flung the door to affrighted.

"You will now know why our Gas-pard has dark spells when not even his sweetheart can comfort him, why the shadow is never lifted from our lives and we cannot be quite like other neople. Perhaps you will not then like to marry our brother, who is the best and learest in the world, but, like us, un-

"We know not, petite, but the story is like this: So long ago, maybe, that not our oldest relation can remember. there was another Gaspard De Fronknow, the steep hills that shut us in-so high with the big ravine—the precipice on either side? And in the winter there was always snow and the people went coasting and sleighriding with swift horses down these long hills. but never could two meet, for the road was just the width for one sleigh, and the people all knew this, and they waited at the plateau on the top and each took his turn. "It was my great uncle's pleasure to take his young wife and go out on these steep hills and drive her like the wind with a swift flying horse, and she loved the sport, and, wrapped in turs, with her curls floating in the wind, a fine picture the country folk thought her; and that Gaspard was much admired, too, for so the story has come to us, and their pictures are n the salon, though some think us not

"It comes soon now, petite—the tragedy of those two. One night—just such a night as this—they went riding 'n gay spirits, and going up the hill for the second or third time what should they see but another sleigh coming lown! It was coming fast and my great uncle knew it was death for one side or the other, since pass they could

ot. And he shouted to the other river to half. "Ah, it was too late! On, on came the other sleigh, fast like the wind, and my great uncle Gaspard saw that would into him crash, and he quickheadquarters will be at the Briggs ly drew a pistol and fired to kill the orse before it was too late. And his own horse, he got such a fright he plunged over the side, throwing him meet hereafter at Hall house on the out, but taking his bride down to but his own, and what he saw was the shadow of his own. In some way I know not the exact, the moonlight making that effect by what you call projecting the shadow, and when he know that, he take again the pistol and with it end his misery and his life."

A long silence succeeded this weird tale and then Clotilde asked in a broken voice:
"Is it then that the sleigh is ghost? "Yes, petite, a-what you call phan-

"I am not afraid. I accept and will pray to give the poor ghosts

It was not like the Loun-Garou, not to the mind of Clotilde half as dreadful, but she was not really afraid of these because her uncle had much sense, and he did not believe one of these stories, although tell them he did, and most

Again on the following evening came the sound of bells, and this time Clotilde went not near the door, but sat moving her sweet lips in prayer. Then the door was flung violently open and a brusque, cheery voice called:

"Halloo, there, Victor, Alphonse, you variets, where are you hiding?" Certainly this was no ghost, and the hree women who clung about his neck gave frantic evidence of joy at his Clotilde was not one of the three. A big old man in a fox skin coat had taken her in his arms, and was talking to her in gentle burr, the old uncle who told her the dreadful stories, and then she slipped one small hand into her lover's and looked at him with shy, happy eyes.

"It was so good of you to come instead of the ghosts," she said, when later they sat cooling in a corner, while the uncle, who was a great favorite with the young Gaspard, was making himself agreeable to the ladies. "Then you know, dear little one?" said the young man. "And you are not afraid to make your home in the Chateau Frontenac?"

"Not with my Gaspard," came the soft "but I like it better if the ghosts came not, and your sisters, they are sorry, too. But afraid-no!"

"What of this so much being afraid?" asked a gruff voice, and the old uncle of Clotilde hobbled over to the corner where snatches of their conversation located the two lovers.

Then he was told the story of the ghostly sleigh, and looked wise and thoughtful for the rest of the evening. The shrewd French-Canadian was filled with marvelous stories of ghosts which he loved to relate, but not one of which he believed, not even his stock fright-story, the legendary Loup-Garou.

The next morning Uncle Pierre was missing from the chateau, but no on was disturbed. He had taken his gun and would return when he pleased, which was at nightfall, and simultaneously with his coming rang out the jangling invisible bells.

He found the family shivering around the great fire, as if it were stricken with deadly cold. Even Gaspard looked troubled and the little Clotilde was tryassure him she was not-"Oh no, not the least afraid!" "Fine is the night," he said in salu-tation, "and the air is clear, so you hear-r-r, oh, so far! Heard you my Clotilde, the sleigh belis that came with me?" "Oh, no," cried the ladies of the chateau in a faint chorus, "the bells do make our hearts to shake," and they said an audible prayer.

"What you make afraid? Not the bells of echo, that the wind do bring to your door for the too sweet music? Pah! Ghost it is, not at all, but the door for the too sweet music? -r-ravine, and the hills they do make the bells of the sleighing companie the echo which for the minu-t-e stop at your door; 'tis echo always this so many years that you think it the ghosts."

Uncle Pierre was compelled to escape from the room when the family had accepted his scientific explanation, which he further elaborated in their native tongue, he was so overwhelmed
