1967 WOLVERINE

Stuffing napkins into chicken wire lasts far into Friday night.

Linus listens in on design plans.

Homecoming; the weekend when many MSU alumni return to campus to rekindle a part of their life that burns only in memory. To the recent graduates, the multiversity is not overly startling. To those who are returning for the first time in, perhaps, ten or fifteen years, the change is unbelievable. The mass of students, the vast array of new buildings and the tremendous expansion of the campus call for second looks and a pause to absorb the multitude of changes that have occurred since they left.

After the initial exposure to a campus that is now unfamiliar, the alumni recognize the trademarks of Homecoming as they remember it. The floats hurriedly finished Friday night and on display Saturday, the Homecoming game and, of course, the renewal of old acquaintances half forgotten.

The odd "shotgun" microphone is used to pick up the quarterback's signals for the television audience.

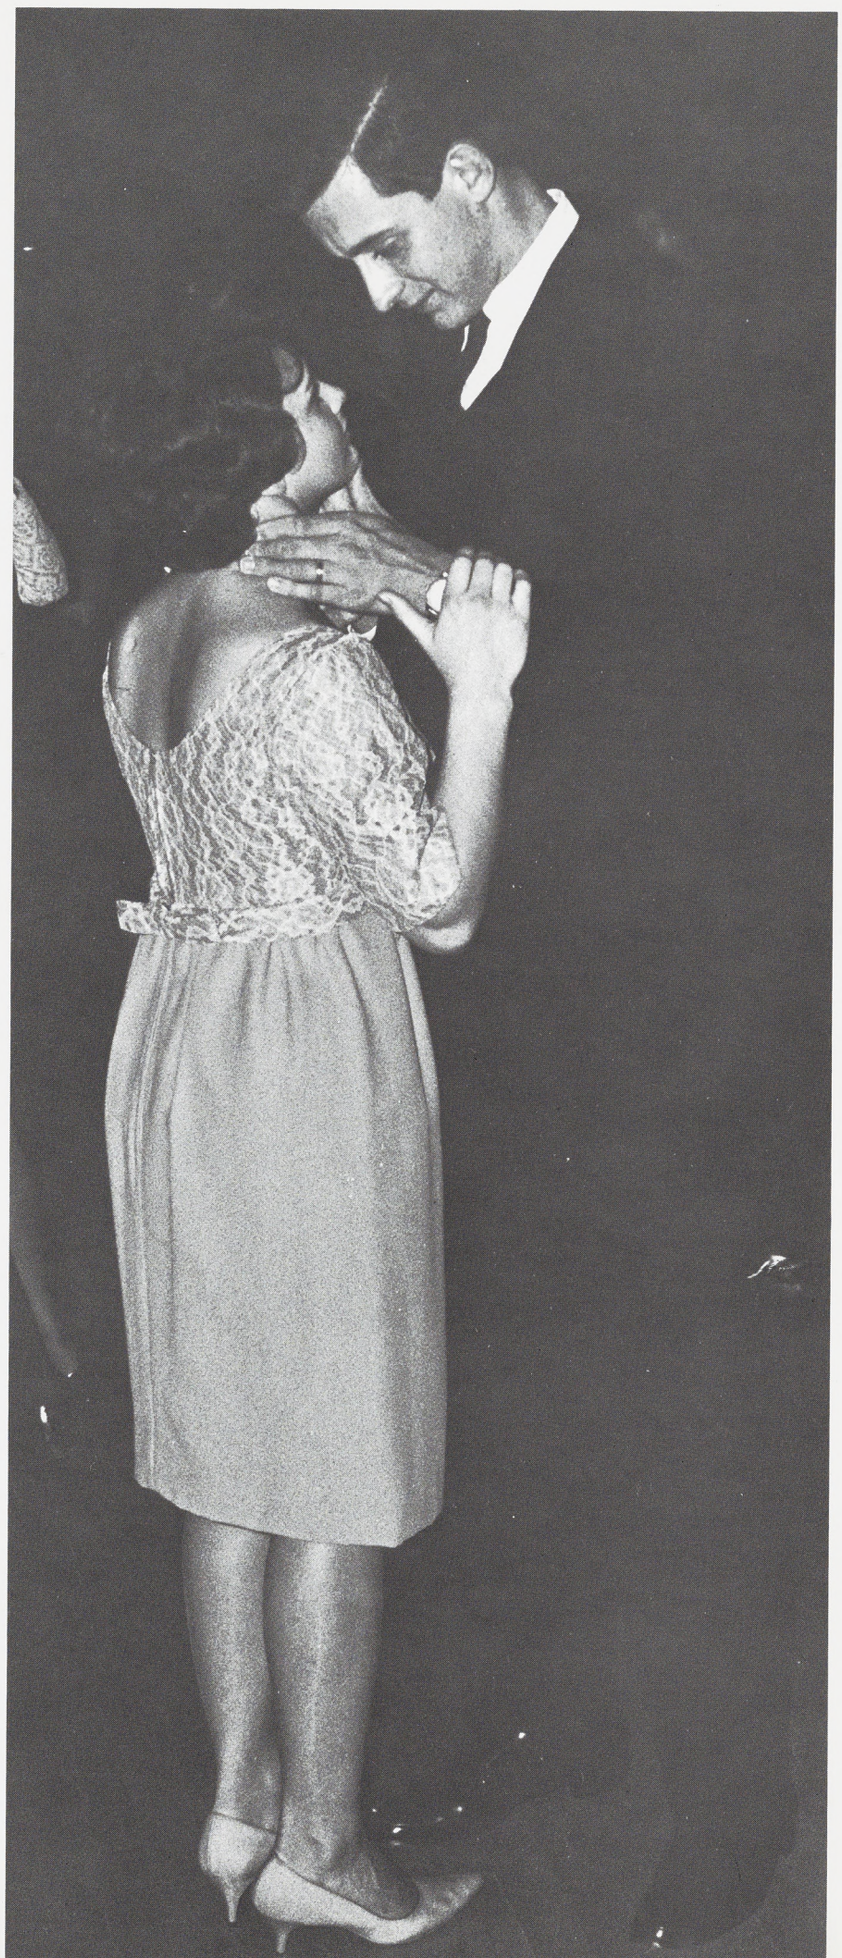

With the float judging and pre-victory celebrations properly taken care of, the campus was primed for the final "tough" conference game of the season. Billed as the "Game of the Week" by ABC—TV, Spartan Stadium saw the cameras, cables, technicians and assorted baggage of the ABC network descend upon it.

The afternoon proved embarrassing to Purdue as the Spartans contained Griese's passing attack while rolling up a 41 to 20 victory over them. Purdue, later in the season, came back to take second place in the Big Ten and earn its first Rose Bowl bid since the conference began playing at Pasadena. The Spartans, having made the trip the previous year, were ineligible to go, although they did clinch the Big Ten Championship for the second consecutive year.

Included as part of the afternoon's activities was the introduction of the Homecoming queen Lynn Heino, and her court. Rounding out halftime action, the Purdue band, girls, flags and twirlers put on a spectacular show of music, color and marching.

The incumbents of Excalibur welcome their new members.

Following the Spartan victory, the Homecoming Dance that evening drew a full house. Couples danced to the music of the Norm Ladd Orchestra and Abdul and the Camel Drivers. As the middle of the evening approached, the pace slowed. The senior men's honorary, Excalibur, announced the induction of new members Joel Stark and Marshall Rosenblum, bringing the membership to the full thirteen.

Music and dancing filled out the evening until midnight when Homecoming 1966 drew to a close.

Choosing a queen for Homecoming involves long months of planning and organization. This year's process began in the Spring of 1966. The various residence units received requests from the Homecoming Committee to initiate a search for a representative for their unit. The representatives were chosen during the first two weeks of Fall term and the competition began. Blue Key, junior and senior men's honorary, conducted a preliminary judging, resulting in the selection of twenty girls to enter the semi-finals. At this point, Excalibur, the senior men's honorary, took the reins from Blue Key and narrowed the competition to a field of ten, using interviews with the girls as a means of making their choices. With a week remaining before Homecoming Day, the Ingham County Alumni Association and selected East Lansing merchants, using the criteria of talent, poise and personal appearance, chose Lynn Heino to reign as Homecoming Queen of 1966.

Record Snowfall Paralyzes the Multiversity

Monday morning classes still remain.

A bejeweled tree attests to the grip of winter.

The University fights back.

Originally these two pages were allocated to the Winter Carnival; then MSU got too much winter. Following a record-breaking twenty-six inch snowfall Michigan State called off classes for the first time in its 112-year history, food was rationed in the dorms and mid-Michigan began the long, hard "dig-out". In twenty-four hours a single lane, flanked by four foot snowdrifts, was opened in Grand River Avenue, East Lansing's main artery. A few cars were running, but, by and large, the scene was reminiscent of the fabled Yukon as dazed citizens on skis and sleds descended on every supermarket to stock up "just in case".

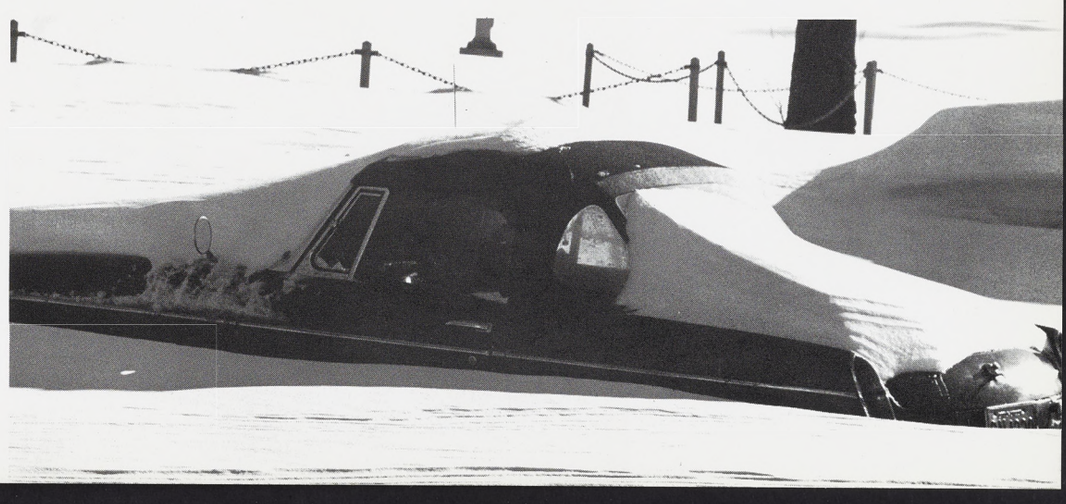

Silent sentinels.

Automobiles were at a premium.

Trapped.

MISS MSU PATTY BURNETTE

Miss Patty Burnette became the new Miss MSU for 1967 amid an overflow crowd in the Union Ballroom on Saturday evening, February 18 of 1967. Patty, a nineteen year-old Detroit sophomore in Divisional Social Science, maintained her poise throughout the evening, including during her crowning when the crown refused to remain atop her head.

Pageant emcee Don Japinga, former football co-captain, exhibited his humorous nature during the breaks between the various bathing suit, evening gown and talent competitions. For her talent, Patty, a vocalist with the Sondettes, sang "My Heart Sings" to the applause of the audience. Patty's particular interests include bowling, rollerskating, ping-pong, dancing, and singing.

During her reign as Miss MSU, Patty will represent Michigan State in the Miss Michigan Pageant, a preliminary to the Miss America Pageant, and be making public appearances around the State of Michigan.

Pop Entertainment Series Scores Success This Year

Overcoming the problems of last year, the Series presented three concerts which proved to be sellouts. Working with student opinion, as sampled in a questionnaire last Spring, the Pop Entertainment board sponsored the concerts on Friday nights before the home football games. The questionnaire also asked for the students' favorite groups, which, by majority opinion, resulted in the booking of Henry Mancini and his Orchestra, The Beach Boys and The New Christy Minstrels.

The Henry Mancini concert was well received by the audience. He played his best movie and television themes plus other selections from his "Tribute to David Rose" repertoire. The Beach Boys were missing a member and their more subtle recording studio equipment. The result proved to be somewhat of a disappointment to both The Beach Boys and the audience. Most well received were The New Christy Minstrels, captivating the crowd and fully giving them their money's worth.

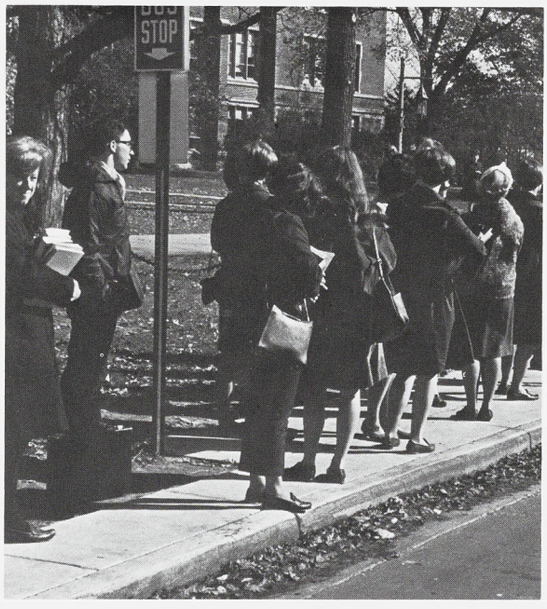

The Random Diversity of Students Being Students

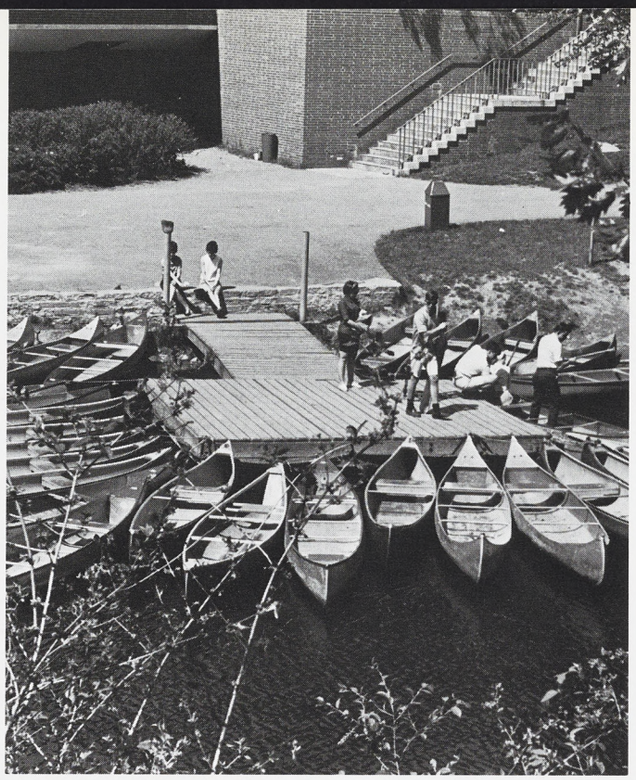

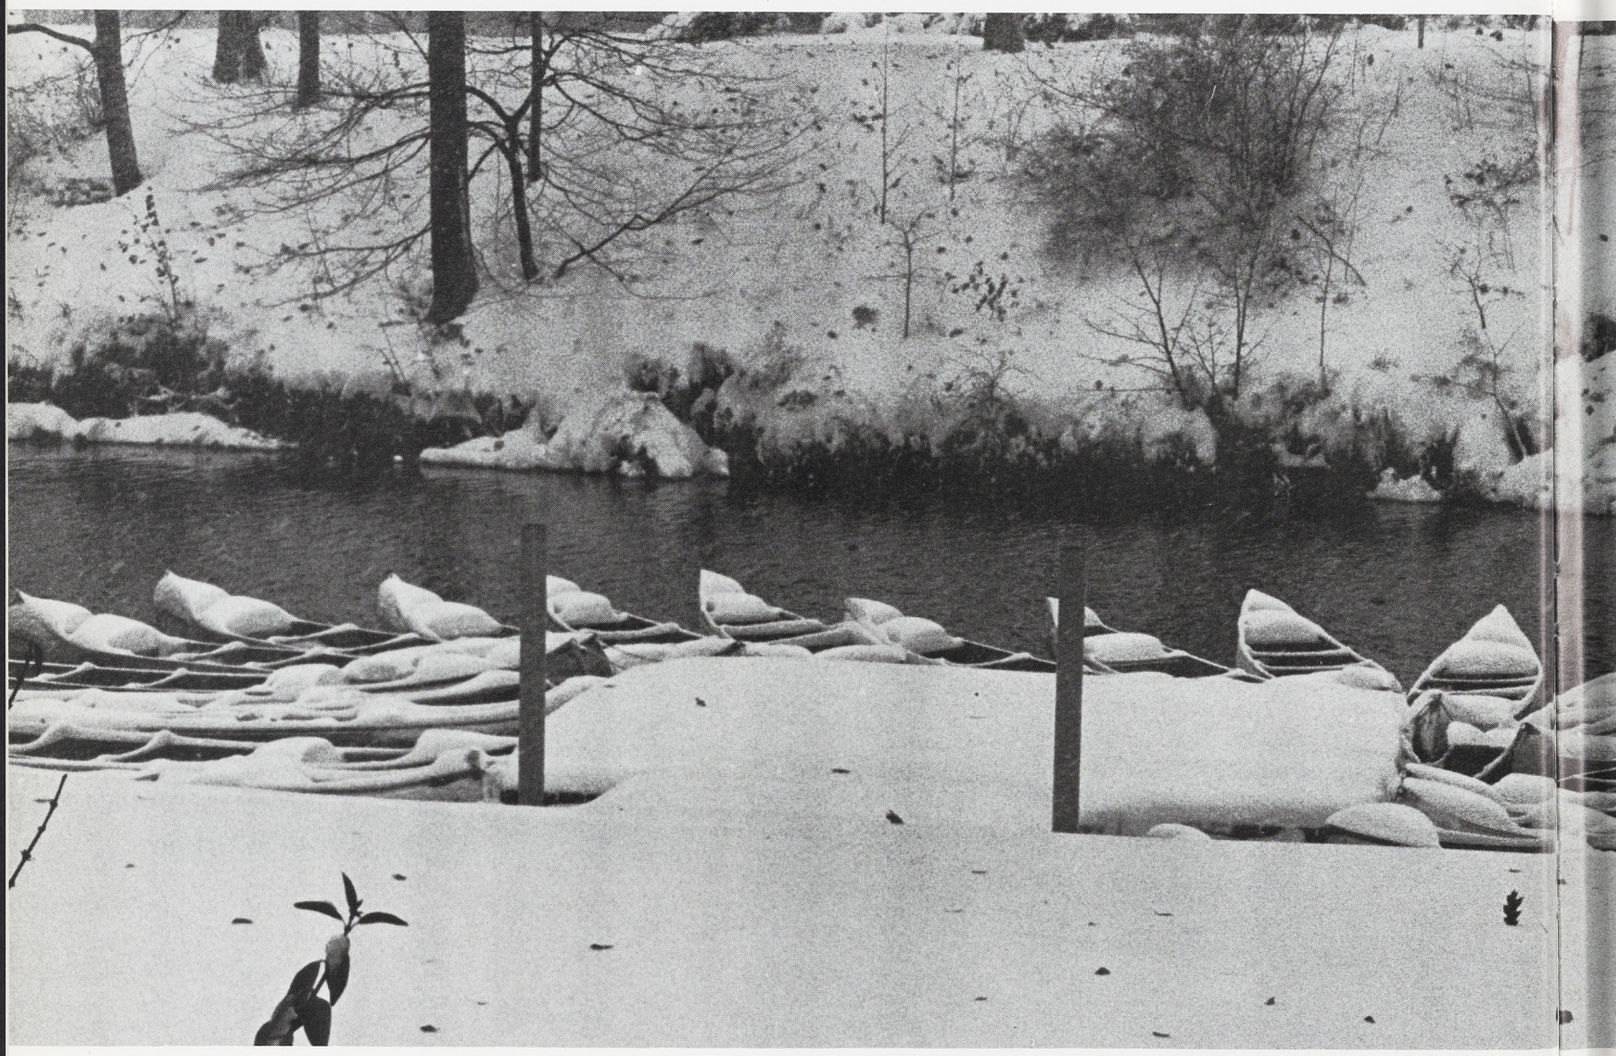

The first problem faced by a student is getting from one place to another on campus. Walking, bus passes and hitchhiking prove to be the answer. After the problem of physical movement about the University is solved, comes the more demanding task. That of academic movement. Study is the solution to this problem but students determine what form of study the solution will take.

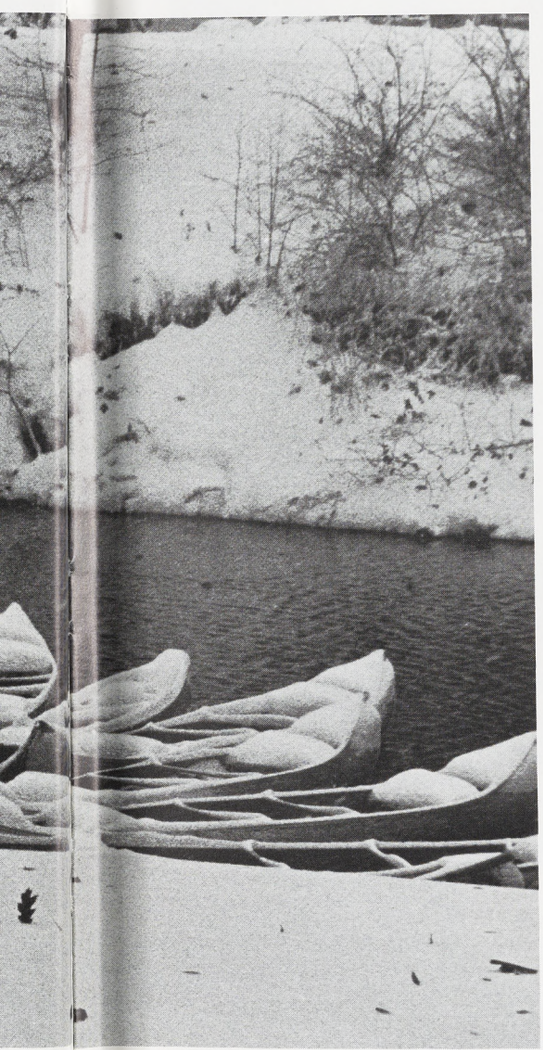

The barrier to pedestrian traffic

No matter what differences are found at Michigan State, there exists one common, unifying factor in the diversity. The advent of the football season brings the University population together in a common desire to see the Spartans prove that they are the best. Throughout the season, the University was never disappointed. As came to be expected, the Spartans automatically won every game—until that final game of the season. The "poll bowl" tie game with Notre Dame is now only history; remembered with mixed emotions by any who were aware of what happened that day. But, fortunately, a new season will arrive to avenge things past.

All is not the unity of football, though. Afterwards, the unity of 76,000 fans breaks apart into many very small units, composed of just two people. This microscopic unification within a huge University is nothing about which to be surprised. For, with a diversity of 38,000 students, opposites attract each other; or maybe it is that like elements gravitate together. Choose whichever explanation seems suited to the situation; the outcome is inevitable.

There is a time when life at Michigan State slows down and students are able to breathe easy and relax. Such a time comes in spring term when the pace of campus life slackens, or at least the academic efforts slacken, and everybody seems intent more on enjoying life than enjoying studying.

The warm weather is most welcome after the usual Michigan winter of record snows and cold. Sports such as baseball, canoeing and golf again become popular as anyone trying to gain access to the facilities knows. Favorite among students everywhere is the IM pool where only a small percentage go to swim, the grass being paved with bodies soaking up the sun and generally getting caught up on lost sleep.

Within the confines of West Circle Drive, students find a pleasant place to stop, rest and talk.

The campus comes alive after the long frozen months of winter.

Campus bus service remains for those who don't like walking to class in spring weather.

It's necessary but there are better things to do.

Among all the spectators, there were a few active protestors at the Akers Kiss-In.

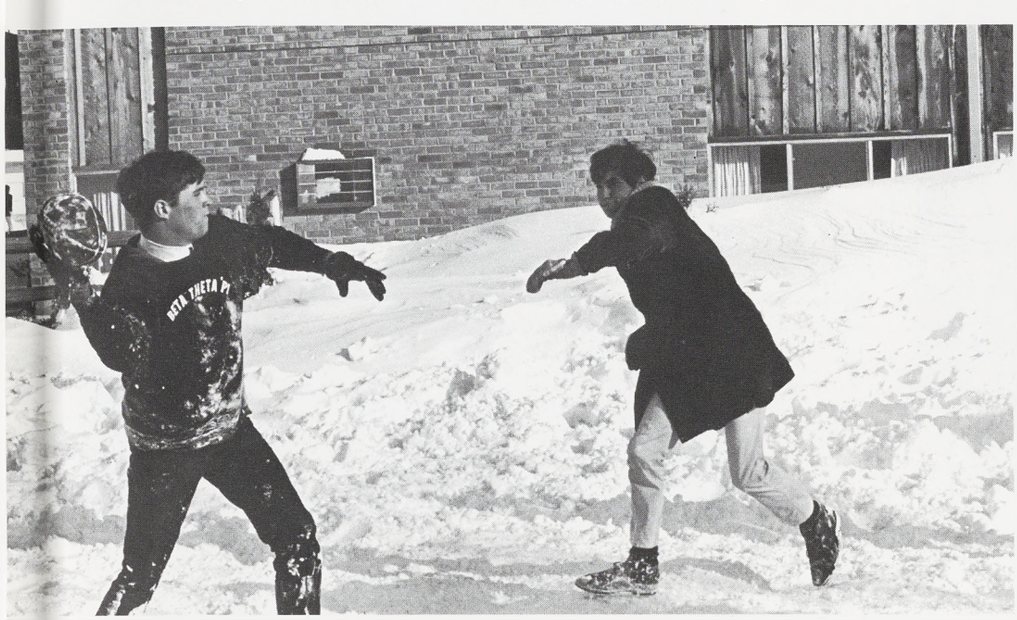

June commencement offered the activists publicity and an opportunity to criticize Hubert Humphrey, the featured speaker, in particular and the federal government in general.

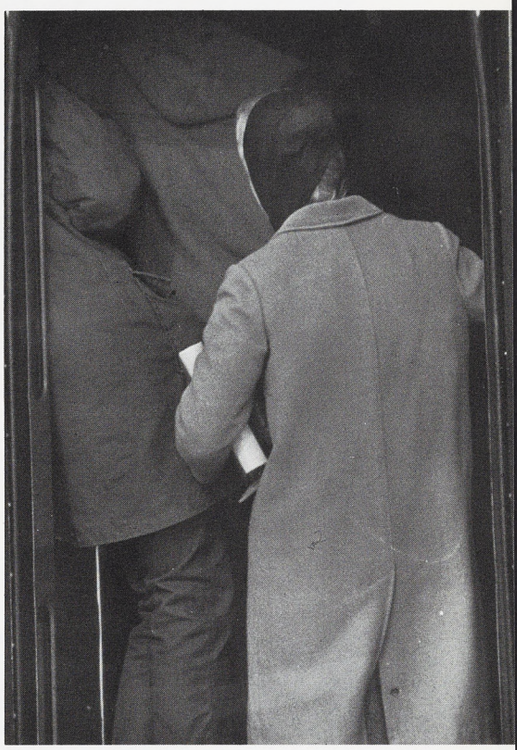

What do students do when they aren't busily studying, taking notes, eating or sleeping? Usually, they are out causing a commotion, trying to prevent a commotion, or else just avoiding commotions entirely. At Michigan State, there is never any shortage of diversions for those who always need or want something new and different with which to occupy themselves. The only limit is the imagination; a faculty which students seem to possess in ample abundance.

In addition to doing whatever just happens to occur, the means to a more formal and planned entertainment are immediately available. The Lecture-Concert Series, Fairchild movies, weekend dances, controversial speakers, plays and sports events are sure to be in generous supply. It only remains for one to choose from the diversity offered.

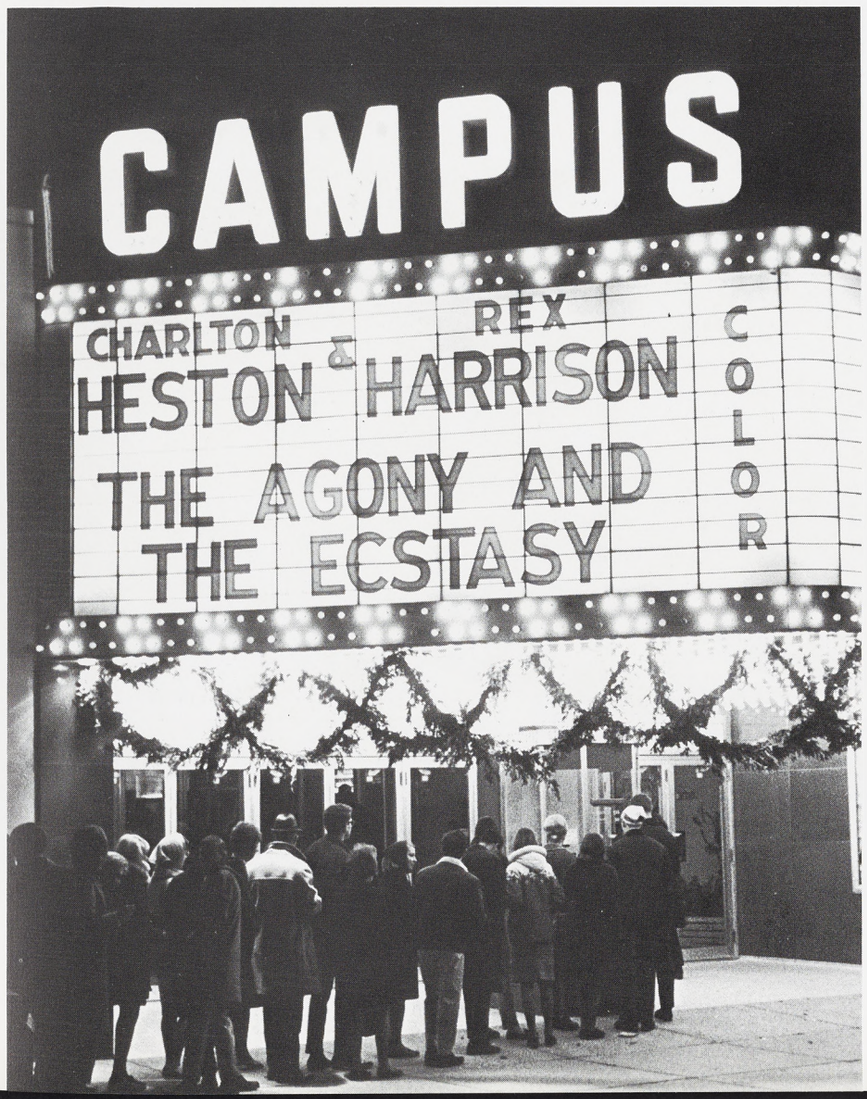

For some strange reason, the big snow seemed to encourage impromptu football games.

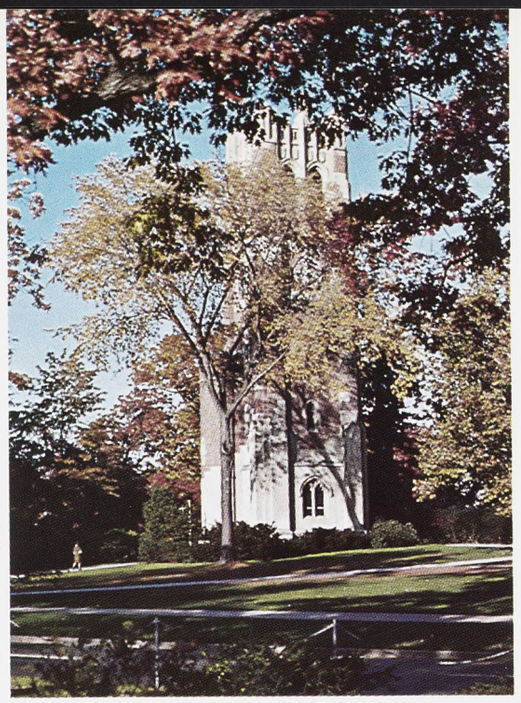

A campus bus is always good for waiting, pushing and waiting.

A temporary escape from today's world.

Beaumont Tower has seen Michigan State grow to its present standing.

Student numbers, the multiversity was not always like this! The result which you live in now is a result of a steady and forseeable trend which began long ago. Actually, not so long ago, but it only seems that way to the student who is on campus for only four years, a short enough time when compared to how long Michigan State has been in existence.

At some time before the multiversity was recognizable as such, Michigan State was a different place. Students were somewhat a carefree lot who spent minimum time studying, got their C average and graduated. Dating was much the same then as now; parties were usually more formally arranged affairs than now, and students walked everywhere. Student cars were the exception rather than the rule.

Scarred ground seems to be one of the more common sights continually seen around the campus.

Michigan State University Becomes a Multiversity

The physical aspect of the University (now multiversity) has changed greatly also. Not too many years ago, the campus was confined to the area north of the Red Cedar River and those students with cars were even allowed to drive on campus. Within the past five or six years, this has all changed, With the great increase in student enrollment, the University obviously needed more money to build more classrooms and offices. The result has been the multiversity, a campus so large that it has broken up into smaller colleges in the form of living-learning complexes. With a faculty and the number of students who live in them, these complexes have become the equivalent of a small college. Yet, these small colleges spread around the campus are still a part of the multiversity, intimately connected through proximity, common interest and common purpose.

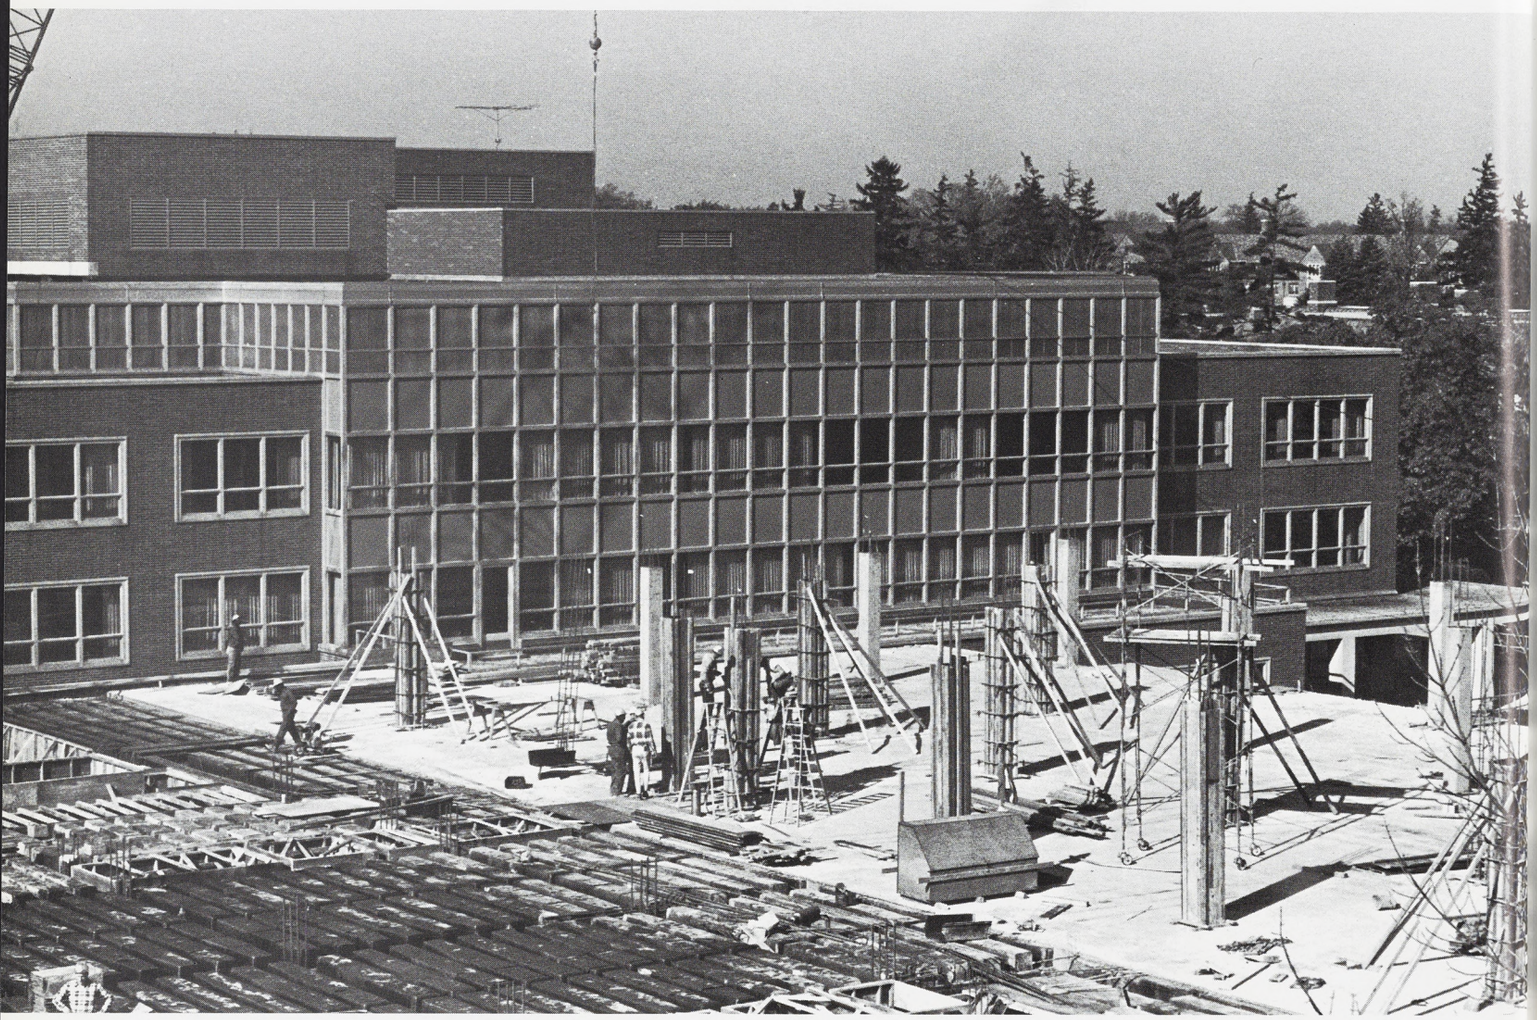

The East Campus Complex has practically become a multiversity in itself.

If any single event could be named as a cause for the beginning of the transformation of the University into a multiversity, it was the admittance of Michigan State College to the Big Ten. A feeling developed that if MSC had teams good enough to be in the Big Ten, then MSC also had to have a library, curriculum, professors and reputation good enough to be in the Big Ten. This desire for a good reputation among the other schools did indeed lead to a higher quality of academics at Michigan State. More and better students were attracted and this also applied pressure to upgrade the College.

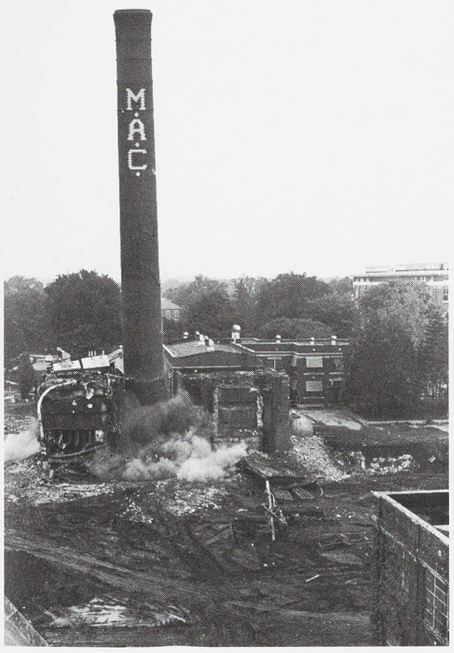

Wells Hall (above) comes down so that the Library addition (below) may go up.

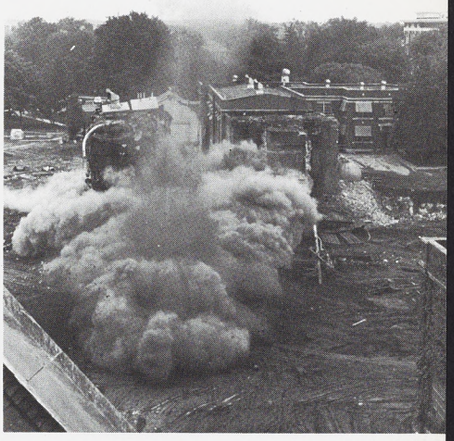

The change in name from Michigan State College to Michigan State University in 1955 was a very strong psychological factor which enhanced the further development of Michigan State. The very name "University" was a strong drawing card for PhD. professors; they were much more inclined to come here to teach rather than to some college that was little known. Such an improvement in faculty in turn drew a better grade of students and more of them, contributing to the rise in merit scholars. Such events were a self-generating cycle; better faculty attracted better and more students; both in turn pressed for more and better facilities in the way of libraries, research accomodations, classrooms, office space and living room. Thus came about the tremendous growth of the physical aspect of the University.

MAC finally relents and makes way for the progress of MSU:

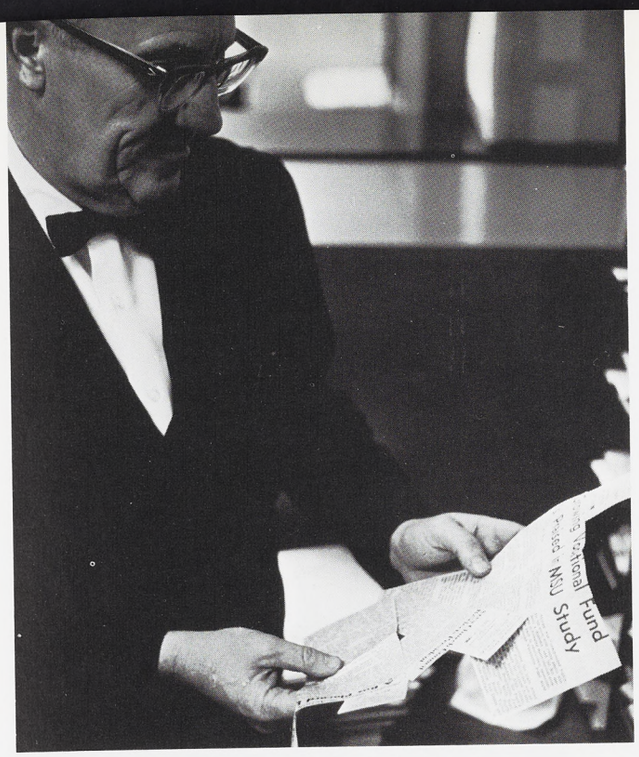

Computers and their printouts manage to work their way into everything, even the Wolverine office.

