Brutal Murder of an Ionia County Veteran for His Money—Six Young Men Drowned While on a Drunken Outing on Lake St. Clair, near Detroit.

An Old Veteran Murdered for Money. An old soldier, named Ludwig Hernan, who lived alone 7 miles north of lonia, in Orleans township, went to Ionia and drew his pension money, $24, or three months' pay. He spent it freely, and exhibited bills at several of the Ionia saloons. He was last seen at 11:30 p. m. in an intoxicated condition trying to get into the American hotel. He was not admitted, however, and it is supposed that he started down the D. G. R. & W. tracks for his home At 7 o'clock the next morning Isaac Waite, a neighbor, called at Herman's home and finding the back door open walked in, but was suddenly stopped by a horrible sight. Herman lay on the floor beside the bed cold in death, dressed only in his undershirt and drawers. He had hung up his clothes and was apparently about to get into bed. His skull was crushed the width of three fingers in the back of the head and just above the neck back of the right ear was a gunshot wound, the hole being the size of the muzzle of The weapon which inflicted the first wound was an iron bar 18 inches long which Herman used in his workshop in making cane chairs. Herman kept his gun standing at the head of his bed. This the murderer had evidently grabbed and fired one cartridge at so close range that the flesh was burned. The shot went clear through Herman's head and odged under the skin over his eyes. Whether Herman had more than the pension money is not known. All his papers were searched and strewn about the house. His watch and 13 cents in money were found in his room. Herman was 69 years of age and had separated from his wife, who, with hree daughters and one son, live at Six Men Drowned by Yacht Sinking. Thirteen men and boys from Detroit, while recklessly moving about, caused the foundering of the sloop yacht Blanche B, in Lake St. Clair, midway petween Windmill point and Peche island, causing the death of six of their number, while seven others narrowly escaped watery graves. Some of the survivors state that a majority of those aboard the boat had been drinking and vere in an exceedingly gay mood and all were out for a good time. Witnesses of the accident from the shore say that at the time the yacht went over there were two men aloft on the spar and two or three men sitting out on the main boom, and that they the boat to rock violently They also say that when those who were saved had been brought ashore they were very much under the influ-

20 STRIKERS SHOT DEAD.

Deputy Sheriffs at Latimer, Pa., Shoot Miners Down Like Dogs.

The strike situation reached a terrible crisis on the outskirts of Latimer, Pa., when a band of deputy sheriffs fired into an infuriated mob of miners. The men fell like so many sheep and the excitement since has been so intense that no accurate figures of the dead and wounded can be obtained. Reports run from 15 to 20 odd killed and 40 or more wounded. The strikers left Hazelton at 3:30 p.

n. announcing their intention to go to Latimer to call out the miners there. As soon as this became known, 70 deputies were loaded on a trolley car and went whirling across the mountain to the scene, where they formed into three companies across the road by which the miners were marching to Latimer. Sheriff Martin was in entire command and stood in the front of the line until the strikers approached. They were seen coming across the ridge and Martin went to meet them. The men drew up sullenly and listened in silence until he had read the riot act. This finished, a low muttering arose among the foreigners there was a slight movement forward. Perceiving this, the sheriff stepped toward them, and in a determined tone forbade their vancing farther. Someone struck the sheriff and the next moment he gave command to the deputies to fire. The guns of the deputies instantly belched forth a terrible volley. The report seemed to shake the very moun tains. The strikers were taken entirely by surprise, and as the men toppled and fell over each other, those who remained unburt stampeded. The men went down before the storm of bullets like tenpins and the groans of the dying and wounded filled the the air. The excitement that followed was simply indescribable. The deputies seemed to be terror-stricken at the deadly execution of their guns. The people of Latimer rushed pell-mell to he scene and as soon as possible cared for the wounded who had not been carried off by their friends.

Later .- A careful count shown that II strikers were instantly killed by the deputies, 10 died within a short time from their wounds and five more lingered at the point of death with no hope for recovery. There are nearly 50 others wounded who will recover, but some will be maimed for life. There were 150 strikers in the marching column, not one of whom was armed with more than a penknife, and hese peaceable, defenseless men 102 deputies, armed to the teeth, shot down like dogs at a very slight provocation. In fact examination of the ead and wounded strikers reveals the fact that many of them were were shot in the back, which shows that the deputies must have poured volley after volley into the ranks of the men when they were fleeing down the road. Yet even in their death the poor fellows accomplished the purpose for which they marched from Hazleton to Latimer, for the 1,500 miners at Latimer have laid down their tools and sworn to do no more work until all the demands of he men at all the mines in the distric have been conceded.

