"The men have to obey the rules. When they don't they have to go. Once when there was an election in Eastman the boss notified the hands that they might go at 3 o'clock without having their wages docked, but that if a man left before that hour he would be discharged. Well, it turned out that twenty of the hands knocked off at 12 o'clock, and went to town. They had a good time, but when they returned at dark they found their household goods all thrown out in the road. Before they got over their surprise the boss came along and ordered them to take their things off the premises at once. Some of them were bustling until midnight hauling off their stuff.

"You think it was hard. Wait a bit. When the prohibition election was about to be held the boss called a mass-meeting of the hands. On a table in front of him he had a pile of blue ribbons. He looked at the crowd a moment in dead silence. Then he began to talk in his usual calm, cold way, as if he had no interest in the matter. So you were a little too pert and spoke without thinking, did you, my son? And yet you got picked up right suddenly on your statement, eh? O, well, that's all right; that happens to older men than you every day. I notice that you have a positive way of filing a decision where other men state an opinion, and you frequently make a positive assertion when older men merely express a belief. But never mind; you are young. You will know less as you grow older. "Don't I mean you will know more?" Heaven forbid, my boy. No, indeed, I mean that you will know less. You will never know more than you do now; never, if you live to be 10,000 years old, you will never again know so much as you do now. No hoary-headed sage whose long and studious years were spent in reading men and books ever knew so much as a boy of your age. How to Get Rid of Tramps.

The tramp being the product of law, he will disappear when the laws creating him are repealed. Everything that restricts exertion, that chains the individual to a locality, that deprives him of the right to work and to freely exchange his products, aids in the creation of the tramp and helps propogate the long train of evils that follow in his footsteps. The cure for the tramp, then, is liberty-liberty to attack nature and wring from her a living; liberty to make such a disposition of his products as seems to him the most desirable; liberty to do anything that does not conflict with the liberty of others.