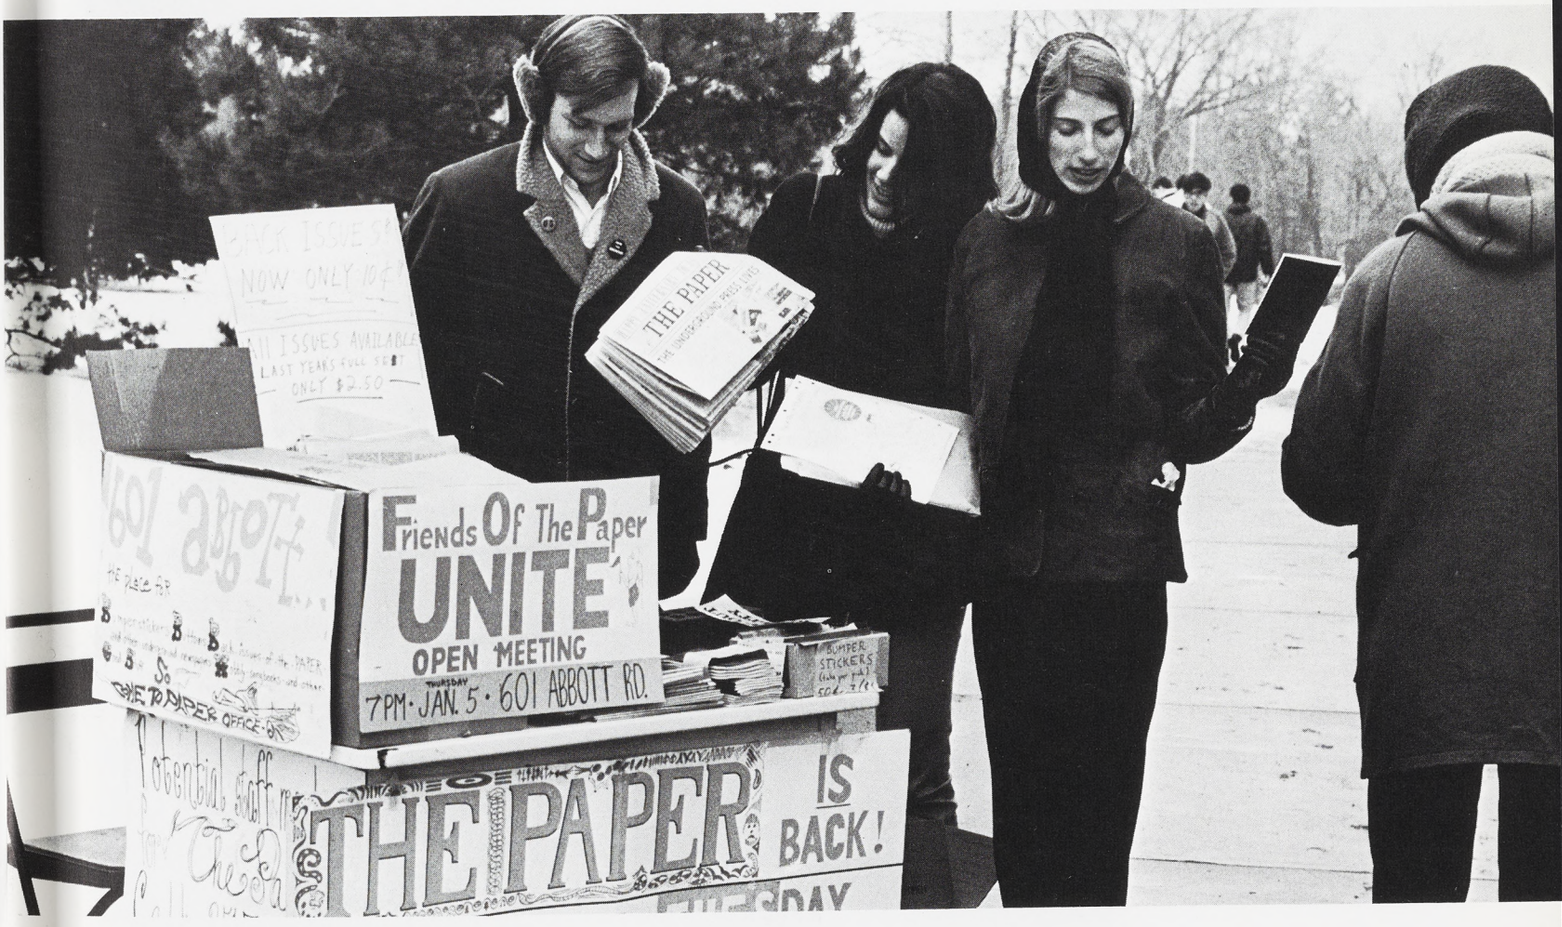

With the appreciation in quality of academics, the intellectual climate changed and an "intellectual ferment" resulted. The most readily observed symptom of this ferment is the questioning of values and rebellion by the students exhibiting itself in the protesting which so many universities, including Michigan State, are experiencing today. Such dissent serves well as a means of constantly keeping both the administration and the student body alert and vital; a necessity for a proper educational perspective.

Currently, the country is engaged in the "Space Race"; the attempt of man to conquer outer space and make other planets or moons habitable. In 1957, Russia launched Sputnik I and graphically demonstrated its superiority over the United States as far as space technology was concerned. This act was a major shot in the arm for this country's educational program and acted as an additional catalyst for Michigan State to grow both academically and physically; the United States had to catch up to and surpass Russia.

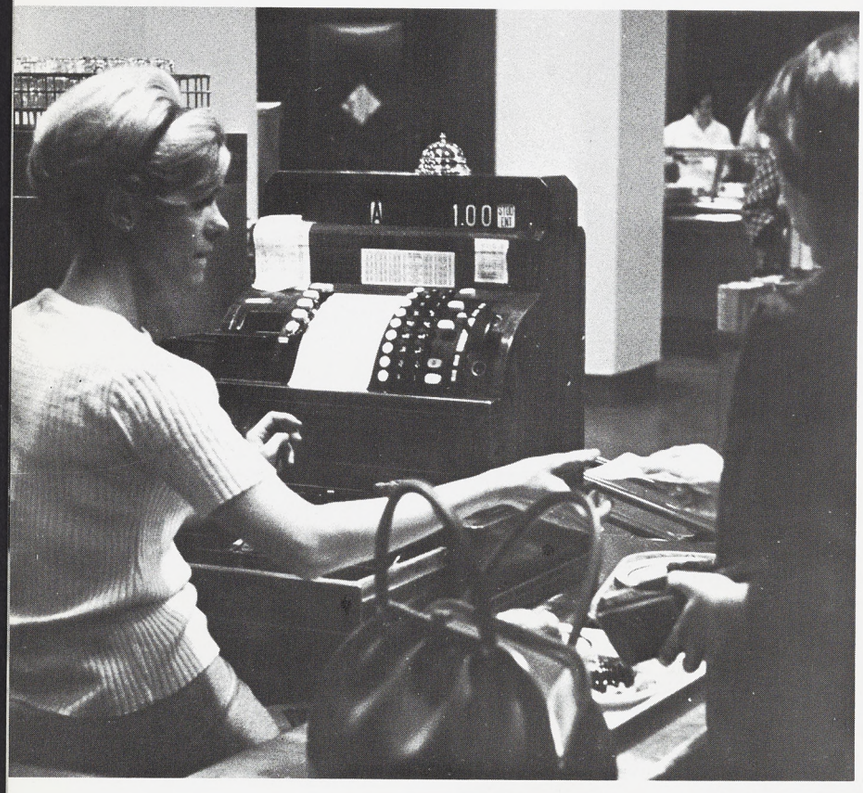

As the multiversity grew, its students developed their own opinions and means of expressing them.

A bulletin board illustrates the trend in tastes of the multiversity student.

Part-time jobs, occupying spare hours, help pay expenses.

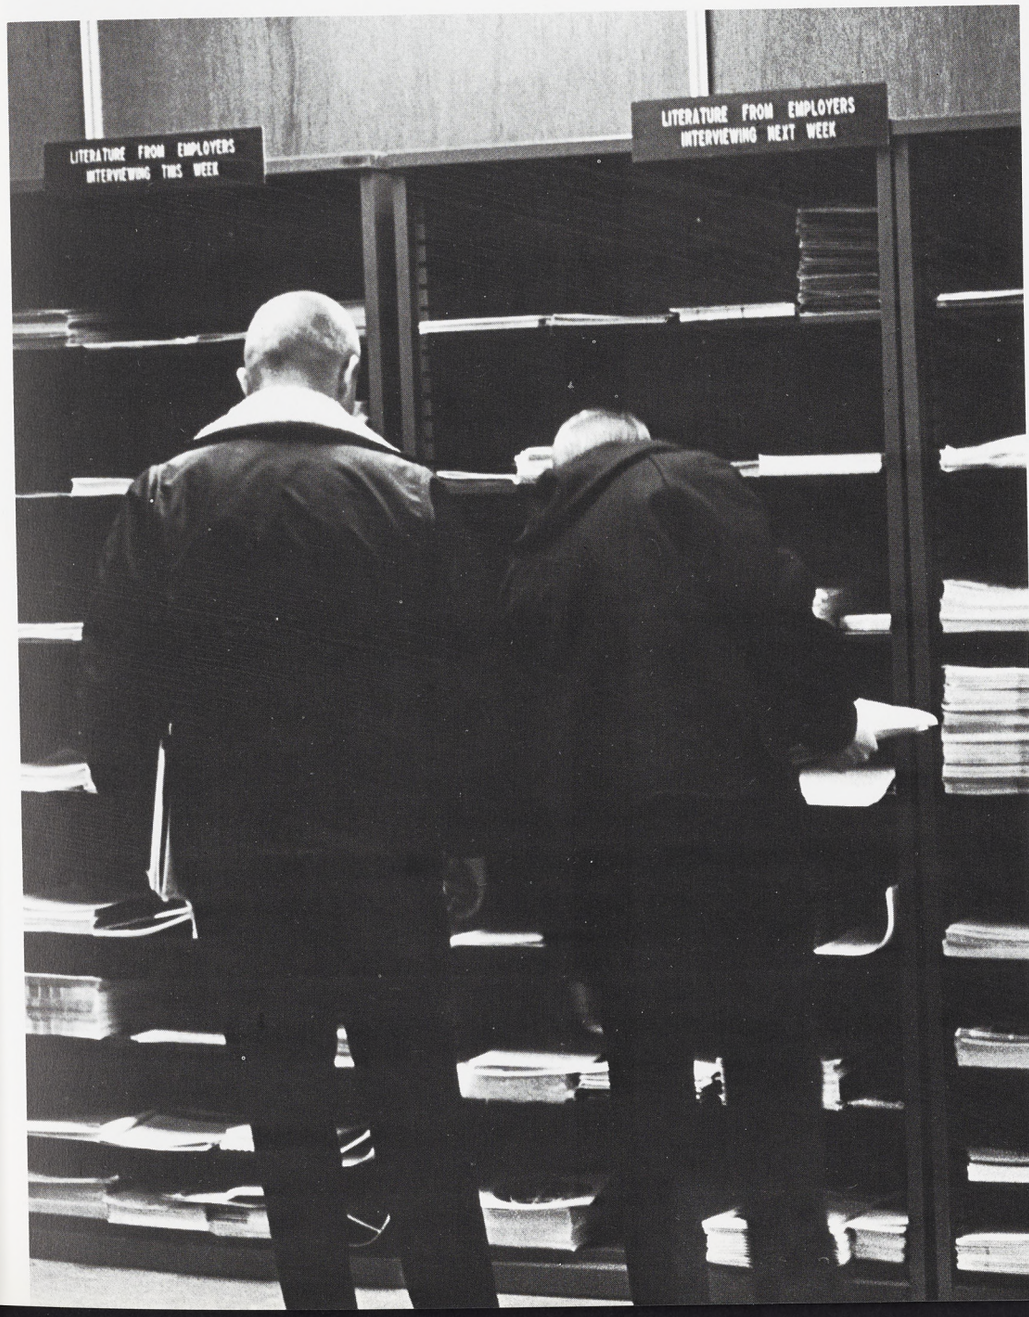

A time to meditate and solve problems.

As a result of the academic emphasis which Michigan State began experiencing in the late fifties, the students changed. They became a more serious lot, although that could never be ascertained from judging them today. On the surface, one might say that students still like fun and good times; but that is only the surface. Whereas a C average and graduation were good enough a few years ago, now a B average is necessary so that the graduate may go on to do post graduate work, aiming for a Masters and many for the PhD. Studying has become a sincere effort rather than a habit of the "grind".

Students are now accepting more responsibility, a definite indication of a more serious outlook. The number of part-time jobs held by students increased tremendously and a national trend of students to off-campus housing is in full swing, evidence of their desire to experience life earlier and make more of their own decisions. Apartment living, in that it is fairly independent of the University, allows a high degree of freedom of choice in the matter most often seized upon by students as an example of the administration's "in loco parentis" attitude. This being, the rules concerning members of the opposite sex and the innumerable situations which arise from the mere mention of the word. Apartment living confronts the student with the problem much earlier and most handle it very well; an issue that, until recently, had been left until after graduation.

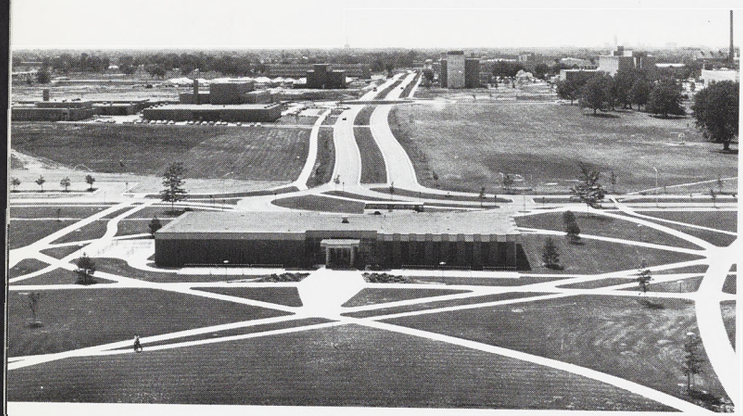

Interest levels of today's students exhibit a change from those of their predecessors. At one time, in the recent past, athletic events such as basketball and baseball attracted a full house to every game; most of the crowd being students. Now, with approximately 25,000 more students, these events are no more well-attended than they were before. The programs such as the Lecture-Concert Series, Foreign Films, and the library have drawn much of the student body or else they have just suffered a general decline in things of the caliber of spectator sports. Today's student would rather do something himself than watch it being done.

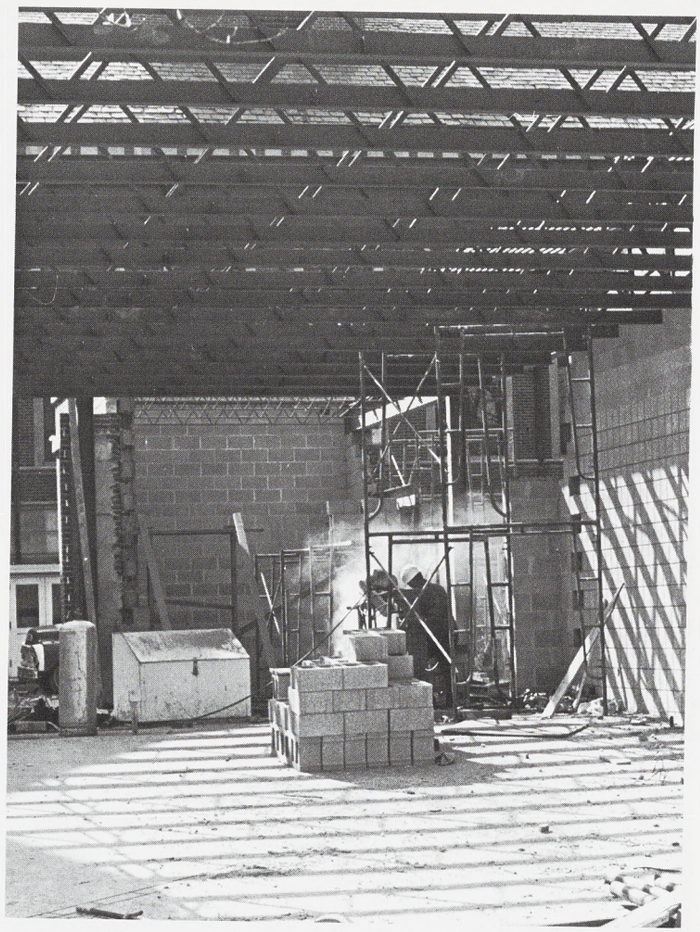

Amid the daily rush of classes, humor strikes.

As graduation nears, seniors begin interviewing for their first real jobs.

The patterns of the multiversity present a striking view from atop Hubbard Hall.

South Kedzie Hall (above and facing page) will provide much-needed office and classroom space.

Expansion of Michigan State University is an ongoing process; always reflecting the society in which it exists and oftentimes shaping it. With today's emphasis on science and technology, Michigan State has opened the door to special educational opportunities that will help in forming a well-balanced society. Beginning this move, Justin Morrill College was established in 1965 to promote an intensive curriculum in the Liberal Arts and foreign culture. Courses in foreign languages, writing, history and the humanities plus a summer abroad, living in a different society, provides an excellent chance for a person to come to an understanding of his fellow human beings. Out of this effort, it is hoped that a world citizen will develop who will be able to work for world peace and understanding.

Following the same vein as Justin Morrill, two new colleges have been added; Lyman J. Briggs college of Natural Science and Mathematics, and James W. Madison college of Social Science. These are aimed at developing a graduate who will enter some professional branch of work and will operate in these fields.

In international endeavors, Michigan State has set the example for many other universities. With projects in Brazil, Columbia, Costa Rica, India, Pakistan, Turkey, Viet Nam and Nigeria, the multiversity has begun approaching its natural limits. Modernizing the underdeveloped countries and helping them to achieve a higher standard of living by educating them has led to the ultimate growth of Michigan State. Where once MSU was basically an agricultural school for the state of Michigan, it has now become a multiversity of projects, ranging from the education of students of Michigan and the surrounding states to the education of the world and its cultures.

The campus proves a bewildering place to these high school students attending the summer Communication Arts Institute.

Even the older, settled part of campus is not safe from the plans for progress.

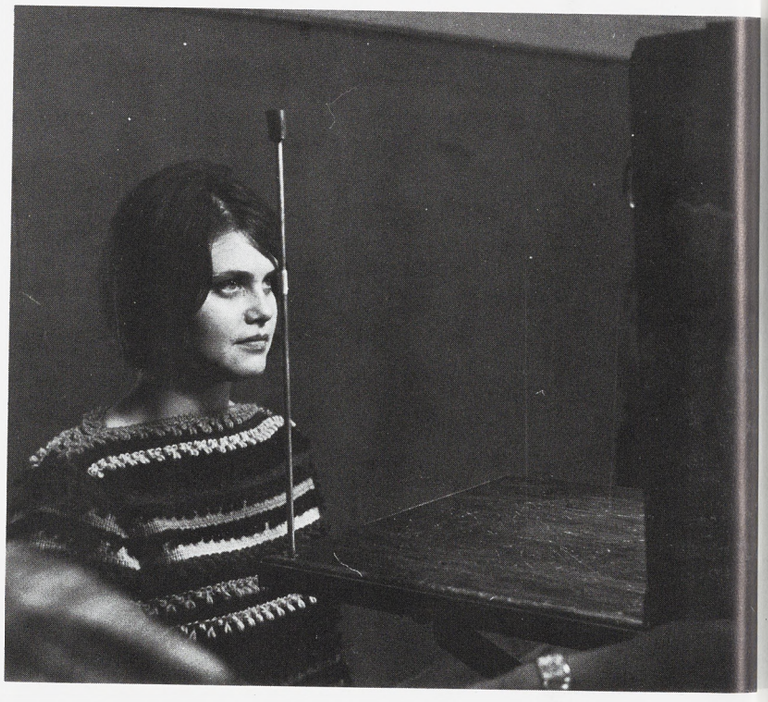

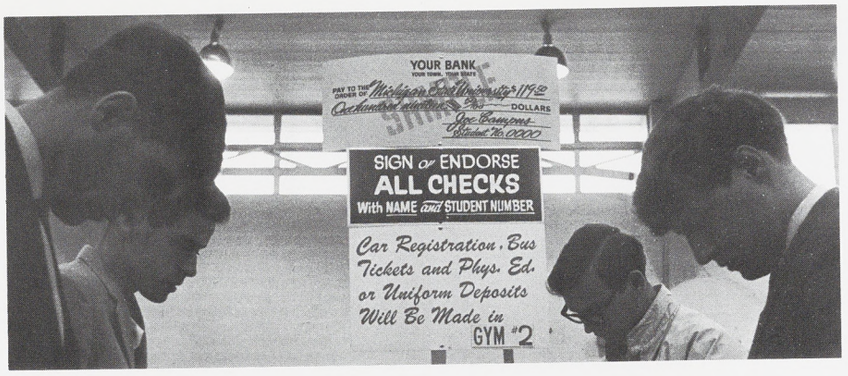

The Gateway to Diversification and Growth with the Multiversity

Registration at Michigan State University is considered by most students to be the awful leveler of all who pass through it. In a manner of speaking, it is a leveler; it is a well-organized process whereby students obtain classes, are separated peacefully from their money and made members of the academic community. The system now is a far cry from that of only four years ago when all students had to go to the class card arena and juggle sections endlessly in hopes of fitting whatever was available into their hoped-for schedules. Closed sections everywhere taxed the limits of frustration of all but that lucky minority who were currently at the top of the list.

Now, students are able to fill out section request forms that will reserve a student's schedule for him. When this is done in the term prior to enrollment, the departments are able to arrange classes to cope with the demand. As a result, most students are able to get a favorable or at least a reasonably acceptable schedule.

Classes take many different forms in the multiversity. The large variety of subjects taught and the great number of students seeking instruction demand creative use of teachers and physical facilities. As the multiversity grows, lectures become larger, instructors get busier. Television classes become more and more the rule, professors become remote shadows on a screen, and students develop their own form of Neilson ratings.

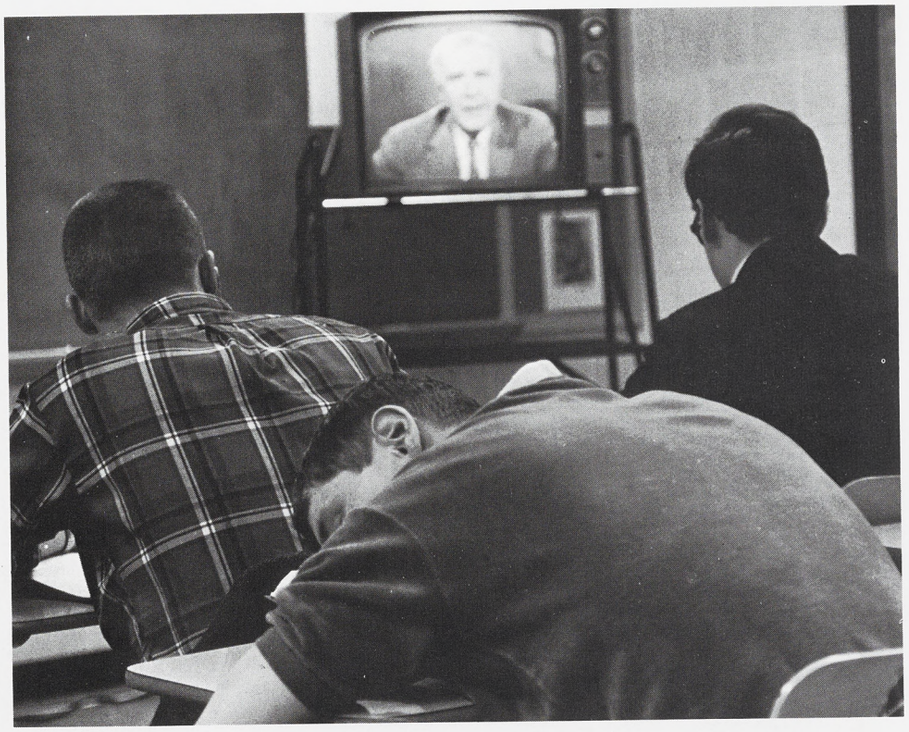

Each student is only a face in the crowd, yet each face displays a different reaction to the words of the lecturer.

Diversity and Uniqueness Are the Keynotes of the Multiversity

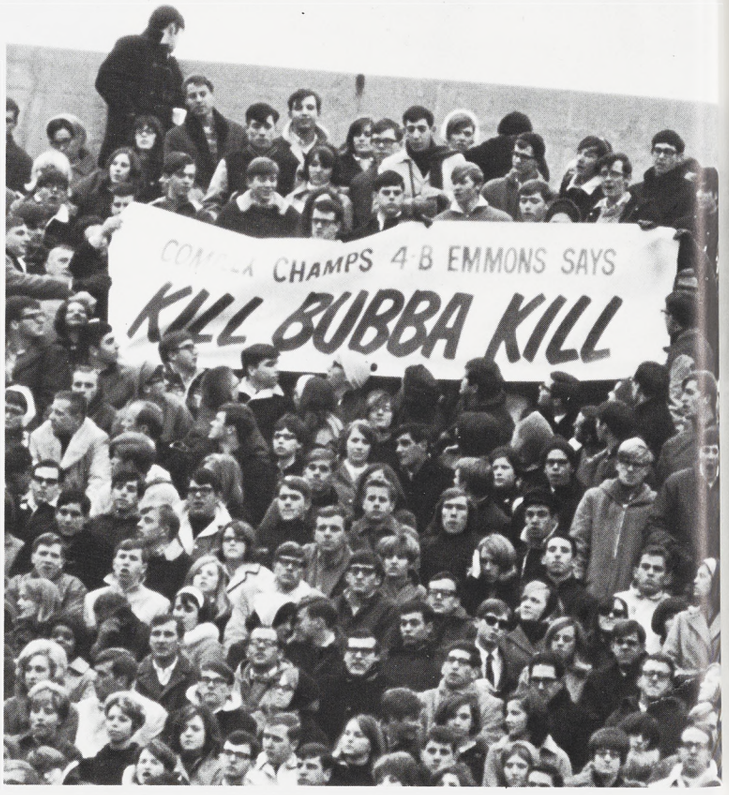

Married in the Alumni Chapel.

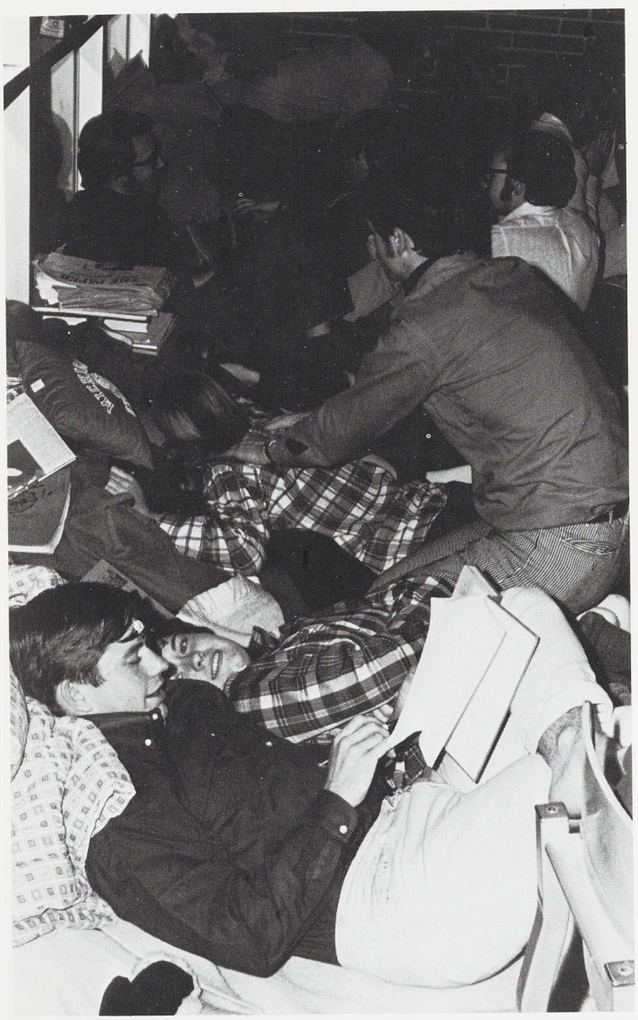

The multiversity presents a unique diversity of people and things in interaction such as is found nowhere else in the world. Students from the four corners of the earth meet and assimilate themselves into a massive organism known as the Student Body. This creature of contrasts attends football games and plays, protests and gets married and joins ROTC and prints rebel newspapers. It loves the spring, enjoys snow and appreciates the multicolored beauty of fall. The student body goes to Rush Week, attends cross-country meets, watches the news and Star Trek, and, all the while, manages to pursue its primary goal of getting an education even more diverse than itself.

One of the most amazing attributes of the student body creature is its underlying thirst for the unique and the different. This drive generally strikes the individual person rather than the entire organism and causes him to risk oblivion on a skateboard, turn winter's white blight into fun and, sometimes in utter frustration, to strike back at that most fickle of man-made gadgets, the coke machine.

Campus scenes reflect life both timely and timeless. Controversies rage and the student body ponders "black power" versus "People power", and contemplates individuality and conformity. Old buildings fall before the onslaught of newer, sleeker structures. Thoughts on the Viet Nam war wax and wane while the ever-increasing masses flow daily from class to class, pursuing more and more complex studies. Couples still gather at dorm doors just before closing and the single student still escapes occasionally to the solitude of his room.

Students Supplement Their Income with Part-Time Jobs.

Students make up a very important part of the multiversity work force. They perform the great variety of routine tasks necessary for the smooth operation of offices, residence halls and the community at large. A student may work for only a few hours, or put in a full day on the job, but each one makes a vital contribution to the functioning of the multiversity.

ASMSU offices provide some employment for students.

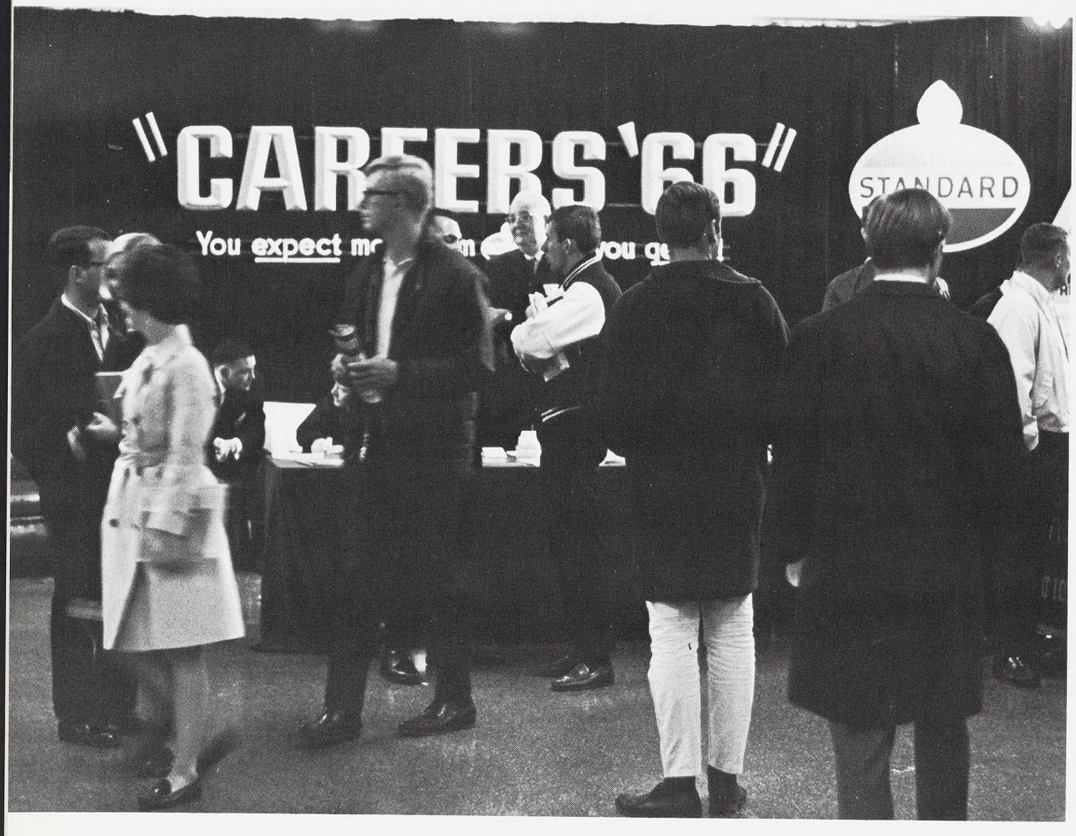

38,000 people must be fed every day, and student food service work contributes a great deal to this vital task. Working in his residence hall kitchen is often the first job a student has at MSU. Serving food, clearing tables, washing dishes are all jobs taken care of primarily with student help. Part time student workers also run the dorm grills, wait on tables in East Lansing restaurants and dispense the popular 18 cent hamburger.

Union Board Presents

Careers and Activities Carnivals for Joiners or Job-Seekers

By sponsoring these two carnivals each year, Union Board hopes to acquaint students with the opportunities open to them both in jobs outside of school and extracurricular activities within.

This year, a record number of companies accepted invitations to participate in "Careers '66" and set up displays in the Union Building hallways and ballrooms. Practically every type of job opportunity was represented; from the military to big business, from government civil service to private research firms. The two-day Career Carnival achieved wide-spread interest among students; the company representatives answering questions and taking names of prospective applicants.

The Activities Carnival enjoyed similar success as "Careers '66". Student clubs and organizations set up booths or displays to attract the eye of those attending. Primarily, the carnival serves as a means of introducing a student to the wide diversity of activities available to him. Many of the organizations find this event to be an excellent recruiting device for new members. As in past years, the number of student activities represented has grown and, thus, it seems a club for every interest is the trend that is now in effect.

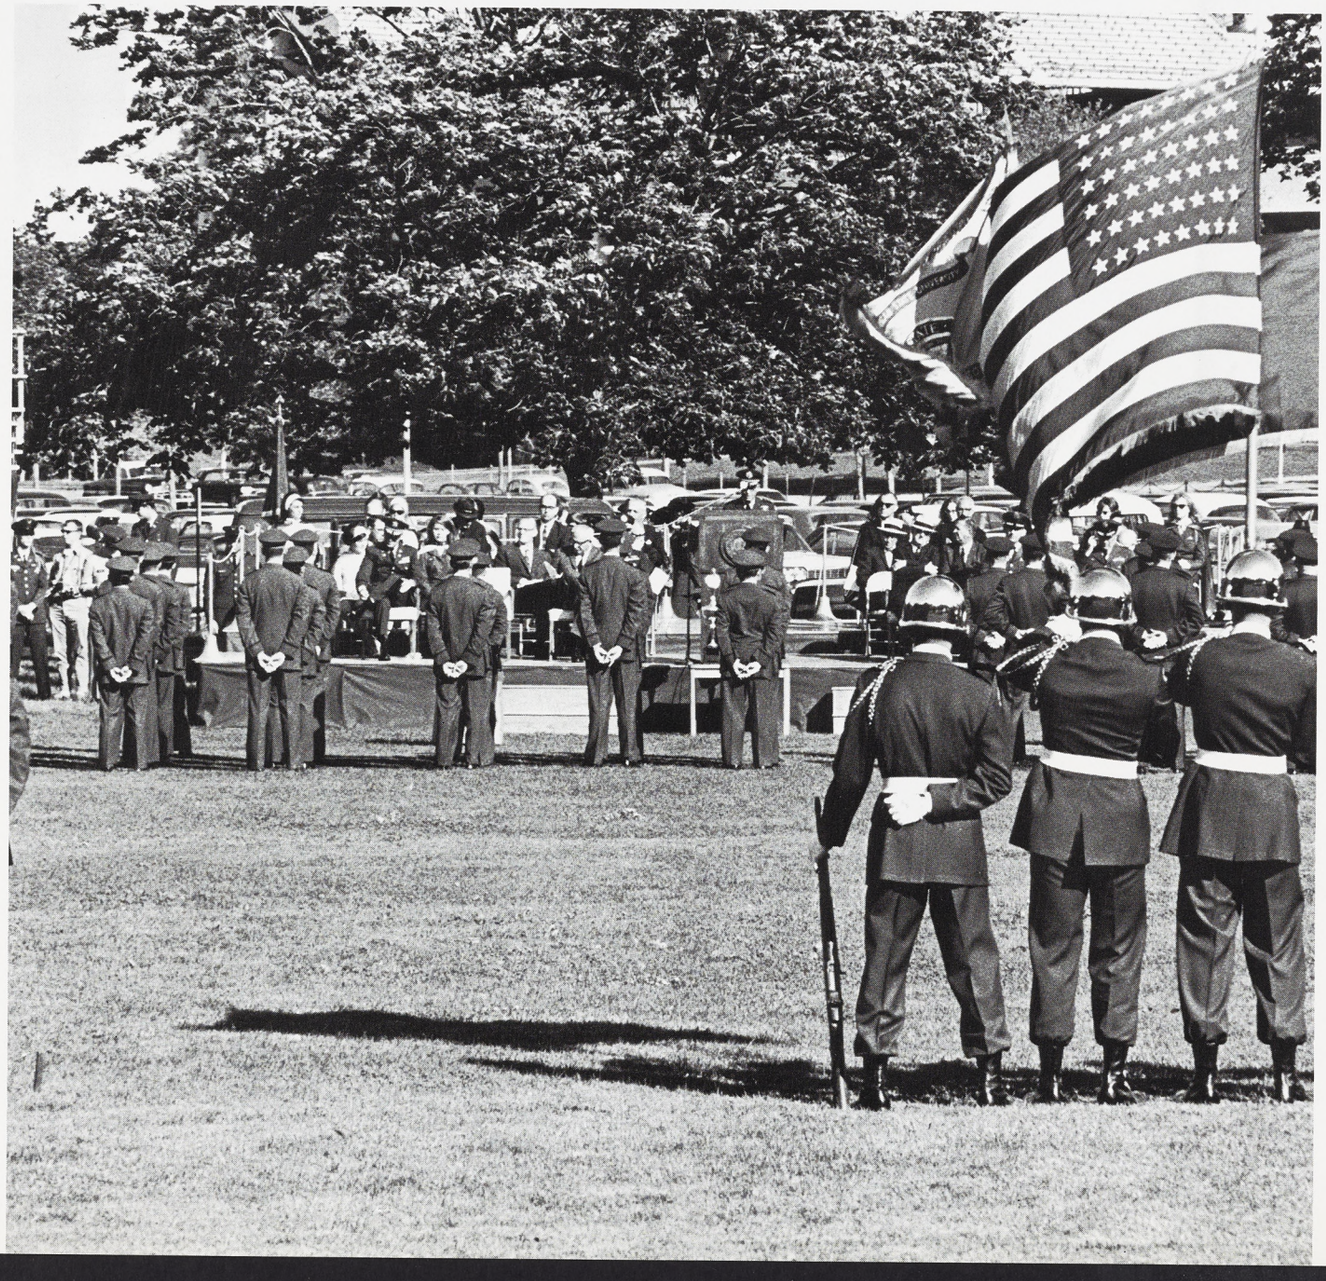

Michigan State ROTC Provides Officers for Viet Nam

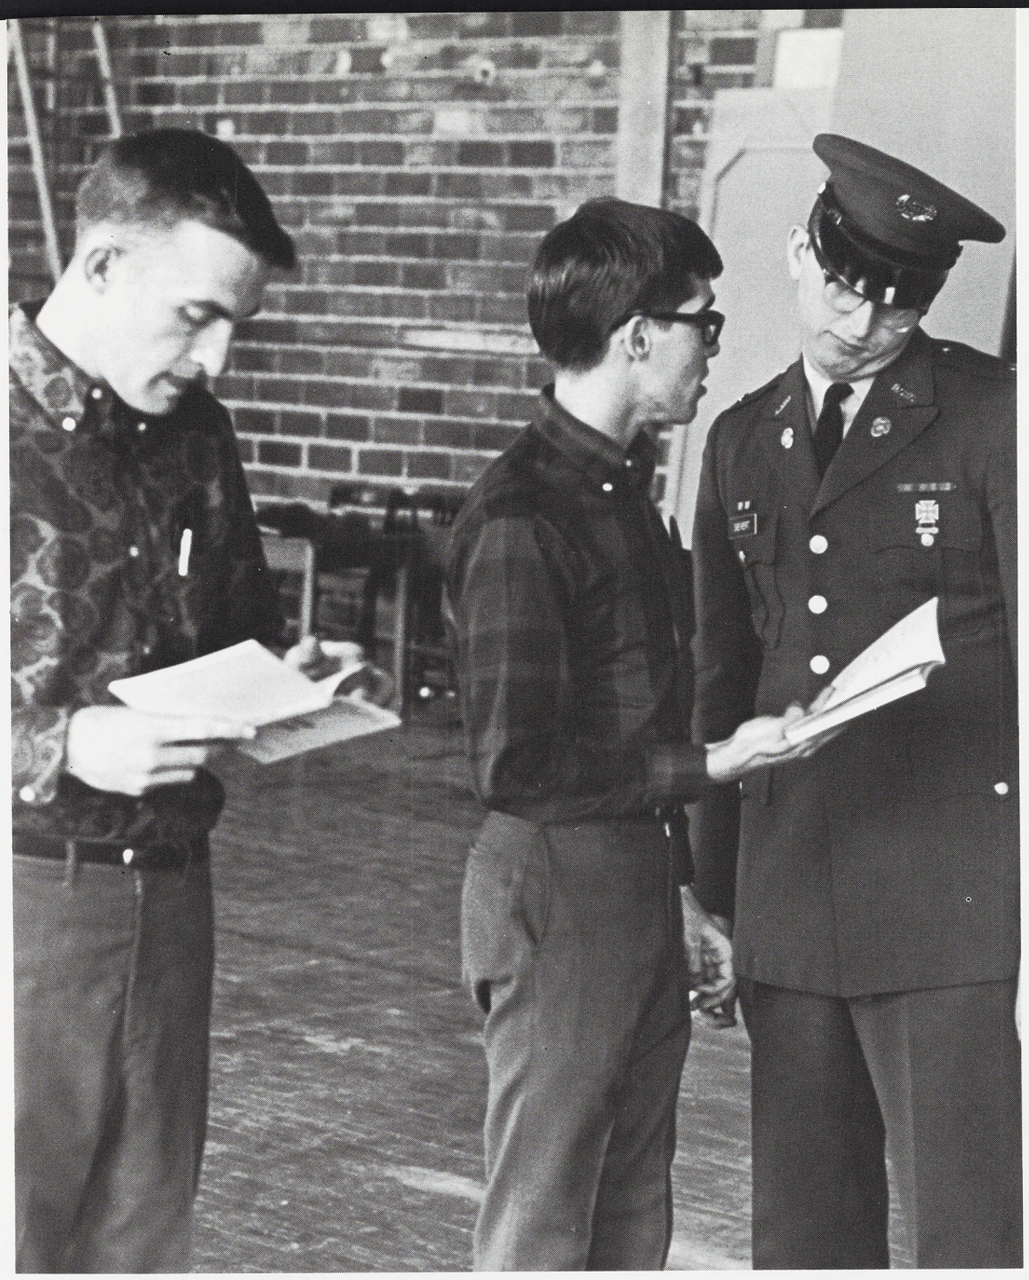

The Reserve Officer Training Corps, or ROTC as it is known by the large majority of students, has been an integral part of Michigan State University for over fifty years. Organized as a training ground for officers for the Army and, later, for the Air Force, the ROTC program provides an opportunity for the development of the leadership qualities that are to be found in Michigan State students. Since the primary function of the ROTC is to provide officers for the service, and not to train men for warfare specifically, the ROTC program at Michigan State is largely unaffected by the Viet Nam war. The ROTC graduate of 1967 has undergone, essentially, the same program as that of a 1962 graduate with the exception that he is more likely to see active duty overseas after he graduates.

To accomplish the transformation of a student to a military officer, the program uses both classroom instruction and on-the-spot practice. The lectures provide for schooling in basic tactics, small squad maneuvers, communications, organization of the service and general orientation to military life. In addition to such classes, the cadets are encouraged to take courses in political science, speech, engineering and physical science as electives. The basic college courses are considered very appropriate and, of course, a major in some field is necessary. Such a curriculum as this develops a well-rounded officer who is better able to comprehend the diverse situations and problems which arise in the military.

Putting the lessons to work is the purpose of the drill sessions on the field in front of Demonstration Hall. To the majority of people who observe this marching,

Spring term brings the splendor of parades and the attendant pomp and circumstance.

Individual practice in drill makes for precision marching.

The sessions seem hardly more than exercises in following orders, which they are for the first-year cadets. More important, however, is the fact which often goes unnoticed; the men shouting the commands are also cadets, applying the leadership techniques learned in class. It is here that the offcer begins to emerge. Such practice trains him to stand above the others and rely on himself to make decisions and provide a unifying influence over his contingent of men.

Summer Camp is not all work.

AIR FORCE ROTC

The United States Air Force has three primary methods of obtaining officers, these being: the Air Force Academy in Colorado, their Officers Candidate and Officers Training Schools, and their ROTC programs at many colleges and universities. The Air Force ROTC program at Michigan State offers trainees a broad schooling in Air Force organization and purposes, political ideologies, speaking and leadership. Included in the instruction is a pilot training program for all cadets interested in flying, be it fighters, bombers or reconnaissance types of aircraft.

During the summer after a cadet's junior year, he spends four weeks at an Air Force camp. Primarily, the purpose of the camp is to gain experience in practical matters. Cadets are given a chance to do some flying and work in sections that interest them. Water and field survival training lasting two to three days completes a busy four weeks.

