Inwin Station, Pa, Nov. 12, 1880. The day broke finely; afternoon came with some clouds and now and hen a few drops of rain; but to be disappointed in our ride and give it up is no easy tack, and we determine to take a short drive among the hills. But, indeed, it is rather longer than might be expected upon measuring the distance with the eye, for some of you doubtless know that when we start for a given point in this section, it is not as it is in Michigan, to meach there by a straight road; here, we turn and apparently go directly from the point, 1880 Jan 2, To paid Samson Mead, and yet we are exactly on the way.

Persons not acquainted with the hills would suppose, perhaps, that to mount to the summit with horse and carriage would be quite impossible, just a I did upon first sight of them; and indeed, no one was kind enough to inform me differently, until learned by "sad experience" that the way to the summit wound round and round making rather a tedious distance in the end. Yet, there are many objects of interest on the way-coal pits, coke overs, streams winding in various directions, many branches of railroads, sycamore trees with their curious litile buds, miners' houses, stone buildings,

The Westmoreland Chal Company are very much engaged in ridding Pennsylvania of its coal. This is an old and wealthy company. I saw several shafts belonging to them.