Martial Law at Hazleton. Immediately after the awful tragedy

Sheriff Martin called upon Gov. Hastings for troops and before 24 hours had elapsed 2,500 soldiers of the Pennsylvania National Guard were at the cene under command of Gen. Gobin. The general at once issued orders prohibiting marching or assembling of large of bodies of men along the roads and practically placed Hazleton and vicinity under martial law. Sheriff Martin had, in the meantime, fled to Wilkesbarre for safety, but returned after the troops had taken charge of affairs and he and his ties sought refuge within the military lines to avoid arrest upon charges of murder, assault and battery, and threatening to kill, which were preferred by friends of the dead strikers. The strikers decided to preserve ab solute quiet until after the burial of their friends and they kept their word. A serious conflict is feared now, however. It is expected that 7,000 miners will now join the strikers and feeling against Sheriff Martin and his deputies grows every hour.

Ohio Gold Democrats.

About 60 delegates attended the state convention of the National (gold) Democrats of Ohio at Columbus. Hor. Jos. H. Outhwaite was indorsed for U. S. senator and the following state ticket was nominated: For governor, Julius Dexter, of Cincinnati; lieutenant-governor, Judge A. E. Merrill, of Sandusky; judge of the supreme court, Judge John H. Clarke, of Youngstown; attorney-general, Daniel Wilson, of Cincinnati: state treasurer, Samuel Stevens, of Columbus; state commissioner of schools, Prof. W. H. Johnson, of Granville; member of state board of public works, Henry D. Coffinberry, of Cleveland.

at the city hospital at Mobile, Ala., also four other cases, and added that he apprehended a serious outbreak. Surgeon Carter telegraphed from Ocean Springs that four cases of yellow fever existed at Berkley, that there had been eight cases known to be yellow fever at Ocean Springs and that two exposed physicians were at Vancleave and Scranton, practically under guard.
The ninth case has been reported at New Orleans, but the prompt action of the authorities to prevent an epidemic by thorough sanitary measures taken without regard to expense relieves the public mind a great deal. But the principal cities of the south are not so easily satisfied and rigid quarantine is being maintained against New Orleans. Jackson, Miss., is all excitement over the presence of 30 cases of dengue fever at Edwards, 25 miles away, and cople are fleeing from the district in all directions.

Both men and women are apt to feel a little blue, when the gray hairs begin to show. It's a very natural feeling. In the normal condition of things gray hairs belong to advanced age. They have no business whitening the head of man or woman, who has not begun to go down the slope of life. As a matter of fact, the hair turns gray regardless of age, or of life's seasons; sometimes it is whitened by sickness, but more often from lack of care. When the hair fades or turns gray there's no. need to resort to hair dyes. The normal color of the hair is restored and retained by the use of

George Caulfield's Journey By Tilse Th. E. Braddon.

HERE were but five minutes left before the time for starting of the night mail from the great central tercommercial city of the Rev. George Caulfield, with a traveling bag in his hand, and a comfortable railway rug over his arm, was walking slowly along the platform, peering into the first-class carriages as he went by, in quest of ease and solitude. He was a man of reserved temper, bookish beyond his years, and he had a horror of finding himself imprisoned among five noisy spirits, cottony, horsey, and of that bolsterous and coarsely-spoken temperament, which the refined and gentle parson would have characterized as rowdy. The Reverend George was a Christian gentleman, but so far as it was possible for his mild nature to hate any one, he hated fast young men. He was not fond of strangers in a general way. He endured them, but he did not love them. He had lingered on the platform till the train was within three minutes of starting, in the hope of securing for himself the luxury of privacy, but as the long hand of the station clock marked the third minute before 11, he espied an empty carriage, and was in the act of entering it, when a hand was laid very gently on "Pardon me, sir," said a somewhat agitated voice, "are you a medical man?" Mr. Caulfield turned, and confronted a man of slight figure and middle the Irish brigade, is now superior of height, some years younger than himself-a man with a pale face, delicate features, and soft black eyes; a very interesting countenance, thought the curate. The stranger looked anxious made. Enough were found to make a and hurried.

"No," answered Mr. Caulfield, "I am a clergyman.'

"That is almost as good. My dear sir, will you do me a great favor? sister, an invalid, is traveling by this alone, but she will be met by friends at Milldale Junction. She is very ill-nothing infectious; chest complaint, poor girl. If you will afford her of your protection, only as far as Milldale, you will oblige me enormously."

