The Burton Farmers' Club.

Editors Press:—Not seeing our June meeting of the Farmers' Club reported in your columns I conclude your correspondent's ink has dried up in the heat we have had for the last month, and I will try to give your readers a brief account of what was done at the July meeting, which was held on the 4th at the residence of Mr. Gladden in Owosso township.

There was a good attendance, notwithstanding the busy harvest time. The President being absent the members were called to order and the meeting was opened in the usual manner by the Vice President. The first business was the election of officers for the next six months, that being the term for which they are elected. As a result of the ballot, F. M. Shepard is our next President, C. R. Woodin, Vice President, and Mrs. C. R. Woodin, Secretary.

Then came the discussion of the subject, "Economy on the Farm and in the Kitchen." Mrs. Rowell made some remarks, followed by F. M. Shepard, M. Bignal, C. R. Woodin and others. But with such a vast amount of ground as this subject covers little could be done in one afternoon. It is a good topic to talk about and will give some of our members a chance to tell what they know about economy at a future meeting.

After a very pleasant and profitable talk, we were invited to supper by our hostess, and if economy had been the subject of which we had been talking and thinking, it was very plain to be seen that the lady of the house had not practiced it, as was proved by the abundance of good things on the table, not the least of which were pitchers of "pure cold lemonade."

After supper we were again called to order and a committee of three, consisting of C. R. Woodin, C. R. Rowell and Mrs. G. T. Mason were appointed to make out a program of subjects and appoint the speakers for the next six months. We then adjourned to meet in four weeks on the bank of the river in the Carson neighborhood for a basket picnic. We will have speakers outside of the Club, also recitations and music, and will try to have a pleasant time.

Owosso Township, July 10, 1886.

The masterly series of papers on "Great American Cities" in Harper's Magazine is continued in the August issue by Edmund Kirke's contribution on Detroit, which is the leading article of a rich number. The history of "The City of the Straits" is cleverly outlined from the time before Hendrick Hudson set foot on Manhattan Island, when the Hurons pointed out its site to Champlain as the gate-way to the vast seas of sweet water. The first settlement by the adventurous Frenchman, Cadillac, the romantic frontier life of its early period, the revolutionary scenes clustering about the Western centre of the struggle for freedom, the surprising flood of Yankee immigration which was opened by the Erie Canal, and its astounding growth since, are all deftly described. But the city of to-day is the main subject, and its characteristics in enterprise, society, architecture, and culture are well treated. A lively part of the article is the two pages given to "McQuade," the Detroit Free Press humorist, whose portrait is one of the numerous illustrations.

THE JULY PASSY (forty-eight quarto pages, illustrated) is in every particular thoroughly good. Its leading articles are contributed by Pansy (Mrs. G. R. Alden), Margaret Sidney, Faye Huntington, and the Rev. C. R. Livingston. It contains also an interesting letter from India, descriptive of "How Some Missionaries Travel," excellent short stories, poems, etc., etc. Ten cents a number, $1.00 per year. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co., Publishers.

Mrs. Rose Elizabeth Cleveland is engaged to take the editorial management of a magazine in Chicago, the Literary Life, a position more in harmony with her tastes than mistress of the White House. A Washington letter says:

Mrs. Cleveland's necessary withdrawal from her old post is a source of regret to the cabinet ladies, by whom she has been much beloved. When they expressed it to her at the marriage, she said: "I have seen this event in prospect for two years, and have known for one year that the arrangement had been made between my brother and Mrs. Folson. If you will recollect my course last winter you will recall many things that were done or not done in reference to this change. My new sister is a woman capable of great development—a much stronger character than appears on the surface. She is a superior person."

Be what you seem to be, unless you are an actor taking the part of a crank.

BERYL'S DOUBLE.

"In fact there never was, since the world was first peopled."

"Ah, yes," said Beryl, "but I am sure that you have never seen a girl like me."

"Not ever will be able to equal the paragon that you've described," said old fellow, "but what you want to convince me of."

