. All these had left their loves and dearest interests behind them, and all to the fair fields and bright firesides of their childhood.

It is now far otherwise. Van Dieman's Land, like other lands, has grown national, with the usual exclusive prejudices and partialities.

Beautiful girls and gallant youths, in its sweet valleys, have ripened into womanhood and manhood, have become surrounded by a young progeny, and they love the land of their birth.

If the approaching bark was antici pated by many a beating heart in Hobart Town and its vicinity, what were the feelings of those on board the Dart the gallant ship that had now been nearly five months from England?

It carried a miscellaneous assem blage of passengers, and had touched at Cork to take in some women and children, who were going to join their husbands and fathers in the colony.

In all this freight of humanity there were two women singularly remarka ble-the one, Dora Callan, for beauty; the other. Bridget Ryan, for extreme ugliness, which would have been repulsive had it not been redeemed by honesty, simplicity and good nature

She had an infant a few weeks old. to which she was a tender, watchfu mother; but it did not engross her genial heart.

She had a kind word for every one and a helping hand for all who needed her aid. The sick found her ready to forego her rest to soothe their sufferings, and the sorrowing never called upon her sympathy in vain, and it was soon the feeling of all on board to seek Bridget Ryan under any emergency or annoyance or distress.

But, above all, she became to Dora Callan the very stay and prop of her existence. The young creature had come on board in bad health, and with the prospect of becoming a mother, a prospect realized before they were many weeks at sea.

In her hour of trial who was beside her? Bridget Ryan. When the new-born made its feeble appeal to its feeble mother, who took it to a cherishing breast? Bridget Amid all her own and her infant's wants she found means to administer to the wants of the young mother and her nursling; amid all the claims upon her time and toil, she found hours to devote to them. "Briget Ryan," said Dora, "I shall never see the far land we are seeking, and one is waiting me there to whom it will be a sore sorrow. Here is his last letter, which I have read every night after my prayers, and every morning as soon as it was light. He will be on the watch for our ship and among the first on board." "Heaven speed him, my woman, exclaimed the cheerful Bridget.

"And won't he be proud of the gift you have for him?" she added, looking at the sleeping child. "Oh, sure, and it is I must be at the merry meeting." "Who has such a right, Bridget But it will never be."

After an effort of composure, she raised herself in her bed and flung her arms around the neck of her friend.

"Oh, on this wide, wide sea, where I thought to find only danger and sorrow, I have found a friend like unto the mother I have left. You will have her blessing, Bridget, and his. Oh, that I might live to tell him all I owe you.

"Now, Dora dear, if you go on in this manner," said Bridget, struggling with emotion, and gently trying to disen gage herself, "what will I do? Sure, I shall be fit for nothing this blessed day—and the babies, too-why, we are changing places with them and crying as if they could not do it much better that we. Take heart, woman, dear the boy wift-need all your care.'

"All yours, Bridget, all yours. Oh tell me that you will never forsake him! I know it, I feel it, he will soon be alone with you have only you. Oh, let him creep to your heart when the salt seas cover his mother. Nay, Bridget you shall not unclasp my hands until I have your promise; say that in dan ger, in distress, in sickness, he shall be to you as your own."

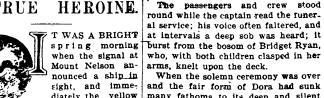

"Holy Mother, be my witness," faintly ejaculated Bridget. "He shall have half of my heart, half of my strength. When I forego my hold of him, row be my portion. But you will live Dora Callan, and my child may call you mother by means of this boy of I mean to dispose of him."

A faint smile played upon the lips of the sinking girl in answer to this sportive saily and then closing her yes she folded her hands upon her breast in silent prayer.

The prophetic spirit in which the young creature had spoken was soon apparent.

A rapid change passed over the fair face; the power of utterance suddenly failed; but while life lingered her grateful and beseeching eyes were raised to the face of Bridget, at whose breast the little creature so soon to be orphaned nestled in comfort. The next night a white hammock was lowered into the sea beneath the solemn starlight.

When the solemn ceremony was over and the fair form of Dora had sunk many fathoms to its deep and silent grave, a low wail of excessive anguish broke from the lips of Bridget.

