The latest occupation for young women who have been delicately reared, but who are compelled by changes in the mill wheel of life to earn a livelihood, is to clean bric-a-brac in the great mansions of New York. They are called bric-a-brac cleaners, | and have brushes made expressly for their duties. Not every young woman can become expert at the business. It requires a deheate touch, the greatest care in handling the treasures, and kitchen and the girl will attend to the knowledge how tastefully to arrange the dainty ornaments in a way that is most pleasing to the owners. The work is refined, and just such as! refined young woman would like.

Speaking of occupations for young women, it may be said that there is now a generous contingent of them employed in this town as "gray-hair pullers." What the red flannel garment is to the round-cyrd, short-horned bull, the first indications of silvery hair are to some fashionable women of New York. It is then that a "gray-had puller" is sent for, and from that time until society is easted upon to notice for a moment the death of the fashionable one, the "gray-hair puller" is with her at certain intervals, charging so much

After her husband died she worked for me; but she was not strong, and things have been going badly for the last few months."

"Has she had a doctor?" "Yes; the dispensary doctor."

Mr. Goring, having given an order at the nearest grocery for food and fuel, returned to the house, and mounted to the fourth floor. A door, standing open, showed him the interior of a poorly-furnished room, said Jessie standing near a bed, listening to a gentleman speaking in a low tone to her. Pardon me, Mr. Goring said; "the

To Jessie, a few hours later, i seemed as if she was living a fairy tale. First, there appeared a stout, elderly woman, all motherly kindness, who lifted her mother out of the hot, tossed bed, made it comfortable and s clean, set the room in order, made such an extravagant fire as Jessie had never seen, and then began to cook delicious things taken out of a great hamper sent into the room. All the luxuries the poor child had longed vainly to give her mother appeared as if by magic, and her own hunger was satisfied as it had not been for weeks. Day after day, for the business on which he had visited Liverpool detained him for many weeks, Leonard Goring climbed the stairs to Mrs. Herrick's room, to hear from the nurse how the poor little widow was getting on. She was able after awhile, to sit up, and looked like a fair, pretty child in her big chair. Fruit, flowers, books, all were sent to make the hours of convalescence less tedious, and when at last he departed, he tried to face

The Meanest Man.

They tell a story of a Dunkirk man who was so mean that every one shunned him, and he grew crosser and more crabbed from day to day until at last his hat refused to fit him, and his shoes snubbed him openly. One morning in winter a lady passing his house saw a strange sight. Standing on the porch was the old man, throwing erumbs to a flock of sparrows, who chirped and danced and pecked at the food in high glee. Moved to compunction for her previous bad opinion of him, the lady said, pleasantly: "Good morning, Mr. Neverspend—feeding the birds, I see." The old man looked up surlily, and then went on throwing the crumbs. "Naw," he growled, "I'm pizenin' 'em."-Buffalo