"Ah, yes, that's all right. If I could only see you."

"With your eyes you mean. But then, you see, I am not the paragon that I am free as far as this particular side is concerned—where you, poor old fellow, you, I very much fear."

"What?"

"Must be in love." And Mark Dynson shook his head with mock gravity.

"I'm afraid I am," Geoffrey answered with a boyish flush, "but if she hadn't been the dearest girl in the world I should never have cared for her."

"Of course not. But did it ever strike you that if you hadn't cared for her, she wouldn't have been the dearest girl in the world?"

"Get these behind me, Geoffrey. I wouldn't trust the sweetest woman that ever drew a breath; in fact," he concluded positively, "she's the last one I would trust."

"You're a rabid old cynic, Mark!" Geoffrey said warmly. "You never met a woman like Beryl Fawcett. I'd stake my life upon her worth."

"Rash man! If your happiness were not involved, Geoff, I'd take a grim satisfaction in proving your fault."

"Never mind me," said Geoffrey, eagerly. "I will abide by the result of any test you can make. Beryl is a girl in a thousand."

"My dear Geoff," said Mark, appealingly, "spare me! If you are satisfied, I suppose it is all right. I am glad of anything that makes you happy, but I don't want the best friend I have to wreck his life on the shoals of matrimony."

"I won't," said Geoffrey confidently. "And then he caught a glimpse of a pretty little figure, in creamy tulle, across the street under the rosy shade of a pink parasol."

Mark Dynson looked round and found himself alone. Geoffrey had dashed over the way, and his blue-ribboned hat had already disappeared under the same pink canopy.

"There they go!" said Mark, with fine scorn.

He saw no more of Geoffrey that day or the next. The following morning he went down on the beach and pitched his tent, which consisted of a gay bit of canvas in the shape of a canopy mounted on a pointed pole.

This contrivance could be put up in a few minutes, by means of pegs and cords, which Mark carried in his pocket, and it could be folded up into very small compass.

Under it he loved to lie on the soft sand, with his pipe and a book, watching the tide come in.

The morning was a perfect one. Mark was lying with his head pillowed on the sand, gazing tranquilly out to sea, when an object suddenly loomed up against his horizon.

It was a girl, in a batiste gown, brightened with cherry bows. Mark knew it instantly.

"Miss Fawcett," he muttered, with a keen glance at the brunette face under the red parasol. "She is younger than I thought. Can it be possible that Geoff is really in love with that little chit?"

"The little chit" was walking along with a languid step, her face flushed with the heat about her; her eyes rested for a moment, with longing, on the canopy, and then she dropped down on the sand a few feet away.

A low, fluttering sigh escaped her, and she unfurled a large fan which she swayed very slowly. What tiny feet and hands she had! What a baby she was anyhow, with that fluff of dense black hair about her pretty brown face, with its glorious angel eyes and carmine coloring. Her cheeks were round and dimpled, and her lips had a childish droop that was quite captivating.

"It is awfully warm out here, isn't it?" she said, turning to Mark, in the most naive manner conceivable.

He jumped as though he'd been stung. "Yes," he stammered, taking his pipe out of his mouth; "it's awfully hot! Would you—would you like to sit under the awning? You'll find it much cooler."

"Thank you," she said, accepting at once; "I hoped you'd ask me. I saw this tent out here, and I thought it would be awfully jolly under it, so I came."

Mark stared.

"Let me make a sand pillow for you," he said, when he rose to the occasion. And straightway he went to pile up the sand.

"Oh, thank you!" she said, leaning back with a radiant look; "that's lovely. Do you come out here every day?"

"Nearly every day," he assented.

And then he began to study the sweet baby face, with its perfectly unconscious air of sang froid. He had never seen anything like it, should heavens! Was this the sort of girl his friend was going to marry? A girl who would make up with strange men and embark on tele-ates in such a lonely spot as that!

