INGTOX-ITS UNWRITTEN HISTORY.

LAIROSBURG, Aug., 23, 1880. It is easily discernible that the descrip tion which I have given of Mount Wash ington is lean and imperfect. It lacks lit erally embonpoint, so to speak. It hasn' the terse, vivid and emphatic illustration of a skillful pen. It fails in freshness and romantic ardor, but it is so true that I have taken a hatchet and gone out in the gloom repeatedly, with the deliberate intention to tomahawk myself simply because it was so ticket, or 25 cents for two tickets, will be terribly true. The name of the mountain naturally brought to mind the hatchet story of truthfulness, and it is cheerful to think that it has fallen to my lot to spread a mantle of fact over the frost bites of fiction which have so long pestered the aforesaid pile of rocks. A gentleman of much travel informed me that the scenery among the White Mountains was not excelled by anything on the Papific coast, and that the tourist who had visited them would fail to find their superior on the continent. You can believe it or not! I don't!