"Dora Callan, Dora Callan," she at length uttered, with a deep fervency of tone, which was in itself eloquence Why have you gone from me-from me whose heart loved you like its life But who may keep what the Great Maker wants? Bright be your place among the angels. Welcon fair face where all is beautiful. Och! shall I ever forget how sweet were, how kind, how loving? When you wake from your great winding sheet, Dora mine, may we who mourn you now meet you rejoicing."

Then her voice sank till its murmurs became inaudible. While rocking hertheir dreams and wishes were directed self to and fro on the deck she cowered over the children and bathed them in tears

Impressed by the scene, all stood in deep silence, watching the subsiding struggle of her deep grief.

Almost unmarked, a change weather had gradually come on, and a more than common activity on board declared that some exigency was approaching.

Low winds seemed from afar gathering clouds that soon overspread the sky, till the hollow, dismal wailings became long howls and hoarse shricks, and the darkness grew into blackest night. Oh, for the pen of Cooper to portray the storm which broke above the devoted ship, while it reeled and staggered amid the rage of contending winds and rolling seas.

The captain and crew did their duty firmly.

Perhaps there is no energy, no cour age, superior to that of English sailors; no sense of duty so high, so perfectly, so nobly, fulfilled.

Vain were all their efforts; the sea surged above the yards, sweeping down on the doomed bark, which would bravely rise again and again above the briny deluge. Desperately she plowed total wreck on one of the small islands in D'Entrecastreaux's channel.

The morning broke at length, but it came rather to reveal than to relieve their distress.

When the vessel struck a shriek, compounded of many wild voices, pierced the thick darkness; the masts went by the board, a rushing sea swept over the deck, carrying many of the despairing wretches into the engulfing waters; but with the gray, drear light of morning came a lull.

The captain, who still survived, with some few of the passengers and crew, felt a deep anxiety for the fate of Bridget, and was seeking her, inquiring for her, when she crept forth with

"The bravest heart on board, by heaven," he exclaimed, as he beheld

"Hope on," he continued, springing forward "we are bescribed; there ar boats making toward us." At these words Bridget started to her feet, just as a tremendous wave struck the ship, and, sweeping the deck, carried her and the children

Much is said of human selfishness in the emergencies of great danger, and much is, of course, exhibited; but so powerful had Bridget's example and beauty of character impressed her felow sufferers that the most vital interest was felt in her fate, and at this eatastrophe many cried aloud, "Save her, save her!" while at the moment opeless of saving themselves.

The boats which had not off from Brune Island redoubled their efforts. Bridget succeeded in grasping a frag nent of timber, and thus kept herself afloat: the heavy rain, which had been for some time falling, increasing, refreshed her, and the sea subsided, as if calmed by the tears of heaven. The cheering voices of the approaching men kept alive the pulses of her heart. and at last Bridget and the children were rescued, the little helpless creatures, wonderful to relate, alive.

This, however, she scarcely was herelf; yet amid what was apparently the pangs of death, her sense of duty vas still paramount.

Carried on shore, soothing voices and succoring hands were soon around her, but she made a feeble effort to retain the children, while she exclaimed, with what strength remained in her: "Michael Callan!"

The name was repeated aloud by those who marked her anxiety; and immediately a young man who had helped to man the boat that had saved her pressed eagerly forward.

"Here am I," he cried; "what would ou with Michael Callan?" He was directed to the dying an; he knelt down beside her. Bridget opened her eyes, which moment before had been closing in the last exhaustion and faintness.

'Are you here?" she asked. "I am Michael Callan." "Now the Father of Mercy and all His saints be praised," she faintly ejculated. "Michael Callan, here is your child—Dora's child!"

And with these words her long sustained energies forsook her, and she sank insensible into the arms of the people near her.

The story soon spread through the colony, and by the time Bridget was restored to health and strength she firing a shot weighing 2,600 pounds.

HISTORIC TELEGRAM.