"What are you reading?" she said, touching the yellow-covered book he held: "Sartor Resartus." Dear me! How awfully stupid it must be! I have been reading the sweetest book you ever saw. I'll lend it to you if you like. It is called 'Angelina de Beranger.' Angelina was engaged to three men at once, and she lived in a queer little house, and she had such lovely clothes! A pink satin, all embroidered with pearls, and a lavender velvet morning gown, and a white-and-gold costume all—"

"It must be lovely," said Mark, sardonically.

"It is," she said, snaking out her face-drummed skirts. Do you think this dress is becoming to me?"

"Very," he replied, with some amusement. "You look like the sunset."

"Oh!" she said, regretfully, "I thought you were going to say something about my hair."

"Oh, yes. Well, it is a beautiful shade of brown, but I don't think it suits you."

She drove into her pocket and produced a small box of hair cream, which she straightway presented to Mark, who took it with a grateful smile.

"Thank you very much for that," said Mark, "but I don't think I need it."

"No, no, no," she said, "it is a very good thing. I have used it myself, and it is awfully good."

"So they are," Mark assented.

He had given himself up to the situation, and began to feel vastly amused. "Are you fond of chocolate, Miss Fawcett?" he enquired.

"Why, how do you know my name?" she said, a smile dimpling its way over her pretty face.

"I have seen you before," he said, smiling back at her.

"Have you?" she said, and then suddenly she scrambled to her feet. Along the beach some distance away, a Stanhope phanton was rolling towards them.

"I must go," she said hurriedly, holding out her hand. "Good-bye! Perhaps I shall see you again. Will you be here to-morrow?"

"To-morrow at ten o'clock," said Mark. "Will you come?"

She nodded her head.

"Will you allow me to walk back with you?"

"Oh, no, I thank you. Someone might see us, and I'd rather not."

She was gone in a moment, leaving Mark supplied. He stood there like a stick till the Stanhope phanton came rolling by, and Geoffrey's cheery voice cried:

"Hallo, old man! Don't you want a lift?"

He was all alone in the carriage, and Mark was glad enough that hot day to pull up his tent and ride back with him.

"Beryl had a headache," Geoffrey explained, as they rolled along the level beach. "I shouldn't just come without her, but Tippet hasn't been out of her stall for three days, and she was getting very uneasy."

Mark laid his hand over his friend's. "Geoff, old boy," he said, gravely, "you know what we were talking about the other day? I'm afraid I was nearer right than I thought. This morning has proven to me that Miss Fawcett is not only a flirt but possibly something worse."

"It's a lie!" Geoffrey dashed out. "I don't say that again, or, by heavens, I'll denounce you!"

"Don't lose your head," Mark said, softly. "I know what I am saying. Miss Fawcett left me a quarter of an hour ago."

"She did not?"

"But I say she did; and what is more, she made an appointment with me, a perfect stranger to her, to meet her here to-morrow morning."

"I will not believe it!" Geoffrey cried fiercely.

"Calm yourself," said Mark, quietly. "It hurts me to have to tell you this. Geoff, but—wait! You shall see for yourself. To-morrow I will keep my appointment, and you can be there too!"

Near by there was a deserted pavilion, and it was there that Geoffrey waited the next morning, with his glass levelled at the spot where Mark pitched his tent.

Alas, that fatal morning! His torturing doubts became agonizing certainties. He saw Beryl join his friend, and afar off witnessed her brazen efforts at flirtation.

"Mark was right!" he groaned. "But, oh, I cannot bear it!"

He wandered about the beach for several hours. It was not until the twilight shed its calm upon his spirit that he ventured into Beryl's presence.

Angry words ensued, recrimination and denial, and then Geoffrey left her, a free, but a wretched man.

"I think you are right to go away," said Mark, the following day, when they took their last walk on the beach together. "Your wound will heal better in another climate."

"It will never heal," Geoffrey said, bitterly. "My life is ruined."

"Don't talk like that, old man—"

Mark began.

And then he suddenly clutched his friend's arm, for a bend in the beach had brought them suddenly upon two girls sitting on the sand. One, a dainty figure, in a cream-colored dress and cherry ribbons, was sobbing bitterly.