All is not strictly the military life though. The Air Force ROTC also has extracurricular activities in which many of the cadets participate. The Arnold Air Society is an honorary which accepts members only after pledging for a term. The Society sponsors social activities and service functions with Angel Flight, an organization of women interested in the Air Force. Among the services performed by the groups is the cleaning of the stadium after home football games. Other openings for the interested cadet include the Air Police, the Spartan Guard drill teams and the colorful Scots Highlanders drum and bugle corps.

ARMY ROTC

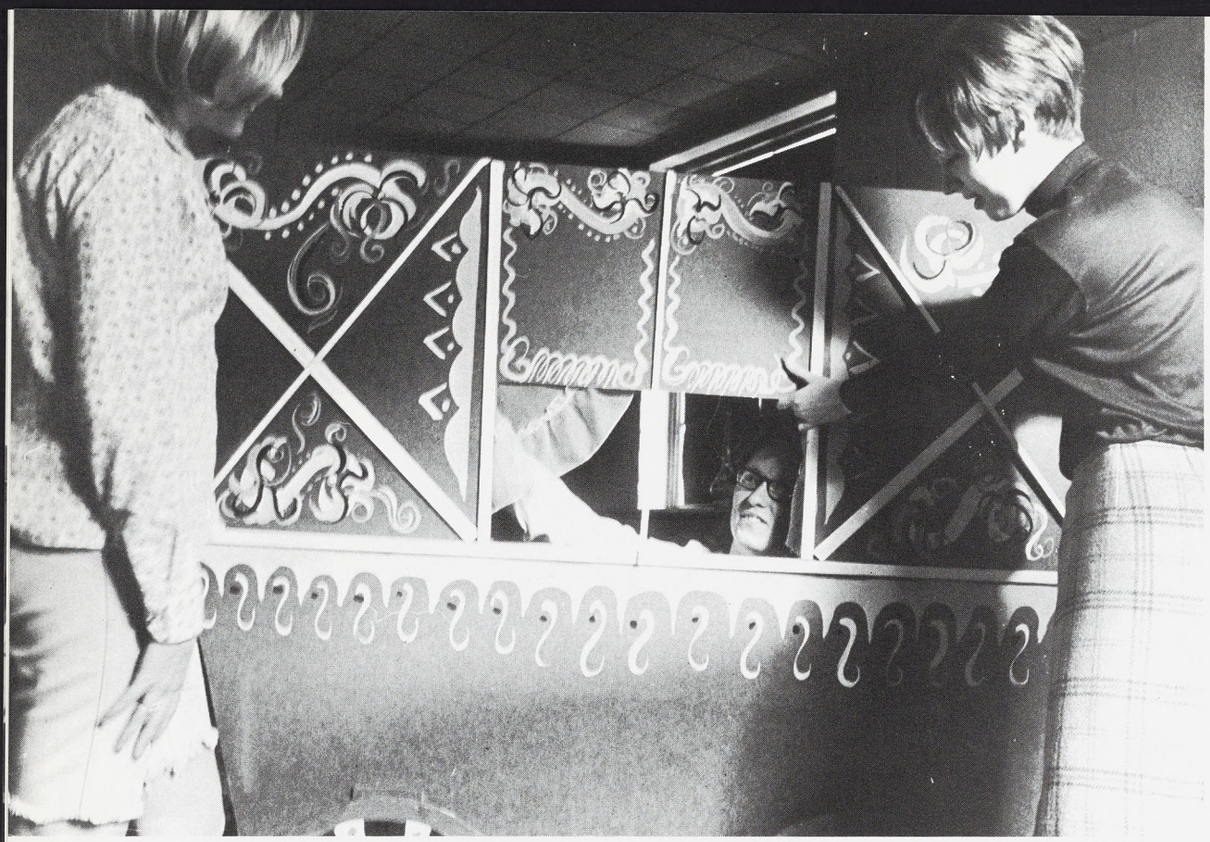

Marching develops discipline and a military attitude.

Army ROTC at MSU also serves as a basic source of officers for the regular United States Army, similar to the Air Force program. Throughout the country, the Army ROTC program requires that a school commission at least twenty-five officers as Second Lieutenants each year for the school to continue as a ROTC detachment. MSU's ROTC post presently is well above these minimum requirements, commissioning a total of seventy-nine in 1966 and an equal number in 1967. This June, approximately forty cadets are expected to receive their Second Lieutenant's bars.

Progression through the program begins by the spring of a cadet's freshman year. Promotions are awarded at the spring term parades so that, by the sophomore year, the cadets are given charge of squads of men in the drill sessions. Continued evidence of leadership qualities may advance a cadet until he becomes a Brigade Commander. This position, roughly equivalent to regular army general, puts the cadet in full charge of parades and reviews, from the planning stages all the way through to the presentation.

In the classroom, the instructors spend much of their time developing the "big picture" of the political and ideological status of the United States and how the Army fits in and correlates to the civilian environment. Included in this teaching are several lectures on Army history and the Army's part in the development of America.

The Army also has a scholarship program whereby seniors in high school are able to take tests and, possibly win full tuition assistance to the university of their choice. The student with such a scholarship also is given fifty dollars a month expenses while participating in the ROTC program. Under this scholarship program, the graduate Second Lieutenant then has a four year active duty obligation and a good possibility of making a fruitful career in the Army.

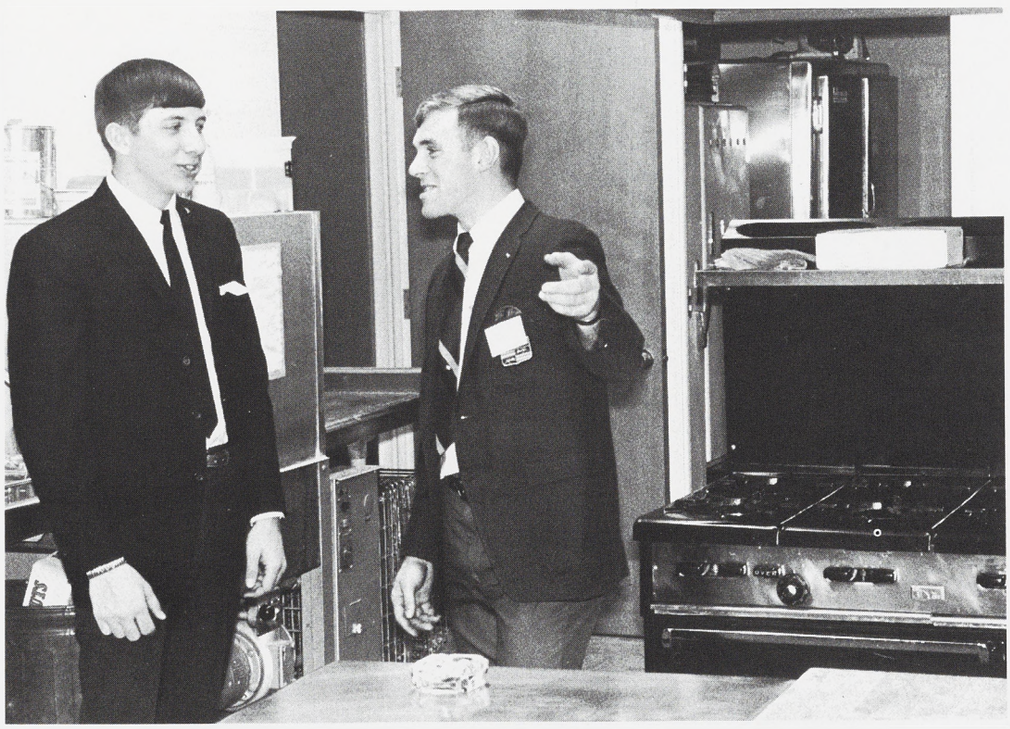

Greek Activities Permeate Multiversity Life

The Greek system continues to grow with the multiversity. As enrollment grows, prospective fraternity and sorority members increase and rush becomes more and more frantic. But touches of smallness remain. There is still time for a tour of the house, a humorous skit by the actives, or a smile from a helpful rush hostess.

Sigma Nu yearly opens its backyard to provide a place for Greek Feast.

Greek Week provides a focal point for fraternity and sorority spring activities. Special events and an annual community service project characterize the week of festivities, which culminates in the popular Greek Feast. Entertainment by professional and local groups, accompanied by the traditional fried chicken make this a long-remembered event for every participant.

Open houses are a chance to invite that special someone to visit you.

Open Houses Promote Hospitality, Cordiality

Although the policy concerning open houses has stirred up controversy, entering the forbidden domain of the opposite sex remains as popular as ever. It is always a special occasion —and sometimes a shock—to see how the other half lives. Open house activities are as varied as the guests they entertain, but mixers, informal hootenannies and refreshments are more common than seeing a girl being shaved.

Getting ready for an open house involves not only personal grooming but cleaning the room as well.

The Impressions of a Multiversity

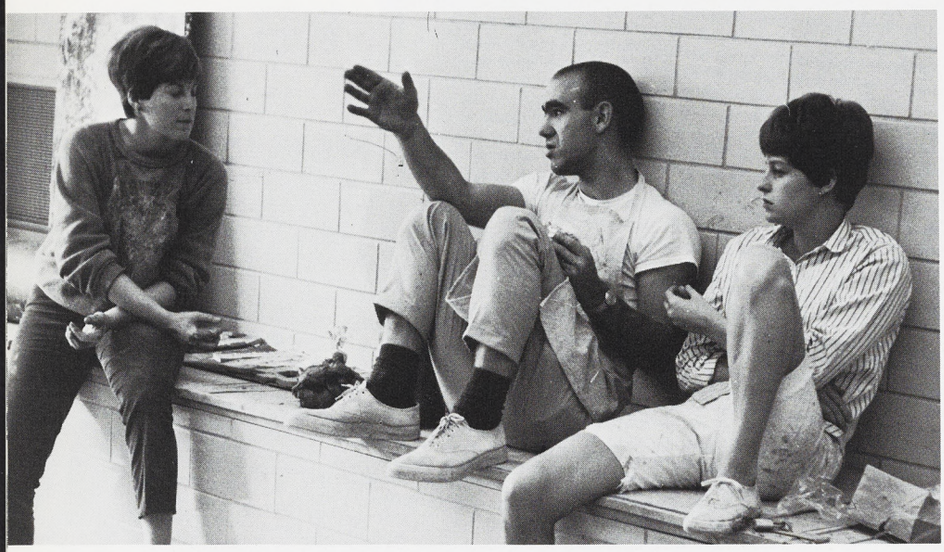

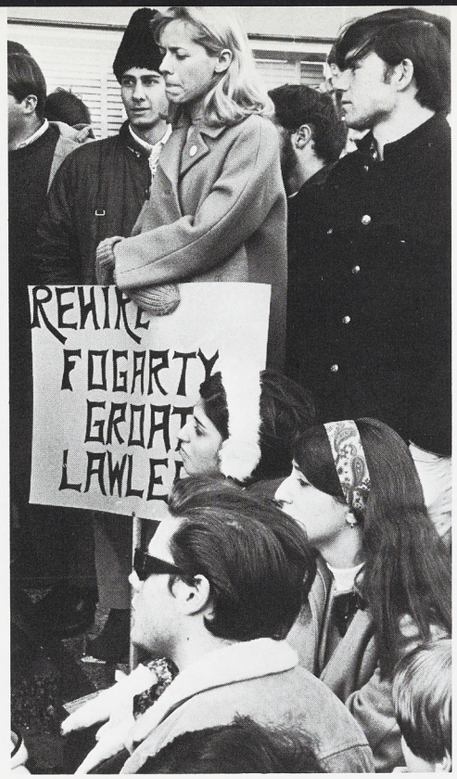

The multiversity presents a kaleidoscopic view of ever changing scenes. Winter, Summer, Spring, Fall, in darkness or in day, the scope is always pulsating with freshness and excitement.

The student's leisure.

The student's rights.

The student's activities.

The student's woes.

The student's world.

A complex multiversity engenders a complex computer.

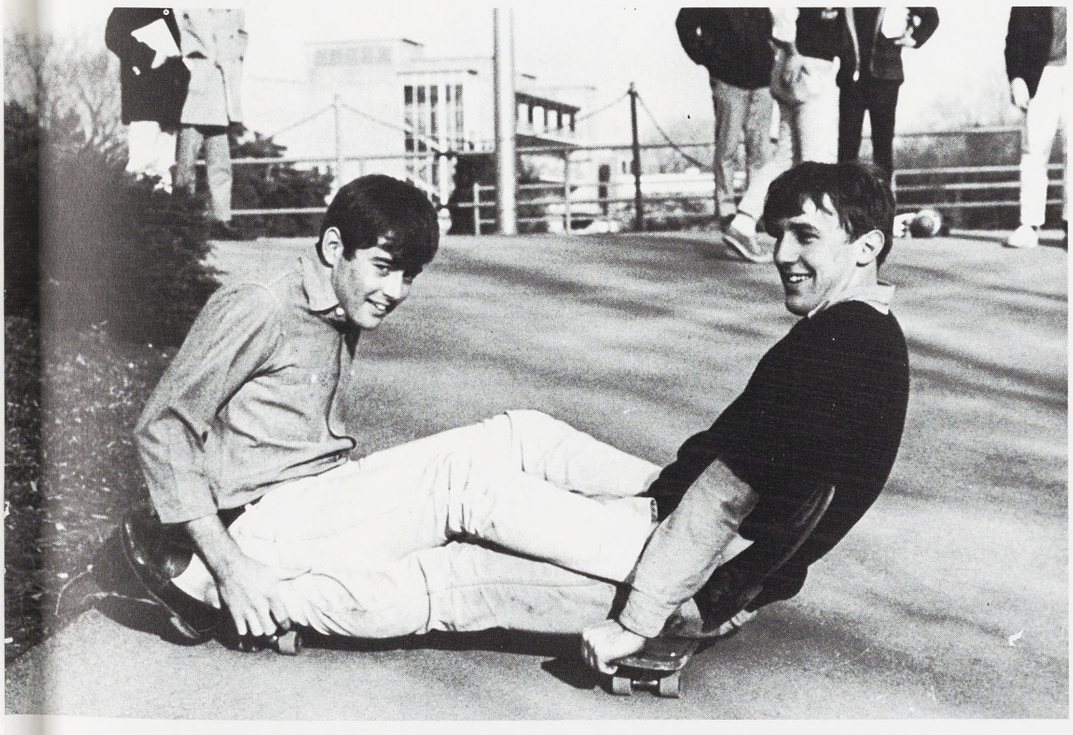

The favorite pastime.

At work or at play, alone or in a crowd, the complex molecule called MSU is always present to offer its many facets. One's tastes and goals determine the nucleus to which he is attracted.

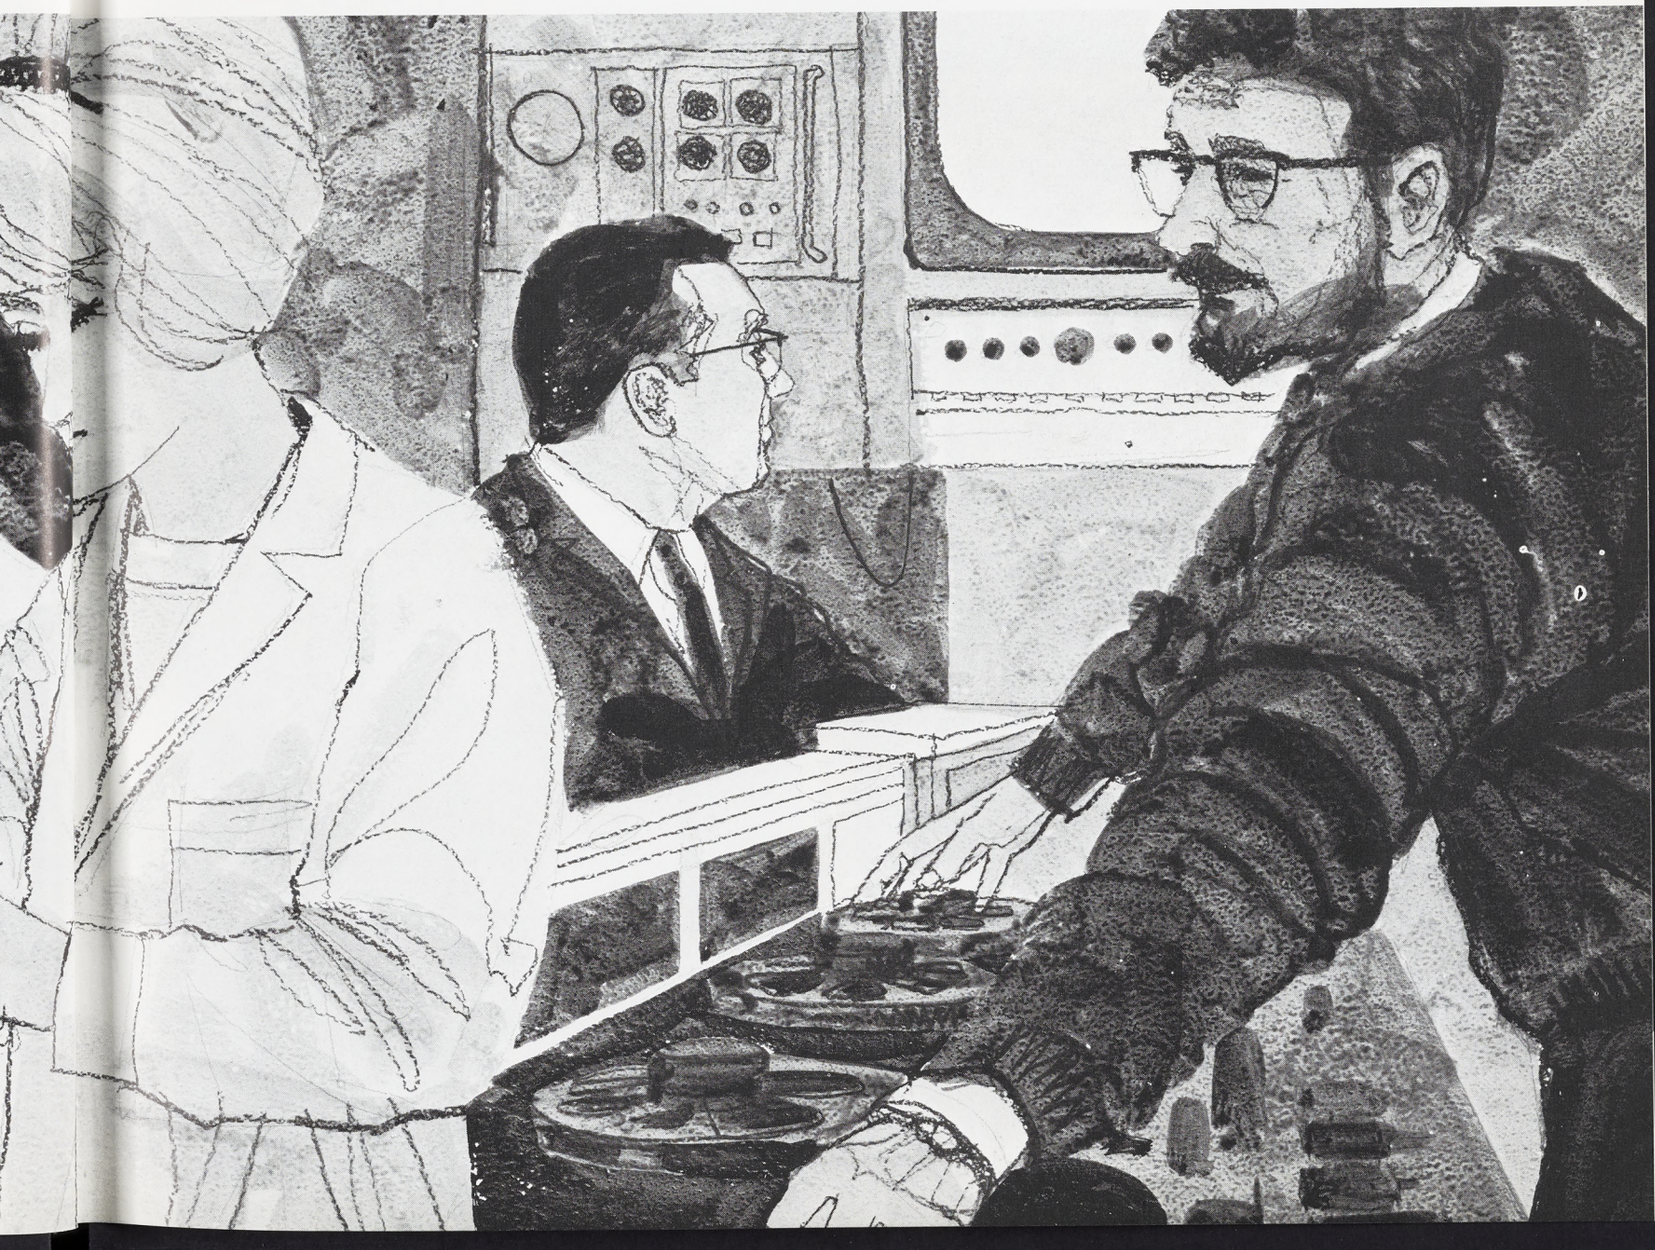

MULTIVERSITY

Once, quite a few million years ago, two amoeba floated lazily in the warm currents of a primeval ocean when the first hydra swam by. One amoeba turned to the other and, with a shake of a pseudopod, said, "It'll never work. Much too big and complex. I tell you, there's no future for the multicelluar . . ."

Somewhat later, two students sitting on the steps of the Union looked around dismayed. One turned to the other and, with a shake of his head, said, "It'll never work. Much too big and complex. I tell you, there's no future for the multiversity . . ."

ADMINISTRATION

For the 112th year the Administration has continued to guide and maintain the complex operations of MSU. With a full gamut of social and economic activities being performed, decisions on a diversity of affairs must constantly be made. The mechanisms of the multiversity involve providing food and housing for thousands of persons each day of the academic year, managing investments running into billions of dollars, maintaining more than 330 permanent buildings and most importantly preparing its students to be effective participants in the world of tomorrow.

The Board of Trustees is authorized by the Constitution of the State of Michigan as the main governing body at Michigan State University. As a corporate assemblage composed of eight members, each elected to serve an eight year term, this group is responsible for the general supervision of the University and the control and direction of all expenditures from the institution's funds.

In exercising its responsibility, the Board delegates to the President of the University and through him to the faculty, appropriate authority to enable the development of a free and distinguished University. It is to this end that the entire administrative unit strives so that the welfare of mankind will be promoted through the teaching, research and public services carried on at Michigan State University.

To know Michigan State University one must understand its purposes as well as its people and programs. It is a warm, human enterprise revolving around relationships of instructors and students in the complex world of knowledge, for the essence of the multiversity is its spirit of education.

In the past year, MSU created an intellectual climate which has challenged and developed the minds of more than 38,000 students. In keeping with the atmosphere of a multiversity, a wide variety of subjects are available to this vast community of scholars. Each of the thirteen colleges offer virtually unlimited opportunities to those with specific professional aspirations as well as to those desiring a more general education. Regardless of academic interests, the student will find in the multiversity preparation not only for effective participation in society, but also guidance to help each individual fulfill himself as a human being.

AGRICULTURE

THOMAS K. COWDEN, Dean, College of Agriculture

Established in 1855, the College of Agriculture is the oldest, yet among the most dynamic, in the University. It offers many opportunities to those students interested in the fields of agriculture and conservation through its various departments, programs and other units.

The college consists of three main divisions: teaching, research, and extension. The operations of this college are designed not only for students on campus but also to provide information and services to the citizens in every county in the state.

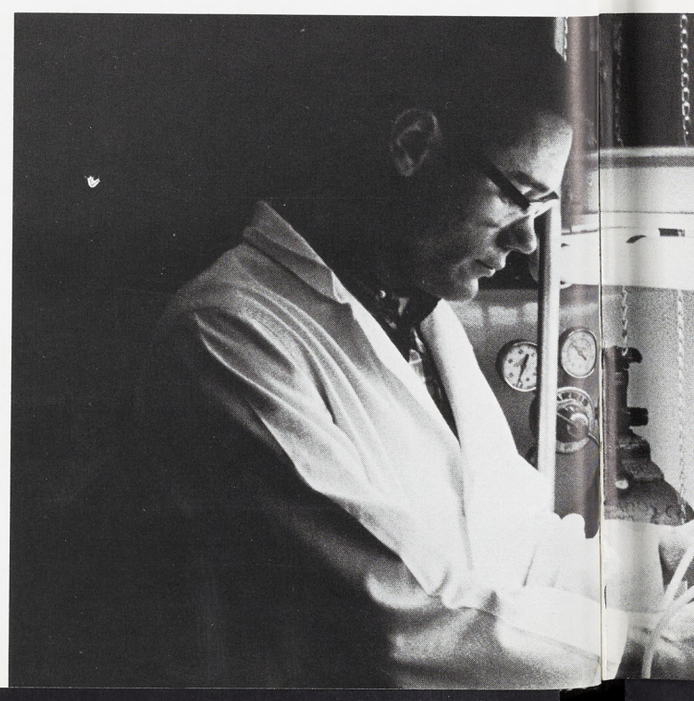

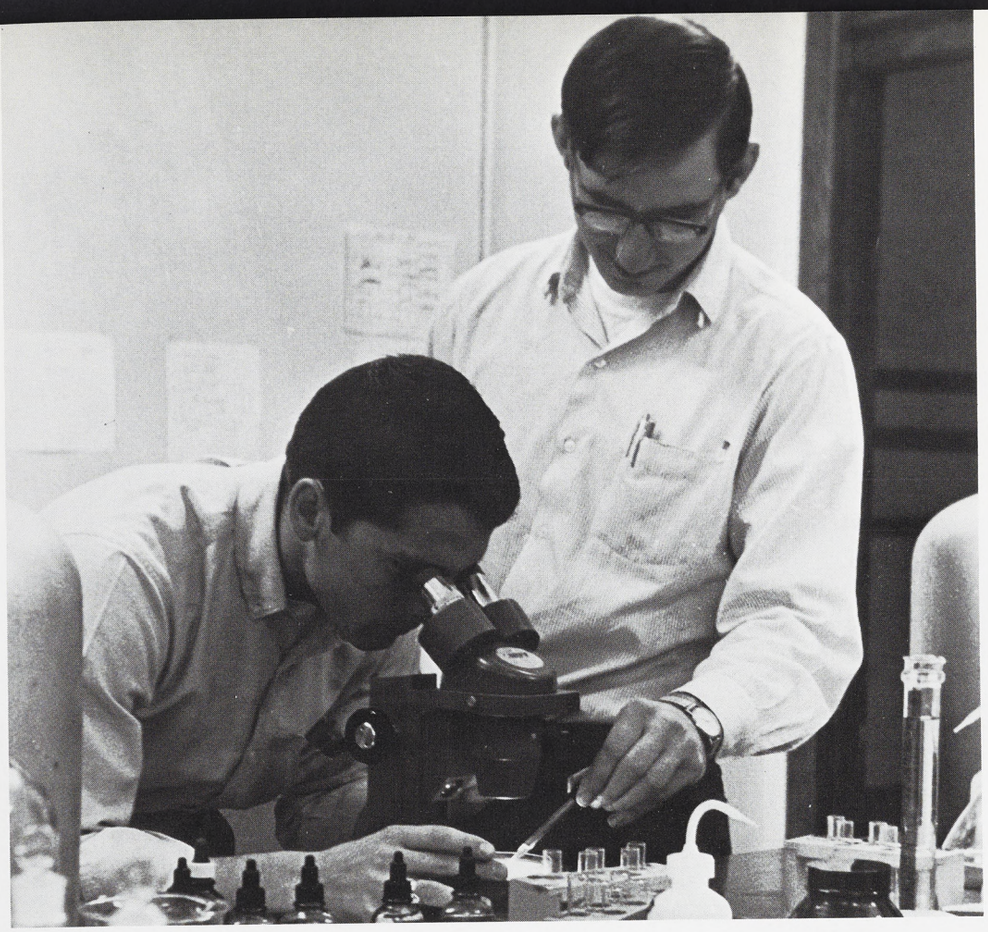

Scientific aspects of agriculture include studying the effects varying intensities of light and heat have on plant life.

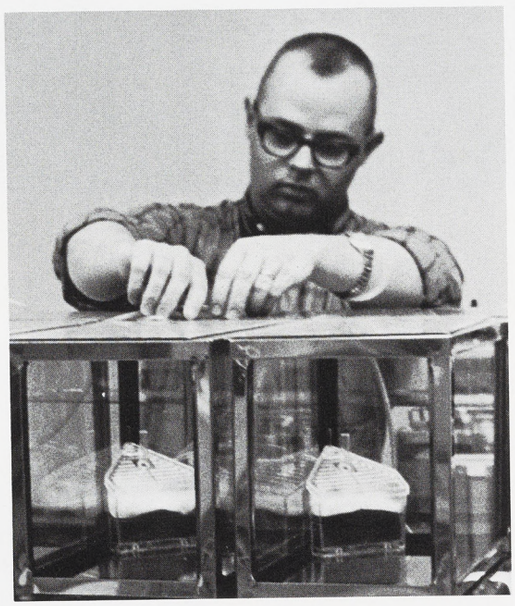

The Agricultural Experiment Station was organized in 1887 to conduct research bearing on the agricultural industries of the state and nation. The results are published in the form of scientific journal articles and bulletins. The Cooperative Extension Service conducts off-campus educational programs such as 4-H Club and Community Resource Development.

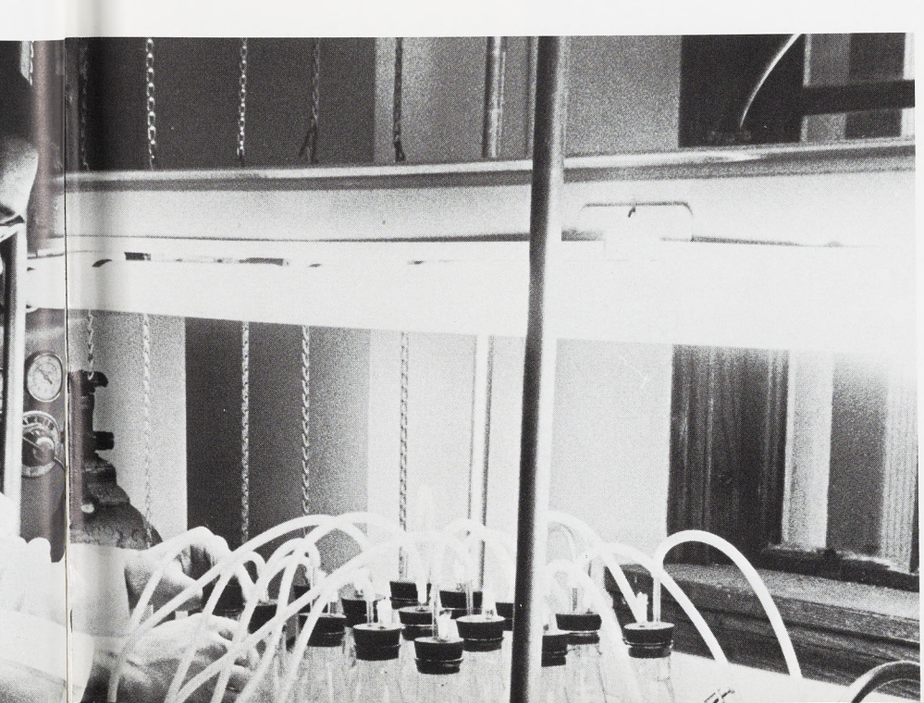

Expansion has caused many changes in the college. This year, the Natural Resources Building and the Food Science Building were completed and put into use. Next year's plans call for a Pesticide Center, a Montcalm County Experimental Farm and other new facilities.

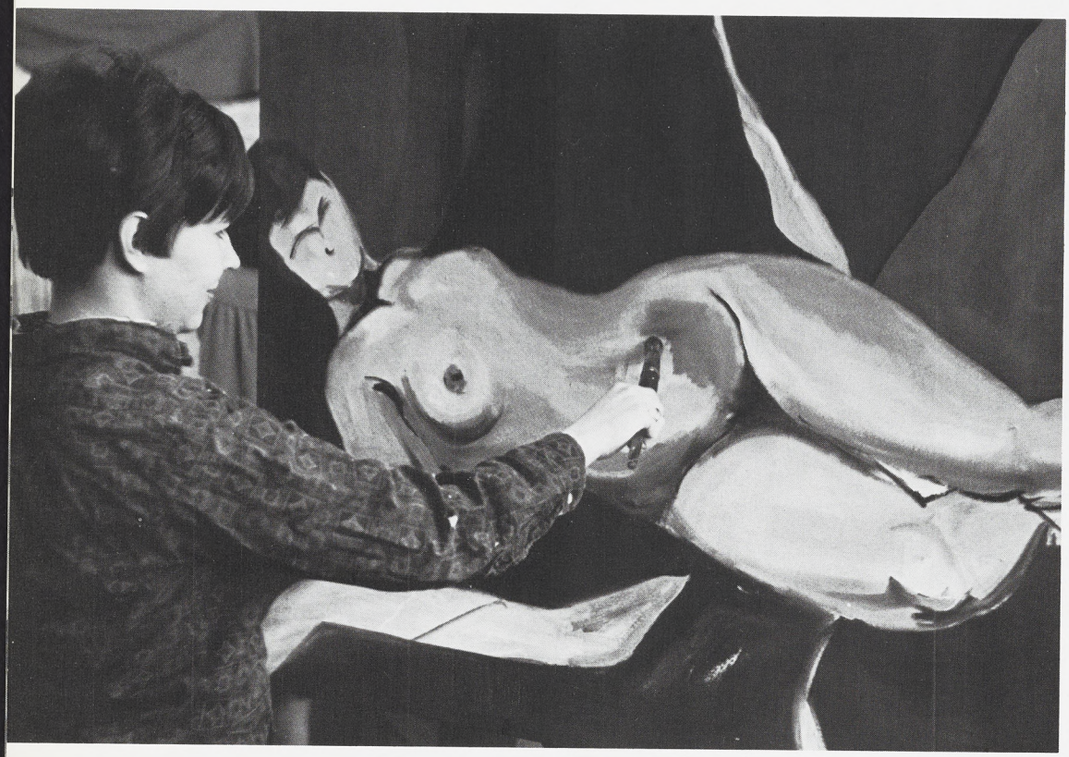

The importance of agriculture in our society cannot be overemphasized since more than forty per cent of our national economy is connected with agriculture of one type or another. The agricultural degree programs at Michigan State University emphasize the scientific knowledge and principles which have brought agriculture and conservation to their present high level of development.

ARTS AND LETTERS

PAUL A. VARG, Dean, College of Arts and Letters

The College of Arts and Letters offers a variety of subjects that combine to develop a liberally educated student. Such a person has an understanding of his role in society through intelligent and analytical study of his socio-cultural environment.

Through its nine departments, the College of Arts and Letters offers programs leading to the degrees of Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Fine Arts and Bachelor of Music.

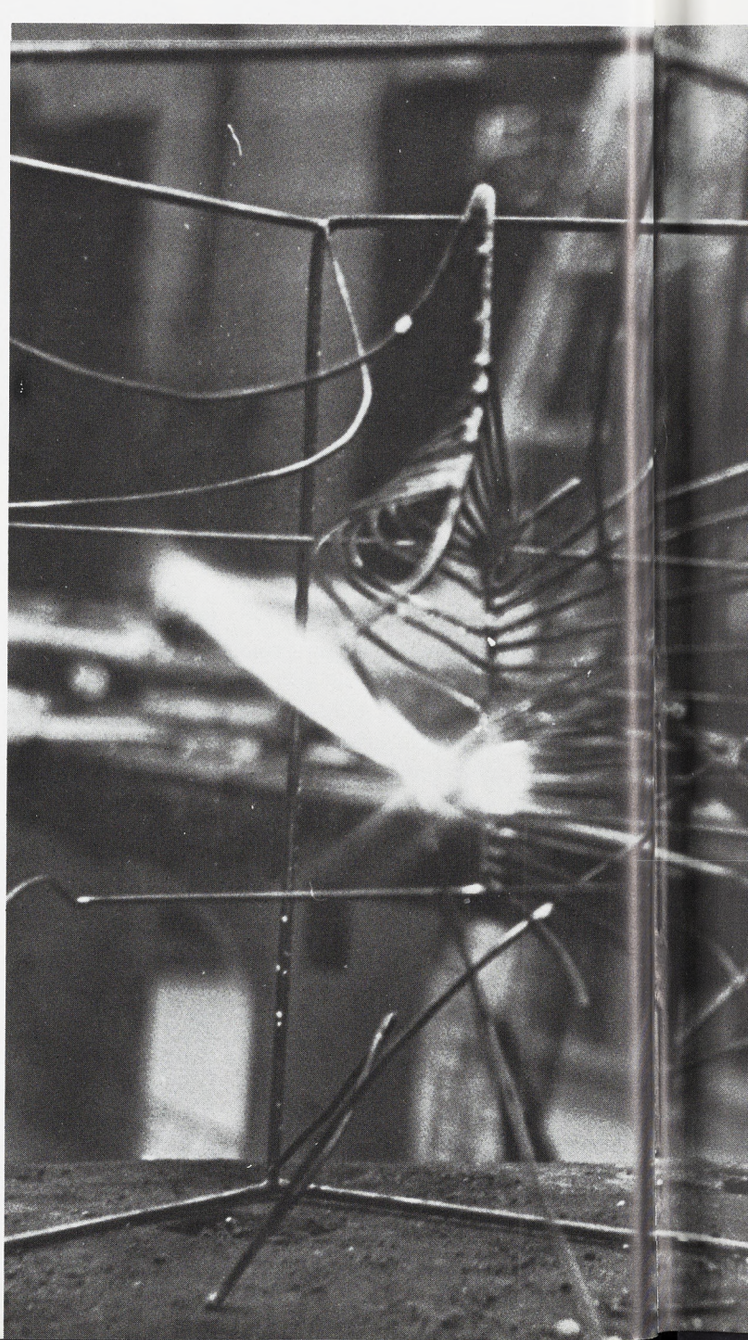

The academic plan for students is known as a radial major. The student is limited to forty credits in his major field and required to take nine to twelve credits in three related fields one of which must be outside the College of Arts and Letters. This new plan is intended to insure a broad educational scope to complement the student's major field of study.

Several new courses were made available this year. In response to student demand, courses in archaeology, oriental religions and new languages such as Swahili are now being offered. Further expansion in this college involved the opening of the new Foreign Language and Mathematics Building and the expansion of the Art Gallery.

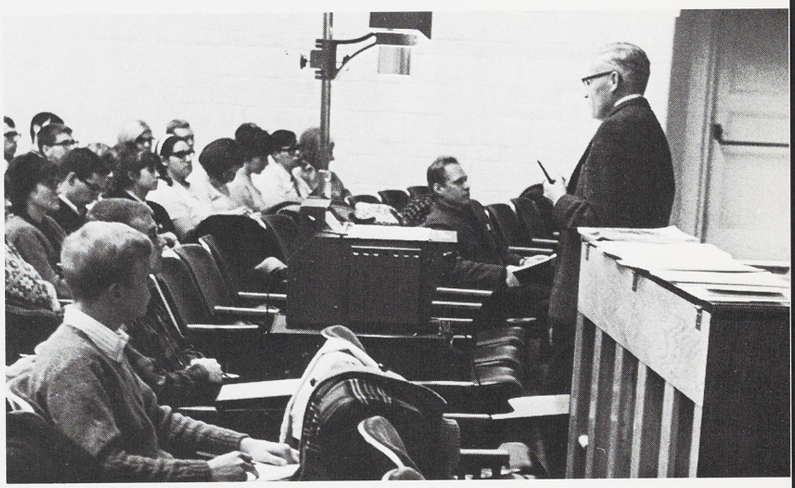

The College of Arts and Letters administers the Humanities Research Center on campus which publishes the Centennial Review, a quarterly devoted to specific problems in each issue. Recent topics have been urbanization, Roosevelt and the New Deal, and Latin America. Students in the Department of English publish the Red Cedar Review a campus literary magazine of student writing and art work.

Students in the Art Department learn various methods of graphic expression, among them the use of woodcuts.

BUSINESS

Since 1944 the College of Business has been preparing young men and women for responsible positions in business and industry. Viewing education as a life-long project, this college provides a sound foundation in the liberal arts and sciences. Such a viewpoint will allow the student to understand his future relationships to the social, economic and cultural trends of our society.

Through its six divisions, the College of Business offers programs in business administration, economics and in the management of feeding, housing and recreational sectors of the service industries. Courses are offered at the undergraduate and graduate levels.

In each program of study there is a core of courses required of each student. These are designed to provide a thorough grounding in the fundamentals by which our free enterprise economic system operates. To further their understanding of the business world, the students are given the opportunity to visit business firms, to listen to outstanding speakers from the business world and to participate in organizations related to business and industry. Through all of these functions, the college serves as a catalyst for instilling values and ways of thought about one of man's most important activities: business and how it operates.

COMMUNICATION ARTS

FRED S. SIEBERT, Dean, College of Communication Arts

Michigan State University was the first university in the United States to establish a separate college to encompass all programs in mass, group and interpersonal communications. The College of Communication Arts was founded in 1955 and includes the Departments of Advertising, Communications, Speech, Television and Radio, and the School of Journalism.

The basic philosophy of the college is that without communications we would have no society. The programs of study which are offered in this college, therefore, are designed to give its students a clear understanding of the role of communications media in our society along with providing specialized education in the processes of communication.

Typewriters are still as journalism students discuss their new assignment.

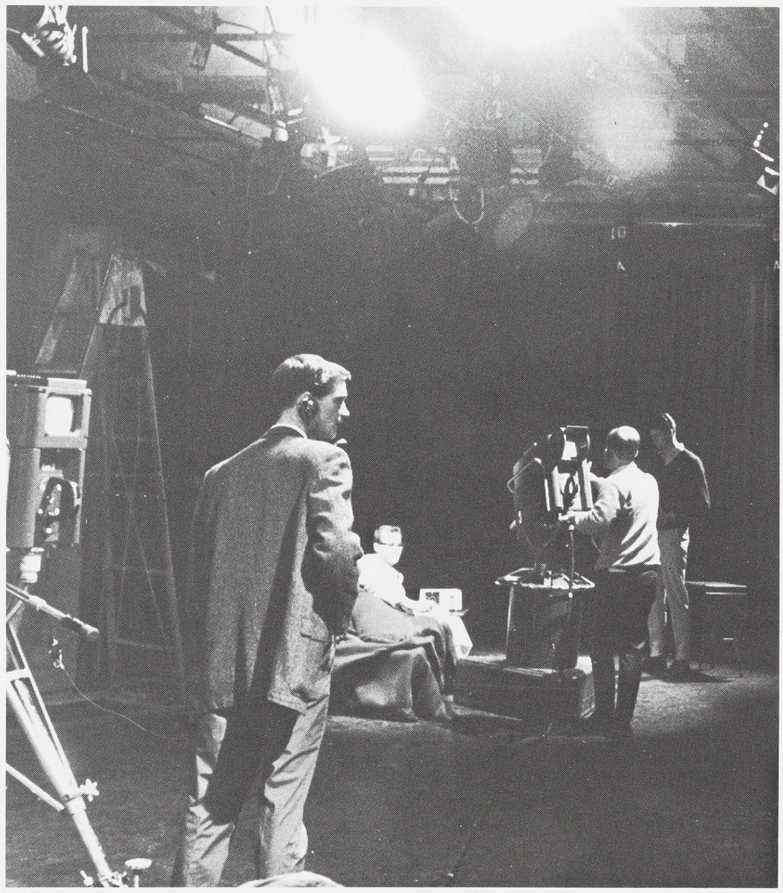

Knowledge of printing skills combine with an active imagination to produce a successful journalist.

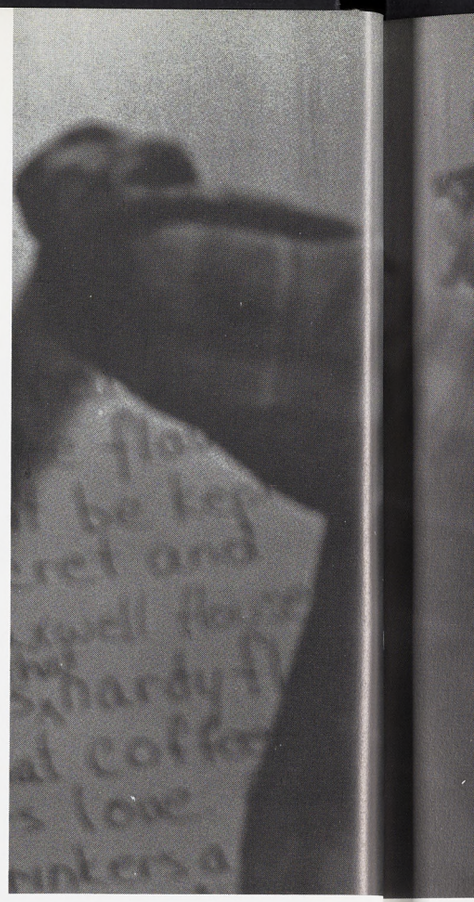

The oral communication problems of young children are studied at MSU's Speech Clinic.