There was no time for hesitation, the bell was ringing clamorously, people were hurrying to their seats.

"With pleasure," said the good-natured curate, sorry to lose the delight of loneliness, embarrassed at the idea of an unknown invalid, but far too kind to shrink from doing an act of mercy

The young man ran to the secondclass waiting room, the door of which A New Through Passenger Route for Colorado, Utah and California.

The Chicago Times-Herald of August 27, says that on September 12 the new traffic alliance between the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railway goes into effect, and on that date the former will send its first Denver sleeper out of Chicago. This will be attached to its regular night train for Omaha, and will be delivered there to the Rock Island. On October 2 the tourist car route over these two lines, the Colorado Midland and Southern Pacific will be inaugurated. Tourist cars will be run once a week between Chicago and San was just opposite, and returned almost immediately carrying a muffled figure in his arms-a small, fragile form, which he carried as easily as if it had been that of a child. This slender figure, half buried in a large Rob Roy shawl, he placed with infinite care in one of the seats farthest from the door; then he ran back to the waiting-room for more wraps, a pillow, and a footwarmer. He administered with womanly tenderness to the comfort of the invalid, who reclined motionless and will be inaugurated. Tourist cars will be run once a week between Chicago and San Francisco. For further details regarding this new route call on or address Geo. H. Heafford. General Passenger and Ticket Agent. C. M. & St. P. Ry., 410 Old Colony Building. Chicago. Ill. silent in her corner, and then, hurried and agitated in the imminent departure of the mail, he stood at the door of the carriage talking to Mr. Caulfield, who had taken his seat in the opposite corner to that occupied by the invalid.

"You are more than good," said the stranger. "Don't talk to her; she is low and nervous, and you will agitate her painfully if you force her to talk dare say she will doze all the way. It is only an hour from here to Milldale, and no stoppage till you get there. Oh, by the way, kindly take this giddy on the way, give her a few drops of the contents. There goes the flag. Will you allow me to offer you my card? I am deeply indebted. Good

All this had been said hurriedly. George Caulfield had hardly time to take the proffered card when the engine puffed itself laboriously out of the great, ghastly terminus, a wilderness of iron work, a labyrinth of tun-nels and sidings and incomprehensible platforms, very gloomy on this cold winter night. For the first few minutes Mr. Caul-field felt so confused and disturbed by the suddenness of the charge that had been forced upon him that he hardly knew what he was doing. Then he glanced at the lady, and saw with a feeling of relief that her head was reosing comfortably against the padded division of the carriage, and that her ace was hidden by a blue gauze veil which she wore over a small brown straw hat. She was breathing somewhat heavily, he thought, but that was to be expected in a sufferer from chest complaint.

"I hope her heart is all right," thought George, with a sudden sense of the awfulness of his position were his invalid charge to expire while in

He looked at the stranger's card: MR. ELSDEN, Briargate.

The address looked well. Briargate was one of the most respectable business streets in Grandchester. - Doubtless it had once been a rustic lane, antly, and the bees and butterflies, and village lads and lassies, made merry amidst odors of new-mown hay. Nowadays Briargate was a narrow street of lofty warehouses, tall enough to shut out the sun, a street that smelled of The express had cleared Grandchester by this time, tearing along a viaduct above a forest of tall chimneys, and then, with a sweeping curve, away to the windy open country, a land as wild and fresh and free as if there were no such things as factories and smoky chimneys in the world. Mr. Caulfield had, for the first ten minutes or so, felt revived by his inability to a comfort to him to behold her placidly asleep yonder, requiring no attention, leaving him free to dip in Tennyson's latest idyl which he carried uncut in his traveling bag. But so variable is the human mind, so fanciful and altogether irrational at times, that now Mr. Caulfield began to feel vaguely curious about the face hidden under the blue gauze veil. He began to wonder about it. Was it so very pale, so deadly white, as it seemed to him under that gauze veil, in the dim light the oil lamp? No, it was the blue gauze, no doubt, which gave that ghastly pallor to the sharply-cut features, the sunken cheeks.

The young lady's eyes were alto-gether hidden by the shadow of her hat, but Mr. Caulfield felt sure that she was asleep. She was breathing so quietly that he could scarcely see any indication of the faint breath that must be stirring her breast in gentle undulations. Sometimes he fancied he saw the folds of the Rob Roy shawl rise and fall in regular putsations. Some times it seemed to him that nothing stirred save the shadows moved by the flickering flame of the wind-blows flame.