"I only did it for fun!" she cried.

And then catching sight of Geoffrey, she sprang up and ran to him, tripping over her long dress so that she fell right into his arms.

"Geoff, dear," she cried, "Beryl is very cross at me because I dressed up in her clothes and came out here to take a walk! There wasn't any harm in that, was there?"

Mark was staring from one to the other.

"You must excuse Gipsy, Mr. Lumscombe," said the other lady with dignity; "and you too, sir. She is only twelve, though she does look so tall. She has been masquerading in my clothes, you see."

"Then you are Miss Fawcett!" Mark cried, addressing the real Beryl. "Your sister looks so much like you that I—Geoff, old man, I take it all back! This is the heroine of my adventure. I have been flirting with Gipsy."

A cloud seemed to roll away from Geoffrey's face. Mark did not wait to hear more, but carried Gipsy off with him, holding up her dragged train, and chasing the tears away with his merry jokes.

It was a long time before Geoffrey and Beryl came back, but peace had been restored, and happiness came with it.

Gipsy was in disgrace, however, and though Mark tried hard to beg off for her till after Beryl's wedding, she was packed off to school.

She wrote to Mark all the while she was away. He thought of her only as a child, but one day he wrote her and found her a woman—a woman whom he loved, and the woman destined to convert him to matrimony.

The end of it was that Mark married Beryl's cousin.

Mourning in Korea.

In walking through the streets of Seoul one often meets with queer sights. One of the most common is a group of people, dressed in black, with their faces painted white, and their hands and feet wrapped in black bands.

These are mourners. In the year 1882 a Japanese traveler who landed on the northeast coast, found the officials and all the inhabitants in this lugubrious masquerade. They were in mourning for the queen, who was supposed to have been murdered, but who, after the people had worn sackcloth half a year for her sake, emerged safe and sound from the hiding-place where she had taken refuge from the pursuit of her wicked father-in-law, Tai-on-Kun. For a queen it is customary to mourn twelve months, for parents and near kinsfolk three years. What a deep influence this prescriptive usage has upon the life of the people is illustrated by the following story of an aged bachelor, who was asked why he had never taken a wife.

"My parents, as well as myself," he said, "were desirous that I should marry, and a suitable young lady being found our betrothal took place. Then my father-in-law died, and we had, of course, to wait three years. I had hardly put off my mourning when I had to bewail the loss of my own poor father; necessarily here was another term of three years' waiting. When these were up the mother of my future wife took sick and expired, and thus we were obliged to delay our marriage another three years. Lastly, I had the misfortune to lose my own dear mother, which naturally caused a further adjournment. So that, as four times three makes twelve, that number of years had passed over our heads and made us both the older. At this time my betrothed fell ill, and as she was at death's door I went to pay her a last visit. My future brother-in-law met me at the door and said: 'Although you are not formally married, yet perhaps I may for this once look upon you as man and wife; come in and see her. I had hardly entered and been face to face with my poor wife than she breathed her last. When I saw this all thoughts of marriage fled from me, and I have remained a bachelor ever since.'"

Girls of the Marquesas.

As our bark sailed from the harbor of the Marquesas, we were struck by the beauty of the natives. The women were dressed in white, and their faces were painted white, and their hands and feet wrapped in black bands.

Girls of the Marquesas.

As our bark sailed from the harbor of the Marquesas, we were struck by the beauty of the natives. The women were dressed in white, and their faces were painted white, and their hands and feet wrapped in black bands.

These are mourners. In the year 1882 a Japanese traveler who landed on the northeast coast, found the officials and all the inhabitants in this lugubrious masquerade. They were in mourning for the queen, who was supposed to have been murdered, but who, after the people had worn sackcloth half a year for her sake, emerged safe and sound from the hiding-place where she had taken refuge from the pursuit of her wicked father-in-law, Tai-on-Kun. For a queen it is customary to mourn twelve months, for parents and near kinsfolk three years. What a deep influence this prescriptive usage has upon the life of the people is illustrated by the following story of an aged bachelor, who was asked why he had never taken a wife.

