It was on a mission of mercy to "the island" that Miss Brown met Dr. Matz you to begin at the beginning:

A little over 11 years ago Chicago was taking a very great interest in ideed in a little seven-year-old grid who could play the violin with the skill of a born artist. The little one was Josephine Brown. She had won her honors at a series of public concerts. A year or two later she came to New York with her mother, and added to her iame as a violinist was her reputation for childish beauty. The almost perfectly formed features of her face, the magnificent black eyes and lons, jet-black hair acclaimed har wherever she appeared. Those who were sharmed with her then predicted that has she krew older she would become one of the most heautiful women in the world.

In New York Mrs. Brown secured for her daughter the leading violin teachers, and very soon musicians and artists were attracted toward the little western girl. Photographers, artists in black and white and those who painted in oil besieged the mother to allow Josephine to pose for them. Mrs. Brown granted as many of these requests as possible, and the Madonna-like face of the little girl became well known in the artists' studios of the city.