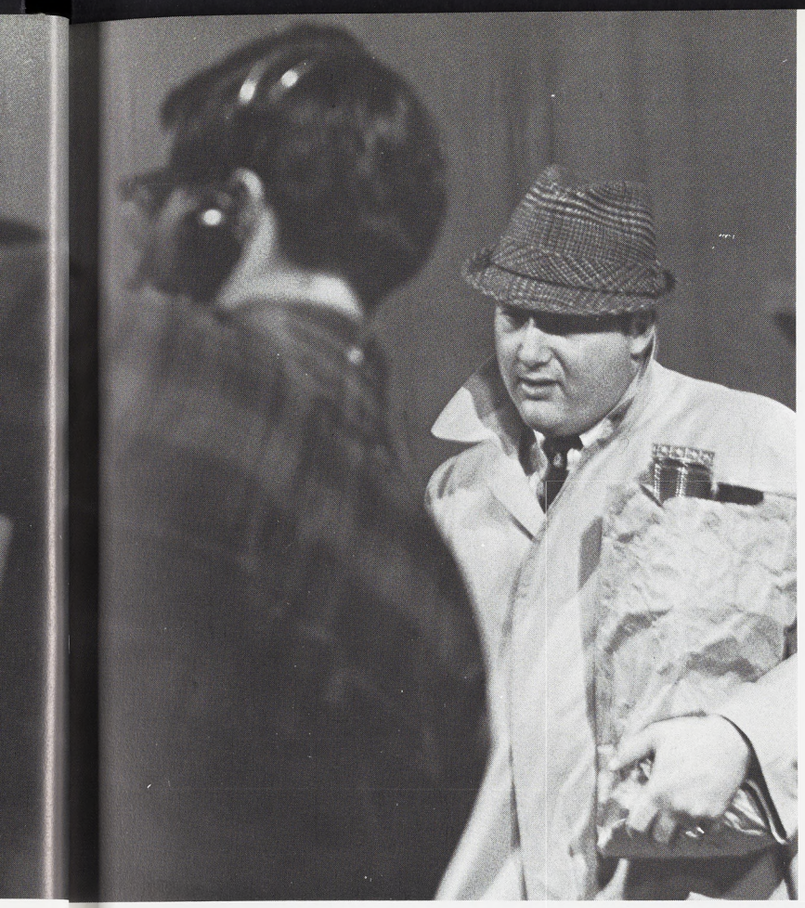

Television directing techniques are practiced in one of the control rooms of WMSB-TV.

Advertising and Television majors combine talents in a joint effort to produce commercials.

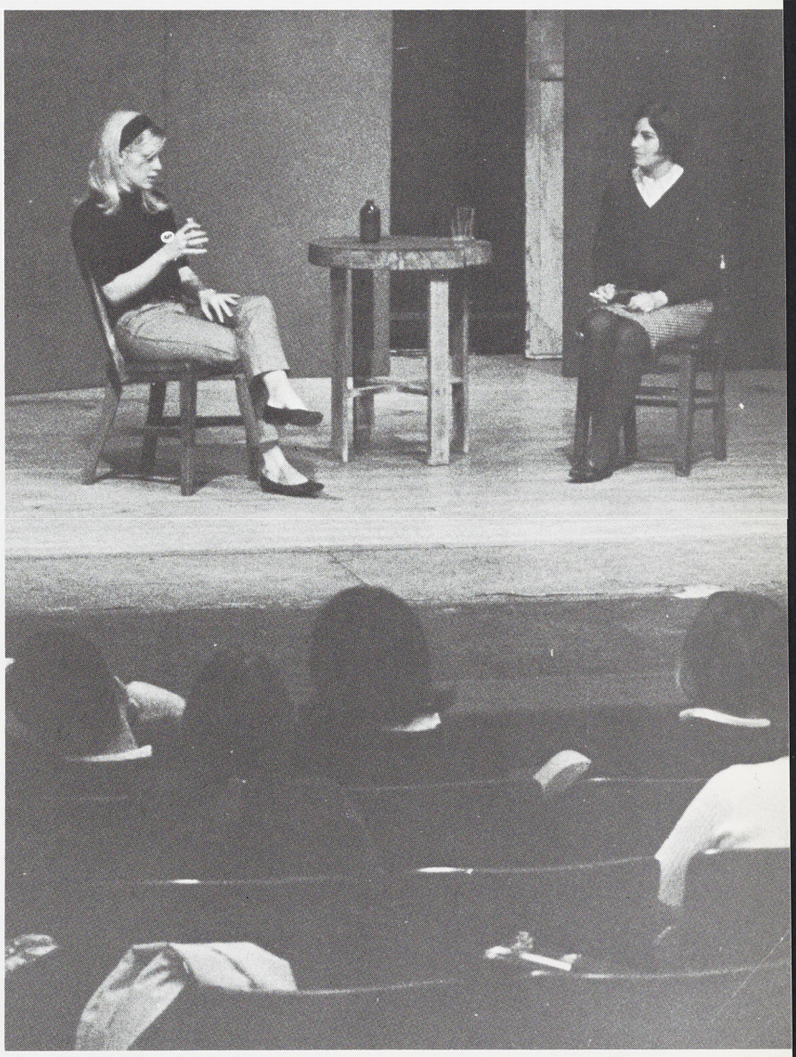

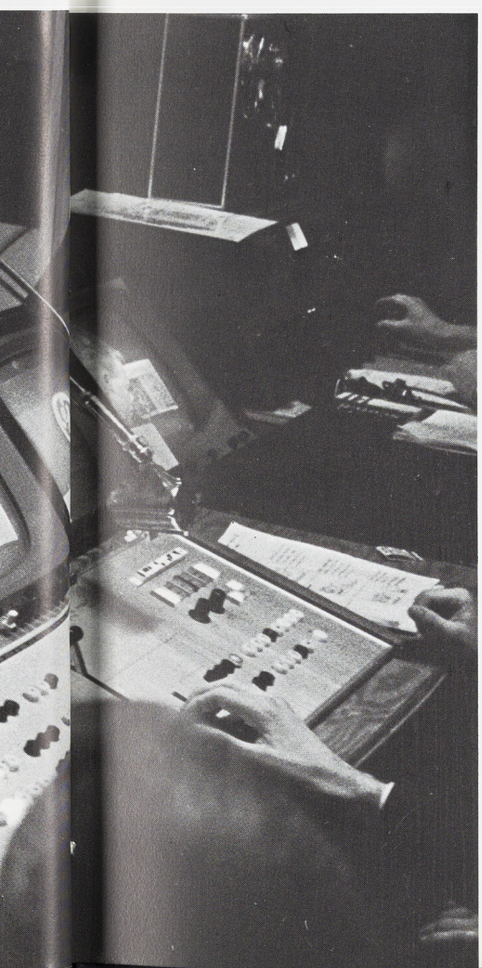

Moments before the performance, these advertising majors double check the script of their TV ad.

Advanced study and research in international communications are carried on by the International Communications Institute. Its purpose is to serve the entire University community by coordinating programs with the various colleges, departments and centers. Through grants from educational organizations, foundations, government agencies and private businesses a wide range of problems are studied.

Due to the large degree of expansion this college has experienced in the past few years, many interdepartmental relocations have taken place and officials anticipate more moves in the future. This will provide the college with more room to perform their role of preparing students for the vast field of communications.

Through the University Theatre, students learn to develop themselves as artistic instruments of communication.

EDUCATION

The College of Education has accepted as its responsibility the task of constantly adding to the existing knowledge of learning and teaching principles. For this reason, the research and service programs of this college extend into many areas. Through the Bureau of Educational Research and programs such as the Institution for International Studies in Education, intensive studies are carried on to improve and add to the quality of educational programs everywhere.

More than 8,000 students enrolled in this college last fall taking majors in one of the five departments of Administration and Higher Education, Elementary and Special Education, Secondary Education and Curriculum, Counseling and Educational Psychology, and Health, Physical Education and Recreation. Technology is advancing so rapidly and society changing so radically that a markedly different kind of education is needed. Teachers must know the newest developments in their fields and have improved facilities in which to carry out their teaching responsibilities. MSU's College of Education, working with all academic centers of the University, strives to prepare its students to meet the unknown problems and challenges of tomorrow. Student teaching is considered the most important stage in the training of future teachers. Scores of school systems in Michigan provided the laboratory and clinical experience the students will receive as teachers. Under the student teaching program, both elementary and secondary education students are placed in actual teaching situations where they are considered members of the regular school faculty for twelve weeks. These student teachers participate in all of the school activities as well as using the educational theory they have learned in actual classroom application.

ENGINEERING

Since the College of Engineering was established in 1885 with the creation of the Mechanical Engineering curriculum, it has expanded to include Agricultural Engineering, Chemical Engineering, Civil and Sanitary Engineering, Electrical Engineering, and Metallurgy. However, in order to keep up with the constant changes occurring in today's world, Dean John D. Ryder, head of the College of Engineering, has inaugurated a new program in the engineering sciences at Michigan State University.

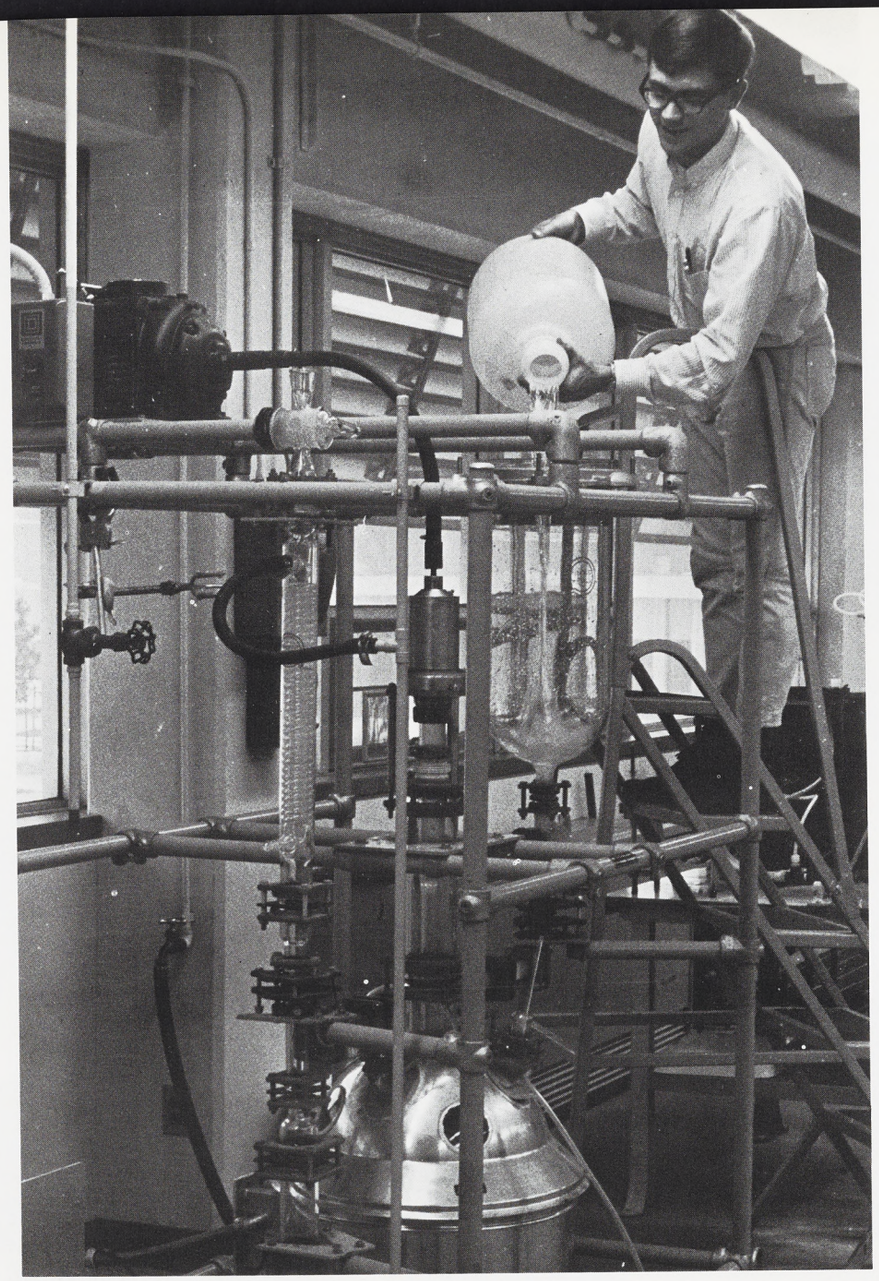

The electron microscope is used to study the structure of metals.

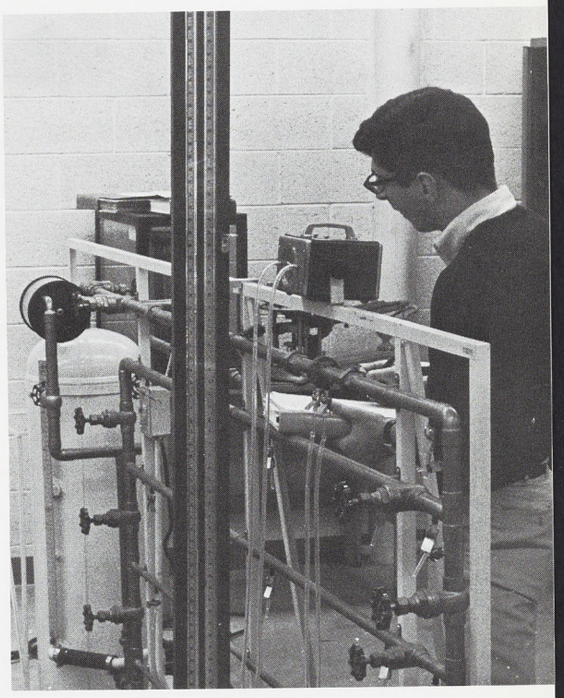

The new engineering curriculum has been designed so that the student can develop an individual program by selecting study in areas not previously brought together in the curricula of the professional engineering fields. After completing a core program consisting of basic mathematics, chemistry, physics, introductory computer programming, and general education courses, the student will work with an advisor to prepare a plan of study that will assure capability in a major engineering area. To complement and support the chosen major field, the student is to select two minors from other engineering areas or in business management, medicine, the social sciences, physical sciences, or other appropriate areas as well. This new program is intended to provide the opportunity for selecting a course of study suited to the modern needs of business and industry.

Engineers are constantly adding to the knowledge which has made the rapid development of our society possible. The Division of Engineering Research conducts research bearing on fundamental engineering problems, as well as on the industrial problems of the state and those concerned with the safety and well-being of its citizens. In addition to the study of engineering problems, research involving poultry science, the economy of Puerto Rico, and the organization of a university are among other projects being examined this year by the Engineering Research Division.

HOME ECONOMICS

JEANETTE A. LEE, Dean, College of Home Economics

For more than seventy years the College of Home Economics at Michigan State University has been engaged in preparing students for the various professional opportunities available in this field. The focus of this broad range of study is the home with emphasis placed on the family and the individual. Through its four departments, several different majors are offered leading to a bachelor's, master's, or doctoral degree.

The Department of Foods and Nutrition seeks to assist the student in acquiring concepts fundamental to this science, thus preparing the student for work in the fields of dietetics, food production, and food and nutrition research. The Department of Home Management and Child Development offers courses which help the student to understand the dynamic process of physical, psychological and social development throughout the life span of the individual and his family. The Department of Textiles, Clothing and Related Arts gives professional preparation to those whose interest is textiles, clothing or applied design. Through the Department of Institution Administration courses in food service management prepare the student for work in this field.

The need for new knowledge in the field of home economics, especially in the foods and nutrition area, is in constant demand. Through advanced studies and research many discoveries have taken place and the need for people with training in this field continues at a high level. The quality of the research program of the College of Home Economics at Michigan State University is attested to by the college's rating among the top three in the country.

Medical students gain surgical experience in the lab.

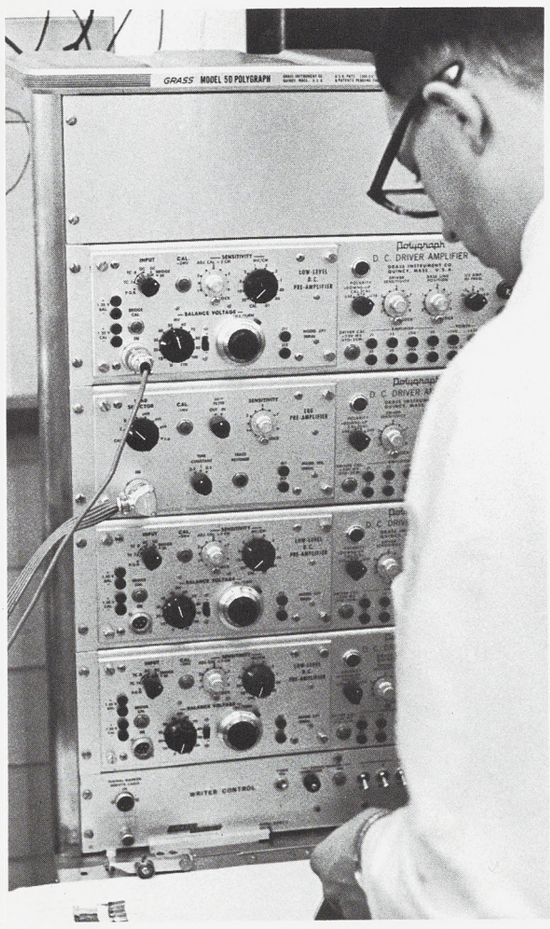

This year formal medical education began at MSU as twenty-six students enrolled in the first medical classes. Striking out on this new route, the students were seeking preparation for entrance at the junior level to medical schools offering the M.D. degree. However, before even one year of medical education at MSU could elapse, the State Board of Education approved the expansion of the two-year medical school to a four-year degree granting College of Human Medicine.

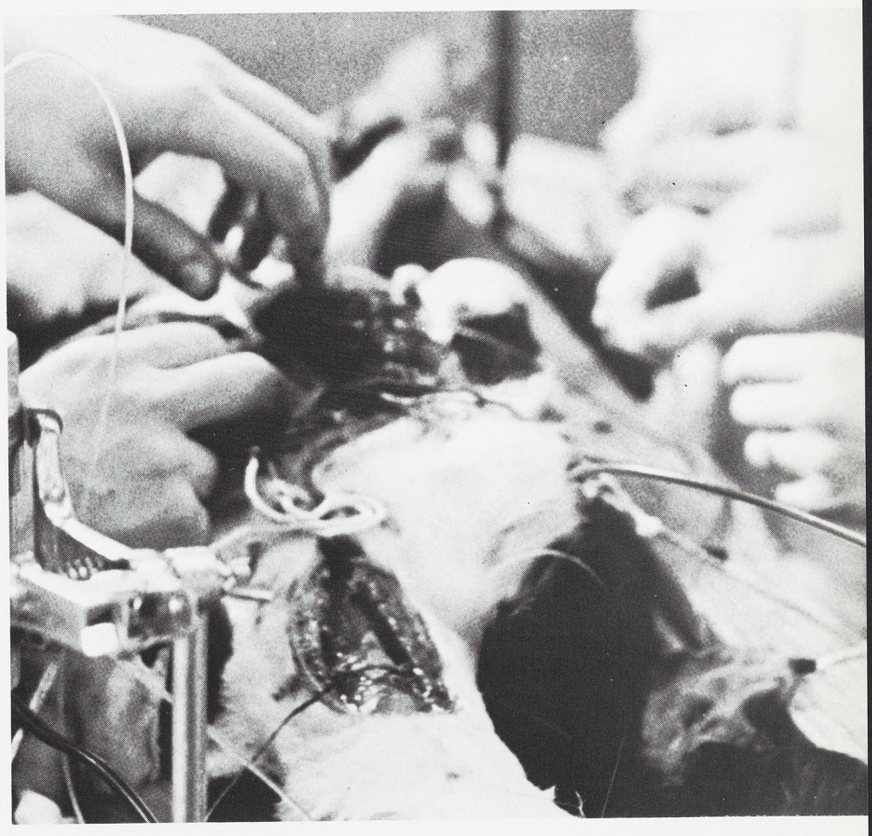

MSU's College of Human Medicine aims to give students a comprehensive understanding of man. This involves analyzing the changing reactions man encounters as he grows, develops and ages. The graduates of this college will have been trained to be technically creative as practitioners, administrators, researchers and teachers. Emphasis is placed on the importance of family and patient centered medicine.

According to Dean Andrew D. Hunt, substantial progress has taken place in the beginning year of this college. But as plans for the four-year program are taking shape, much remains to be done. Innovation and experimentation are characteristic of this new college as the program is being developed to create a better understanding of medicine and its many roles.

110 MEDICAL SCHOOLS IN OPERATION BY 1975

Dr. John Rose, medical dean of Georgetown University, predicts that there will be 110 medical schools in operation by 1975 with a first year enrollment of about 11,800 compared to 8,760 for the current academic year. This year's enrollment figure is a drop of 243 from the previous school year. Dr. Rose believes that in 1975 some 15% of entering medical students will be women, compared to about 8% today. Before the dawn of a new day, the Phillips-Snyder residence unit quietly awaits the activities of Justin Morrill College.

The complexities of the multiversity are simplified by an academic adviser.

JUSTIN MORRILL COLLEGE

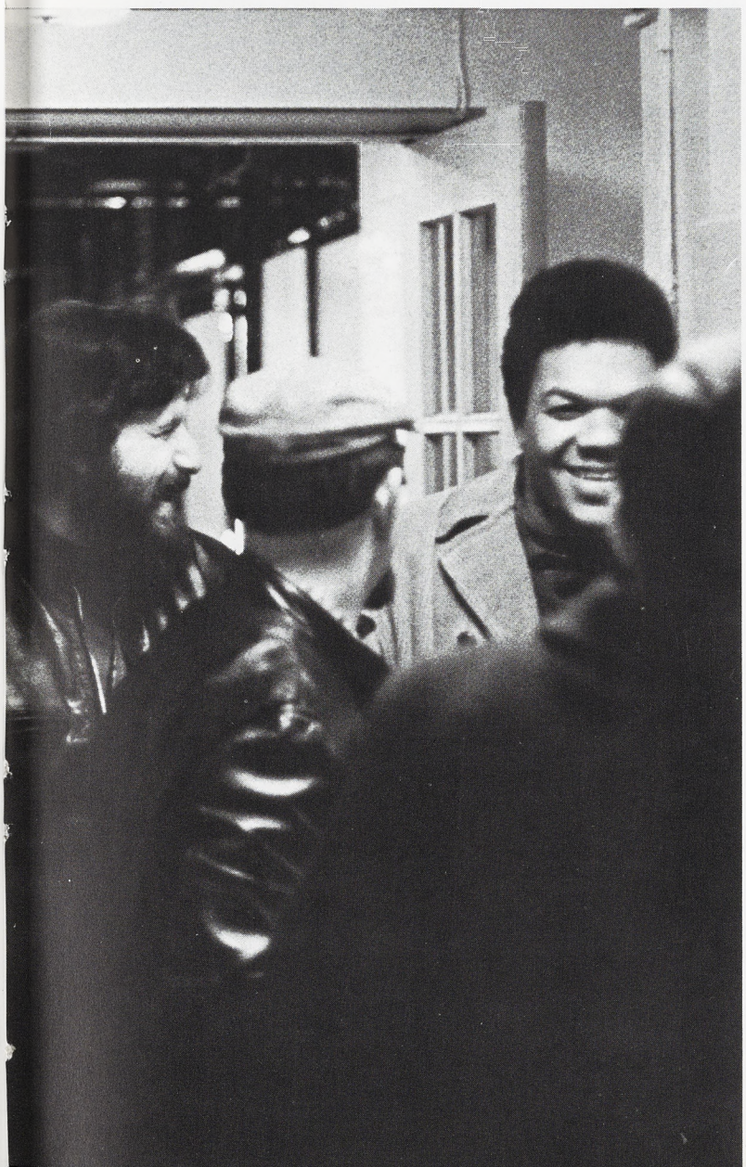

Justin Morrill was established in 1965 as MSU's 12th college. Housed in the Phillips-Snyder dormitory, it offers a four year undergraduate program with an international theme.

Unlike the other colleges, Justin Morrill is not divided into departments. Its curriculum centers its attention on quality teaching in small groups. Courses are given in all three areas of knowledge: humanities, social science, and natural science with an intensive study of foreign languages required of all students.

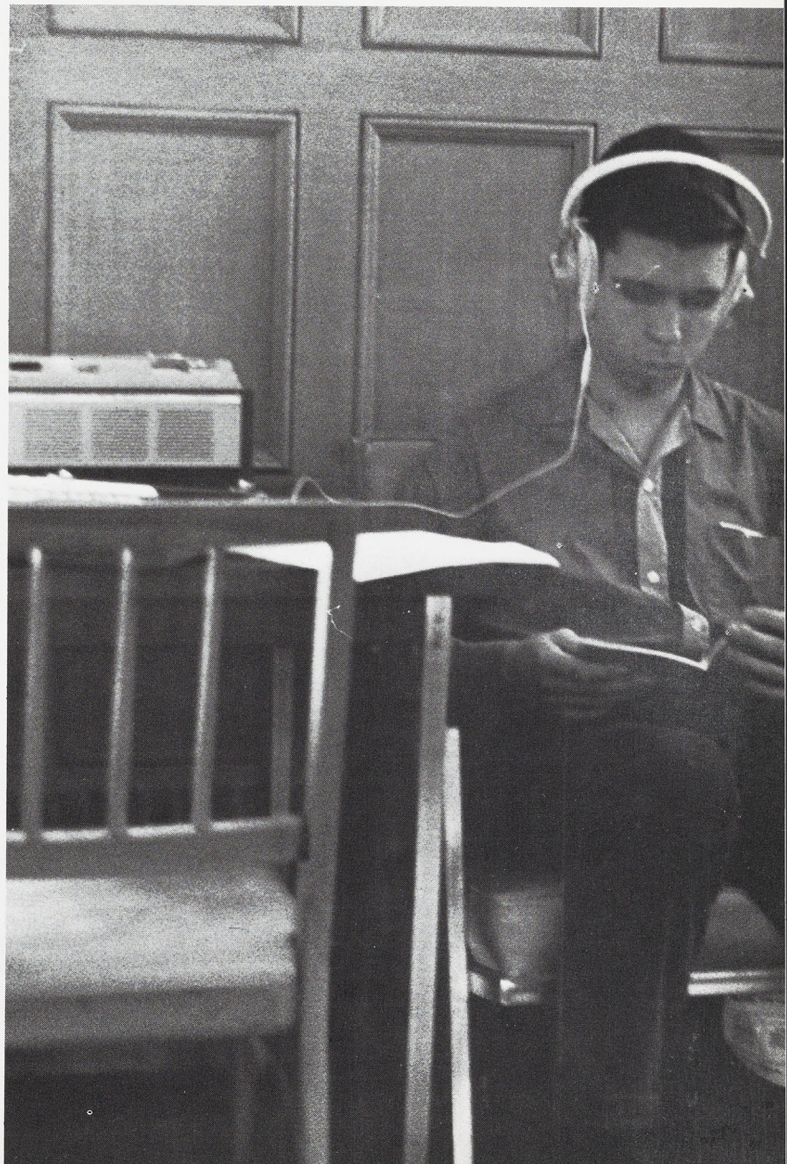

Justin Morrill College seeks to give students an understanding of the world community by creating an environment where students may live and study within a single academic unit. This arrangement allows students to enjoy the camaraderie of a small college and the many advantages of a complex multiversity.

NATURAL SCIENCE

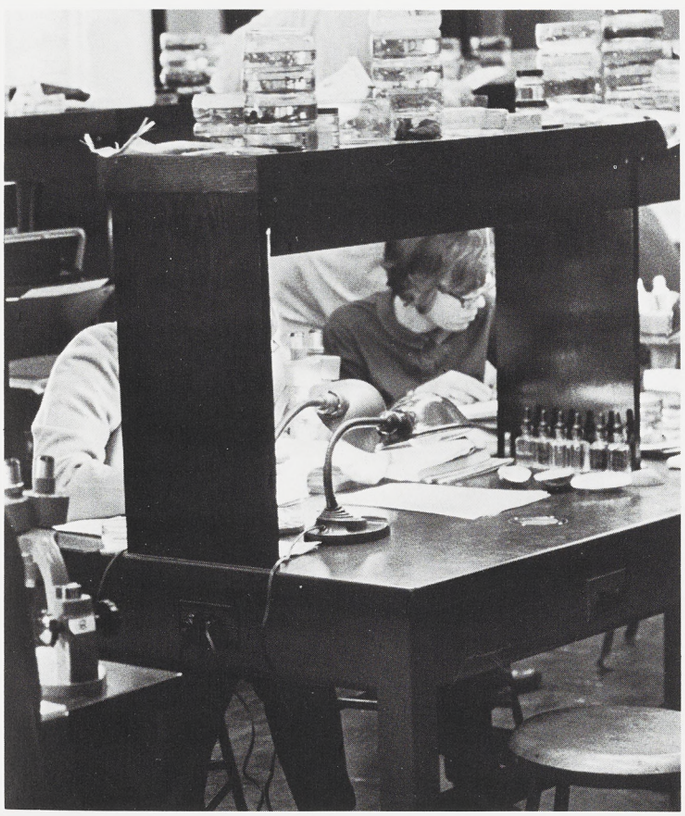

In 1962, division of the former College of Science and Arts which included the social and natural sciences created the College of Natural Science with Richard U. Byerrum as its Dean. It consists of the Departments of Astronomy, Biochemistry, Biophysics, Botany and Plant Pathology, Chemistry, Entomology, Geology, Mathematics, Microbiology and Public Health, Physics, Physiology, Statistics, and Zoology; the School of Nursing; the Science—Mathematics Teaching Center; and the Kellogg Gull Lake Biological Station. Considering the size of this college it is not at all surprising to find that it is one of the busiest on campus.

For the student interested in the natural sciences, the College offers the liberal Bachelor's degree with either a departmental major or a broad interdisciplinary one in the physical or biological sciences. A general science major is also available to secondary school teacher candidates.

Under the direction of this College are several units which serve to further studies in the natural sciences. The Biology Research Center is a research facility with laboratory and animal rearing space. Current programs being carried on are in the areas of animal behavior, genetics, insect physiology and mycology. The Plant Research Laboratory is a center for modern, experimental plant biology. Its research program is presently centered on problems of plant growth and development. The Science and Mathematics Teaching Center engages in programs designed to improve the teaching and learning of Science and mathematics. The Center assists in the direction of the inter-departmental programs of the college of Natural Science and the College of Education. The W. K. Kellogg Biolgical Station offers unusual opportunities for field and laboratory studies in the biological sciences. Facilities are provided for students working toward the Master of Science and Doctor of Philosophy degrees.

The role of natural science at Michigan State University is represented by the expansion which has been taking place at a rapid pace. In operation today is a million dollar cyclotron, new chemistry and biochemistry buildings and a plant research laboratory opened last year. Scheduled for completion this year is a mathematics and foreign language building which will provide needed office and classroom space.

SOCIAL SCIENCE

The College of Social Science was created as a relatively new venture in higher education in 1962. It combines both fundamental disciplines and professional schools of the social sciences into a single college. The Departments and Schools are reinforced by a number of Bureaus, Institutes, and Centers.

This arrangement has unique advantages. It encourages a mutual understanding and respect for scientific and professional responsibilities in the social sciences. Basic scientific theory and sophisticated methods can be readily adapted to applied problems, and applied problems can be redefined to give them both scientific and practical significance.

Professional students can obtain a fundamental appreciation of the theoretical and scientific significance of the problems facing them. Scientifically oriented students can develop an appreciation of the role of applied problems in developing scientific theory and method.

Professional students can obtain a fundamental appreciation of the theoretical and scientific significance of the problems facing them. Scientifically oriented students can develop an appreciation of the role of applied problems in developing scientific theory and method.

The college includes the Departments of Anthropology, Geography, Political Science, Psychology, and Sociology; the Schools of Labor and Industrial Relations, Police Administration and Public Safety, Social Work, and Urban Planning and Landscape Architecture; the African Studies Center; the Computer Institute for Social Science Research; the Human Learning Research Institute; the Social Science Research Bureau; and the Social Science Teaching Institute.

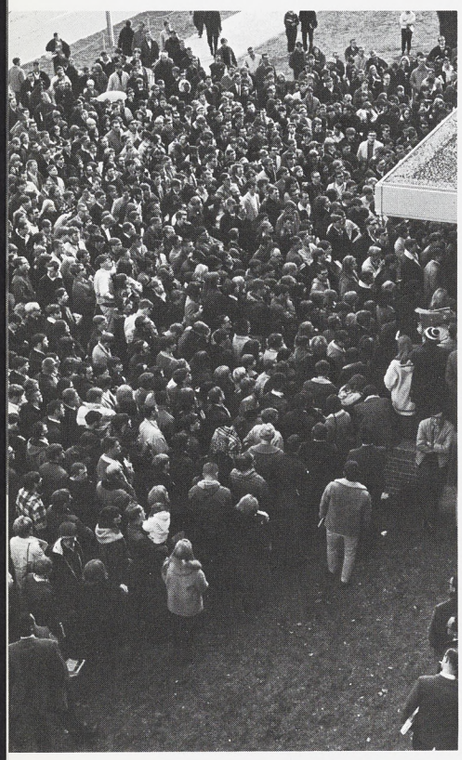

Faculty members of these units hold memberships in other colleges, including specifically the Colleges of Agriculture, Arts and Letters, Communication Arts, Education, Engineering, Human Medicine, Justin Morrill, Natural Science, University College, and Veterinary Medicine. The African Studies Center is associated with International Programs as well as with the College of Social Science.

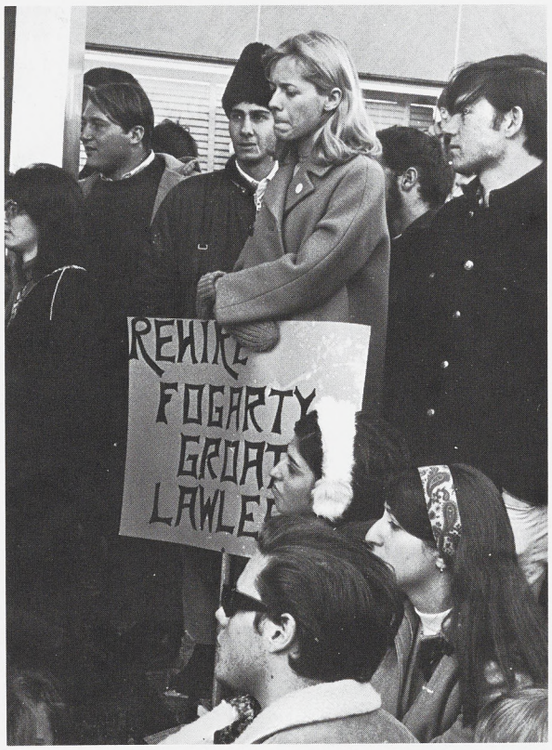

These multiple assignments of faculty members in the units facilitate cooperation between professional and purely scientific approaches. They give both broad meaning and deep significance to the educational programs of the units of the College.

The central concern of the College is human behavior and man's social institutions. A variety of graduate and undergraduate programs is offered in departmental majors, majors in the professional schools, and the college-level social science major, which includes the following options: pre-law, international studies (Asia, Africa, Latin America, the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe), computer science, labor and industrial relations, secondary teacher education and socio-legal studies. These options within the college-level social science major require the selection of a meaningful sequence of courses from several of the departments and schools. At the same time they provide the maximum of freedom in course selections compatible with the educational goals of the individual student.

The University College's aim is to provide students at Michigan State University with a common base of a liberal arts education. The program is designed for all students regardless of major since it offers a general education which intends to prepare students for participation in society.

Four courses are required of all entering students: American Thought and Language, Natural Science, Humanities, and Social Science. These are directed toward giving the student a comprehensive and integrated education in the basic liberal arts field.

One of the characteristics of the college is the continuing revision in curriculum to adjust to new advances in knowledge. This year, along with work on new Natural Science and Social Science texts, the academic advising center for "no-preference" students has been reorganized to make an academic advisor available in selected dormitory complexes.

Since approximately 85% of the University College faculty hold doctorates, compared with a national average of 57%, the University College student will come into contact with a full staff of professors and senior faculty members in his initial college years. The University College seeks to provide a fundamental education to students preparing for the professional and technical occupations which constitute our diverse society.

VETERINARY MEDICINE

The College of Veterinary Medicine offers programs of study concerned with the investigation, treatment and prevention of diseases in animals. Veterinary education began at MSU in 1881. The College was formally established in 1910 and today it operates a professional veterinary curriculum on a year-round basis.

The students of veterinary medicine are offered courses in the six departments of this college: Anatomy, Microbiology and Public Health, Pathology, Pharmacology, Physiology, and Veterinary Surgery and Medicine. Since animals are subject to many of the same illnesses common in humans, they often receive many of the same treatments such as antibiotics, open heart surgery, bone grafting, plastic surgery, and radiation treatment for cancer. The programs of study, therefore, provide a basic medical education with training in diagnosis, disease prevention, medical treatment, and surgery.

Widespread expansion has recently caused many changes in the veterinary medicine facilities at MSU. There are 477,000 square feet of wards, surgeries, classrooms and laboratories making this veterinary college one of the largest of the 18 in the country.

The new Veterinary Clinic houses facilities for teaching and learning including 14 wards, 10 surgical rooms, X-ray, clinical pathology, and microbiology laboratories. It also contains 13 wards dedicated to research. Approximately 125 research projects were conducted last year by the college under grants from the federal government and private corporations. A 125 acre research farm is located south of campus. This shelters some of the animals being cared for by the various medical units and many of the 14,431 animals owned by Michigan State University.

The Lecture-Concert Series Presents Famous Performers, Plays and Orchestras

Fulfilling a need of the populace for a cultural means of entertainment, the Series provides for over fifty programs. These programs include speakers, orchestras such as the New York, Pennsylvania and Cleveland Philharmonics, ballet companies, choral groups and theater performances. Foreign and travel films also have proven a popular item on the list for the Series.

In addition to the entertainment value of the programs, through the lectures, films and other presentations, students are better able to understand the cultural, economic and social backgrounds of the different countries of the world. The varied cultural and educational programs also act as a challenge to the aesthetic and intellectual temperaments of all those who attend the performances.

Memories of the Old and Incentive for the New: All Aspects of the Multiversity

Two of the less well-known attractions of the campus, both suitable for an afternoon of quiet absorption, are the Museum and the Planetarium. The Museum contains an assortment of relics from around the world from a wide span of time. Michigan history is also well-covered, from the first settling until the present with much of Michigan State University history included. Natural Science displays and a Hall Of Evolution trace the history of the earth from prehistoric life up to man's present-day cultural development.

The Abrams Planetarium is open to the public on weekends but is primarily for University instruction. Special programs are arranged for elementary and secondary schools in the area. The programs are changed frequently as are the exhibits which are used to supplement the presentations within the theater.

Oakland University Expands To Meet the Needs of Michigan

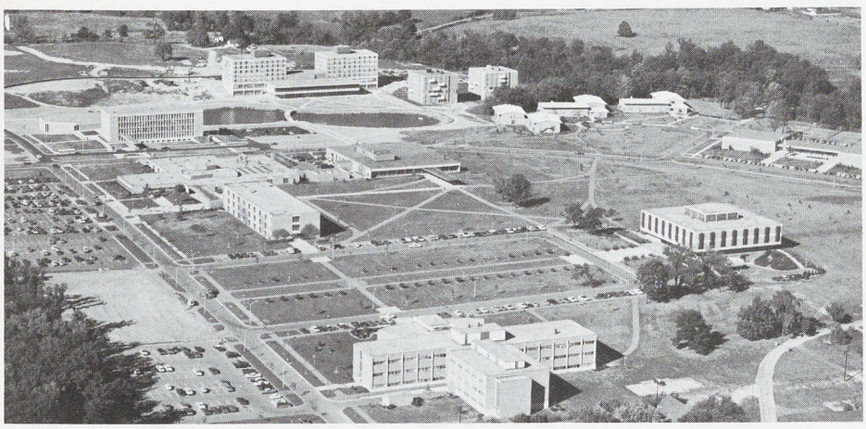

Oakland University, located twenty-five miles north of Detroit, was formerly a branch of MSU but now has only administrative and legal relationships with the multiversity. The fourteen hundred acre campus and two million dollars for the first two academic buildings were donated by Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Wilson. Oakland's physical plant has grown to sixteen buildings since 1959 and six dormitories now permit the University to house more than twelve hundred resident students. A seventh dorm is scheduled for completion in 1967 as well a new engineering-biology building.

University Services Mind the Multiversity Machine

Every aspect of multiversity life from admission to graduation falls under some facet of University Services. The Office of Admissions and Scholarships undertakes the awesome task of processing the more than 7,000 new students who yearly enter MSU. The Placement Bureau provides facilities for finding much-needed summer jobs. The health of the individual student in the multiversity is the sole concern of the modern Olin Health Center. Order is maintained by the campus police force. Perhaps the greatest task of all falls to the MSU Housing Office which continually wrestles with the problem of placing the massive student body in a multiplicity of residence situations.

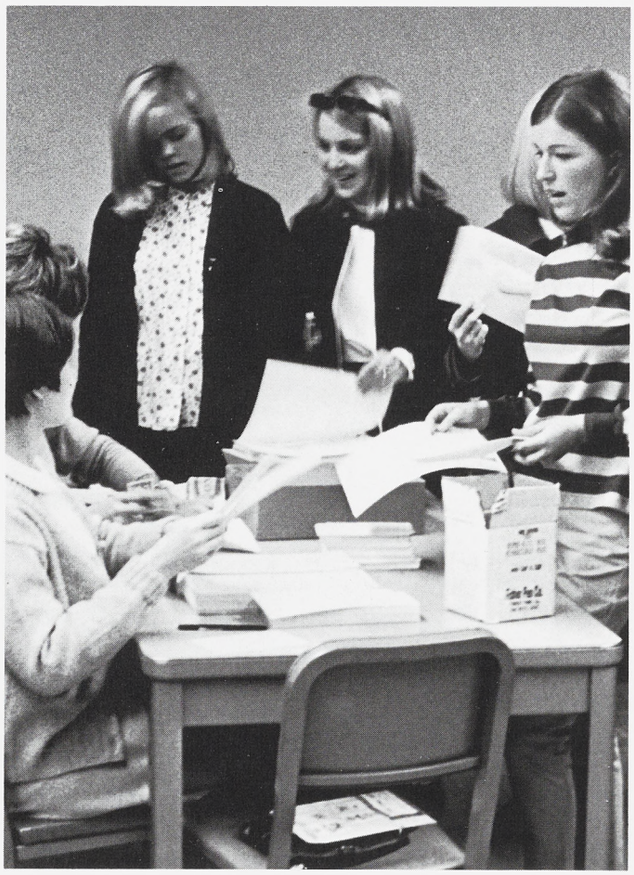

Here it begins.

"Genevieve" strikes again.