"My parents, as well as myself," he said, "were desirous that I should marry, and a suitable young lady being found our betrothal took place. Then my father-in-law died, and we had, of course, to wait three years. I had hardly put off my mourning when I had to bewail the loss of my own poor father; necessarily here was another term of three years' waiting. When these were up the mother of my future wife took sick and expired, and thus we were obliged to delay our marriage another three years. Lastly, I had the misfortune to lose my own dear mother, which naturally caused a further adjournment. So that, as four times three makes twelve, that number of years had passed over our heads and made us both the older. At this time my betrothed fell ill, and as she was at death's door I went to pay her a last visit. My future brother-in-law met me at the door and said: 'Although you are not formally married, yet perhaps I may for this once look upon you as man and wife; come in and see her. I had hardly entered and been face to face with my poor wife than she breathed her last. When I saw this all thoughts of marriage fled from me, and I have remained a bachelor ever since.'"

King Lazarus.

Some of the most interesting and valuable of the world's treasures are those which are hidden in the hearts of men. The story of King Lazarus is a story of such treasures. It is a story of a man who was born in a poor and lowly place, but who by the power of God became a king. His life was a life of suffering and sacrifice, but it was a life that was full of meaning and purpose. His death was a death that was full of glory and honor. His resurrection was a resurrection that was full of power and life. His story is a story that is full of lessons for all of us. It is a story that teaches us about the power of God, about the importance of faith, and about the value of a life that is lived for others.

The Home Orchard.

A variety of apple or other fruit, because not of the choicest flavor, color, and shape, is not therefore necessarily to be despised. It may have good cooking qualities; it may be sound, healthy, a long-keeper, or be capable of withstanding extreme cold. All these are valuable qualities. But for the farm orchard, or that of the amateur, a very considerable extension of varieties may be permissible that would be otherwise thrown out on account of non-productiveness as one of the principal reasons. As a rule a fruit of superior excellence will not bear so heavily nor so uniformly as coarser varieties. But the farmers, and all those who raise fruit for family use, want quality rather than quantity. They want but few trees of a kind, but these of varieties that will produce fruit successfully from early in the season to the later autumn and spring-keeping sorts.

The trees selected for a family orchard should be of those varieties adapted to the soil and climate of a locality. As to these it is sometimes difficult to decide. But by advising with neighbors as to the varieties which succeed with them, and are healthy, but little difficulty will be experienced in making up a list. And although as much fruit will not be gathered one year with another, the quality will compensate for quantity. In addition, the different forms of the trees will be pleasant additions to the landscape. All this will apply with equal force to all other fruits that may be cultivated in a climate, including small fruits.—Chicago Tribune.

A BASE-BALL REPORT.

A Delightful and Instructive Study for the Philologist.

I can conceive of no more delightful study for the philologist than a study of the language of the great national game of baseball. Never before have I found the language of the English language so full of life and interest.

"You will observe, my friends," I began, "that the words were occupied by Whitney and Hackett as our battery, and that Grassop and Jim, filled the pitcher's box. A battery consists of catcher and a catcher, and the latter standing between."

"Why do they put the pitcher in a box?" inquired the young lady with a bang.

"I don't know," I answered, doubtfully, "unless it is a measure of economy. Pitchers come high."

"I know," said the young woman, "with intellectual curvature of the nose, it is to keep the opposing players from hitting him. I read in the paper the other day that when Redbourne stepped out of the box Capt. Rowe bopped on to him with both feet."

"Very likely," I replied, "but to continue. Hornung got a base on balls and Sutton passed a corker to Bassett, who threw to second, doubling Hornung up."

"What is a base on balls?" asked a fair girl in white lawn. "I thought they always strapped the bases down."

"What did Hornung do after he was doubled up?" inquired the young woman with the bang. "Did it hurt him very much?"