Its Sender Recently Retired on a Pension for Life. One of the greatest services ever rendered by the telegraph was the transmission from Delhi of the famous telegram of May 11, 1857 which warned he Punjaub of the outbreak of the Indian mutiny, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The telegrapher, Brendish, who sent the message, has just retired from the service in receipt of a special pension equal to his salary. Brendish and Pilkington were the two young signalers under Mr. Todd, the uperintenden of the Delhi telegraph office. On Sunday, May 10, at 4 p. m. it was found that the line from Meerut was interrupted and Mr. Todd started to find out the break. At the bridge of boats across the Jumna he was met by the mutineers the following morning and murdered. The lads, who were left alone in the office outside the Kashmir gate, saw the mutineers pass and continued steadily telegraphing to Lahore all the news brought in by poens as to the doings of the mutineers in that city. Brendish went out at noon to see what was going on but was desired by wounded British officer to go in and close the doors. There for two hours the two, with the widow and child of Mr. Todd, remained, and at 2 p. m. Brendish went to the Umballa instrument and telegraphed the historic passage: "The Sepoys have come in from Meerut and are burning everything. Mr. Todd is dead and, we hear, several Europeans. We must shut up. And now I am off." The little party then made its way to the flagstaff tower, where the Europeans had congregated, and from there saw the blowing up of the magazine. That night they fled to Umballa, Before they left the the tower Pilkington went back to the office to send a message for an officer. Every step of the way was taken in danger of instant death but the daring mission was accomplished, for the message is recorded as having been recrived. As the last click died away the mutineers burst in and the signaler was slain. The effect of Brendish's warning message to the Punjaub was that the regiments tainted with mutiny were disarmed before they knew what had taken place at Meerut and

A Balloon Voyage to the North Pole. A silk balloon enclosed in a net and carrying a car equipped with all of the necessities of life as well as the material to generate new gas, is to be used for a voyage to the North Pole Every contingency has been provided for and the three scientists who make the voyage are confident of success. It is thought that the time occupied for the voyage from Sweden to Spitzbergen and the needful preparation will consume between four and five weeks. Every care has been taken to strike the most favorable season and weather for the voyage. Dr. Nansen agrees with Mr. Andree as far as prevailing winds are concerned and also about the topography of the country. At the time when the trip is to be begun the Polar winds will materially assist iff the navigation, and as there are no extremely high points, it is hoped that the balloon will float at no very great elevation above the earth's surface sufficient amount of generating material will be taken along to keep the balloon going for six weeks, even though there should be, as there always is, more or less loss of gas, appratus, the simplicity and practicability of which commended it to all the examining committee. The following description will be found interesting to all persons who have followed the development of these wonderful rays. The Crookes tube held thirteen inches upward and backward, opposite the parietal bone, emitted rays that passed through the external orbital wall, the tissues surrounding the ball and the ball itself, and were received on the film, which had been thrust as far as possible into the inner cauthus and maintained in position by a holder. Two exposures were made, one with the tube on a line with the eye, and the other at an angle of twenty-five degrees with the horizontal plane. The approximate position of the foreign body was determined by attaching the apparatus to an upright support and so placing a lighted candle that the shadow cast by the indicators would fall like those thrown by the Crookes tube. A small object was then held before the candle in such a position that its shadow was coincident with that of the foreign body. A record having been made of this line of shadow, the candle was moved until the shadows of the indicators corresponded to those of the second negative. ject was again employed and a second impression recorded. Where two lines of shadow of the test object crossed should be the situation of the foreign body in the eye. Throwing the distance of the center of the cornea from a fixed point of the apparatus, one could measure the distance at which the foreign body in the eye lay behind this point, and thus ascertain its approximate position.

When Dr. Schliemann was digging at the supposed site of Troy, he uncovered the remains of several ancient cities which had been built, one after another, on the same hill. In the second layer upon the bottom he discov ered masses of silver in the form of ax heads. Dr. Gotze now suggests that these were intended, not for implements, but for money. Bronze ax heads have also been discovered in ancient remains, mingled with meta pieces in the form of rings, in such a manner as to suggest that all alike were intended to serve as money; and the conclusion is drawn that, in ancient times, the metal ax head had come to be a popular unit of value for purposes of barter. After it had disappeared as actual money, the memory of it, according to this theory, was preserved in the coins of Tenedos which bore the figure of an ax head Dr. Gotze also suggests that the "wedge of gold" which Achan stole from the spoils of Jericho, and for the stealing of which Joshua had him stoned to death, was a specimen of the ancien ax head money.

Migration of Bats.