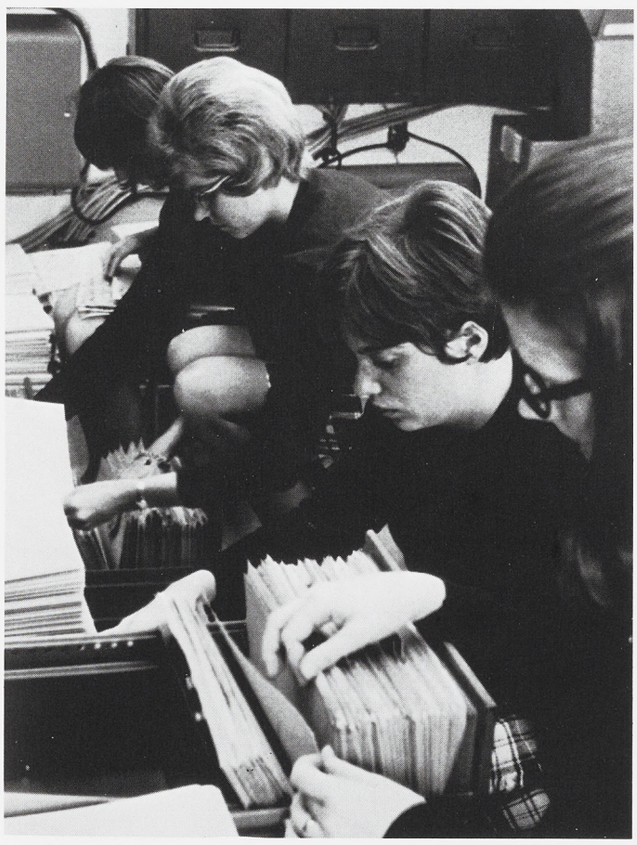

Admissions and Scholarships: First Step into the Multiversity

The Office of Admissions and Scholarships at MSU is the largest operation of its kind. Even though the staff receives over 12,000 applications each year to be processed, they take pride in giving each application individual attention. This process of "selective admissions" seeks to insure that every student that is admitted "has what it takes" to succeed at MSU. By far the most important item in an application is the student's academic record. Other information considered includes the school recommendation, test scores, and leadership experience. More than 2,000 new transfer students are admitted each year along with foreign students from 75 different nations. Michigan residents who can qualify are guaranteed aid in some combination of scholarships, federal grants or loans. In addition, there are competitive awards such as the Alumni Distinguished Scholarships, and the Trustee Scholarships. These scholarships range from $50 to full tuition. MSU annually sponsors approximately 140 Merit Scholarships, with at least one reserved for a qualified resident of each state. Attracting new students to MSU is also an important function. Annually staff members visit area high schools to counsel students in choosing a college.

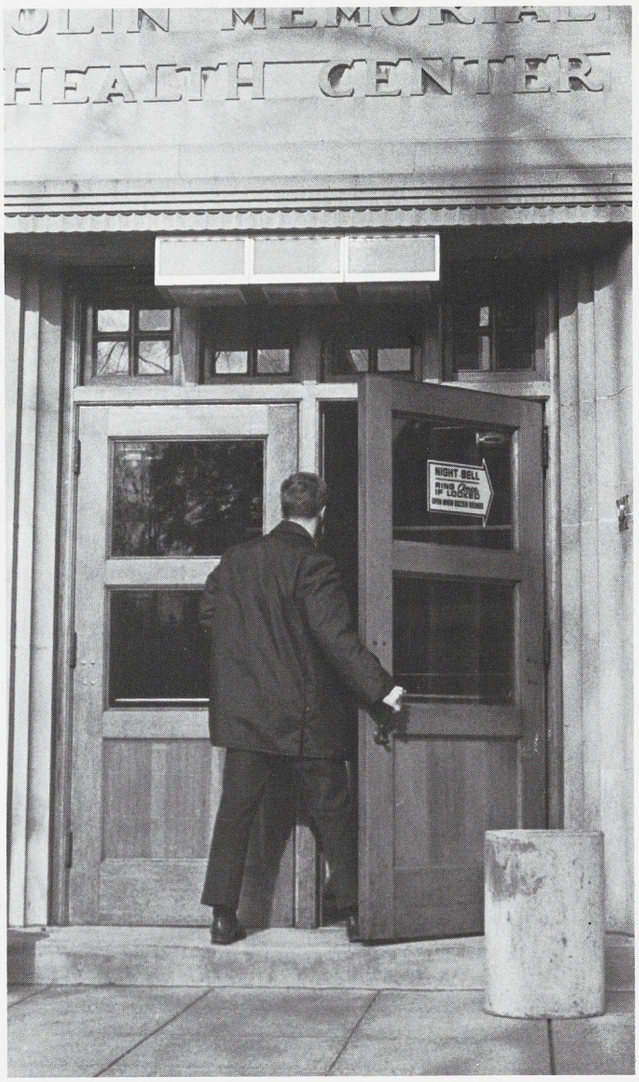

Information Services Bind MSU with Nation, World

The Department of Information Services acts as a public relations agency by using the many resources of Michigan State University to keep the public informed as to the current activities, programs and services of the University. Its eight sections provide specialized services to the University and to the public by distributing information on research programs, sports information, continuing education, and all other aspects of activity at MSU. Information Services also publishes several bulletins containing pertinent reference on the University for use by all the communications fields as well as the general public. The Department of Information Services provides a vital link between MSU and the rest of the nation through its effective functioning as a source for the communications fields and through its work, the progress of the University can be realized and its importance noted throughout the United States.

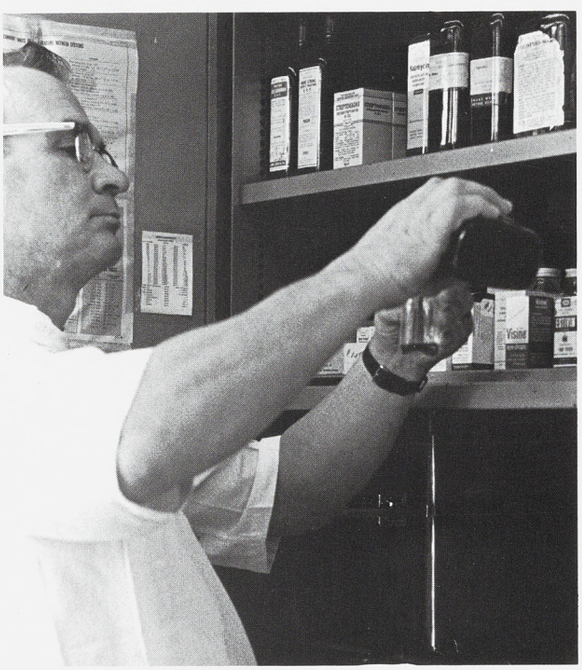

Diversified Olin Center Guards the Health of MSU

The experienced staff, modern facilities and constant innovation at Olin Memorial Health Center provide the best in medical services for the University. The staff, headed by Dr. James Feurig, consists of 12 full-time physicians, 54 registered and licensed practical nurses, a psychiatrist and 3 psychiatric social workers, as well as a number of pharmacists, X-ray, physiotherapy and laboratory technicians. Efficiency and pleasant surroundings typify the 2 operating rooms, the outpatient clinic and the physical therapy and psychiatric care centers. Care is available to any student with seven or more credits. No charge is made for meals or rooms for up to 40 hospital days per student per year. Cost and handling, however, are charged for medication and supplies. Classroom instruction and practical experience are given to the School of Nursing and the student nurses of Sparrow and Ingham County Hospitals. Plans for a greatly expanded health center are now off the drawing board and in the process of becoming a reality.

Continuing Education Extends MSU Beyond the Campus

The Continuing Education Service is that agency of the University which coordinates, guides, facilitates and provides leadership for educational programs for adults. The Service became an official part of the University's administration in 1944. Its mission was the organization and administration of all off-campus instructional programs, conferences, short courses, non-credit courses. The internationally known Kellogg Center houses the conference facilities of the Service. This building is a gift from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation and was given to the people of Michigan to aid their further education. Over 60,000 conference participants and others visit the Center each year for guidance in their educational pursuits. As new areas of need arose the structure of the Continuing Education Office was easily expanded and modified. The Center now has broadcasting services, a highway traffic safety center, and international extensions. The staff members travel throughout the state advising and setting up programs which reach nearly every community in Michigan.

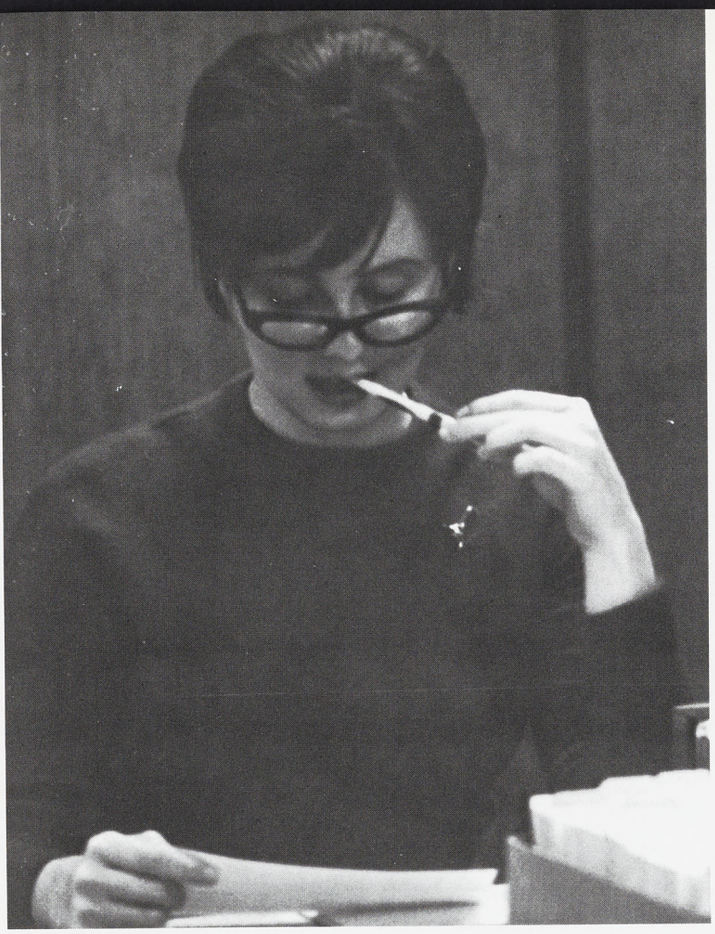

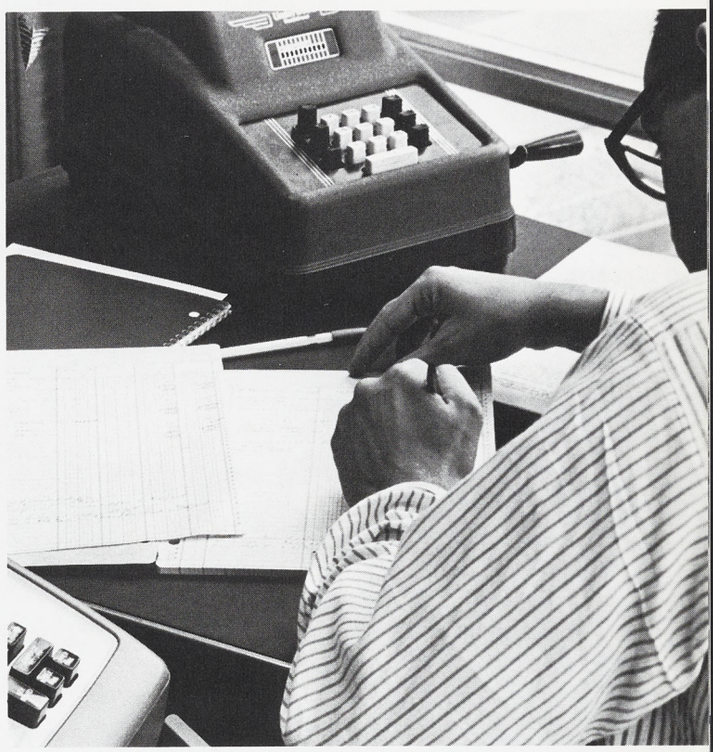

LACEMENT BUREAU

STUDENTS REPORTING FOR APPOINTMENTS

Placement Bureau Matches Student and Employer

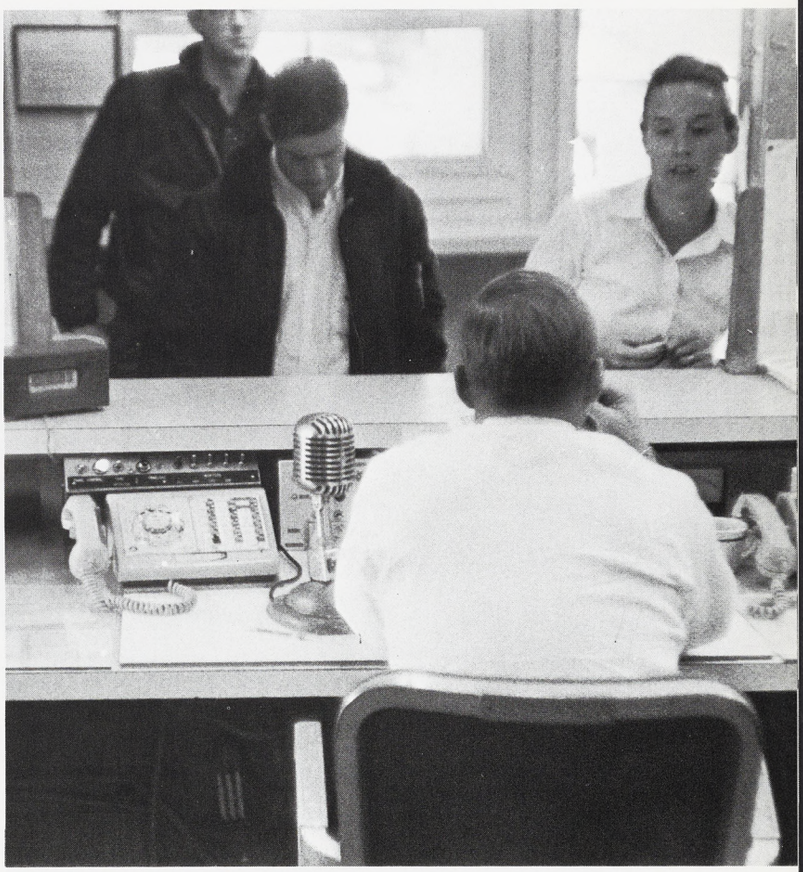

The MSU Placement Bureau is an extensive employment service that handles placement activities for all colleges and departments of the university. It helps to find permanent employment for seniors, graduate students and alumni, as well as providing part-time and summer jobs for the student body, all free of charge. Representatives from Business, Industry, Government and Education visit the Bureau each year, and interviews are set up for students desiring employment. The organization prepares a weekly Placement Bulletin, listing visiting representatives and job opportunities, which is distributed campus-wide and also carried in a condensed form in the State News. The Placement Bureau keeps files of the credentials of all graduating students, which are given upon the request of the employer or student to employers who use the Bureau, and maintains a permanent vocational library containing descriptive material of over 2000 organizations. The Bureau also sponsors Career Days, an annual vocational information program. This two day event gives students a chance to discuss their futures and ask questions of experts representing many fields.

Campus Police Maintain Public Safety in the Sprawling Multiversity

As in any large educational and social community such as a university, a trained and responsible police force is a definite necessity. Despite the usual student complaints of parking tickets and weekend raids attributed to the police force, the Department of Public Safety involves much more. Its main concern entails the safety and security of over 38,000 students and their possessions. The campus is constantly surveyed by a force of thirty intensely drilled and disciplined officers in an attempt to maintain an harmonious environment for all involved in the University. Aside from observation of the campus and enforcement of an orderly atmosphere, the department provides other services. The Department of Public Safety includes a safety engineer, who directs his efforts towards prevention of industrial accidents on the campus, and a safety officer who handles the prevention of fire hazards. In addition, our police department is one of the two in schools across the country that submits an annual report to the F.B.I.

Education Takes to the Air at WKAR, WMSB

Far reaching extensions for Michigan State are the two stations, WKAR and WMSB. Both are staffed by full-time professionals, as well as students who are interested in the radio or television experience. WKAR, University radio, offers a variety of programs ranging from musical comedies to political commentaries. It offers such programs as newscasts, Homemaker's Hour, and "radio reader" which is a special service for the blind. Besides providing a steady flow of classical music, WKAR also covers Michigan State football games. Similarly, WMSB televises educational programs which benefit over 805 cities in Michigan and northern Indiana. One of their primary functions is "Classroom 10" which is a series of courses transmitted to over 100 school systems. Such courses as science, Spanish, art, literature, math, social studies, and music are part of this program. These two stations, supplement each other, as WKAR serves two-thirds of lower Michigan and WMSB serves as an important educational function.

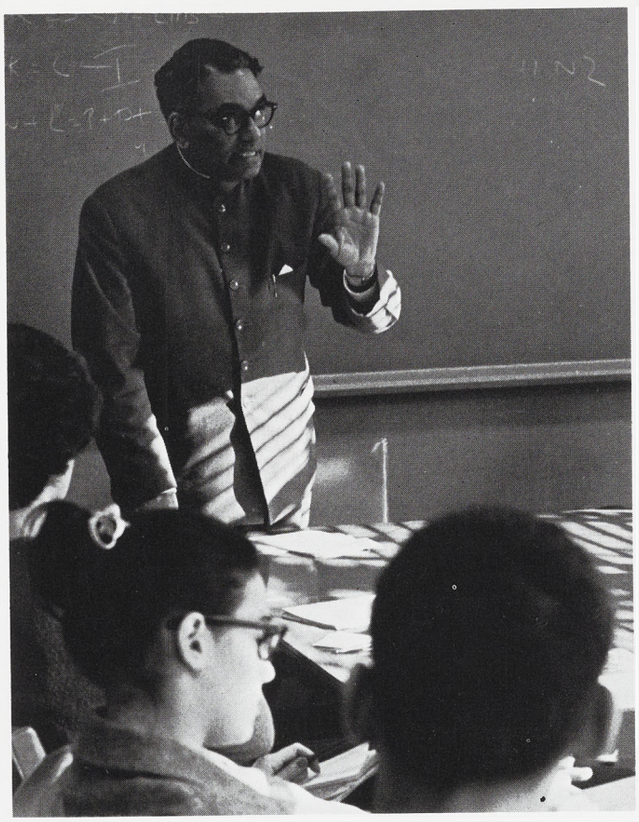

Special classes are offered for the foreign student.

International Projects Aim at Cultural Understanding

A living-learning situation.

Based on the 1855 "land-grant" idea of teaching, research, and service, Michigan State University in the past 100 years has expanded this philosophy to a world-wide scale. Goals of the MSU international program are to build better world-wide projects so that the future graduates will understand the impact of foreign affairs in their own lives, and to develop research and training specialization in the international field. Translation of these goals is evident on campus as well as overseas as foreign students often perform both formally and informally on campus. At the same time MSU also supports many American students in their studies in foreign countries. The International Projects goal is to establish cooperation between nations and to further the cause of world understanding.

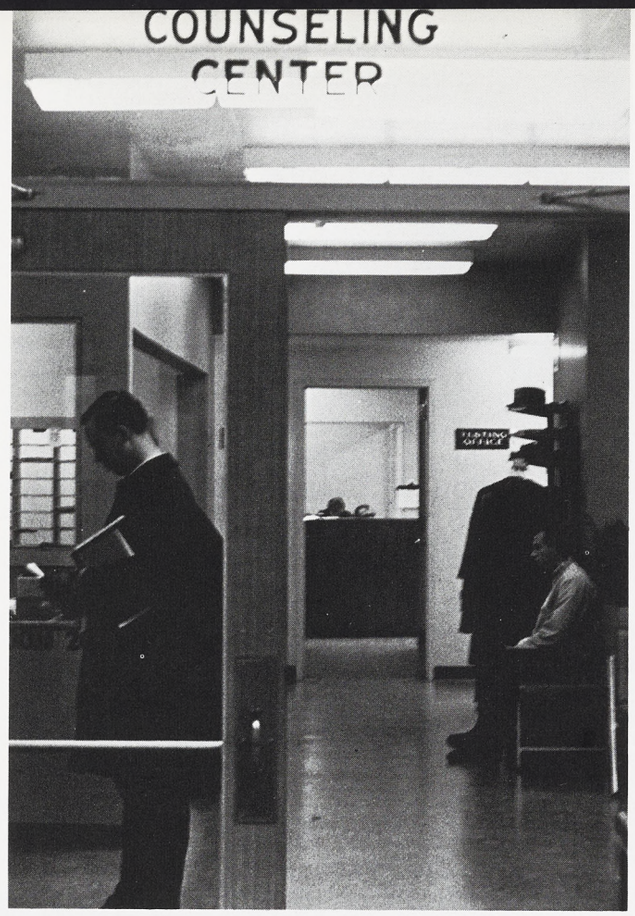

The program offers instructors from many countries.

Throughout a student's college career, he must cope independently with the difficulties he encounters in every facet of campus life. The Counseling Center provides expert guidance to the individual who seeks professional assistance with his problem. The MSU student with a busy schedule can now receive an immediate interview without applying in advance. The preliminary screening session enables the center to determine the nature and urgency of his needs. This new feature cuts down on the waiting list and eliminates the frustration of making an appointment only to be referred somewhere else. Keeping pace with the expanding campus the Counseling Center has decentralized its offices. Residence Hall offices handled 1,500 students making use of their convenient services in '65-'66. Four new full-time counselors moved into Hubbard Hall this fall, completing the distribution of offices into all campus complexes.

Alumni Relations Links Past with Present

The purpose of the Alumni Relations Office is to keep contact with the Michigan State University graduates and to promote MSU through an organized club effort. The some 85,000 past graduates and former students are kept in unity through 70 alumni clubs which began under the Alumni Association in 1868.

A publication of the Alumni Relations Office, The Michigan State University Alumni Magazine, aids in informing past students of such events as Homecoming, Commencement, and other like reunions. In addition, the office arranges class and academic college reunions, and maintains relations between old students and new, coordinating tradition and 1966 activities.

Housing Office Strives To Accommodate 38,000

Inside "off-campus"

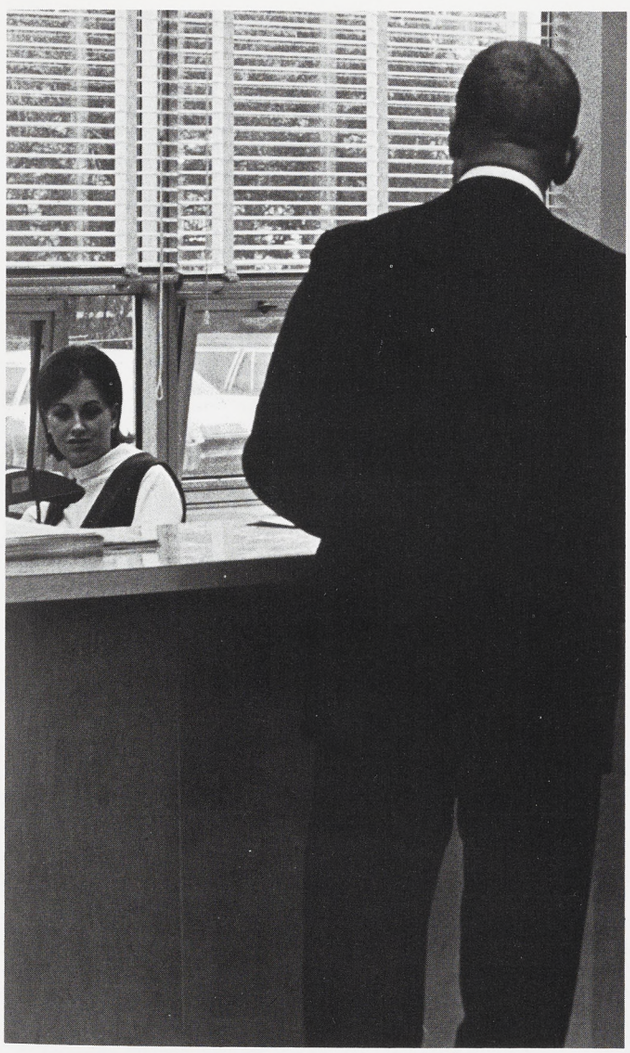

Mr. Lyle Thorburn discusses the merits of on-campus living.

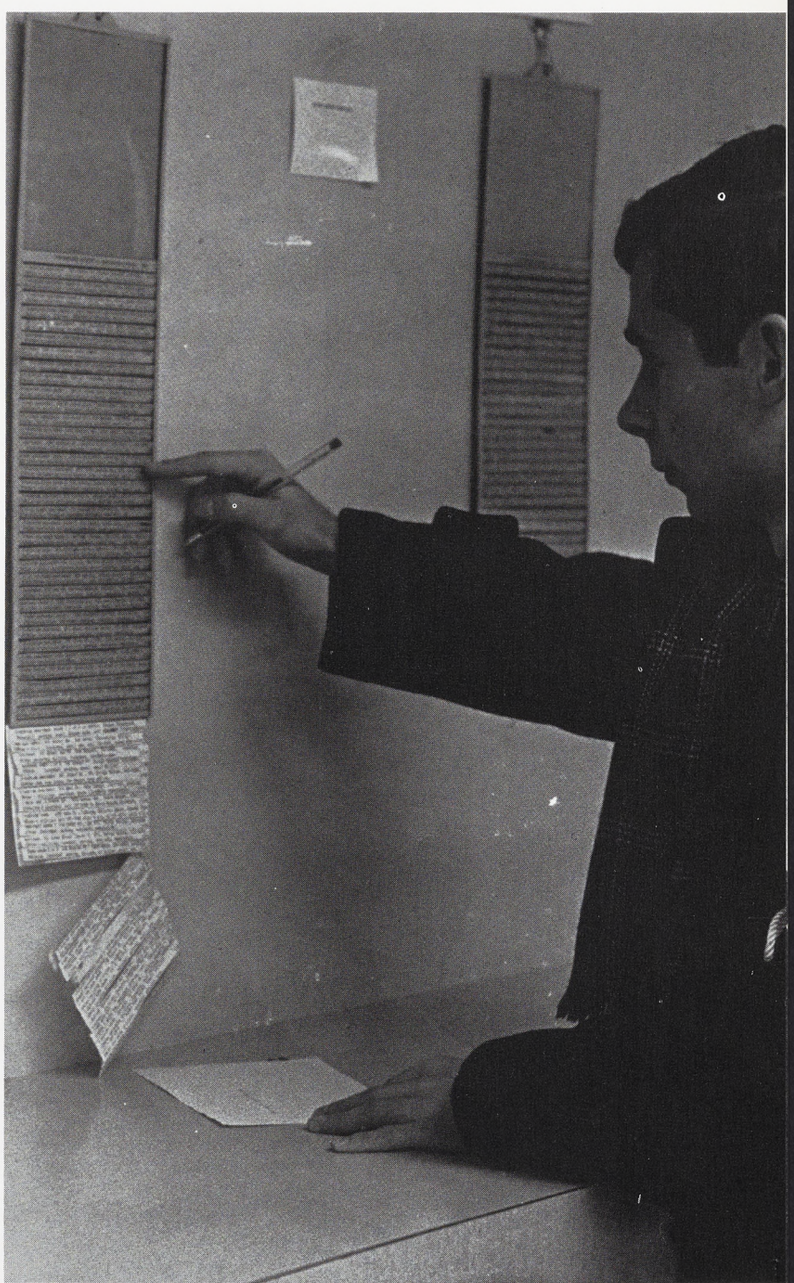

Accommodating the University's 38,000 students comfortably and economically is an intricately involved task; one which has developed into a highly organized residence program, clearly one of the best in the country. This job is performed by two divisions of the Housing Office: On-Campus and Off-Campus Housing. Heading the On-Campus Housing is Director Lyle Thorburn, aided by five assistants. MSU's twenty-five dormitories, cooperatives and the graduate residence hall currently provide living units for more than 19,000 students.

Patrick B. Smith manages accommodations for nearly 50% of the student body housed in off-campus residences. This division of housing includes apartments and fraternity and sorority houses. Regardless of the type of living unit chosen, the students are provided with educational and social opportunities and have occasion to develop as responsible citizens living in cooperation together.

ACTIVITIES

When 35,000 people of diverse origins are gathered in one place at one time, an amazing spectrum of interests are found. In the multiversity, they take form and substance in a multiplicity of activities; from advertising to agriculture, from government to Green Splash, from committees to . . .

STUDENT ACTIVITIES

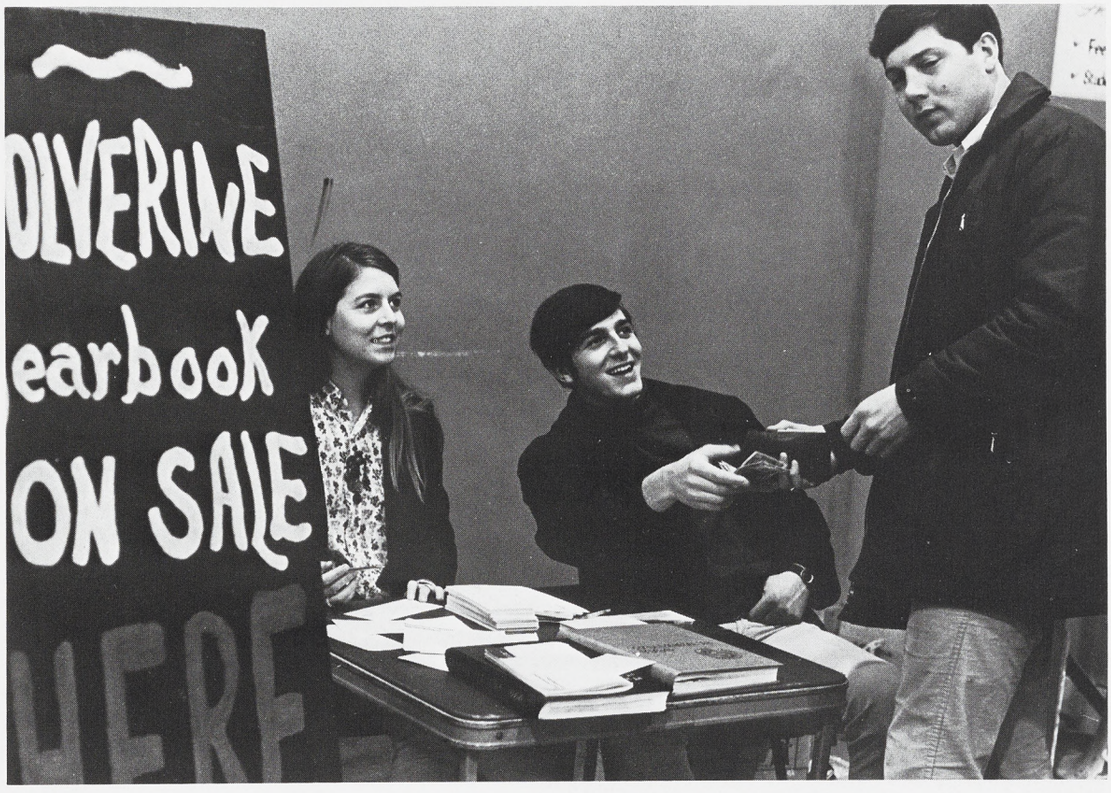

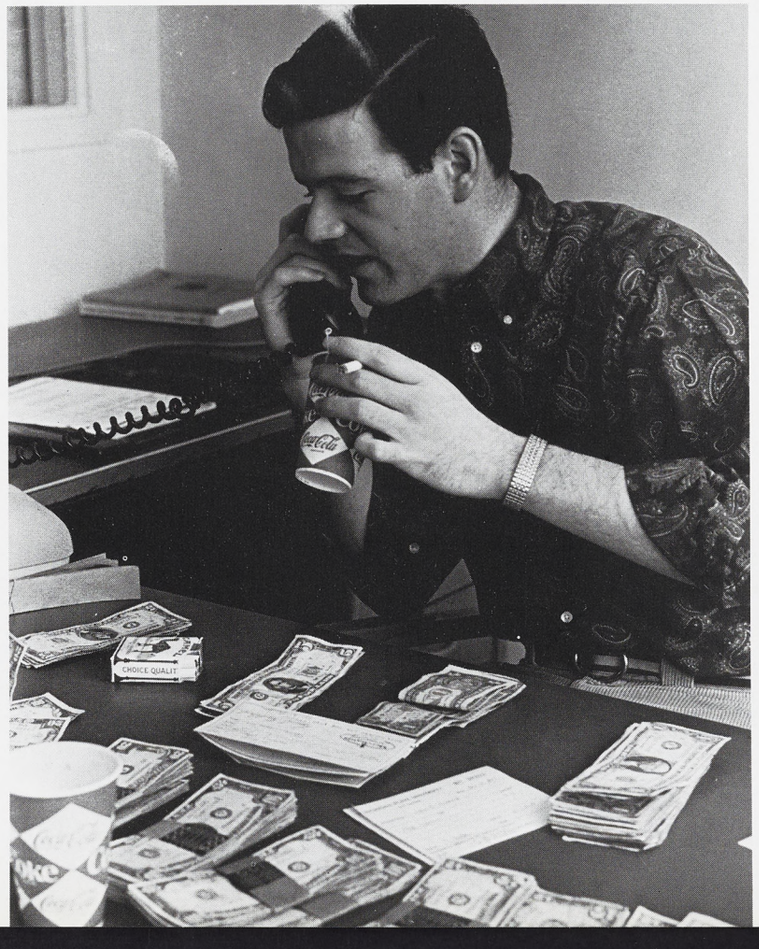

Multi-faceted and never static, student activities run the gamut from the drab paperwork of the inner sanctums of ASMSU to the glittering festivities of the Winter Carnival. Every aspect of campus existence is covered and analyzed by at least one of MSU's student publications and acted upon by some branch of student government. For the individual Spartan, student activities provide an expansive realm of endeavor for the attaining of his aspirations.

Wolverine '67 Lifts Off Amid a Blaze of Anticipation

"TWA? I'd like to confirm that one-way flight to Rio de Janeiro." whispers Business Manager Austin Stephens.

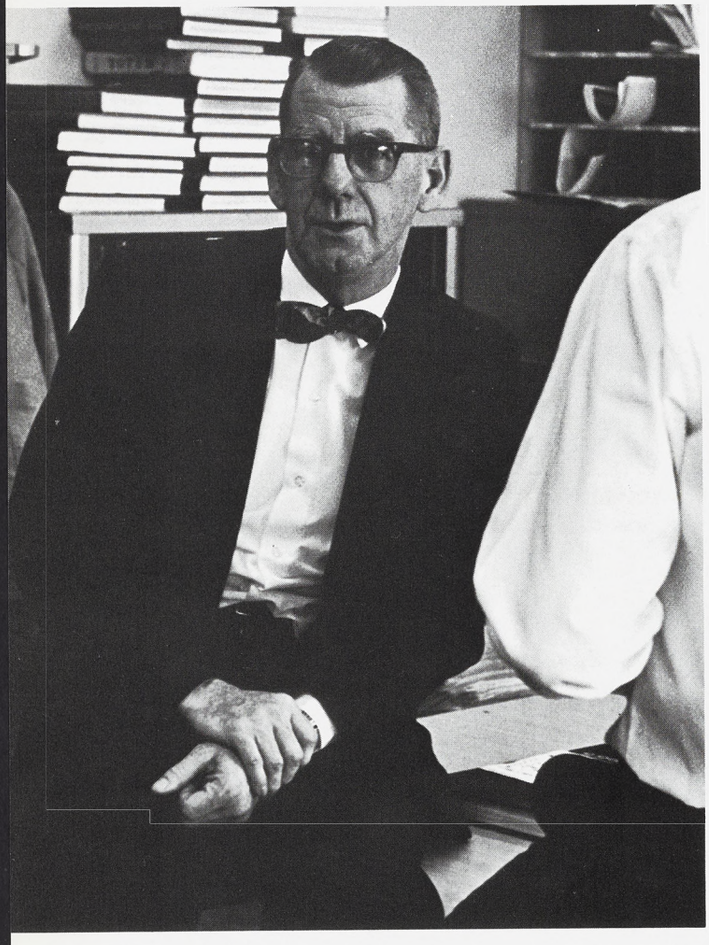

Senior Class Editor Jack Burns finds inspiration from the past.

And Fizzles Out in Sub-orbit

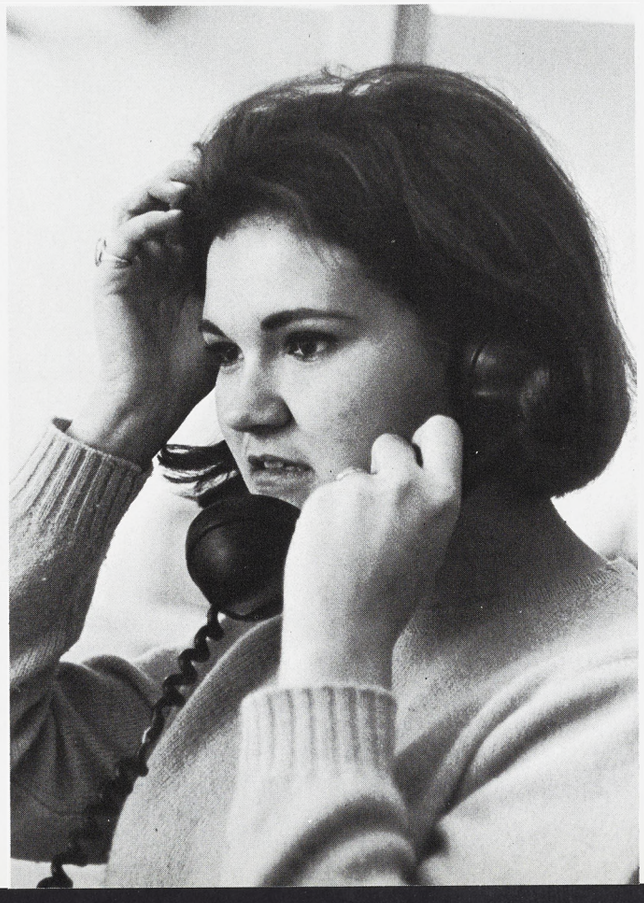

Encouraged by record sales and an inspiring new format the staff of the 1967 Wolverine looked forward to a very busy and rewarding year. Then the problems began. Somehow a monkeywrench fell into the interworkings of the photo department and the much-needed pictures did not materialize. So one deadline slipped by, but no one worried a great deal because a single deadline could be easily made up. The stalwart staff plunged wholeheartedly into their project and copy and layouts were produced en masse, but, pictures had only just begun to trickle in and a second deadline went down in flames.

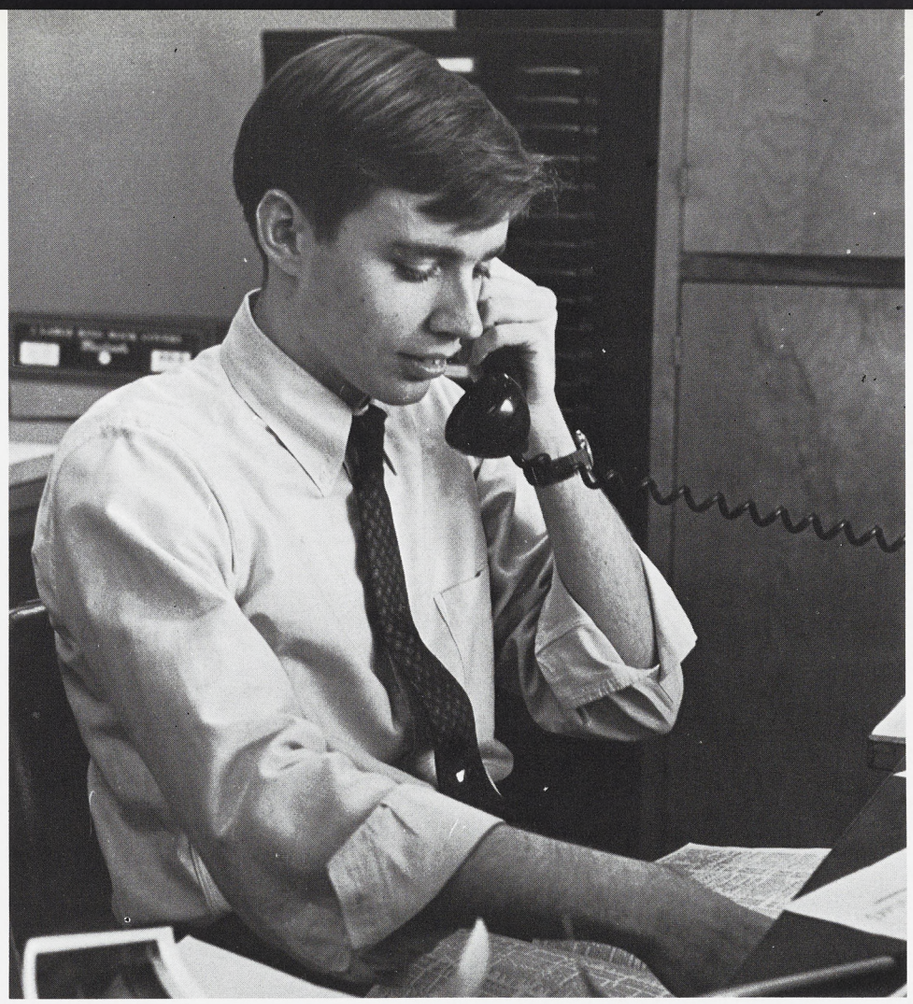

A frantic executive order went out and, at long last, the photos started to arrive, but then the darkroom was unavailable and yet another deadline followed its fellows. A decision was made and Grad Advisor Rog Grant took over the delinquent department and revamped its entire operation; even so, it was almost a matter of "too little, too late". Under the perserving leadership of Editor Jay Arthurs, the Wolverine light burned late into many a night as the staff labored to head off the unspeakable thought of "Summer Distribution" and, in the very last instant, they did.

Faculty Advisor William McIlrath gives words of wisdom.

"Now, why are they having rush in the Computer Center?", wonders Greek Editor Maryellen Bemister.

State News Gives Comprehensive College and Country Coverage

The State News, Michigan State University's daily newspaper, has as its twofold goal to provide the campus with a quality newspaper and to serve as a training ground for students interested in newspaper and advertising work. The State News has been awarded the American Newspaper Publishers Association Pacemaker Award for four of the last five years. The publication is financially independent, and responsibility for anything printed in the paper is held by the MSU Board of Trustees.

The State News consists of five inner departments: editorial, advertising, photography, circulation and business office. These are separate in themselves but work together to publish. The Editorial Board heading the 1966-67 State News includes Editor-in-Chief Kyle C. Kerbawy, Advertising Manager Joel Stark, Managing Editor Eric Pianin, Campus Editor James Spaniolo, Executive Reporter Andrew Mollison, and Assistant Advertising Manager William G. Papciak.

ASMSU undertakings are often a big operation.

Under almost continual criticism by dissatisfied students, MSU's fledgling student government labors to establish itself as a meaningful factor in the scheme of the multiversity. Patterned after big business rather than parliamentary structure, ASMSU strives to prove its founding theory: that the multiversity most resembles a massive corporation and is best administrated as a corporation.

ASMSU Leads the Multiversity Through Storm and Calm

Art Tung, Member-at-Large

James Carbine, Vice Chairman

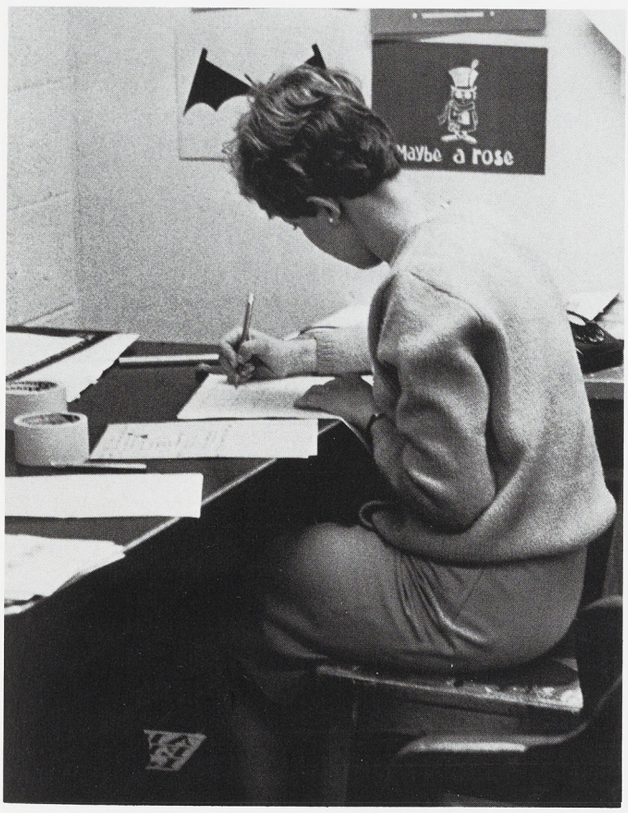

Mary Parish, Member-at-Large

ASMSU directs its effort in three major areas: the welfare and rights of students, direct student benefits and the coordination of organizations. The Associated Students of Michigan State University, which is the student governing body, is called the Student Board. It is composed of the presidents of the six major divisions of the Associated Students: Men's Hall Association, Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council, and the Women's Inter-residence Council. Four members are elected at large from the student body and two members are appointed. The Student Board organizes the Cabinet which carries out the policies and programs of the Board. The cabinet sponsors Freshman Forum, Block S, College Bowl, and closed circuit television presentation of away football games. During fall term their Popular Entertainment Series brought such celebrities to campus as Henry Mancini, the Beach Boys, and the New Christy Minstrels. The third branch of ASMSU is the judiciary which has jurisdiction over cases involving student infractions of University rules. The decisions are made between the Dean's office and the judiciary so that the student's rights are well protected.