He sat and watched that quiet figure in the corner, only taking his eyes away now and then to look out at the dark land through which they were speeding, to see a cosy village, lit by half a dozen farthing rush-lights flit by like a phantom, or a town that made patch of angry glare on the edge of the horizon. Useless to think of enjoying Tennyson by the sickly gleam of that wretched lamp! He stretched himself up in his warm rug; he closed his eyes, and tried to sleep. In vain. He was thinking of the face under the blue veil. He was broad awakeing but sit and contemplate the figure reposing so quietly in the opposite corner. How he longed for Milldale Junc-He looked at his watch. The inexorable dial told him that it was only half an hour since he left Grandchester. His own sensations told him that it was a long night of agony.

Naturally a nervous man, to-night his nerves were getting the mastery ov-

"I never took such a miserable journey," he said to himself. "If she would only throw back that veil—if she would only speak to me-if she would only stir, or make some little sign of life! It is like traveling with Death personified. Were she to lift that veil this instant, I should expect to see a grinning skull underneath

He had been told not to speak to her, but the inclination to disobev that injunction was every moment intensifying. Yet, if she were sleeping as pla-cidly as she seemed to sleep, it would be cruel to disturb her: and he was a man overflowing with the milk of human kindness

He took out his Tennyson, cut the leaves, puzzling out a few lines here and there by the uncertain lamp-light. This helped him to while away a quarter of an hour. He looked at his watch. God be praised! fifteen minutes more and the train was due at Milldale. What bliss to deliver that poor creature into the keeping of her friends—to have done with that mu!fled figure and that unseen face for-

The train was fast approaching the junction; seven minutes more alone remained of the hour, and this night mail was famed for its punctuality. Just at the last that feeling of morbid curiosity, which had been tormenting the curate for the greater part of the journey became an irresistible impulse. He changed his seat to that directly opposite his silent companion. Here he could see the form of the delicate features under the blue veil! How cruelly illness had sharpened the outline. The girl's ungloved hand hung listlessly over the morocco-covered arm, which divided her seat from the next. Such a pallid hand, so nerveless ottle, and if she should turn faint or in its attitude! Something, he knew iddy on the way, give her a few not what, prompted Mr. Caulfield to touch those pale fingers. He bent over and laid his hand lightly upon them. Great God, what an icy hand! He had felt the touch of death on many a sad occasion in the path of duty, but this was colder than death itself. A cry of horror burst from his lips. He snatched aside the gauze veil, and saw a face purpled by the awful shadow of "Milldale Junction! Change here for Broughborough, Mudford, Middlebridge, Sloughcombe-" and a string of names that dwindled into silence far away along the platform.

George Caulfield sprang out of the railway carriage like a man dis-traught. He seized upon the nearest

"For God's sake, tell me what to do!" he cried. "There is a lady in that carriage dead or dying. Indeed, I fear she is actually dead. She was placed in my charge by a stranger at Grandchester. She is to be met by friends here. It will be an awful shock to hem-near relatives, perhaps. How am I to find them? How am I to break the sad news to them?"

He was pale to the lips, cold drops of sweat were on his brow. All the pentup excitement of the last hour burst from him now with uncontrollable force. The guard was as calm as a man of iron.

"Fetch the station-master here, will you?" he said to a passing porter. thing, sir," he said, to the agitated curate; "but you'd better keep yourself quiet. Such misfortunes will happen. We'll get a medical man here presently dare say there's one in the train. Perhaps the lady has only fainted. Hadn't you better step inside and sit

They were standing at the door of the carriage. George Caulfield glanced with a shudder at that-muffled figure in that farthest corner. "No," he snewered, profoundly sei-tated, "I could do no good. I fear there is no hope. I fear she is dead."

"No relation of yours, sir, the isdy?" asked the guard, scrutinizing the cur ate rather curiously.

"I never saw her till to-night;" and then, in flurried accents, Mr. Canifield related the circumstances of his departure from Grandchester.

"Here comes the station-master," said the guard, without vouchsafing any comment on the curate's story.

