Ancestral Portraits

I am pleased you see the traces
In these sweet 'Bir Joshua' faces,
Of my facture, and my eyes;
Fair they are, that girl and brother.
With their young and smiling mother,
Beautiful beyond disguise. For observe their dress how simple, Musics with embroidered wimple, Yet I think: the effect is good: Scant perchance, yet freely flowing: Nothing to impede the growing

Into graceful womanhood. And their houses were not cumbered.
With the rurities unnumbered,
Wherewith now we dook our rooms;
Weinecot; we'le, and plainly tinted;
Nothing wirld save where glinted

Sunshine on a bowl of blooms. And their gardens differed greatly From all those we have seen lately, Where the flowers in strange device Grow as in a broide ed cushion, Holding all that art can push in, Without leave to spread or rise.

Their flowers grew in natural order. In the wide old-fashioned border, Bright with pink and peony; With tall hollyhocks in posies, Stocks, and lavender, and roses. Purple larkspur and sweet pea.

And I liked their yew-cut alleys, Framing vistas of the valleys. A d the church-tower, and the lea, And the stately trees whose shadow Feli at eve o'er park and meadow, Century after century.

Their amusements—well, for certain, If on them I lift the curtain. You'll pronounce them tame and few: And a yellow page you're turning— You would scrutinize their learning; Ah, it would seem small to you. Who have sat for hours in classes. Making notes of all that passes.

But you see their schere was home: There they reigned supreme and thrifty, And the matron long past fifty, Kept her dignity and bloom. And they had their Christmas dances, Summer junketings and fancies, And the dainties, cheeriest teas; sometimes too a little scandal; But a strain from Boyce or Handel

Cleared the air like Summer breeze. And although they might work blindly, Yet their aims were good and kindly; In their quiet neighborhood Not a child but knew and loved them, Old and middle-aged approve them, And took pattern as they could. So they lived, my ancestresses,

At God's secrets veiled for aye: Books were fewer, knowled te rarer; But none nobler, sweeter, fairer, Grace the England of t -day.