Pop Entertainment Series Continues Success

The ASMSU Popular Entertainment Series began its second season this fall. Its great success last year was only a forerunner of this year's achievements. Beginning the season Henry Mancini, conductor and arranger, filled Jenison to capacity. His orchestra's rendition of "Breakfast At Tiffany's", for which he won an Oscar, was among the favorite selections. During Homecoming Weekend the Beach Boys also played to a full house. Their "spontaneous humor" along with such songs as "California Girls" made their concert unique. In the area of folk groups The New Christy Minstrels sang "Green, Green" and other ballads for the final show of fall term. The Supremes who were nationally rated number one female singing group in 1964, sang to two overflow crowds who gave them repeated curtain calls. With such success this year and for once, in the black, moneywise, ASMSU plans to continue this program and schedule the entertainers according to polls taken concerning the student's choices.

AWS Takes the Ladies' Side in Multiversity Affairs

The Associated Women Students (AWS), through its Cabinet of officers and its Assembly of representatives, is organized to serve the women students of MSU. Affiliated with the Intercollegiate Associated Women Students, it provides programs for women students to complement their academic experiences and to prepare them for their future roles as educated women.

The AWS Judiciary Council is concerned with the interpretation of women's regulations and is considered the official channel for any changes made in these regulations. The AWS Programs Council sponsors new programs for co-eds, including many cultural programs and guest speakers. Among the other events co-sponsored by AWS are Spinster's Spin, Lantern Night, and a Big and Little Sister Program which is operating at the residence hall level.

MHA Personifies Autonomy in the Multiversity

The Men's Hall Association, which directly represents all men living on campus, divides its activities into three areas. In one capacity it acts as a chief link between men's residence halls and the administration. A primary concern in this area was men's dress regulations. Now each dorm sets its own dress regulations instead of the administration making decisions. Secondly, MHA represents and maintains communication with the men living in residence halls and student government. The third area is intercommunication among all the residence halls. Ideas and events which are successful are passed along through MHA. One such idea was McDonel's coffee house which MHA helped to set up in several other dorms. To increase their service in this area, MHA is developing a revolving file of information which will be available to all the dorms.

The nucleus.

There was one meeting that never quite happened . . .

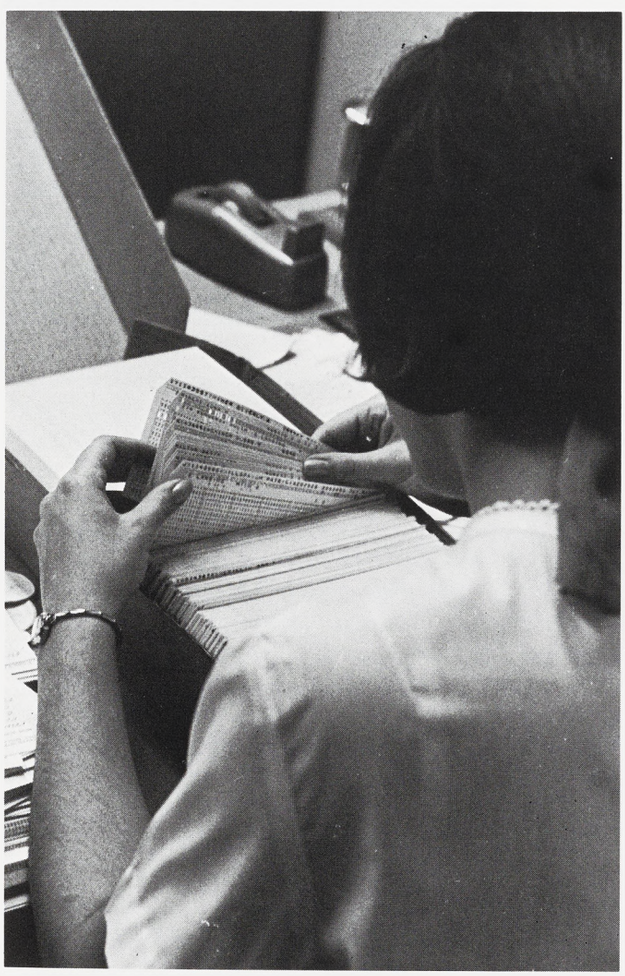

WIC Leads Women's Residences

As a governing body for the women's residence halls, WIC works to further communication and cooperation between individual halls and the University community. Other functions of the group are to sponsor and coordinate all-university activities for students living in residence halls and to discuss areas of interest to students living on campus. Some specific activities sponsored by the Women's Inter-Residence Council include an officers reception and workshop, inter-residence sing, freshman mixers, handling of social registration for women's events, and aid to the Alumni Distinguished Scholarship winners on campus winter term. Working with the group's counterpart, MHA, the two make an effort to coordinate individual needs with those of the University community.

IFC Sponsors the "New Look" in Greeks

Enter, the "Ugliest Greek"

Posing as President is IFC Treasurer Mike Shields.

Traditional in spirit by fostering brotherhood and cooperation among Michigan State University's thirty-three fraternities, the Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC) presents a modern outlook in its involvement in current issues.

As in the past, the IFC is responsible for presenting Greek life in a favorable light. Managing rush, deciding upon qualfications for pledging, planning Greek Week and the IFC-Pan-Hel Ball and encouraging a high fraternity scholastic average are all part of the IFC's job. New activities include the publication of a newspaper, "The Oracle", and the holding of a Scholastic Banquet.

A major concern this year is the proposal to hold classes in the fraternity houses. It is hoped that this innovation will encourage a deeper relationship between Greek and on-campus life.

Greeks get into everything.

Pan-Hel Represents an Extension of Unity

An extension of unity beyond the sororities themselves is found in the Pan-Hellenic Council which integrates and coordinates the activities and goals of the whole system. The Council is composed of two representatives of each house and, among other activities, supervises sorority rush, provides a scholarship to a foreign student and sponsors the Welcome Week "Who's Who and What's What Convocation". In order to familiarize the pledge classes with the Pan-Hel Council, two representatives from each class are sent to Junior Pan-Hel. This group aids the senior Council with the mechanics of rush, sponsors a breakfast for winter term pledges and an ice cream social for spring term pledges.

Student Board

The Student Board is the highest student decision making body in the university. It acts as the executive and legislative branches of student government. Since supervision is minimal the organization is self-sufficient. The Board concentrates on student policies and investigates opportunities to organize student service departments.

ASMSU Cabinet

Members of the ASMSU Cabinet are selected by the Student Board from qualified petitioners. The Cabinet is responsible for program and service areas with a Vice-President presiding over each division. Legal aid, loan services and discount services to students are all sponsored by the Cabinet. The popular entertainment committee presented such personalities as Henry Mancini, the Beach Boys and the New Christy Minstrels.

Greek Week

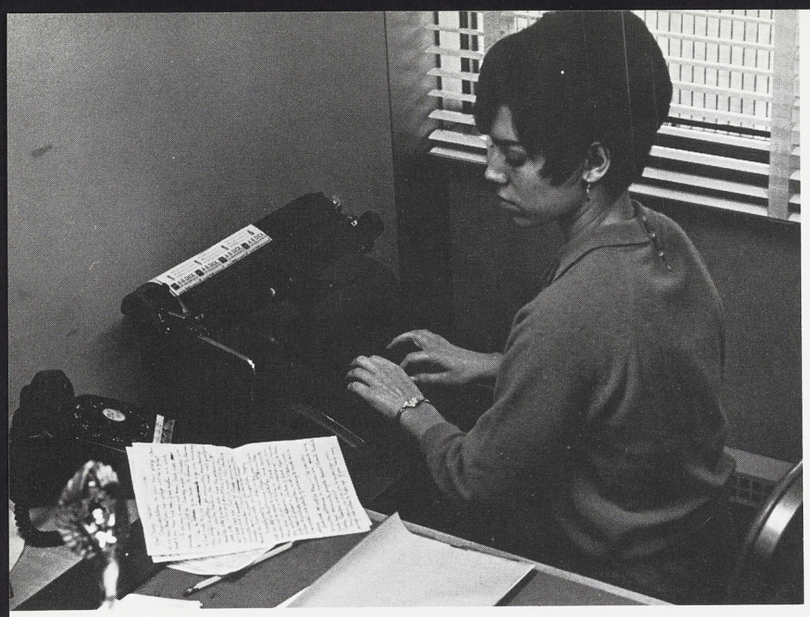

Greek Week is a full week of activities sponsored by the Greek living units. It is initiated by a kick-off speech which is followed by community service projects. Fraternity men compete for the title of "Ugliest Greek" and the proceeds of the election are donated to the Campus Community Commission. The highlights of Greek Week include a street dance, the tricycle race and Greek Feast. Greek Sing terminates the week of activities.

IFC

The whole Greek alphabet rather than the individual combinations is the sphere of Inter-Fraternity Council. Consisting of two representatives from each house, IFC serves as a coordinating and governing body for all fraternity activities. Under the guidance of IFC the spirit of brotherhood is extended among Michigan State's thirty-two fraternities.

The responsibility of coordinating all sorority rush activities belongs to the members of Panhellenic Council. Consistent with the ideal of high scholarship Panhel awards an annual scholarship to an outstanding foreign student. Each year sorority women vie for the coveted scholarship trophy awarded by Panhel. New housemothers in the Greek system are welcomed to Michigan State at a tea sponsored by IFC and Panhel. Innovation as well as tradition is typical of Greek life. Panhel is planning to organize a program concerning issues of our time and has initiated inter-sorority bridge tournaments.

One major activity of the council is to coordinate the development fund with the alumni relations office.

WATER CARNIVAL

Water Carnival is the highlight of Parents Weekend and is the largest student sponsored activity at Michigan State. The twelve standing committees for Water Carnival are composed of over two hundred members. The theme of Water Carnival 1967 is A B Cedarian, The Building Blocks of Life. The student body is proud to dedicate Water Carnival to President and Mrs. John Hannah in observance of their twenty-fifth year at Michigan State.

Services offered by MHA include forming the policy for night open houses, maintaining a telephone-information file, co-sponsoring of dorm movies with WIC, organizing mixers during orientation week and sponsoring the traditional MSU—U of M mixer. For scholastic incentive, MHA also awards trophies to dormitories with the highest grade point average.

WIC

Women's Inter-Residence Council is composed of the presidents of each of the women's dormitories. Originally created to provide a direct line of contact between house presidents and all-university government, WIC has extended its services to include sponsoring freshman mixers, an Inter-Residence Sing, and dorm movies with MHA. In addition WIC sponsors an officers workshop, a reception for outstanding hall officers, and sends a delegate to the Big Ten Residence Conference.

The Wolverine has won the All-American award five times within the past seven years.

STATE NEWS EDITORIAL

The goal of the State News editorial department is to provide the University city with a quality newspaper while training students interested in newspaper and advertising work. As unique and different as the days of the year, MSU's many organizations seize and herald the spirit of the time. With the start of fall term the sports clubs, Rugby, basketball, football and others, occupy every available field to train and struggle for supremacy. With the onslaught of winter the Ski Club holds full sway while many other interest groups go "underground" to await the thaw. Come slushy spring and the Canoe Club splashes about the Red Ceder River, the Outing Club combs every wood and the organizations of the multiversity are reborn for yet another year.

They also act as official hostesses at the various Air Force ROTC functions.

BETA BETA BETA

The purpose of Beta Beta Beta, a biological honorary, is to promote interest in the field of the life sciences. Juniors with a 2.7 all-university average and a 3.0 average in their major are eligible for membership. This national leadership and scholastic fraternity honors outstanding service to the University and the community. One facet of their stress on service is made apparent by their continuing activity of taking underprivileged children to various athletic events. Members of Blue Key also participate in the judging of Homecoming candidates and the selecting of Miss MSU.

CIRCLE HONORARY

Women displaying outstanding leadership in the residence halls are eligible for membership in Circle Honorary. Selected during winter term, the members provide such services as preparing cookies for soldiers in Vietnam, making children's books and toys and conducting University tours for high school groups. Ski Club invades the auditorium . . .

Thus pass in review the many organizations of the multiversity. From the massiveness of a Ski Club meeting to the solitude of an individual on the archery range, from the ruggedness of rugby to the grace of a swim meet they mirror the myriad personalities and tastes of the students of MSU.

An intrepid skier tries again . . .

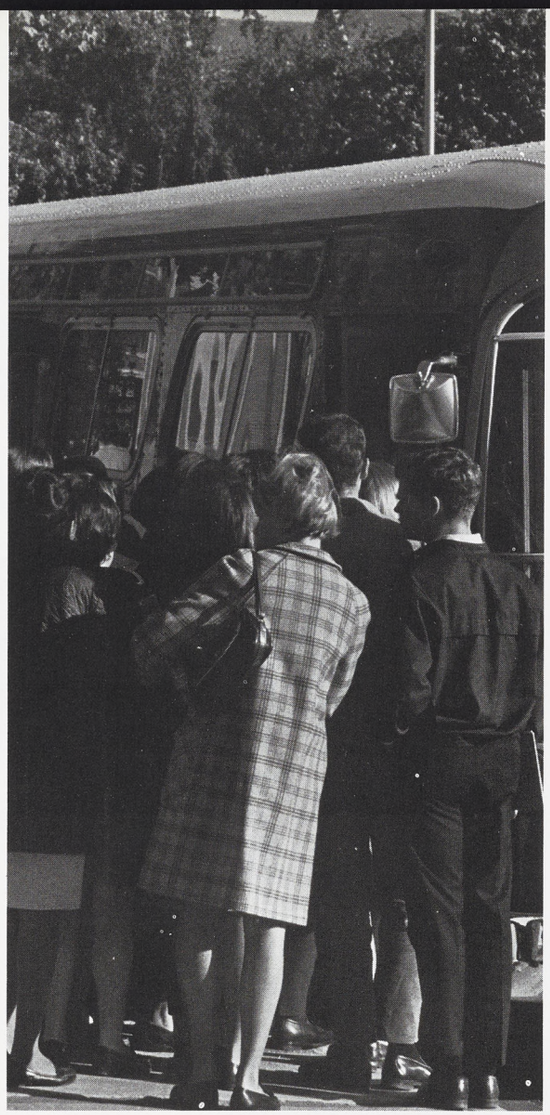

LIFE

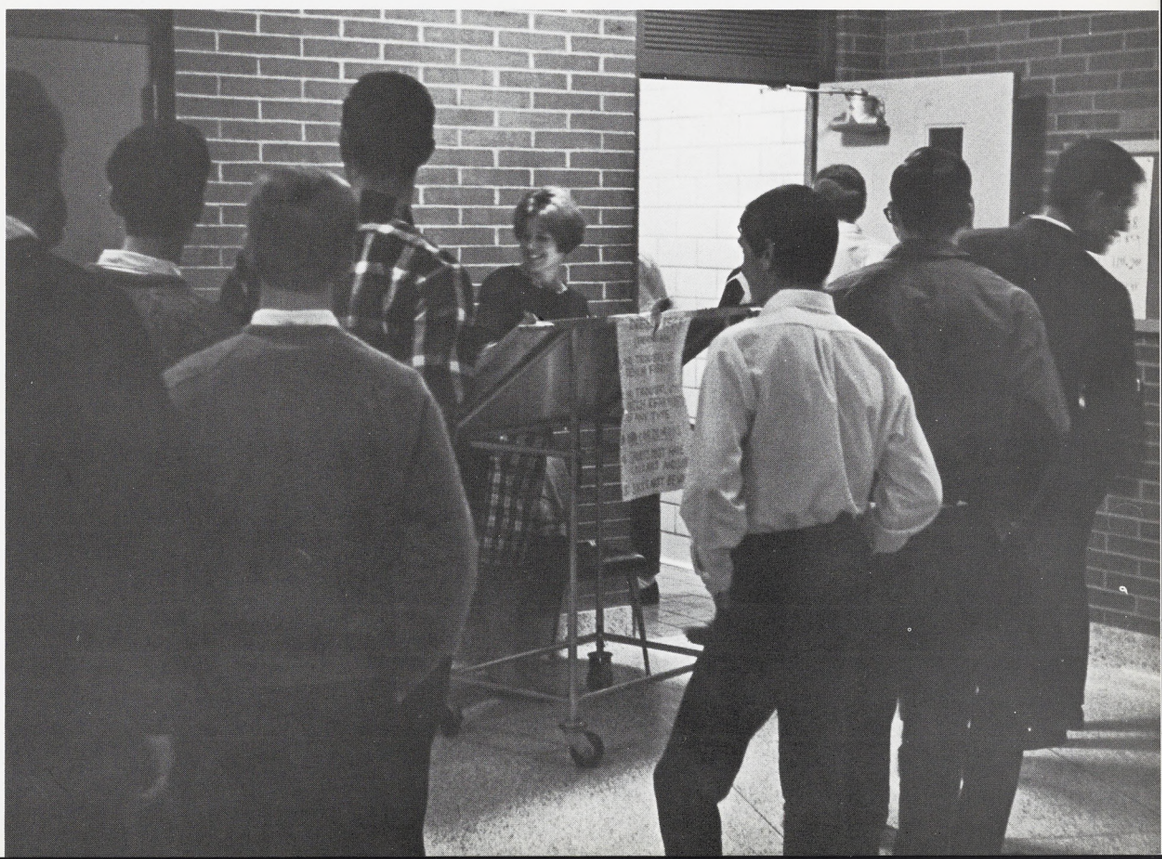

For the students of the multiversity, life out of class is the common denominator. Irregardless of a person's origins, be they far-flung or nearby. or his niche in the complexity of superdorms, he works and plays, laughs and cries much like his fellows . . .

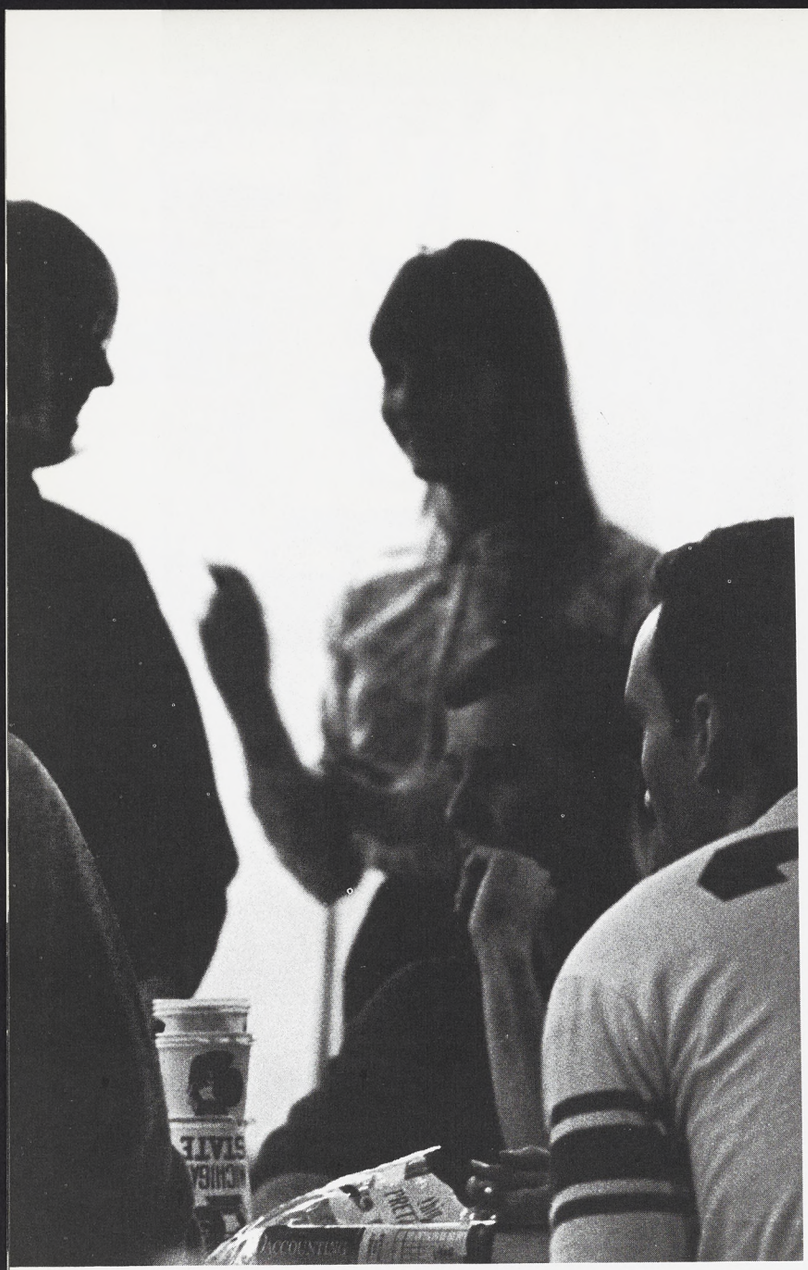

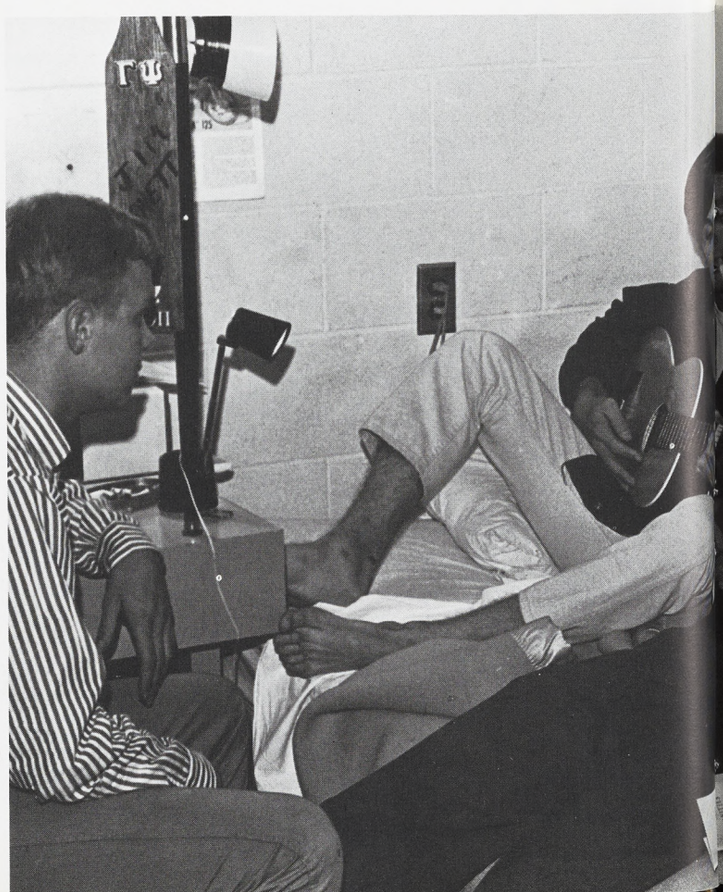

We are engulfed by the crowd. It dictates to us, we follow it, often not knowing why. Its face is a sea of forms, some familiar, but most blended into a shapeless mass. For a time, we are nothing, only one of the nameless. We are the multiversity.

The familiar faces give us a sense of belonging, for they do not overpower us as the masses do. In them, we find ourselves, through them, we come to know ourselves. We have expanded, but at the same time narrowed. We are not a formless, all-encompassing non-entity. We are unique. We are individuals.

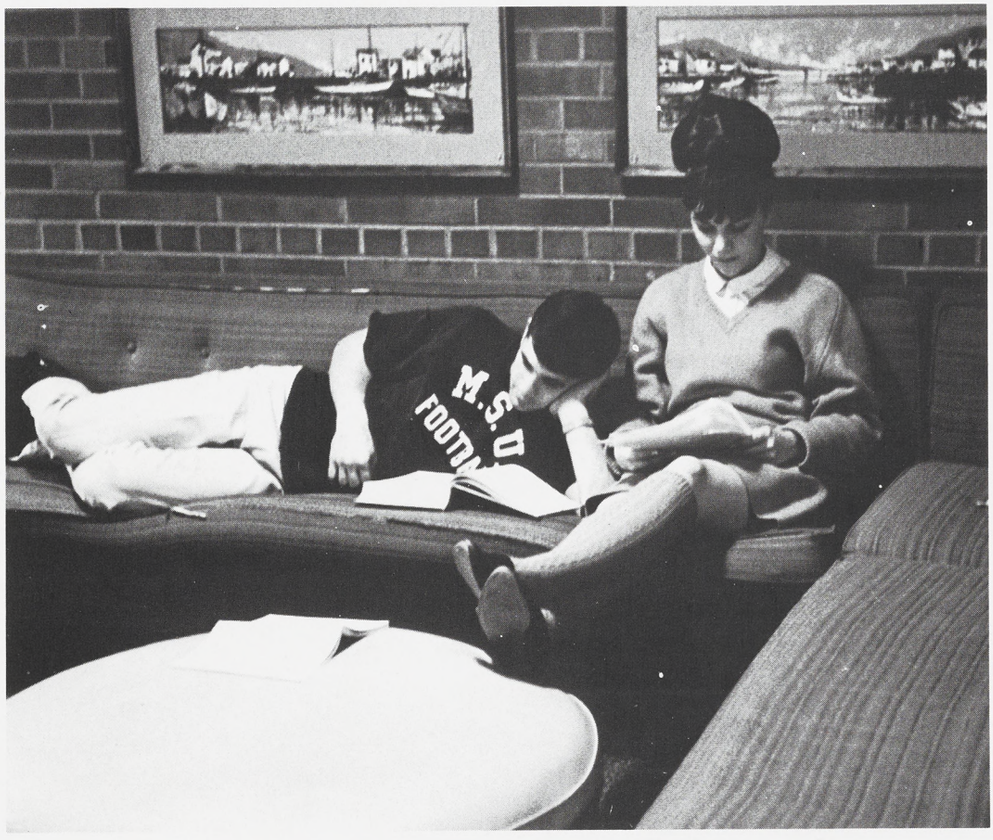

CN·2790
YB·1314

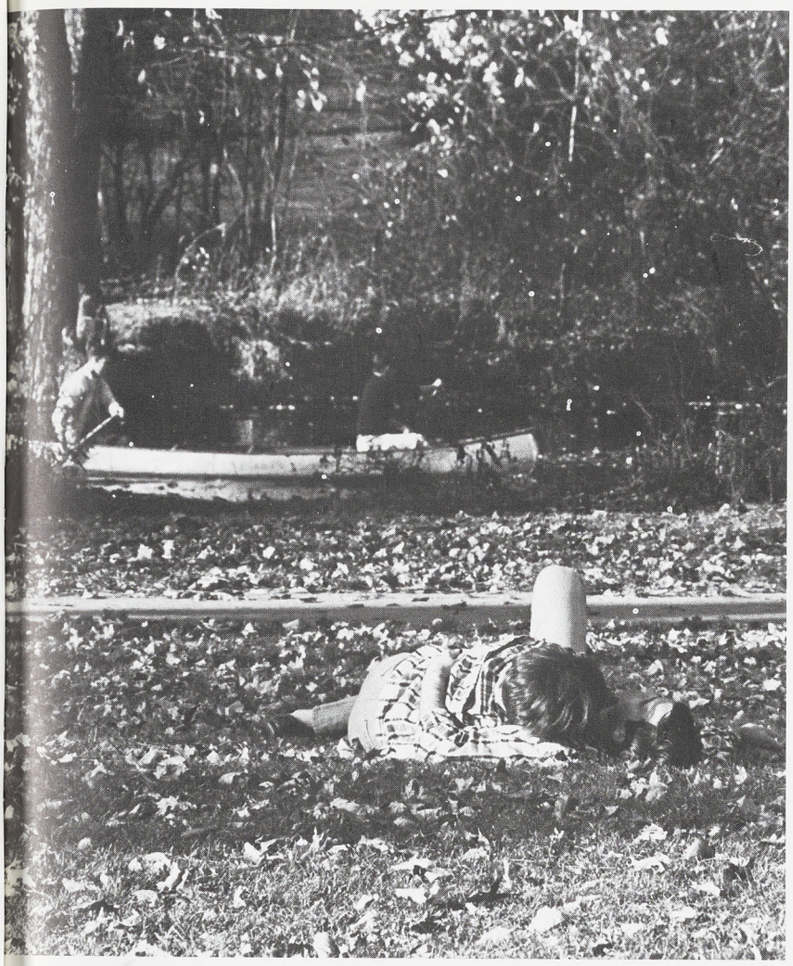

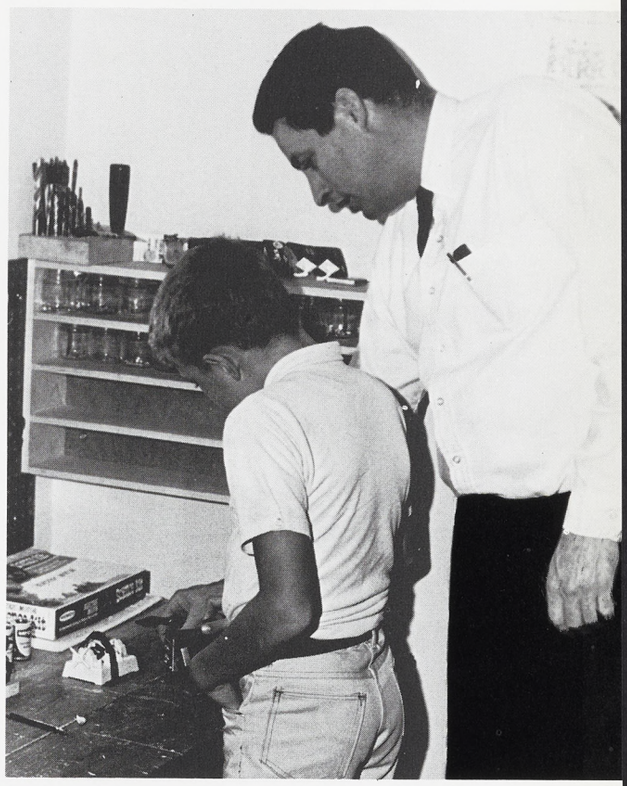

A special friend brings meaning to our individuality. He provides a shoulder to cry on, a word of encouragement, or one of solace. With him, we share a special kind of joy, a special kind of fulfillment. In his eyes, we reveal our true selves. We are sincere.

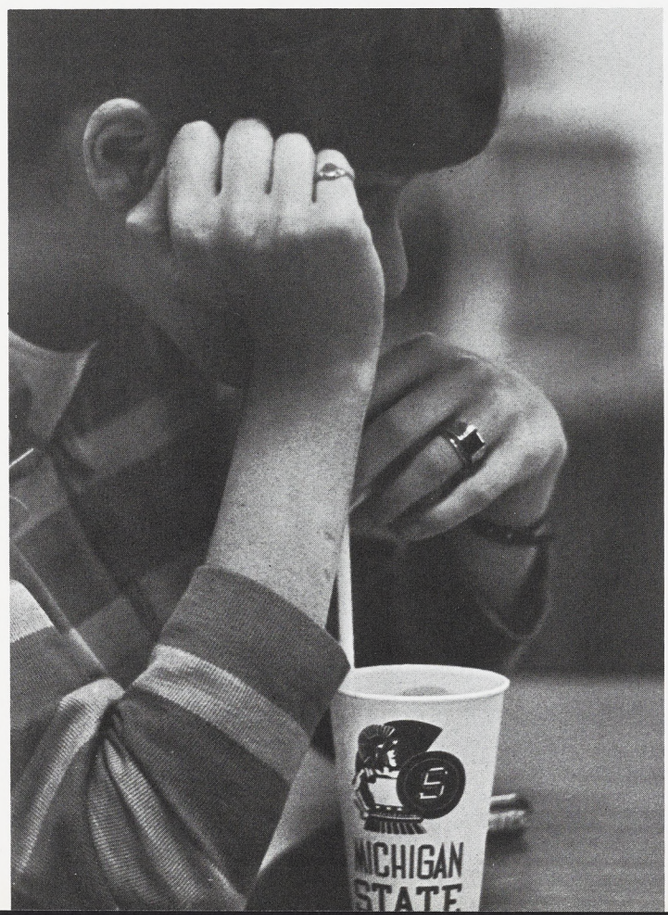

DANGER
MAN-O-WAR

We are products of our environment. We have extracted our identity from the world about us: people and places, fleeting contact and deep involvement.

The greatest share of our development stems from the part of life closest to us, our special friends and the places in which we live.

West Circle: A Reaction Against Unlimited Growth

Almost an anachronism in the context of the multiversity, West Circle Complex stands in opposition to the push toward bigness. Each hall on West Circle strives to maintain a spirit of involvement among the women it houses, making them feel part of a small, family-like group. Loyalty to individual halls is strong, and participation in hall events characterizes the complex. The quiet, the tradition, the academic atmosphere of West Circle create for its residents a calm refuge from the rushed activity of the multiversity.

Kellogg's
RICE
KRISPIES

Christmas season on West Circle Drive would not be complete without parties for underprivileged children. Each hall demonstrated its holiday spirit for its small guests through skits, singing and gift-giving. The children laugh, Santa pays a visit, and a West Circle coed may become an angel for the day.

Regardless of its other features, a residence hall complex must be a place of academic achievement. West Circle provides an atmosphere conducive to study; in lounges and dining rooms, or in the Pub, West Circle's grill.

East Landon

East Landon, with one of the highest grade-point averages on campus, decided to give new spirit to an "old" hall this year. The women participated in the Homecoming festivities and took third place in the Water Carnival last spring. The hall's project with the Roselawn Convalescent Home is unique. The girls treat the patients like their own parents and each girl sends letters and gifts to an "adopted" mother or father. East Landon is also very active in sports, having won intramurals in volleyball, basketball, baseball, swimming, softball and bowling.

Gilchrist

Gilchrist, although one of the older halls on campus, has the newest grill, called The Pub. Decorated like an old English tavern, The Pub opened after the Notre Dame football game, with guests from both schools taking part in a dance and hootenanny. Developing the grill was only one of the many activities of the Gilchrist women. Their choir performed several times during the Christmas season, and their Homecoming display won the first place trophy in their class, an accomplishment which made residents very proud of their small home.

West Landon

West Landon, one of the smallest halls on campus, emphasizes and utilizes its size by giving each resident individual attention and a personal atmosphere for study and relaxation. Many intra-hall activities implement this idea, including midnight banana split parties and dinners based on themes ranging from Christmas to the oldfashioned Chuckwagon. The traditionally designed living room is popular with residents who gather there often for hootenannies or guest speakers. Outstanding senior women are recognized for their contributions to the hall at the annual Senior Dinner. West Landon also boasts the number one hall chorus on campus, and consistently maintains one of the highest grade-point averages.

Campbell

Following the pattern set by several other living units, two of the oldest halls on campus, North and South Campbell, merged this year into one. Activities participated in by Campbell women include a Christmas party for underprivileged children, mixers with their "brothers" of West Shaw Hall, and term parties. Each year at Thanksgiving and Christmas, the women give baskets of food to needy families. Campbell is active in sports such as bowling, swimming, volleyball, basketball and baseball. They are also energetic participants in all-university events such as Homecoming and Water Carnival.

East Mayo

The women of East Mary Mayo are proud of their many traditions. These include community services, annual term parties and guest speakers. Their unique intrahall tutoring system is extremely helpful for many coeds. The system is a visible product of Mayo's philosophy that the residence Hall can help each woman develop her own potentialities. At the annual Honors Banquet for residents with a 3.0 grade-point average and above, the coeds are presented with a seasonal flower in recognition of their achievement.

West Mayo

The 132 residents of West Mary Mayo displayed a great deal of energy this year. As a result of their combined effort, the women tied with Rather in winning the Fall Term Blood Drive. The loss of blood still left the girls with enough strength, however, to win the Mayo volleyball championship. West Mayo takes part in the Foster Parents Programs by sponsoring an Indian orphan named Angelina. The women are also active in other community services, such as an annual Christmas party for underprivileged children.

Yakeley

East and West Yakeley Halls, both known for their exceptional spirit, merged into one living unit this year. There is now one head advisor in charge of the entire hall, as well as a newly formed unified government. Another innovation is the presence of a Mãitre d', Mr. Tarpoff, who worked fall term to make meals more pleasant. He was also "Official Pumpkin Judge" at Halloween when the floors had a pumpkin-carving contest. The old traditions of both East and West have become a part of the new Yakeley, which continued to support projects such as a drive for UNICEF, an annual Christmas dinner for parents and the adoption of an orphan.

Williams

Williams Hall, one of the oldest residences on campus, is known as The Castle. This theme is carried on throughout the hall with each house named after a famous castle. Last spring, Castle Honorary was established to recognize residents who have given outstanding service to the hall. A new event was begun this year: College Bowl style competition with the men of Fredericks House, the Honors College of the University of Michigan. The women won by an overwhelming margin, 106—30. It is hoped that this contest will become a tradition at Williams.

Northeast Complex: a Combination of the Old and the New Bridging the gap between the large, impersonal complexes of the multiversity and the small, close-knit groups of West Circle Drive is the Northeast Complex. Larger in size than the small women's dorms, these halls still retain a traditional atmosphere while holding a modern outlook. The location of Justin Morrill College in this complex has given it an important role in the development of new programs for the multiversity. Ivy-covered walls, coed residences, small-sized buildings, living-learning situations and central location—all these elements combine to give the Northeast Complex its unique place in University living.

FREUD

God.

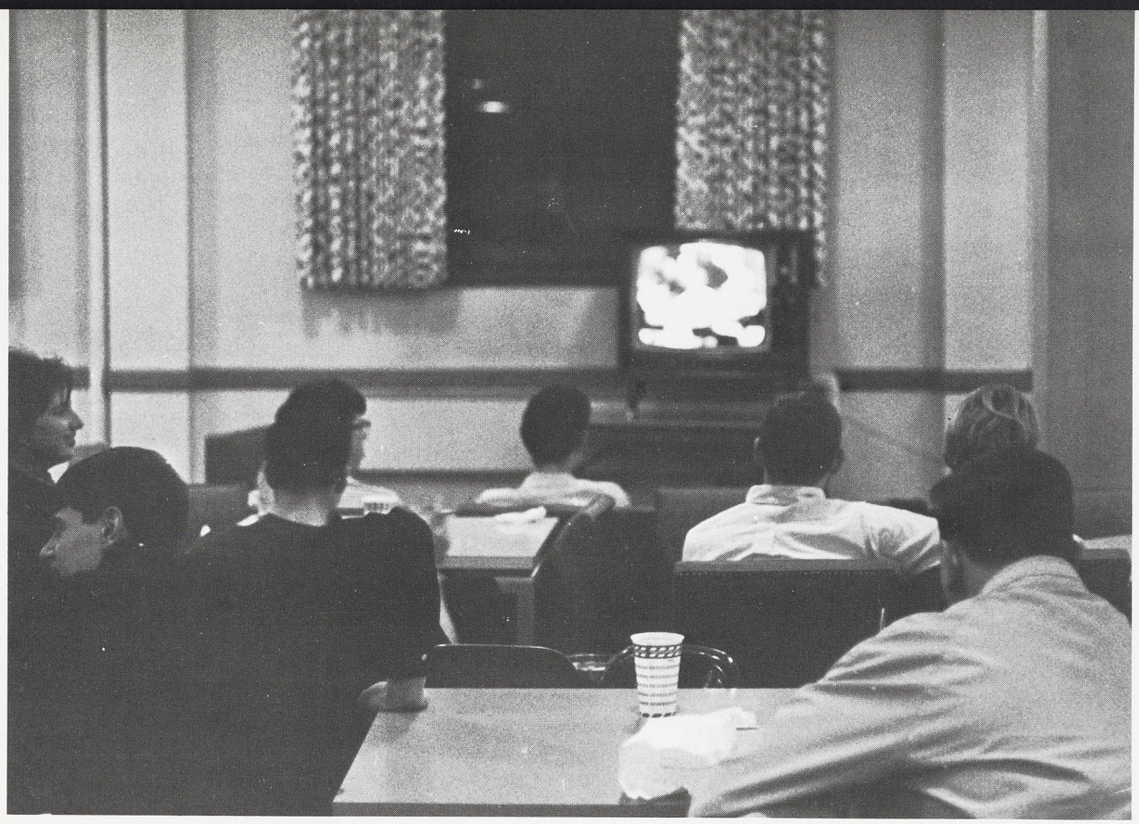

Study sessions in the Mason lower lounge are frequently interrupted by friends.

Shaw's heavily used pool tables don't seem to harm the Hall's consistently high gradepoint average every term.

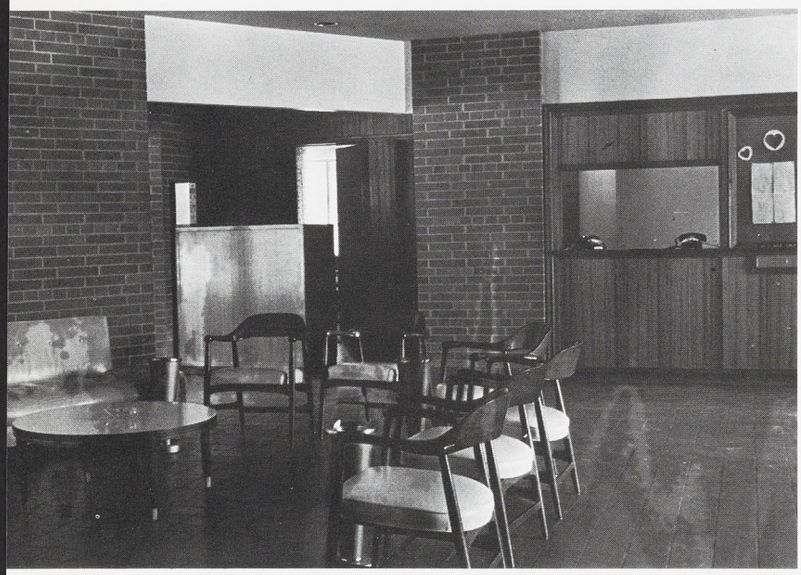

In Northeast Complex, as everywhere on campus, studies sometimes take second place to relaxation. Residents find that their halls provide many attractions in both organized and informal activities. Spending a bright autumn morning at the Shaw Canoe Race, taking a study break in the grill or watching a favorite television program are all part of campus life—all phases of the Northeast Complex routine.

Separate from Northeast Complex and yet tied to it by its proximity, Van Hoosen offers a contrast to other residence halls. Instead of large groups and planned programs of activity, the emphasis is on separation and individual action. Van Hoosen shows that even in the multiversity, it is possible to live alone, to be apart from the masses.

EAST SHAW

The multitude of activities available to residents of East Shaw make its size and experience in operation a key factor in its popularity. Any number of interests can be pursued by the men of Shaw, from a vigorous participation in intramural programs to co-operation with West Shaw in the management of WKME, the second oldest residence hall radio station on campus. Tradition became important at Christmas, when East Shaw men and their dates entertained over 125 needy children of the Lansing area at the annual Christmas party which featured cartoons, Christmas carols, and Santa Claus.

The East Shaw Homecoming display looked strange in its early stages of completion.

Mason

Mason has carried on much of its hall tradition while enlarging the scope of the activities it sponsors. Because of its central location, the hall has always provided its residents with a unique atmosphere of intense participation in campus life. At Halloween, the girls went Trick or Treating with the men of Abbot, ending the celebration with a joint party. For the second year in a row, both underprivileged children and the children of employees were guests of the hall at the annual Christmas party. Several fireside chats with professors were held, as well as exchange slave auctions, a formal winter term party and the Roman Feast in the spring. Mason is also distinguished by being the home of the third highest concentration of Honors College students living on campus.