"I presume not," said the girl with the intellectual nose. "I saw the other day that Donnelly let a ball go through him, and yet he went right on playing as coolly as if nothing had happened."

"Dear me, it's all so strange," said the representative of sentiment.

"Then," I went on, not heeding the interruption, "Wise hit a la la to Meyers and went out at first."

"What's a la la?" cried the girls in chorus.

"Opinions differ," I replied. "When Rowe made that home run on the Kansas City grounds I heard O. P. Dickinson say it was a la la, but E. E. Wilson observed that it was a lil. When authorities can't agree I do not profess to be able to decide."

"Kansas City now came to the bat," I continued, "and found Stemmyer at once. They got on to him in great shape, and pounded him all over the field."

"How brutal!" exclaimed the girls. "Why didn't he hide in the box?"

"That doesn't seem to make any difference," said the intellectual girl. "Didn't you see how they knocked Clarkson out of the box, the other day, in New York? Why, the papers say they just went for him and slugged him right and left."

"Yes," said the girl with the bang, "my brother told me that when the Chicagoes were in Washington Mr. Crane tried to pitch and made the Chicagoes mad, and every one of them hit him, and they actually laid him out cold in the fifth inning."

"True," said the sentimental girl. "George was telling me some time ago that the Kansas City boys were just laying, as he called it, for Bullington, and were going to knock the life out of him."

"It isn't but he's a terrible thing in a pitcher," said the girl with the bang. "Papa told me he was not going to any more ball matches, because he was tired of seeing our pitchers hampered."

"If you will give me your attention, ladies," I said a little severely, "we will proceed with the last half of the first inning. The boys were on their muscle, and avoided the throw with fine effect. After two runs had been scored Lilla was called out on strikes and kicked vigorously at the umpire."

"What is the umpire?" inquired the sentimental girl.

"Oh, I know that," replied the fair one in white; "he's the little man who does all the talking and whom the boys call 'rats.'"

"I think it very wrong to kick him," said an amiable girl, speaking for the first time. "I have no doubt he meant to do what's right."

"The inning closed with three runs for Kansas City," I went on, "and after that the Bostonians had a picnic."

"Oh, wasn't that nice!" cried the girls; "I hope they invited the umpire."

Archer and the Duchess.

From a pretty young American now enjoying her first season in London I have received a charming letter full of interesting gossip about our country over the water. In one portion the letter reads: "Last week we went to the races at Kempton park. Going with a member of the club, we went in among the swells. Archer, the famous jockey, rode several races. I had a good look at him; certainly he is not a heavy, but then he is rich and in search of a wife. He refused the duchess of Montrose. I thought he must be a fastidious young man indeed to refuse a duchess, and a rich one at that. Later she was pointed out to me; such a vulgar old hideosity! I no longer wondered at his refusal. The prince of Wales was also there; such a fat, stuffy, baldheaded, common-looking party. I could not but think my lucky star if nobility or royalty necessitated one looking so common that he was only ordinary. A nice trash. Saturday was the first meet of the season of the Coaching Club. The rendezvous was Hyde Park. The place was packed with every kind of turnout drawn up in line to see the coaches pass. There were thirty in the procession, the first having the Prince of Wales and his latest flame, a pretty married woman whose husband is in India. Among all the people on the coaches I saw but one American, and I am sure she was an American. The walks were so packed it was difficult to move about. It was the first opportunity I have had for seeing a lot of swaggers (it's English you know). English people together, and I saw some lovely women, of which I was very glad, for I had commenced to think there were none such in England."—Washington Capital.

A widower in Athens, Ga., called on a young woman and stated that he had prayed to the Lord to send him a wife, and in a dream had been directed to her. The wooer was informed that the Lord had certainly directed him to the wrong person.

SPRING DANGERS.

