Pronzed brows, the morning sunlight Had faced the battle's storm and surge. And the old banner fluttering free. And the old name: Indexes fain,
To greet the welcoming breezes fain,
Was stabled through all its field of stars,
And rent by showers of fiery rain.

"Halt!" Swift and sharp along the line They heard the ringing order pass.—
"A lark's nest!" Lo! the mother bird
Rose startled from the trembling grass! "March!" Moved as by a single will, The column parts. Untouched betw The young larks in their downy bed Nestle amid the clustering green.

A fearless thrill of half-fledged wings! And eyes that looked undimmed on death, Rain, sudden drops down furrowed

The bravest hearts are tenderest!
And safe the land whose heroes spars
To trample e'en a wild bird's nest!
—Youth's Companion.

Carson to his friend, the prependary, a girl, despite her years, a soft pink the train coming, to which he re-"I already feel the habits of a bachelor growing on me and fear that if I do not marry soon they will so far have fastened themselves on me as not to be shaken off."

Yes, I think they will begin to grow on you quite soon, now, said the prebendary, who had been married twenty years. Almost coincidentally with Carson's nvestiture in his new parish, came a diocesan convention at Saratoga. which in those ante-bellum days was the summer social capital of the country, and the unnumbered rivals that have arisen since were unknown. Carson came to-this scene of gaiety with his heart fluttering like a girl's. dreaming of meeting his fate there among the throngs of women from all over the land. It was on the second day that he met Miss Miriam Manigault of South Carolina, who attended all the sessions of the convention, a