It appears that several species of bats migrate southward in winter and northward in summer, after the manner of birds. Some bats which are found during the warm months as far north as Maine and the Adirondack mountains, start for the south in the autumn and spend the winter in South summer season.

Our lesson today is about the American Crossbill, the dwarf of the Cross bill family. They are a very social little bird, and are almost fearless of man, but it troubles itself very little about the other inhabitants of the woods. Their food consists chiefly of pine, fir, and larch, and they are mos numerous in northern latitudes where these trees abound. During the spring and summer they pass their time flying from one pine grove to another. Their nest is made of pine twigs, lined with feathers, soft grass, and the needle New Zealand's representative Maoris like leaves of the fir tree. The eggs are. The process has been notably efficient red or blue spots, and three or four are generally laid.

The Battle Against Biphtheria. or. Smirnow, a Russian physician, has devised a new method of procuring antitoxin for diphtheria, and his experiments are described highly successful. He prepares his antitoxin, or curative serum, by submitting diphtheric poison to electrical decomposition. In this way he reduces its virulence to a point at which it can be safely injected into the blood of an animal. The animal thus treated is not only rendered immune to diphtheria, but if already suffering from the disease is cured. The new antitoxin can be prepared very quickly, and it is said specially to be much more effective in its operation than the older form, which requires weeks for its preparation. Dr. Smirnow has not yet, however, experimented with human subjects, his most mportant patients being dogs, which of all animals are said to be perhaps the most susceptible to diphtheria poi-

> After the spring pruning in the vinevards water is seen trickling down the stems, and in France this is poetically called the "weeping of the vine." Prof. Cornu, a botanist, has recently studied this phenomenon, and he says it is due to the abundant absorption of water by the roots of the vine in spring time.

The monasteries in mid-air that are found along the frontier between Turkey and Greece have been fully described in this paper. Today is presented a reproduction of a snap-shot photograph, showing very clearly how visi-

Camels in the Snow.

Troops of camels, brought from Mongolia, are employed in winter to carry supplies and materials to and from the gold placers of eastern Siberia, and the spectacle presented by a long line of these "ships of the desert," tramping solemnly across the snows of a Siberian steppe, is described as extremely singular. Camels require only about half as much daily food as horses, but on the other hand they have to be liberally supplied with salt. Where the country is so wild that neither roads nor tracks exist, reindeer are employed instead of horses or camels, and they find their own living en route, by uncovering, beneath the snow, a kind of gray lichen on which they are able to subsist.

Great Heat in Tunnels.

One of the most difficult problems connected with the construction of the proposed tunnel under the Simplon range in the Alps is that of keeping down the temperature. The deeper we go under the surface of the earth the greater the heat becomes, and since the new tunnel will run not much less than 7,000 feet beneath the summit of Mcunt Leone, it is anticipated that the Carolina and Georgia, returning with temperature will be as high 104 degrees St. Gotthard tunnel the temperature rose to 88 degrees. The heat affected the health of the workmen, more than half of whom were attacked by disease. The still more intense heat to be encountered in the Simplon tunnel can only be reduced by a careful system of ventilation.

Bursting Ste

An experiment which demonstrated the capacity of steel to endure greater pressure than the harden stone was recently made at Vienna. Corundum was chosen for the stone, and small cubes of both substances were placed under pressure. A weight of six tons smashed the corundum, but forty-two tons were required to crush the steel. When the steel did give way, the effects are described as most remarkable. With a loud explosion, the metal flew into powder, and its sparks are said to have bored minute holes in the crushing machine.

Setting Perfume from Flowers.

A Frenchman has found a method of extracting the perfume of flowers without crushing or killing the blossoms. It consists in immersing the flowers in water which, as it becomes charged with the odor, is gradually withdrawn, while fresh water takes its place. Afterward the perfume is isolated from the water with the aid of ether. It is said that by this method some flowers whose perfume had never before been in the case of the lily-of-the-valley.

A Unique Table A famous restaurant in Vienna possesses a remarkable tablecloth, which are inscribed the signatures of the majority of the reigning sovereigns of Burope , the members of the House of Hapsburg, and of the majority of the celebrities in art, music and letters. The names were written on the cloth in pencil, the proprietress of the establishment afterwards corefully embroidering them.