The dangers of this season are simply appalling. The system has been bled up to meet the severity of winter and the warm weather coming on opens the pores and renders diseases both possible and probable. The great source of all spring disorders is to be found in the blood which is almost always out of order in the spring. Men, women and children must take something; do something. Blood-poisoning is so common and is becoming so dangerous it is necessary to exercise much more caution than ever before. The breaking out which is so frequent in every case the result of impure blood, and usually a result of rheumatism. But suppose this impurity does not break out? What becomes of it? Often it attacks some vital organ, usually the heart, and sudden death or lingering suffering are the results. These are absolute facts and serious ones too.

For the treatment and cure of rheumatism in all its forms, as well as all blood disorders, and the functional derangements that cause them, Hubbard's Rheumatic Syrup is strongly recommended, alike by the medical faculty and by prominent citizens, where it has once been introduced. Acting immediately on the blood and the organs through which it is purified, it dissolves and removes the uric, lithic and lactic acids which are its immediate cause, and by expelling them at the same time thoroughly purifies the system, cures skin diseases and urinary and liver complaints. Being purely a vegetable preparation, it exercises no injurious effects on the digestive organs, but aids them in the performance of their duties and braces the nervous system. Men have suffered and died, and been mourned by their friends who did not know the real cause of their death. Women have passed away and their families could not understand why. Little children have broken out with fearful sores and have sickened and died, and the parents did not save them. These things are all wrong. With a proper knowledge, and the use of the right remedy, they should never occur, and let us hope they will not in the future.

A Frenchman, intending to compliment a young lady by calling her a gentle lamb, said: "She is one mutton as is small."

Thousands of cases of Consumption every year by Acker's celebrated English Remedy. It is a guaranteed preparation; if it does not help you it will cost you nothing. Try it. A few bottles will show its good effect. Trial bottles 10 cts. For sale by Bigelow & Bigelow.

A Peculiarity of Country Girls.

Among the excursionists sitting on the city hall steps yesterday noon to eat luncheon were a young fellow who had a wife-like look and a girl in a pink dress who insisted on holding his hand and lapping over on his shoulder. Two or three gentlemen observed the situation and halted for a second look. Their smiles were noted by the young man, and he released himself and came over to them and said:

"Gentlemen, let me explain. Did either one of you ever live in the country?"
"No," they replied in chorus.

"Then you don't understand the country girl. She requires to be loved after a certain fashion. She wants a practical realization of the fact that you love her.
I might tell her how much I adored her,
beginning now and talking until dark, but she wouldn't realize it a tenth part as much as if I put my arm around her waist and let her head drop on my shoulder. The one is talk—the other cold facts."

"Exactly—that's so," remarked the gentlemen.

"When a city girl is in love she conceals the fact, or tries to. The country lass is only too proud to give it away.
You saw us squeezing hands. You've got to squeeze a country girl's hand about as often as she'll imagine you have got about something."

"Exactly—that's so," observed his auditors.

"You may have noticed that I fed her crackers and added me cheese. It must have looked very silly to you, but that's another phase of country courtship. If you'd claw off the girl would imagine that you felt above her. I tell you, gentlemen, I've been courting country girls for the last ten years, and I'm giving you a solemn pointer that there is only one correct way, and this is it."

"Exactly—that's so," replied the gentlemen in chorus, and they lifted their hats to the girl and walked off.—Detroit Free Press.

Giving Himself Away.

Mose Schaumburg was as mad as a motat hen one day last week. In a voice that quivered with rage he said to his clerk, Ike Silverstone:

"Sit down dot desk at and write a letter vat I dictates dot Jake Oppenheimer at. Write: 'I have written to you. Who has not answered dot led-der? Jake Oppenheimer. Who had I dunned dime and again? Jake Oppenheimer. Who has baid no attentshums to dose duns? Jake Oppenheimer.'" Have you got dot, down, Mr. Silver-stone?"

"I have dot down."

"Don conclude: 'Who vas a tam scoundrel? Have you got dot down?'"
"I have dot down."

"Don give dot letter to me so I put my name to it."

The clerk did so, and hence the conclusion of Mose's letter read: "Who vas a tam scoundrel? Mose Schaum-burg."—Texas Siftings.