The station-master was a Lusinesslike man, of commanding presence, and Mr. Caulfield turned to him as for pro-

Stopping and Starting Electric Car. It takes just as much electric powe to start a car as it would animal power. and it requires less current to keep the car moving than to start it, so that means a large consumption of energy. In the American Electrician there appears an article in which the actual figures for these two cases are given. It is shown that the cost of one stop on each trip of a car during a year on a fifteen-car line may amount to $70 or to $467 for a 100-car road: if these figures are multiplied by two stops at each crossing on a road operating long lines the large cost is evident. Careful handling of the controller will save over $1,000 a year on a 15-car road and $7,000 per year or a 100-car road. The difference between a careful motorman who has been well instructed and a careless one may amount to from 3 to 8 per cent of the total energy consumed. It is perfectly safe, according to this authority, to say that 10 per cent of the energy can be saved by more careful handling of the controller, while on most roads at least 15 per cent could be saved without doubt. maxim of every motorman should be: "Use the brake as little as possible and drift as much as possible. employment of skilled motormen capable of understanding the mechanism they handle would result in a saving to the trolley companies, even though a higher salary were paid the men, and at the same time add much comfort to

In the Chinese Quarter. It is an experience for one who has never been in the Chinese quarter to go into one of those dark hallways, say in Pell street, and take either the stairway at hand, or cross the back area and take the stairway of the rear tenement, writes a New_York corre spondent of the Pittsburg Dispatch. The air is suffocatingly sweet with the odor of opium. On the stairs you meet Chinamen, smoking cigarettes that give out a curious Oriental smell. At each laundry are four doors, each with what looks like a Chinese laundry slip pasted between the upper panels. And if your step is unfamiliar, many of these doors will open. Then you et a glimpse of an Oriental interior. luxurious with couches, rugs, soft burning lamps, delicate china and all manner of costly wares from the east. And blocking the doorway stands the hostess. She will be Caucasian. will be comely. She will be clad in a locse gown of some gaily flowered material. She will have high heeled shoes and a slight showing of a gaudy silk stocking. In her fingers will be lighted cigarette. In her eyes will be that shifting, dreamy expression that tells the opium smoker as plainly as the stained fingers tell the cigarette Missed the Nightingale's Song. An amusing story is told of the late Jean Ingelow. Once when she was staying with some friends in the coun try it transpired that, although she often wrote delightfully of nightingales, she had never heard one sing So one night the whole household went out in the moonlight especially to hear them, and after, by an effort, holding their tongues for five minutes while the nightingales sang divinely, they were startled by Miss Ingelow asking, "Are they singing? I don't hear anything! with a Londoner's dread of draughts the poetess, before going out into the night air, had filled her ears with cotton wool!-Philadelphia Record.

A Question Answered. The State Board of Nebraska re-cently sent out circulars to the farmers of the state, asking the question: "Does farming pay?" The following letter reproduced from the September num-ber of "The Corn Belt" would seem to answer the question pretty effectively:

Seward, Neb., Aug. 25, 1897.
To the Editor of the Corn Belt:
I landed in Seward County Nov. 22, 1868, from Pennsylvania, overland with a team and wagon and about $800 in money. I now have 400 acres of well improved land within sight of the county seat, unencumbered, worth $20,-000. I also have 30 head of horses, 35 head of thoroughbred Hereford cattle and 100 head of thoroughbred Poland-China hogs, some 8 or 10 of them cost-ing me $110 each. I also have city proping me $110 each. I also have city prop-erty to the amount of over $3,000, and some $3,000 or more of personal property, besides several thousand bushels of corn and grain. I have made it a point to feed all I raise. I do not be lieve I have sold over a thousand bushels of corn since I have lived in the state. While we have had a few short crops, we have never had a total am well pleased with farm-Nebraska and would advise all my friends to cast their lot with us. Yours very truly, Levi Hofer.

THE HEAT PLAGUE OF AUGUST, 1896.

Mrs. Pinkham's Explanation of the Unusual Number of Deaths and Prostrations Among Women. The great heat plague of August, 1896, was not without its lesson. One could not fail to notice in the long lists of the dead throughout this country, that so many of the victims were women in their thirties, and were exhibited by sufferings peculiar to their sex; women who, taking no thought of themselves, or who, attaching no importance to first symptoms, allowed their female system to become run down.

Constipation, capricious appetite, restlessnessorebodings of evil, vertigo, languor tess, especially in the minimum which night, or whenever the blood becomes overheated, are all warnings. Don't wait too long to build up your strength, that Lydia E. is now a positive necessity! Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has specific curative powers. You cannot do better than to commence a course of this grand medicine. By the neglect of first symptoms you will see by the following letter what terrible suffering came to Mrs. Craig and how she was cured: "I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and think it is the best medicine for women in the world. I was so weak and nervous that I thought I could not live from one day to the next. I had prolapsus uteri and leucorrheea and thought I was going into consumption. I would get so faint I thought I would die. I had dragging pains in my back, burning sensation down to my feet, and so many miserable feelings. People said that I looked like a dead woman. Doctors tried to cure me, but failed. I had
