"One reason why the result is so dif ficult of comprehansion is, that we begin by blinding our right with prejudices against the man. We are not now about to consider how far he is bad or troud. wicked or beneficent, devil or angel; Our opinion of his moral character has been placed on record, and it is not yet time to revies that estimate. Nor are we simply going to 'give the devil his due.'-We have a harder task on hand, but one that, perhaps, concerns us and our interest sumewhat more nearly. It is to ascertain the nature and messore of that thing called Louis Napoleon, as a patural phenomenon, and as one element in the pplitical and social dynamics of the world. An amusing adventure is related as baving happened to the Bank of England, which bad committed the great disrespect of refusing to discount a bill Laf a large amount, drawn by Anselm Rothschild, of Frankfort, on Nathan Rothschild, of London. The bank had haughtily replied "that they discounted only their own bills, and not those of private persons." But they had to do with one stronger than the bank .-Private persons? exclaimed Nathan Rothschild, when they reported to him the fact. "Private persons!" "I will make those gentlemen are what sort of private persons we are!" Three weeks afterwards Nathan Rotischild-wl.o. had employed the interval in gathering all the £5 notes he could procure in England and on the Continent-presented himself at the bank at the opening of the office. He drew from his meket book a £5 note, and they naturally counted out five sovereigns, at the same time looking quite astonished that the Baron Rothschild should have personally troubled himself for each a trifle. The Baron examined one by one the coins, and put them into a little canvas hag, then drawing out another them, and in some instances trying the first bag full, he bas-ed them to his elerk, and received a second, and tious continued till the close of the bank .--The Baron had employed seven lawrs to change £21,000.
