iequaled

Either Portable or for Brick Setting. A few Points of Superiority found 1st, DURABILITY. All its castings are so constructed as to insure the faultless working of the furnace—those exposed to the intense heat being made extra heavy.

2d, Economy. The Top Return Flue Radiators of the Standard give the greatest amount of heating surface of any Furnace in the world. Its construction compels all the gas, smoke and heat to pass through each dome, which has the same power of heating separately as all other furnaces with their combined principles. These domes radiate in succession an enormous quantity of heat into the hot air chamber, thus extracting every available atom of heat from the fuel.

3d, SELF CLEANING. No angles or horizontal crevices exist in its construction to accumulate soot, dust or ashes. All refuse products which arise to the dome finding no outlet, fall again into the fire pot, making the Standard absolutely self cleaning. 4th, Use of Fuel. Hard coal or wood can be used equally as well, many customers having used wood only for years, with most satisfactory results.

5th Caution. It is an undisputed fact that furnace setting must be constructed upon science of practical principles which is only obtained by experience, as no two buildings are treated alike: make no mistake by employing those to construct furnace work beyond their ability to do; as a furnace improperly placed can never give satisfaction, and is a poor thing at any price. 6th, Facts. If you have the furnace question in mind, call and examine the Standard, and book your order for the Leading Furnace in the Market.