Snyder

The outstanding characteristic of Snyder is its use as headquarters for Justin Morrill College. Over half the residents are now JMC students and it is expected that by next year the entire hall will be devoted to this small liberal arts college. Because of the Justin Morrill influence, major emphasis is placed on cultural activities in Snyder. Many outside speakers in the liberal arts visit the hall each term. In connection with the intense foreign language concentration in the college, special dinners are held on each of the major French and Russian holidays. Perhaps because of the many Merit Scholars it houses, Snyder regularly achieves the highest grade point average on campus.

West Shaw

The men of West Shaw, living as they do in the center of the campus, often find themselves in the midst of campus activities. The many all-university activities sponsored by the hall in co-operation with East Shaw include the fall term Canoe Race on the Red Cedar and the famous weekly mixers. In an effort to extend the Christmas spirit throughout the year, they have started a small branch of the Big Brothers of America program and are involved with underprivileged children on a regular basis. To boost lagging spirit during the football season, West Shaw held a Poll Bowl Parade, which included eight floats, the morning of the Michigan State-Notre Dame game.

Van Hoosen

Van Hoosen is a unique residence hall built as an experiment ten years ago. It has 32 apartments, housing four to six women each, a courtyard complete with trees and squirrels, and a grade point average which has consistently ranked as the highest among women's residence halls. Van Hoosen's programs are tailored to the interests of women of sophomore standing and above, offering everything from religious seminars and political debates to the traditional Christmas party, "from movies on venereal disease to a Mock Tea" and from entertaining faculty members to feeding boyfriends. Residents find Van Hoosen a challenging place to live, combining as it does many aspects of off-campus life with the advantages of living in the center of campus.

The newly-decorated Brody lobby provides a pleasant place to relax.

The Brody Group: Separate Halls With A Unique Complex Unity

No single building in the Brody Complex is self-sufficient—all are dependent on the others. Each of the six residence halls finds in Brody the completion of itself, and from them, Brody draws the students to make use of its abundant facilities. This integration of the seven structures gives residents an identity not usually found in other, less cohesive complexes. Residents of Butterfield, Rather, Bryan, Bailey, Armstrong and Emmons, while retaining loyalty to their own halls, feel part of a larger community—the circle of "Brody people".

New chandeliers give Brody dining room a comfortable atmosphere.

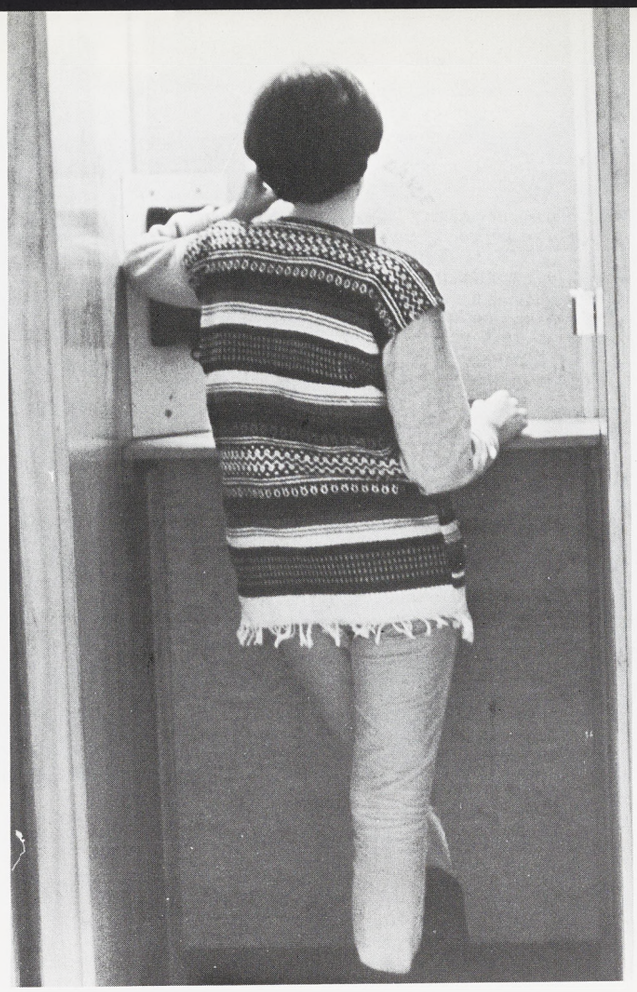

Much student help is needed to keep Brody kitchen running smoothly.

Armstrong's many trophies indicate vigorous participation in hall events.

Brody in the spring

Living as part of a self-contained entity, separate from the rest of campus, often gives Brody residents a feeling of isolation from the mainstream of university life. The center of their academic, social and cultural lives may all be found in Brody Hall. Getting to a class "on campus" is a daily struggle—a Lecture-Concert Series program—a major undertaking. But these are only infrequent interruptions to the routine of daily life in Brody Hall—classes, meals, a film or traveling play, study—and of course, that late evening Coke in the grill.

University College courses are offered in Brody Hall, situated in the center of the complex.

When studies are over, leisurely pastimes can be pursued in the newly equipped activities rooms.

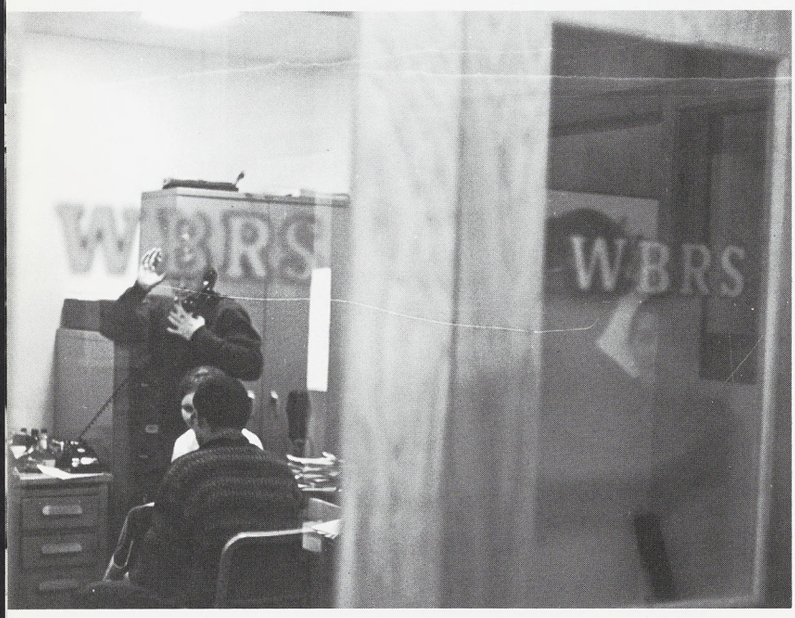

Many social functions between halls are held, such as this Rather-Bryan Halloween party.

These things are the spirit of the complex—the aura which is Brody.

Butterfield

Butterfield Hall signifies unity of spirit and purpose both scholastically and socially. At the end of each term, the hall holds a scholarship tea in honor of its outstanding students. In sports, Butterfield teams won complex championships in volleyball, basketball, and baseball. Residents also participate vigorously in all major campus activities. Outstanding hall events which were especially popular with residents include the Leadership Workshop held for newly elected house officers, the winter ski weekend, and the Brownie Tea Party where coeds were able to meet many of the faculty members teaching in their complex.

Bryan

Independently-minded are the key words used to characterize the residents of Bryan Hall. With a new advisory staff and stronger committees, there exists among the men a strong spirit of co-operation. Besides the usual hall activities, Bryan has innovated the study break mixer and arranged visits by faculty members to the various houses. Special emphasis has also been placed on academics this year in an attempt to provide an atmosphere conducive to study. The whole hall is oriented toward increasing the importance of individual achievement in academics, sports, and social activities.

Emmons

The men of Emmons are trying to reduce the stress of living on a large university campus while at the same time attempting to build a sense of accomplishment and satisfaction in residents. The tremendous spirit displayed by Emmons men in winning first place in the Fall Term Blood Drive and fielding the complex champion football team is evidence that they are achieving this goal. Residents also took an active part in Homecoming festivities and joined with Rather in sponsoring a Christmas party and a winter term ski weekend.

Rather

Rather Hall is trying to remove the "dorm" image from the residence hall and make it instead a more homelike place to the 500 plus women who live there. Activities such as exchange dinners, scholarship banquets, and various floor parties are designed primarily so residents can form friendships which will enhance the unity of the hall. Each house is further unified through its efforts to earn the "Floor of the Year" award. Points toward this trophy are awarded to each house on the basis of participation in hall activities, grade-point average, and sponsorship of speakers and fireside chats.

Wonders Kiva is the location of many South Campus classes.

South Campus: Where the Multiversity Developed

When Case Hall opened in 1961, it was a unique experiment in residence halls. Its architecture, its facilities, indeed its very purpose differed from any other hall on campus. Case was the first coeducational living-learning residence hall.

Since 1961, South Campus has developed into the campus's second largest complex. In its growth, it has served as a proving ground for many new ideas conceived to solve problems created by the growth of the multiversity. It has taken these ideas, modified them, and adopted them into daily student life, until what were once revolutionary concepts of education are now the accepted routine.

Moving into Case—a yearly chore for many students.

An afternoon in the Case grill furnishes a welcome break from classes.

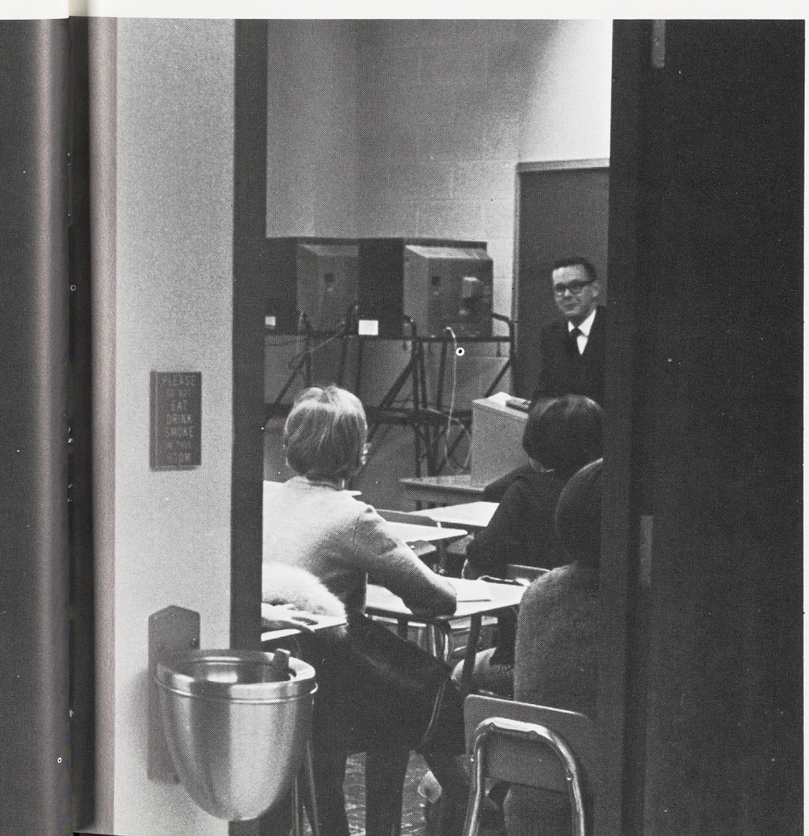

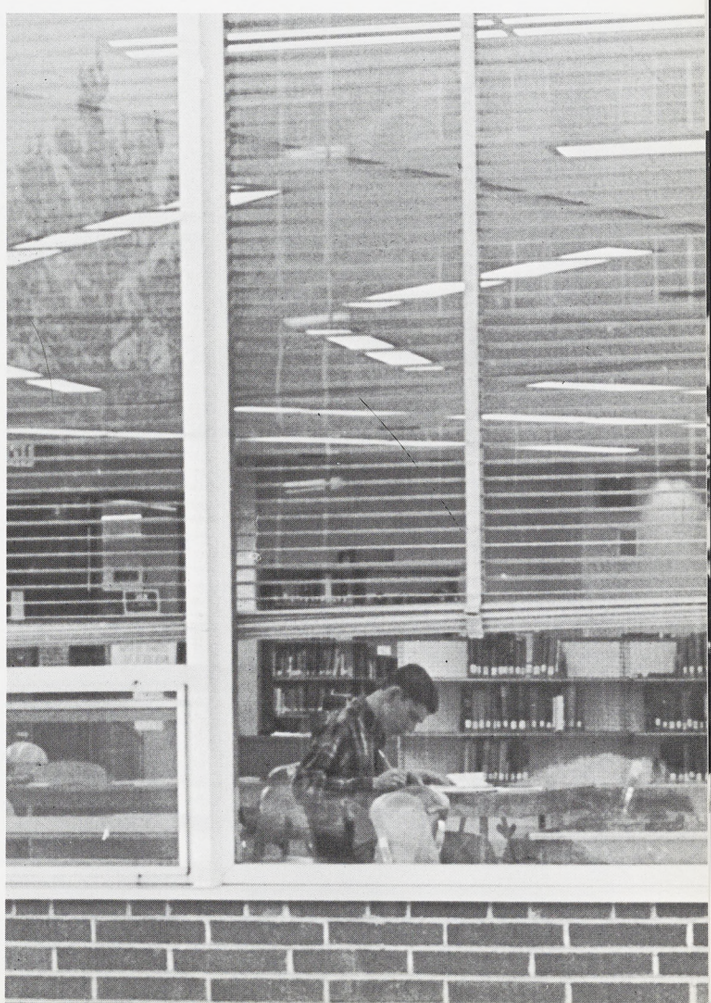

South Campus has achieved an integration of the living-learning concept into its daily life. Students accept without question the presence of professors in the dining room at lunch time, the noise of a television class in the evening, or a lecture series in their own living unit. They make regular use of the services offered to them within the complex: the Wilson Library, the University College Office of Student Affairs, faculty offices in each hall. The halls also incorporate academic affairs into their extracurricular activities, sponsoring a Major Night for undecided underclassmen, inviting faculty members to speak, or conduction forums on current campus issues.

The newly-erected framework for Holden Hall greeted South Campus residents when they returned to campus in September.

In spite of its increasing progress toward maturity, South Campus is still growing. Physically, a new residence hall will become part of the complex in September, 1967. In spirit, South Campus will continue to innovate. This year, it is the home of the Free University; next year, other new ideas will be produced by the on-going process of South Campus development.

Free University classes involve students and faculty on a basis of close co-operation.

As the year progressed, work on Holden neared completion.

North Case

North Case Hall, one of the largest residence halls on campus, took the intramural field hockey championship for the third consecutive year. The women of Case were also residence hall basketball and swimming champions. Other activities include an annual Term Party at the Jack Tar Hotel, art shows, and the yearly slave auction. At the auction, each house is sold as a unit and performs tasks for the highest bidder. Twice each term, international dinners are held with menu and decorations which follow the traditions of a single country.

South Case

South Case men share a great many activities with the women of North Case. One project which they are especially proud of is the publication of the Case Hall yearbook. The book is a record of Case Hall life and includes pictures of each house and many of the hall's events. First published last year, the yearbook is distributed to Case residents only. Other coed activities are the annual slave auction and the Christmas party. The men also take an active part in the intramural program and have a consistently victorious College Bowl Team.

West Wilson

The women of West Wilson decided that midnight trips to the grill were a nuisance, so they instituted a new idea called the pizza cart. Under this innovation, a tray full of the usual grill choices is sent up to every floor so that girls already dressed for bed need not go hungry till morning. Charge accounts in Wilson's grill were also a first on campus. Free-university courses, sponsored by Wilson Hall, began winter term offering supplementary material and speakers to students who desired something extra outside of their university courses. Residents are also studying the possibility of combining the East and West hall governments so that more joint activities can be held.

South Wonders

Because they live in a co-ed situation, the women of South Wonders co-sponsor many of their activities with North Wonders. The women aided in the financial support and management of WEAK, Wonders Hall radio, and the all-hall newspaper. Their biggest event of the year is the staging of South Campus Weekend in conjunction with Wilson and Case Halls. During this three-day affair an all-university mixer on the tennis courts, a picnic, and an outdoor concert were held. Besides these co-ed activities, the hall has an active social life of its own. Each term, special dinners are held, such as a Roman Banquet in the fall. An annual scholarship award was also presented to a South Wonders resident and a winter term Little Sister Weekend was held.

East Campus: the Thriving, Active Epitome of the Multiversity

As the largest, newest and busiest of the complexes, East Campus most accurately presents the character of the multiversity. A combination of ideas developed separately in other parts of the campus has created in only four years the most highly developed of living-learning situations. Five colleges, Arts and Letters, Natural Science, Social Science, University College and Lyman J. Briggs College, maintain faculty and administrative offices here. They combine to offer more than 340 classes per term in East Campus complex. In addition to classes, the entertainment programs, lecture series and social events of the halls give East Campus residents complex-level activities very much like those of the University as a whole.

The scramble system has developed into a fast method of serving large groups of students.

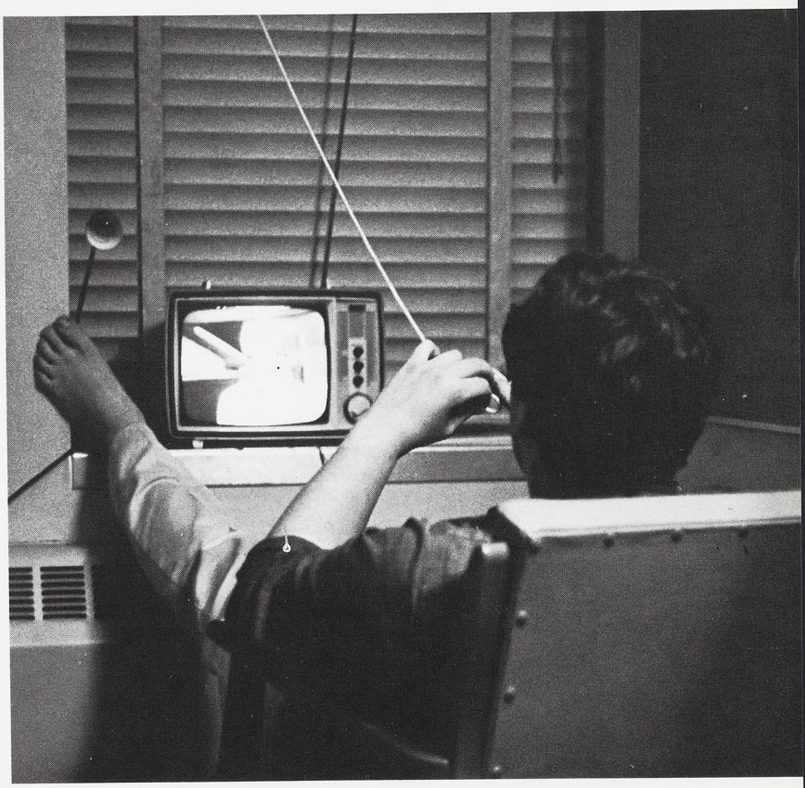

University buses provide vital transportation to East Campus.

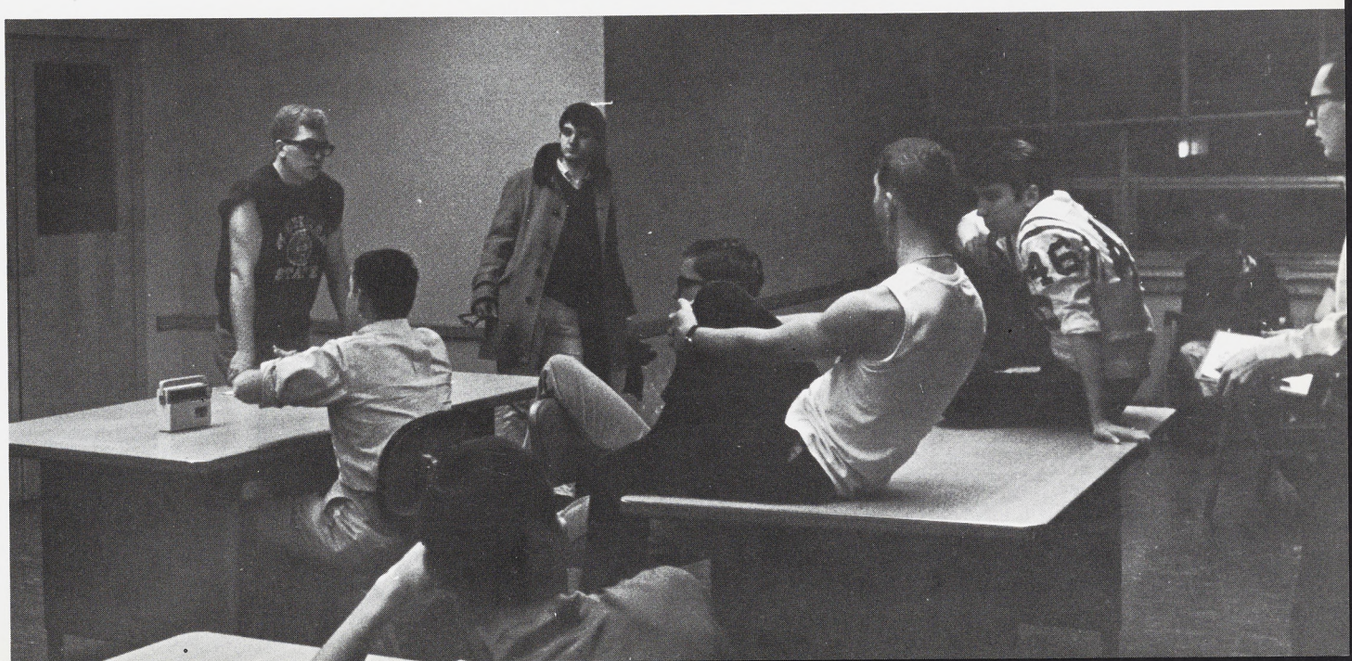

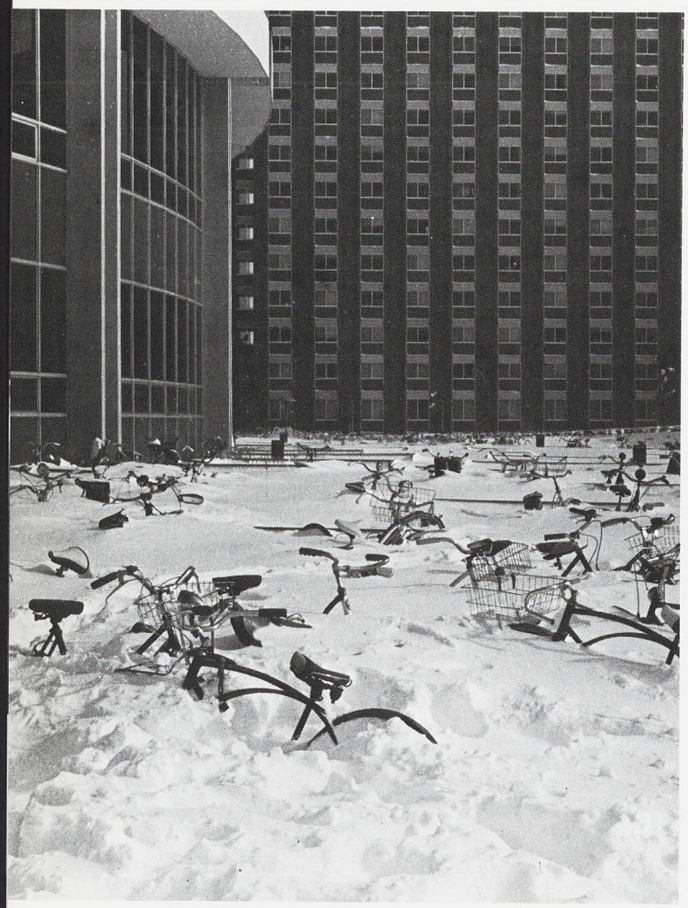

The cold impersonality of being one of 1200 in a hall, one of 6,000 in the complex could be overpowering for most students, but the individual is not lost in the imposing size of East Campus. The majority of activities are conducted on the hall or even house level, to promote greater involvement by residents and to give them more contact with smaller groups. In East Campus halls, a student may work with his fellow residents on a dorm committee, take part in a discussion group with President Hannah, visit his head advisor's apartment for a chat over coffee, talk to an instructor in the grill, or perhaps, even lunch with Hans Conreid.

Buried bike racks furnished one of the strange scenes created by the snow.

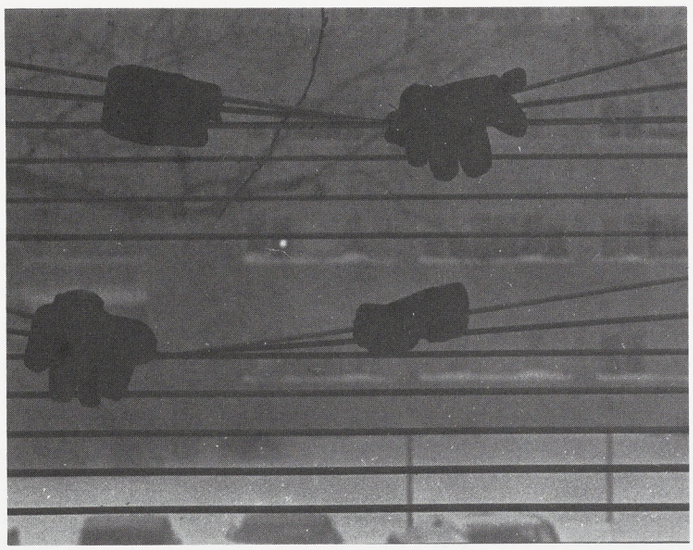

Even Hubbard looked a little smaller surrounded by the deep snow.

Jumping off the roof of Conrad was a short-lived campus fad.

January 26, 1967. The bustling activity of the multiversity was forced to a halt under two feet of snow—and East Campus took time out to relax. Co-operation was the byword as the pace of life slowed, work was transformed into play, and even the most sophisticated students enjoyed a second childhood.

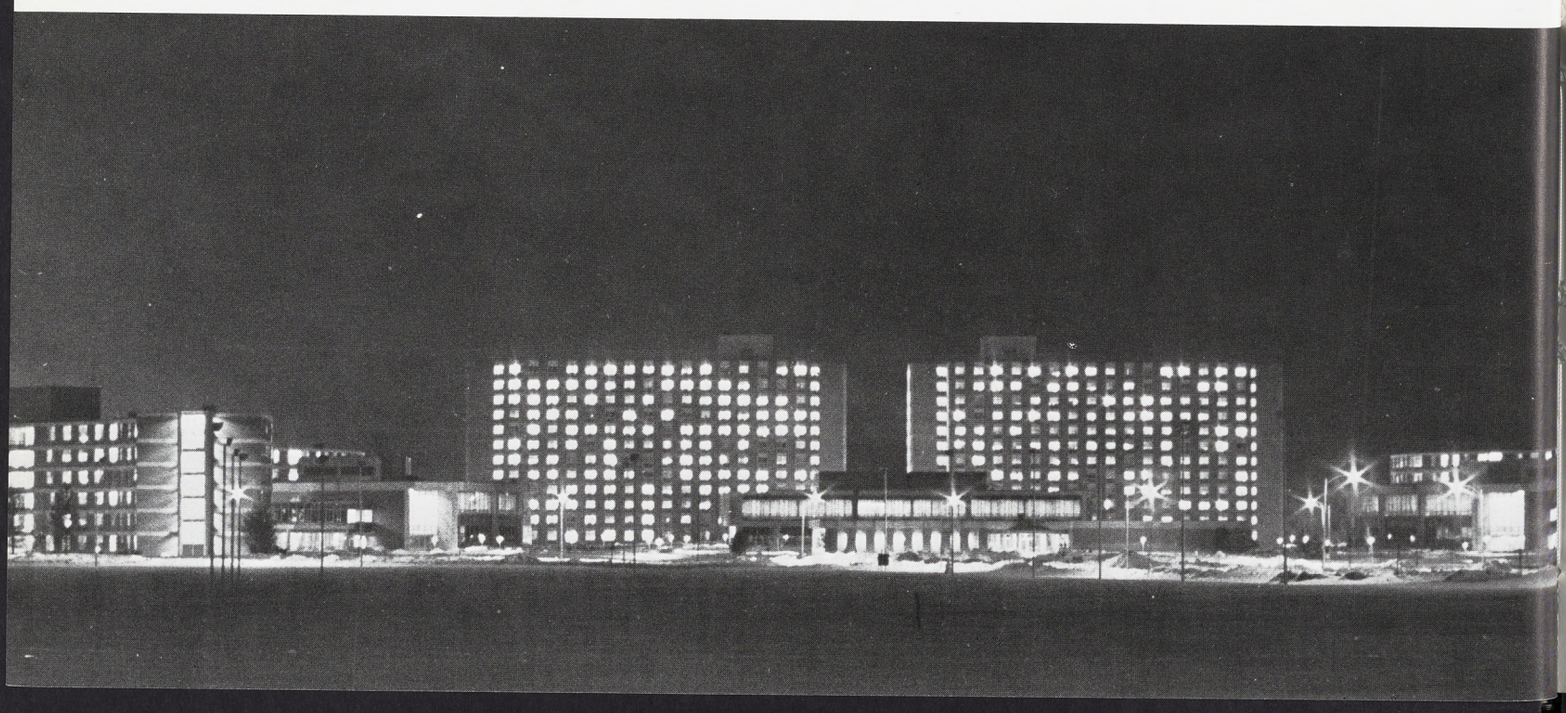

After the snowstorm, owning a car caused more trouble than it was worth.

Moving into Hubbard, the last hall built on East Campus.

East Campus has reached a state of physical completion. For the first year since its beginning, no half-finished structure looms on the landscape, no bulldozers dig the foundation for another new residence hall. Yet, like the multiversity itself, East Campus will continue to expand, adding new programs, developing new ideas, even becoming the home of new residence colleges. The location of Lyman J. Briggs College in Holmes Hall marks the beginning of a new phase of growth for East Campus: a phase of increased diversity through increased localization of student, faculty and the necessary facilities to pursue the multiversity's varied disciplines.

EAST McDONEL

East McDonel attracts a great number of older students, approximately 85 per cent of whom lived in the hall before this year. This high number of returning residents poses special problems in developing programs to increase participation in hall activities among women already well established in the routine of University life. Speakers visiting the hall discussed topics such as marriage and careers. In a weekly contest, the houses picking the winning football scores were awarded green and white cakes. One winter weekend, McDonel women scrubbed floors and polished shoes which were the tasks assigned to them for the annual Slave Auction. The popular McDonel coffee house which was planned and carried out by residents featured folk singers, amateur acts, and an expresso menu.

East Holmes

East Holmes sees itself as an innovator among residence halls and is striving to establish this image on campus. Besides re-evaluating their hall constitution after a year of operation, the men also looked for a way to allocate the hall treasury to better the individual resident. They arrived at an arrangement whereby 65 per cent of all hall money is given to the separate houses for a total of $300 each. Through this plan, emphasis is placed on house activities which tend to stimulate interest in house and hall government, increase individual participation and spread out the power and responsibilities involved.

West Holmes

Regardless of the place from which they originally come; the residents of West Holmes Hall experience a familiar, comfortable feeling as they share in co-operative living. Not only does this "home" provide a place to rest after a long day of classes, but also gives encouragement and opportunity for becoming "real" people. The women take pride in their student government, scholastic desserts, art shows, seminars, underprivileged children's party, pumpkin carving contest, little sister weekend and mixers. But most of all, they value the spirit which prevails throughout each house and their Holmes "home".

Akers is the residence hall center for the College of Arts and Letters. During the year, numerous dinners and discussions were held for both East and West Akers featuring guest speakers concerned with the department. A highlight of the year was the Fine Arts Weekend during which student work was displayed to the public. The best examples in creative photography, crafts, art work and writing received prizes, to the delight of the many parents present. West Akers also took active part in Homecoming activities, being represented by Lynn Heino, the Homecoming queen.

East Fee

Although on the very edge of an ever-expanding campus, the women of East Fee make up for the distance with their spirited participation in campus activities. A spectacular first place finish in the annual Shaw Canoe Race on the Red Cedar River created a great deal of enthusiasm within the hall. The women remembered the outside community by distributing Thanksgiving baskets to families and entertaining orphan children. Outstanding displays of leadership and service in the hall are further encouraged by the "Girl of the Week" award.

Are you going to be in around 11:30?
I'd really enjoy talking with you some more.

Thank you so much. We try so hard to keep our house warm and friendly.

Enter the Greek World with a Smile and a Handshake

You want to go Greek. The houses and faces are whirling about you as you try to link a name with a face, a face with a house, a house with a street. Hospitality smiles through every doorway; give 'em the old glad hand, but don't overdo it. Talk, listen, smile, frown, but do something: you must be remembered; there are too many of you.

And you are remembered. It seems somewhat miraculous, but the all-hallowed, omnipresent computer has managed to match your preference with that all-important bid.

So you pledge. The worrying and waiting are over. Now your thoughts are filled with the prospects of what Greek living will do for you. But that's about the extent of it, for your every waking moment seems to be filled with your duty to the Greek world and its citizens.

"The pledges:" oh, how that phrase makes you sound like peasants. But you run their errands, polish their shoes, answer their phone, and drag them out of bed in the morning. Alpha, beta, gamma, delta . . . the whole thing three times through before the match burns down. Is Julie from Maine, or was that the art major . . . oh, what is her name? Where's the national convention this year? Who was secretary in '21? On and on for three long months, and all for naught?

Hardly, for becoming an active means a lifetime of fun and friendship, a rewarding contribution to your community, and a place to call home nearly everywhere you go.

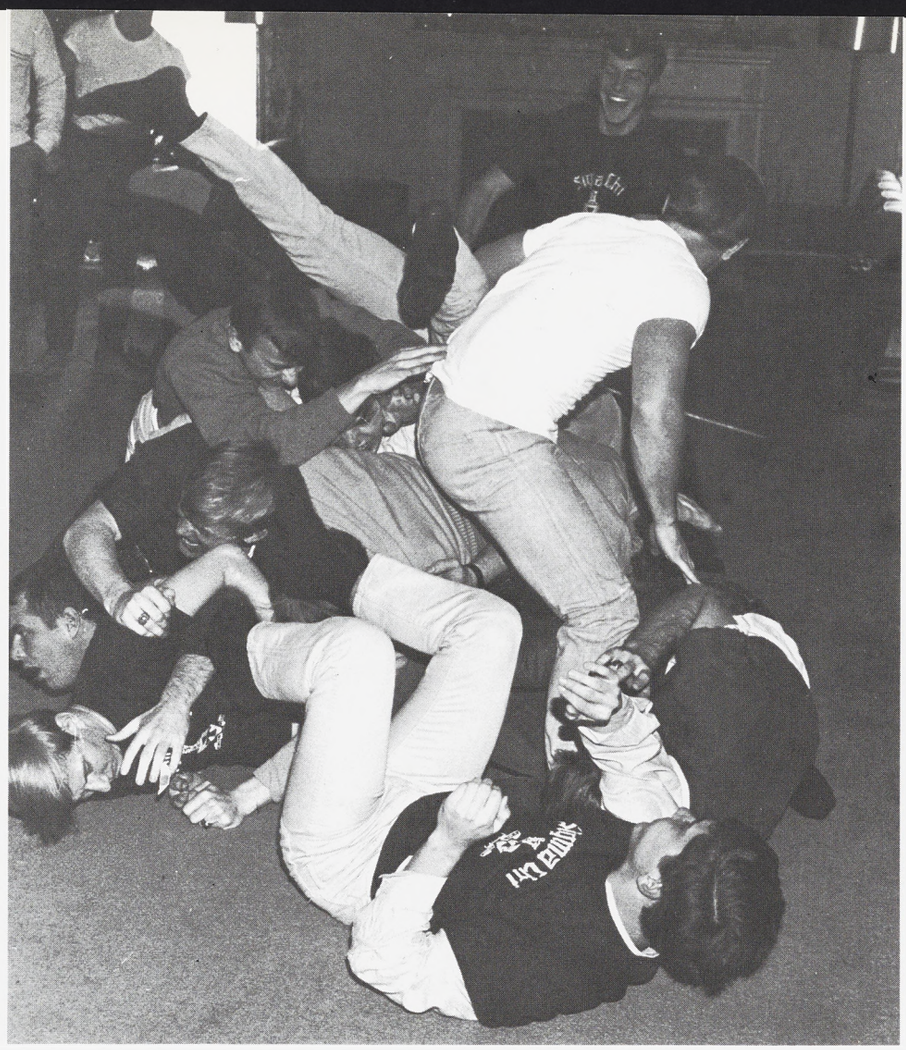

These Saturday morning pledge duties have got to go.

Why didn't we pledge a frat that had a dog to clean up the scraps?

But all I said was, "Who wants a 50-yard line ticket for the Notre Dame game?"

Who me? I just came in for some change. My Sopwith's double-parked.

Living in the house means being a real part of everything that happens. No more second-hand stories; you've become a full-fledged participant in the "Remember-the-time-we . . ." Club.

It's your house, your home. Back to raiding the refrigerator and PBJ's at any time of the day or night. There's a compassionate housemom, not an indifferent bureaucracy. There's someone to study with, someone to goof-off with, and no one to expound on the "policy" of the "red tape" involved. Sleeping in a dormer is a story in itself: though its appearance brings back memories of summer camp and its winter temperatures rival those of the Yukon, the dormer's unbroken silence affords great relief to weary Greeks. Learn your buzz: one long, two shorts and a long. Get used to 140 pounds of rambunctious St. Bernard, but keep him healthy and happy, for he can always carry a keg on next year's ski weekend. Plan a candlelight for your love-struck roomie, or throw the latest groom-to-be in the shower.

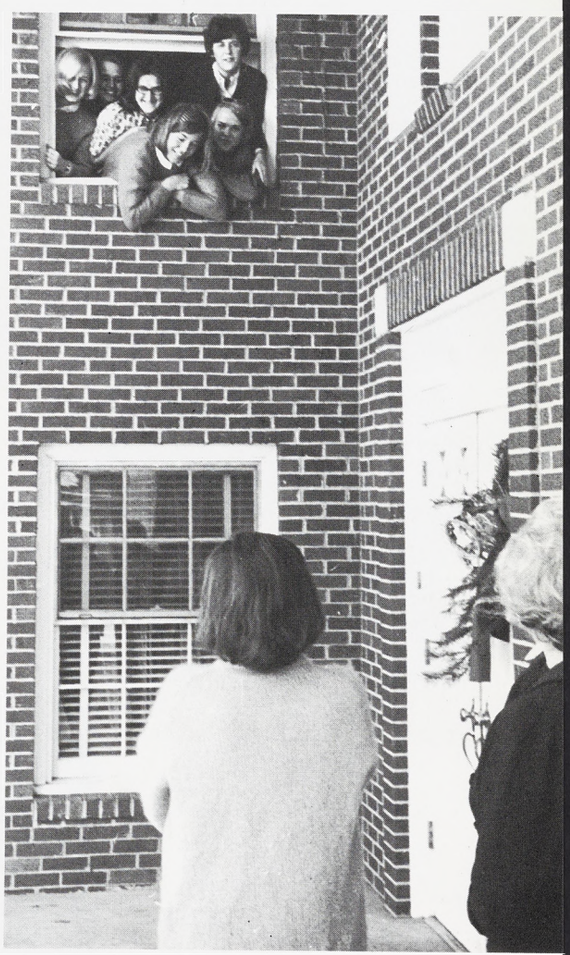

It's all part of the greatest thing about going Greek. It's the togetherness that makes you want to make your house Number One in every way, the "we" that incites a fierce competitive spirit, whether you're stuffing a homecoming display, going for the winning TD in IM ball, bringing the last donor to the campus blood drive, or staging an all-out campaign to capture the highest GPA.

The Fun of It All: Living in a House with a Personality All Your Own

Wait 'til you see him get up in the morning!

Sorority Competition: a Touch of Madness

Beauty and brains take second place to bravery and just plain brawn when sorority girls clash on the gridiron and become speedway daredevils on their super-stock trikes.

The annual DG-Gamma Phi Powder Puff Football Classic failed to beat the inclement weather this year. Almost six inches of snow made the going even rougher for the "never-say-die" rivals involved in this "neighborly" battle. Cheered on by many Greeks and coached by fraternities of their choice, the teams each tried their hand at fighting, faltering and fumbling their way past the opposition's defense. From among several fraternity contestants, a very lovely and very gracious queen is chosen. Not to be outdone by any Varsity game, Homecoming no exception, the Powder Puff Classic includes halftime ceremonies highlighted by the Queen's Coronation.

Spring term brings the Sigma Alpha Mu Tricycle Race, the event which allows every sorority girl an excusable return to her carefree childhood. Pedaling madly, each contestant carries not only a burning desire to win, but secret contempt for both her legs which are suddenly way too long and her feet which dwarf the pedals. This is a day of abandon, with most Greeks turning out to cheer their favorite on to victory, to get a few laughs and to find hidden talents in those they'd least suspect.

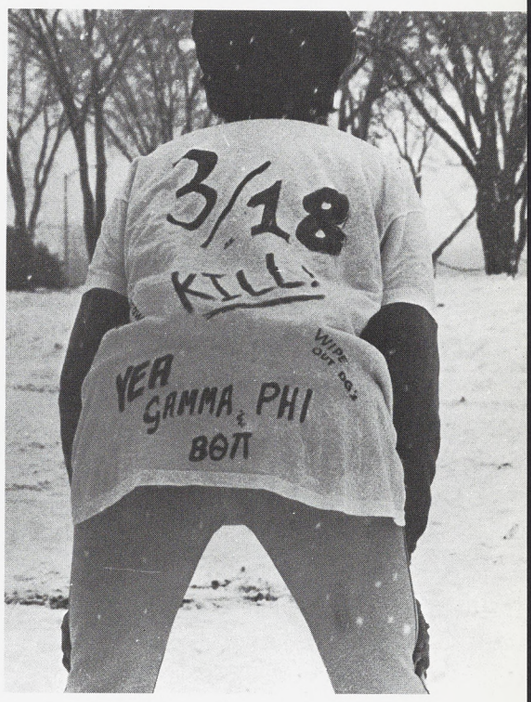

Take it easy, those things don't corner like Ferraris!

A perfect personification ot the feminine mystique, the Powder Puff Queen reigns supreme as "her" subjects battle it out on the field.

So hindsight's better than foresight?

Take a sec' to relax before the grueling race begins.

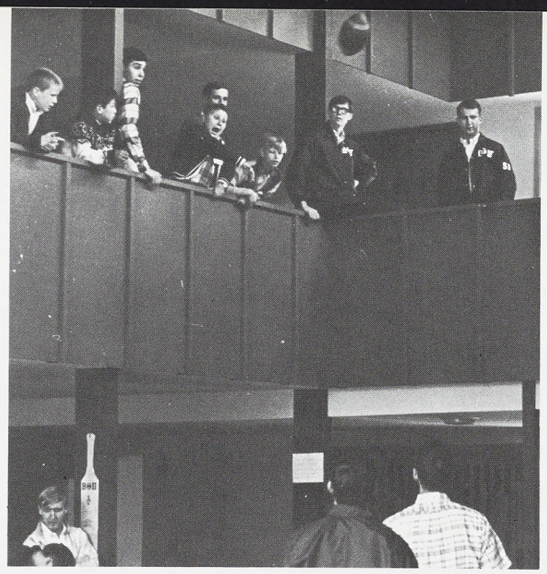

Jr. 500: Greek Spirit Unites Entire Campus

Every potential Sterling Moss eagerly awaits the Lambda Chi Alpha Junior 500. As a Greek, you're fired up to do your best to enlarge your house trophy collection, but, even more than that, you sense a feeling of unity among all Greeks as you vie for honors with every living unit on campus. The impatient spectators line the Circle Drive route. Each entrant has his special cheering section, yet the age-old rivalry between "dorm dwellers" and "frat rats" still seems to be the most important issue to be settled.

The carts, all greased and tuned to perfection, line up according to the starter's directions. Their runners test the traction of their brand-new tennies, or feel the reassurance of a well-used pair of old stand-bys as they take a last deep breath before the race begins.

The crowd hushes and then bursts forth with a roar as the gun signals the start of the race. Your driver, who's naturally the smallest guy in the house, jockeys for an inside position as the pack spreads out on the first turn. Relief men are loosening up at the designated points on the course, and as each takes his turn, your chances seem to be stronger. Some say your anchor man is the best on campus, yet so much depends on the driver and his stamina. Teamwork is the essence of victory, and house unity has been your most important objective all year long. Now it must pay off; and you know it will. For, win or lose, each member of your house has been drawn even closer to the whole, as an all-out group effort was put forth to bring your entry in ahead of the others.

GREEK WEEK

Greek Week festivities: Seven days in May filled with things to do and places to go. Every Greek joins in a combined effort, each doing his part to make the whole a success. It's the time when being a Greek is something extra-special.

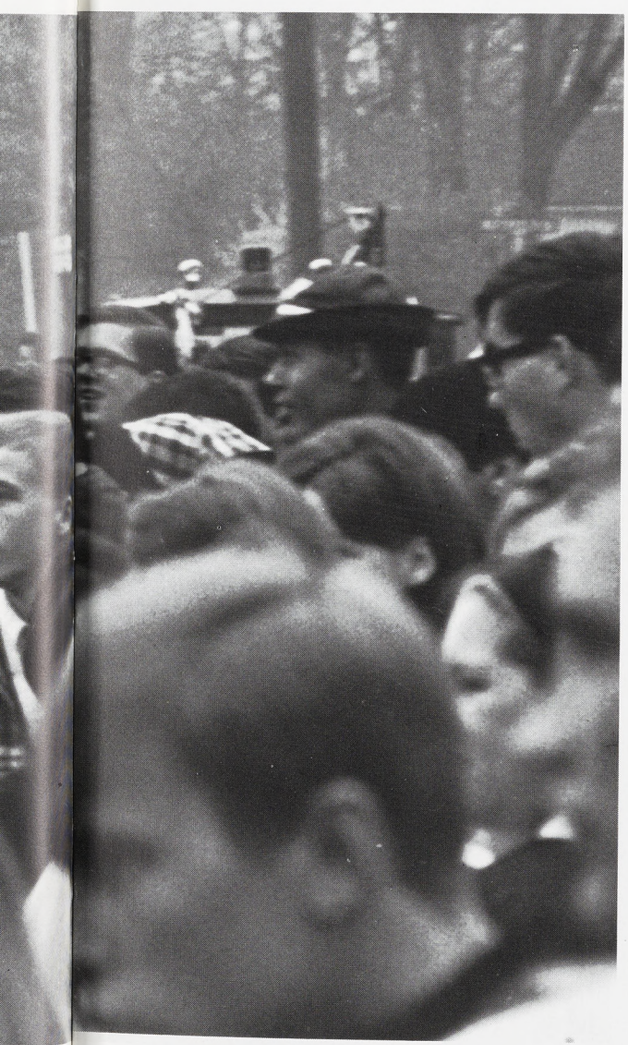

Beginning with an Olympic torch-run and formal opening ceremonies, an entire week is devoted to living Greek life to its fullest. With an emphasis on community service, a week-long civic project is chosen and everyone finds himself devoting much time and effort to its success. Working as a group brings meaning to the collective Greek identity. Greek Sing turns the tables with an intra-Greek competition, but manages to attain the same goal as it brings the various Greeks together on a common ground.

Parties, desserts, picnics, ad infinitum are found everywhere you turn. The Sigma Chi street dance always has a good band and makes a perfect place to relax and let yourself go. Greek Feast: where thousands of Greeks gather to take part in one of the largest backyard barbecues ever. Entertainment is supplied by top name performers and enhanced by contributions from among the Greek units. Nearly every Greek on campus turns out for this, the main event of Greek Week and the largest function of the Greek year.

Wrapping up Greek Week is the "Session on the Cedar" sponsored by Beta Theta Pi. Fresh-air jazz, sometimes swinging, more often meant for easy-listening, creates the perfect mood for relaxation. Sit on the banks of the Red Cedar. Listen. Contemplate the movement of the water, or the clouds; or close your eyes and let reflections of the past seven days drift across your mind.
Unforgettable, these memories form a happy Kaleidoscope full of warmth and friendship. They create a feeling gained only when so many do so much to promote a common bond and a common goal.

Each trophy is cherished, for behind its brass facade lies the essence of brotherhood.

The Year of the Greek: Memory's Indelible

The year draws to a close. It is a time to look back . . . to see things in perspective. Accomplishments seem many, disappointments few. The TG that seemed a nightmare is overpowered by that term party that never should have ended. The final you blew fall term really wasn't the end of the world, and the Miss MSU candidate that shot you down didn't really have all that much behind her pretty face. The house did well: added five new trophies and raised the grade point two-tenths of a point. Construction for the new addition will begin in August. The pledge class has so much potential . . . you're definitely on the way up. The kids in the house have all changed in their own ways, some are closer, some have drifted away. But the whole remains. And the whole will always remain.

Looking back on this year blends it into sequence with the years that have preceded it. You have learned, you have gained insight, and you have put this wisdom to good use, both for you and for others. You feel melancholy . . . there were so many wonderful moments. It's a happy kind of sadness that one feels when looking back on life.

Spinning constantly on the merry-go-round of life, we are often unaware of the passing of each day.

ALPHA GAMMA DELTA

To the juniors of Alpha Gamma Delta, a high grade point becomes an all-important goal. It has particular meaning for them because the Alpha Gam junior who achieves the highest grade point is awarded a diamond which is mounted on her pin. As the oldest sorority on the MSU campus, Alpha Gamma Delta is steeped in tradition. The event which gives each year a meaningful highlight is the May Morning Breakfast, given in honor of graduating seniors. Alpha Gams participate in many campus activities and take special pride in their Water Carnival floats.

A second place trophy in Homecoming competition touched off the Alpha Delta Pi year with a spark of accomplishment. This sense of accomplishment carried them to a second place in Water Carnival and a victory in the Blood Drive. The part of ADPi in which the women take the greatest pride, however, is a living one. Her name is Kin Mui; she lives in Hong Kong and letters flow regularly between the "across the sea" sisters. Back home the ADPi's are seen in leadership positions campus-wide. Included are a dorm president, the vice-president of AWS, secretary of Pan-Hel, past Greek Week and Spinster Spin chairmen, and an outstanding Greek for '66.

ALPHA EPSILON PHI

Ground-breaking ceremonies for the new house which is located at the corner of Charles and Linden streets started off an exciting year for Alpha Epsilon Phi. The artist's sketch shown at the left became a reality by spring and its doors were opened to twice the number of girls as were able to live in the old AEPhi house. In addition to their change of surroundings, the women also added a new function to their community service program. In conjunction with the Fiji's, AEPhi plans to sponsor an annual Valentine's Day party for an orphanage.

Diversified tastes and talents make the Alpha Xi Delta house a warm and wonderful place to live. The "fuzzies," as they like to be called, take pride in having several members in Mortar Board and other honorary organizations. Though far away, the sister who gets the most attention seems to be Maggie, a Lebanese orphan who is very much a part of the Alpha Xi house. The women of Beta Theta chapter were very honored when, last April, they were chosen to host the province convention of Alpha Xi Delta national. The spirit of the fuzzies is best personified in their housemother, "Mom Jones," to whom goes much of the credit for an outstandingly active house.

Foremost in the thoughts of the AOPi's has been the promise of a new sorority house, to be constructed on their Grand River Avenue lot next year. Although its members are scattered all over the campus and community, this rapidly expanding chapter holds its unity by keeping its ideals of scholarship, service and friendship always in mind. In an effort to encourage scholarship, the AOPi's give an award to the member with the highest grade point, and a bracelet for the most academic improvement each term. The women's philanthropic interests center around the Frontier Nursing Service in Kentucky. Campus activities include members involved in ASMSU, Union Board, Tower Guard, Green Splash, the State News staff and various honoraries.

By devoting much of their time to the Cardiac Aid Society, Alpha Phi's fulfill their community service responsibilities. They help the Society in whatever manner possible, but find the bulk of their work falling into the category of secretarial duties. In addition, the chapter boasts a little brother, specifically, an Indian orphan whom they have adopted. Heavy emphasis is placed on campus activities, as shown by their participation in Water Carnival, Homecoming, Junior 500, and Greek Week. Alpha Phi boasts members who have been selected for the Miss MSU and Homecoming courts, as Junior 500 Queen, Tower Guard President and as Vice-President of the Pan-Hellenic Council.

ALPHA CHI OMEGA

A community of individuals: that's the essence of Greek life in Alpha Chi Omega. In the Alpha Chi community each member is encouraged to strengthen her development as a unique personality, for it is in this way that she contributes most fully to the formation of a vital sisterhood. Whether a Mortar Board or a volleyball champ, an officer on Union Board or an MSU queen, her enthusiasm is the seed of Alpha Chi spirit. The Alpha Chi's also see the Greek system as a whole in much the same manner and this year they have aimed at making their house an integral part of a stronger and more vigorous Greek community, especially through the activities of Greek Week, in which Alpha Chi Omega won the Participation Trophy for the second consecutive year.

Traditions play a large part in the lives of the women of Gamma Phi Beta. The sisters look forward each year to Dad's Day, the Powder Puff football game with Delta Gamma and the Bus Boy Dinner. Gamma Phis are also enthusiastic participants in campus affairs. Greek Sing, Homecoming, Water Carnival, and College Bowl are just some of their many activities. Although unity and loyalty rate high with the Gamma Phis, they are quite successful individually, as evidenced by the sisters who are active in Mortar Board and Alpha Lambda Delta and by those who are on the Varsity Cheerleading squad and the Wolverine staff.

DELTA GAMMA

Boasting a 3—0 record for the past three years of Powder Puff football, Delta Gamma has taken an upper hand in its friendly rivalry with its Harrison Road neighbor, Gamma Phi Beta. DGs also give a helping hand to their blind neighbors in the Lansing area by reading and recording textbooks for MSU students and also by annually hosting a Christmas party for blind children. Scholarship ranks high on the Delta Gamma achievement list, for the women have won the award for the highest sorority grade point average for six consecutive terms. The women are well represented in such honoraries as Mortar Board and Phi Kappa Phi and on the courts of Miss MSU and Miss Lansing pageants.

Amidst the laughter and sleepless nights which were combined with university activities and studying for that all-important grade point, the women of Delta Delta Delta experienced a rewarding year. Bridge parties, auctions and "pro-noun" dinners served to raise money for scholarships which were given to two qualifying university women. Six thirty-four M.A.C. Avenue houses many traditions which the Tri Delts perpetuate through the Founder's Day Dinner and Pansy Breakfast. Delta Delta Delta takes pride in the fact that they have placed first in Homecoming competition for two consecutive years and also that among its members are an Outstanding Greek and The Vice-President of Pan-Hel.

DELTA ZETA

Ten sisters of the Beta Rho chapter attended the national Delta Zeta convention in the Bahamas this year. Also on the Beta Rho agenda were two house parties, a term party and the Triad, which is a dance sponsored by the DZ pledge class in cooperation with two fraternities. Besides participating in house activities, each sister finds a place of her own at Michigan State. The DZ house boasts members who hold such positions as AWS president, vice-president of Presidents Council and the General Chairman of Spinster Spin. Other Delta Zetas are members of Orchesis, Union Board and various athletic teams.

Third place trophies in both Greek Sing and the Sigma Alpha Mu tricycle race brought a feeling of accomplishment to the women of Zeta Tau Alpha. The spirit of "unity with individuality" led the newly recolonized ZTAs to increase their participation in most campus activities. The women demonstrated their hospitality by sponsoring a party for underprivileged children and a Mother's Tea. Dad's Day brings a special highlight to the Zeta Tau Alpha year, which is always a very busy and highly rewarding one.

KAPPA ALPHA THETA

Fall term, an enchanted Kappa Alpha Theta audience listened as their dinner guest, Harold Lloyd, comedian of "The Freshman" fame, spoke of his experiences. Aside from entertaining famous guests, Theta women take part in projects ranging from performing in folk bands and working on the State News staff to serving as missionaries in Alaska and as part-time social workers. Election day found Theta's babysitting while Theta Chi's drove Lansing area mothers to the polls. Scholarly pursuits have earned members places in Tower Guard, Mortar Board and Phi Kappa Phi Honoraries. This year, Kappa Alpha Theta sisters proudly reigned as Miss MSU, ZBT Sweetheart, Miss Bay City and Michigan Bean Queen.

"Diamonds are a girl's best friend," or at least the best friend of the Kappa Delta pledge with highest scholastic average, for she is awarded a diamond for her pin. Rewards for the KD's come in different forms, many of them through their community service. Programs benefiting the underprivileged and trips to the Lansing school for the blind form the hub of the KD philanthropy. Kappa Delta sisters also find participation in campus activities most rewarding. Members hold positions on Senior Council, State News and Union Board.

KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA

A code of unity and cooperation guides the women of Kappa Kappa Gamma both within their own house and within the entire Greek system. The code is the foundation for the spirit demonstrated by their full support of the Howell State Hospital Project, a Greek Week activity. The Kappas also work closely with the Pi Phis to sponsor their annual Monmouth Duo Dance in commemoration of their common origin at Monmouth College. Academic spirit is encouraged by awarding a ring each term to the woman demonstrating the highest scholastic achievement.

This year marks the 100th anniversary of Pi Beta Phi, the oldest women's fraternity in the nation. Founded at Monmouth, Illinois, Pi Beta Phi and Kappa Kappa Gamma combine to celebrate an annual dance, the "Monmouth Duo", in honor of their establishment. Each year during the Christmas season, Delta Tau Delta fraternity and the Pi Phis promote the Christmas spirit by singing carols during the All-University tree lighting ceremony. Pi Beta Phi was especially honored to have one of their members, Gretchen Bouwens, chosen as "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" for 1966-67. As a philanthropic project, the Pi Phis are presently sponsoring a foster child in Korea.

SIGMA DELTA TAU

At last an end can be seen to the trials and tribulations endured by the women of Sigma Delta Tau in their so-called "new" house. The house presently on their Center Street site will soon be torn down to make way for a really new house due for completion next Spring. Although the SDT's have lived in their present house just a little over a year, that year has been a nightmare structured around leaky pipes, flooding, and the world's most delinquent furnace. While waiting for the new house, the SDT's are keeping busy with various campus and community activities. Members of Sigma Delta Tau have served on Senior Council, as Water Carnival Executive Secretary, and participate in several honorary organizations.

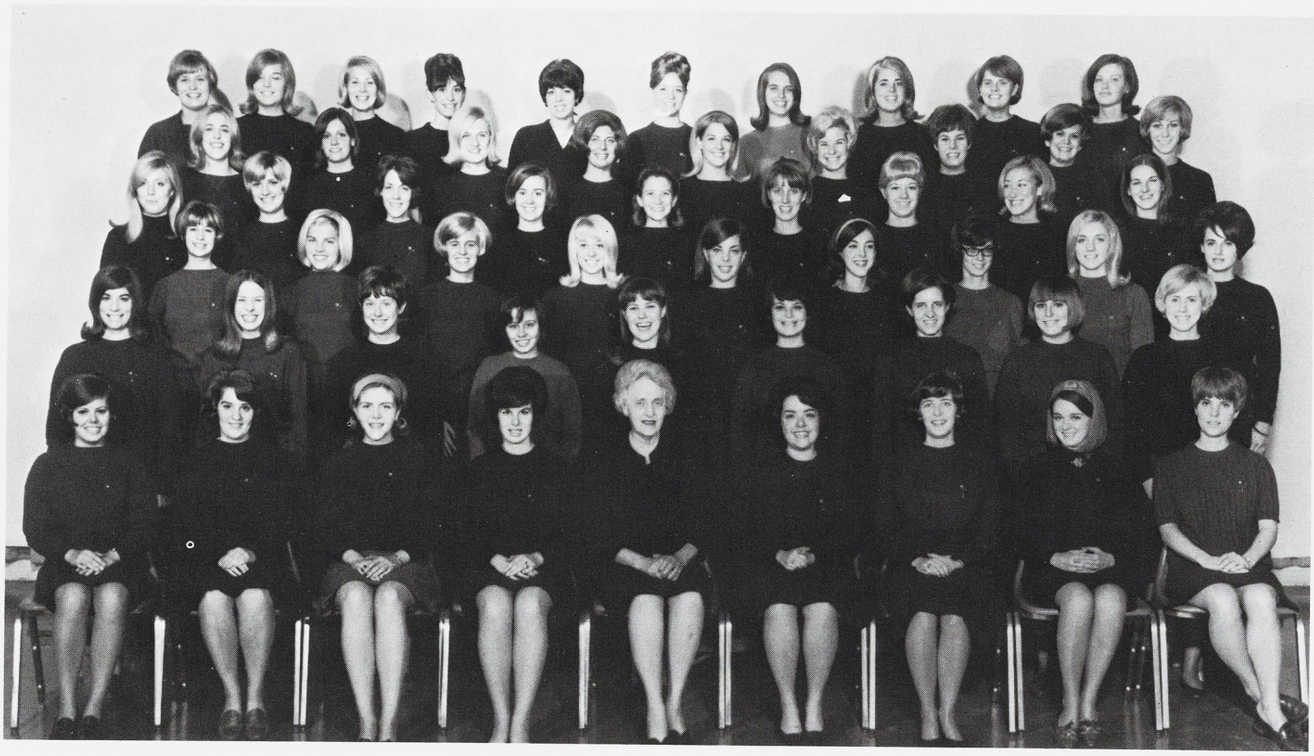

The dream of a larger house became a reality for the Sigma Kappa's this year. A spacious addition was officially opened during winter term with an all-University open house. While maintaining high academic standards, Sigma Kappa's are always active in many campus organizations and functions. This year, Sigma Kappa National presented the Michigan State chapter with a scholarship award. Sigma Kappa's also participate in a number of house activities including Buddy Breakfasts, Turn-About dinners, Dad's Day and a Pledge-Active slumber party. The chapter also sponsors a gerontology project at the Ingham County Hospital. A spring term party rounds out the year.

PHI MU

The Halloween tradition of trick-or-treating has special meaning for Phi Mu. Each year the women join with a fraternity in the collection of candy for hospitalized children. Further fulfulling their responsibility to their community, Phi Mu's participate in blood drives and fund raising activities. To facilitate individual as well as chapter growth, the women of Phi Mu participate as active members of many University organizations including AWS, Union Board and professional honoraries. Phi Mu's goal is to afford to each member through the sisterhood, the best opportunity to develop her potential as an individual.

Celebrating its 40th year on campus, Chi Omega anxiously awaits a belated anniversary gift, the completion of their new Georgian Colonial house, located on Burcham Drive. A favorite annual activity is the "Christmas Kindness" program for which the women wear costumes while caroling at local homes for the aged. Feast and famine battle for places at the Chi O table during the "Steak and Beans" dinner. Members who have earned a grade point above the sorority average eat steak, while the rest of the sisters must be content with beans. The year's activities draw to a close with Happy Un-Birthday parties for Chi O's whose birthdays fall during the summer months.

"Advancement through Knowledge and Action" is the national project which gives deeper meaning to the letters AKA. Sisters of Alpha Kappa Alpha here at State implement the program at the Lansing Boys Training School. Each girl visits the school and spends time talking with the boys, teaching them to dance, and generally trying to show each boy that someone really does care about him. Although it's most important, community service is regularly set aside for a variety of social and campus activities which include Greek Sing, Water Carnival, and Junior 500. First, second and third place awards for the past three years of Junior 500 competition grace the Alpha Kappa Alpha trophy case.

Stressing public service to promote high cultural, intellectual and moral standards, Delta Sigma Theta annually sponsors several philanthropic projects. Promoting mental health, international understanding and increased job opportunities are but a few ways that the Delta's volunteer for community service. The women present an "Icebreaker" dance each fall term to aid new students in their orientation to campus social life. Such honors as a first place in Greek Sing and a second place in Junior 500 came to the Delta's during the past year. Not forgetting academic responsibilities, Delta Sigma Theta also won a first place trophy for scholastic achievement.

An even blend of "business and pleasure" gives Alpha Kappa Psi a mark of distinction. As the largest professional fraternity in the nation, its cultural and scholastic endeavors are closely keyed to the business world. Field trips to the GM Technical Center and guest speakers from large corporations such as Brunswick and Prudential Life highlighted the AKPsi year. Fulfilling its alternate capacity as a social fraternity, AKPsi participates in most campus activities and closes its school year with a formal dinner dance. Emphasizing a spirit of brotherhood and charity, the men joined in the Muscular Dystrophy drive and aided a needy family at Christmastime.

ALPHA TAU OMEGA

Taking a new and refreshing look at what fraternity life should mean, the men of Alpha Tau Omega are attempting to round out their activity by placing increased emphasis on the cultural and scholastic aspects of the brotherhood. They have begun to increase their interest in all-University activities, gaining positions in student government and as IFC committee chairmen. Traditionally top competitors in Junior 500, ATO's also participate in Homecoming and Greek Week activities. Both the Muscular Dystrophy drive and the Easter Seal campaign have received strong support from the brothers. Winners in three separate divisions, the ATO's can usually be found among the top five fraternities in all-around IM competition.

Greek Week's finishing touch is added by the men of Beta Theta Pi when they sponsor their annual "Session on the Cedar." As the festivities of the week draw to a close on Sunday afternoon, University jazz musicians perform informally, as groups of listeners gather on the banks of the Red Cedar behind the Beta house. In addition to supporting Greek Week, Beta Theta Pi gives a boost to the annual Powder Puff football game by supplying the coaching staff for the Gamma Phi's. Enthusiastic participants in all other University activities, the Beta's can be found working on Homecoming floats, Water Carney committee, student legislative bodies, and competing in all IM sports.

DELTA SIGMA PHI

An all-university book drive for the men in Vietnam gave an aura of success to the Delta Sigma year. Adding to the Delt Sig feeling of accomplishment was a prize-winning Homecoming display. Leroy Augenstein, member of the State Board of Education and Chairman of the MSU Biophysics Department highlighted the guest speaker roster. Delt Sigs came close to 100% participation in the campus blood drives. Delta Sigma Phi has lived up to its belief that a well planned and balanced life which shows definite interest in both University and community affairs is the key to success.

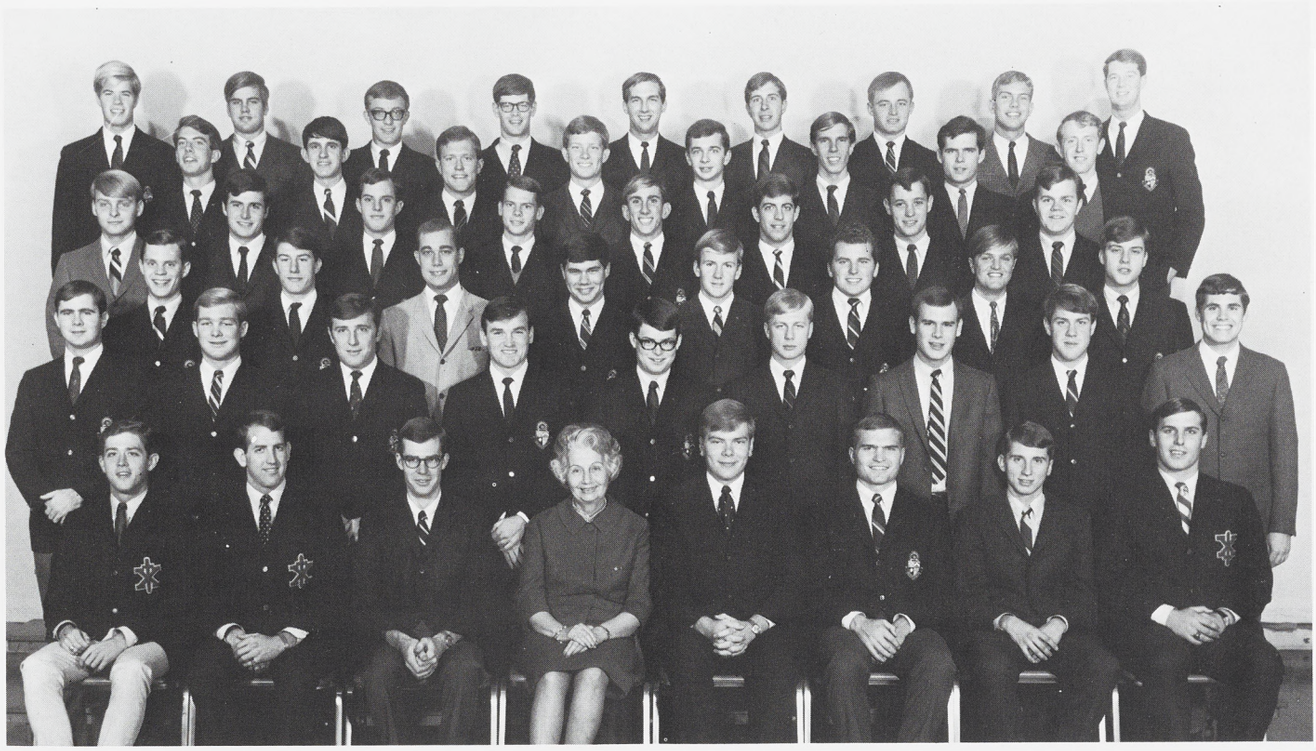

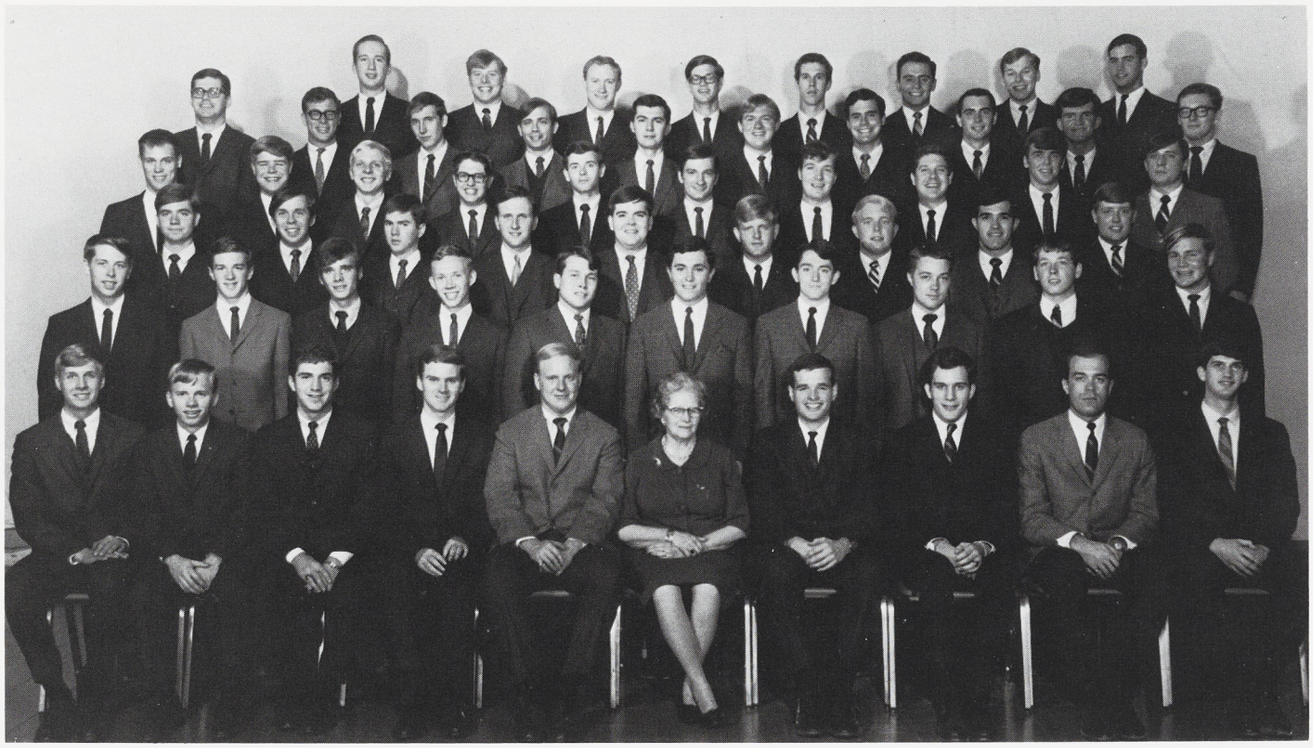

A new home, a very special award and the ever-present and all important feeling of brotherhood made the year one to remember for Delta Tau Delta. A feeling of pride enveloped each member as he began fall term by moving into 330 N. Harrison Road and did his part to make it "home" for the Delts. One of the most important things to be added was the award from Delta Tau Delta national naming Iota chapter one of its "Top Ten." Perennially known for individual achievement, the brothers are also proud of their accomplishments as a whole. Delta Tau Delta finished second scholastically last winter term, were block champs in basketball and finished second in fraternity softball in the spring.

DELTA UPSILON

With chapters traversing the North American continent, Delta Upsilon is only one of the "international" fraternities in existence today. From Montreal to Miami and from Portland to Puebla, the DU spirit unites men in a bond of brotherhood. The Michigan State chapter is known for its spirit of leadership and participation. Members of Delta Upsilon have distinguished themselves in varsity sports and in student government as well as in honoraries and campus activities.

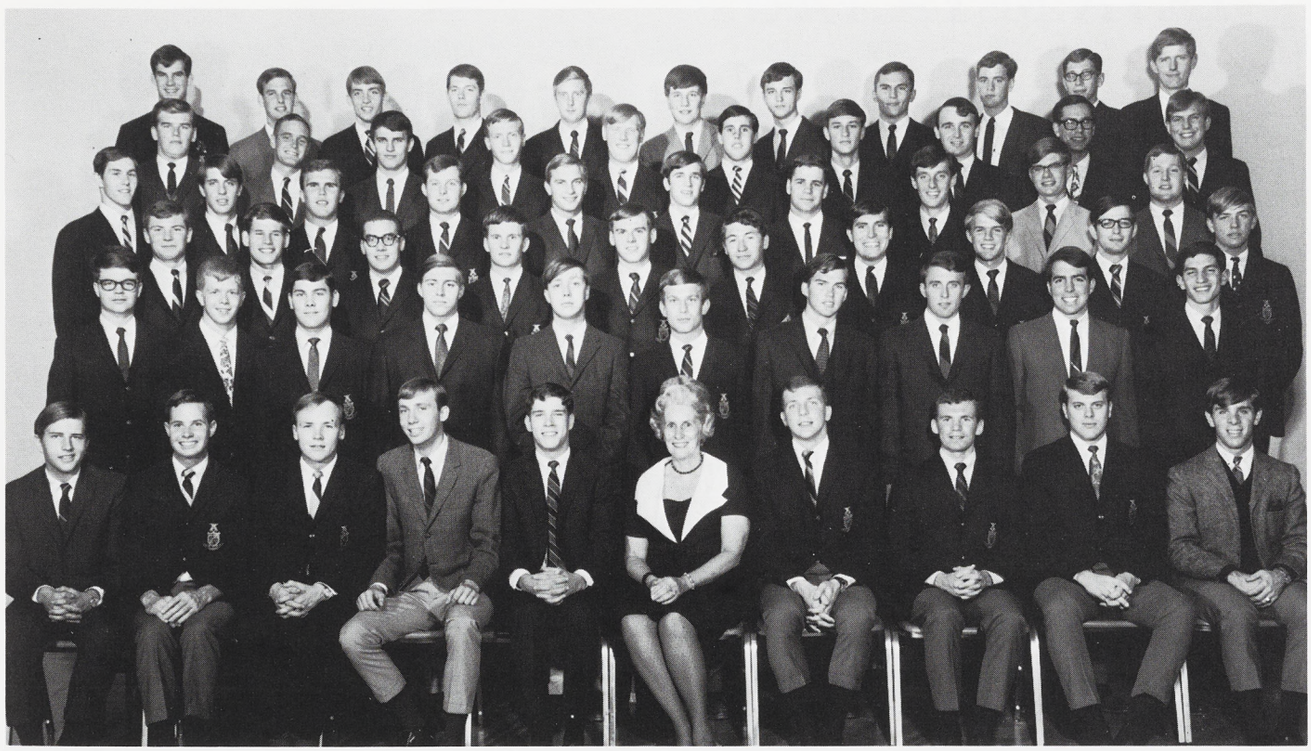

Founded in 1935, Delta Chi is continually building its reputation of striving for perfection. Outstanding Delta Chi's occupy such positions on campus as president of IFC, Cabinet president of ASMSU, vice-president of Student Affairs and Greek Week general chairman. Brotherhood and group effort, however, form the roots of Delta Chi achievement. The men placed sixth among fraternities in the race for the coveted All-Sports trophy, their greatest strength lying in the fields of tennis and track. The Delta Chi national scholarship award is also among the chapter's list of achievements.

ZETA BETA TAU

The world of politics might do well to keep an eye on the men of Zeta Beta Tau. The brothers show strong interest in governmental activities as illustrated by the numerous executive positions which they hold. Zebes presently serve as vice-presidents of both IFC and ASMSU, hold seats on the Traffic Court board, and are members of Excalibur and Blue Key. Also accomplished in varsity athletics and campus intramurals, the brothers boast a sports record that includes top places in IM events for the past seven years.

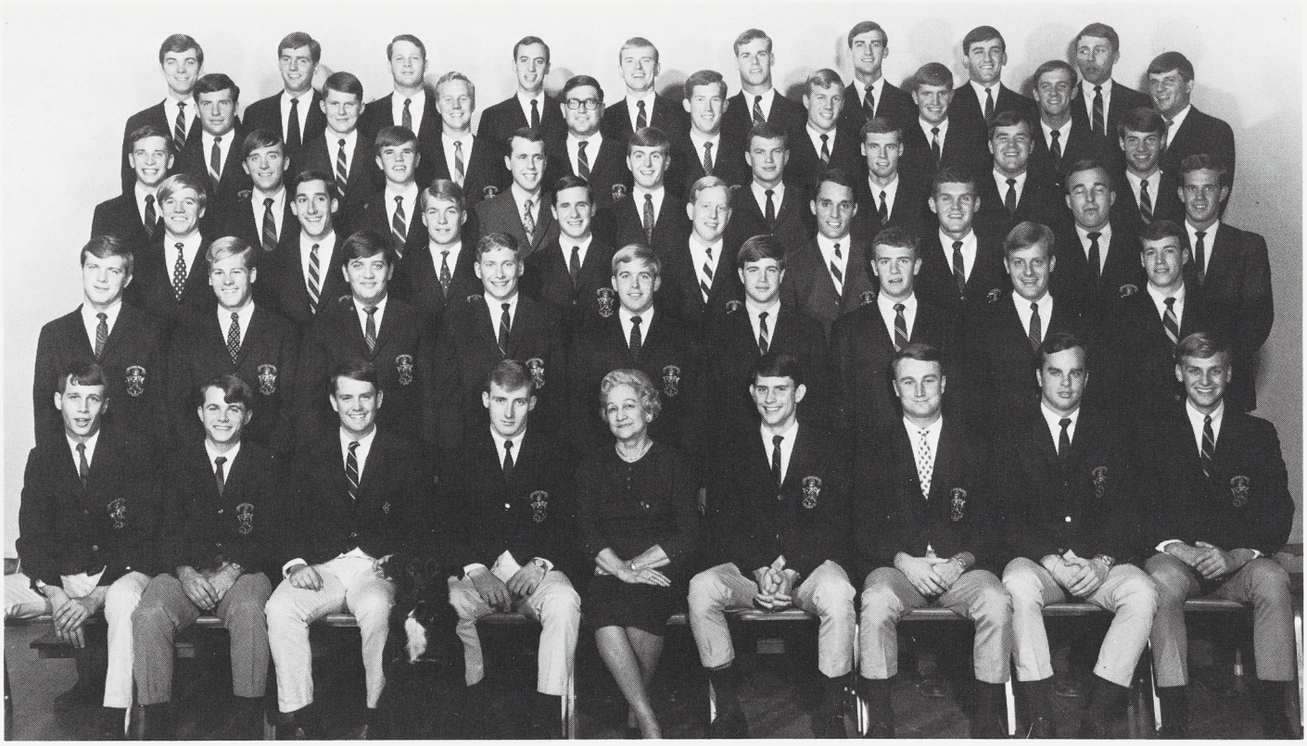

Growing pains have forced Theta Delta Chi to give up its enviable position as the only fraternity on sorority row. The Theta Delt's now live in a newer and considerably larger house located on Bailey street. Since its installation just two years ago, MSU's chapter of Theta Delta Chi has nearly doubled in size, keeping progress as its watchword and the pulse of the University as its guide. Theta Delt's are active participants in all campus-wide activities and are represented on the Union Board of Directors, Interfraternity Council and on the staff of the newly formed Greek newspaper, the Oracle.

LAMBDA CHI ALPHA

Since 1922, Gamma Omicron chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha has held a position of leadership at MSU. As sponsors of the Junior 500, the men of Lambda Chi feel a special tie with all-University activities. Their talent and enthusiasm have touched many phases of University life and left their impression. Both Block S and Greek Feast were begun under Lambda Chi direction. Lambda Chi's are participants in such varsity sports as football, baseball and swimming and are top contenders in all intramural sports. The men of Lambda Chi Alpha feel that accomplishment is a product of unity, and it is by this code that they direct their activity.

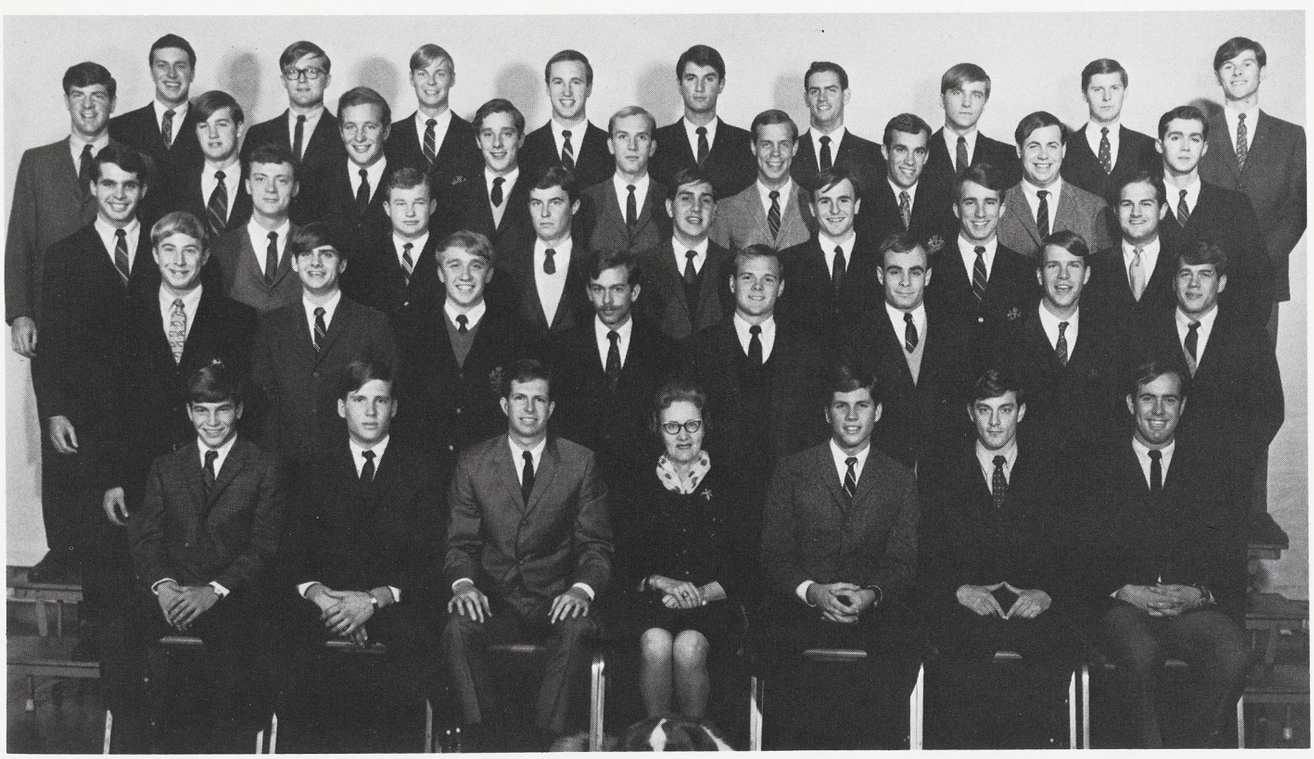

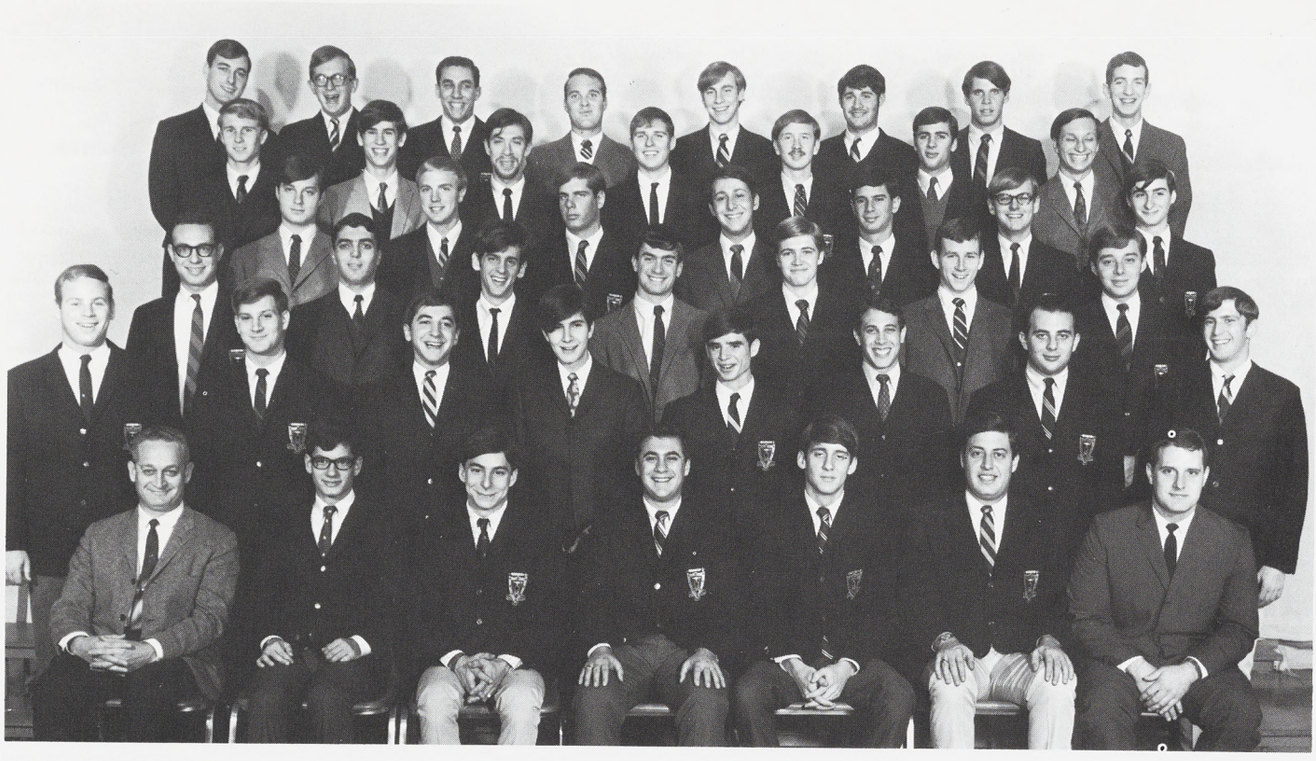

Eight years of consecutive victory in intramural swimming distinguish the men of Sigma Alpha Epsilon. Members also participate in varsity sports and in student government. Leadership and national brotherhood are promoted as Michigan Gamma chapter sends three brothers to a leadership school at Northwestern University each summer. Scholarship, too, plays an important role in SAE brotherhood. Each pledge is required to carry a 2.5 grade point average. The men of Sigma Alpha Epsilon unite in service by contributing much of their time and effort to UNICEF.

SIGMA ALPHA MU

MSU sorority girls get a chance to regain their second childhood when Sigma Alpha Mu sponsors its annual Tricycle Race. The brothers are not only cordial hosts for Greek Week fun, but take part in many other campus activities. The Sammies received a second place trophy for this year's homecoming display and also captured first place honors in both IM handball and all-University bowling. Individuals hold seats on Student Judiciary Board, memberships in Blue Key, and serve as Greek Week General Chairman and vice-president of IFC. Boasting a larger pledge class than any other MSU fraternity, the Sammies' group unity and enthusiasm has remained strong despite the fact that their house was lost in an untimely fire last year.

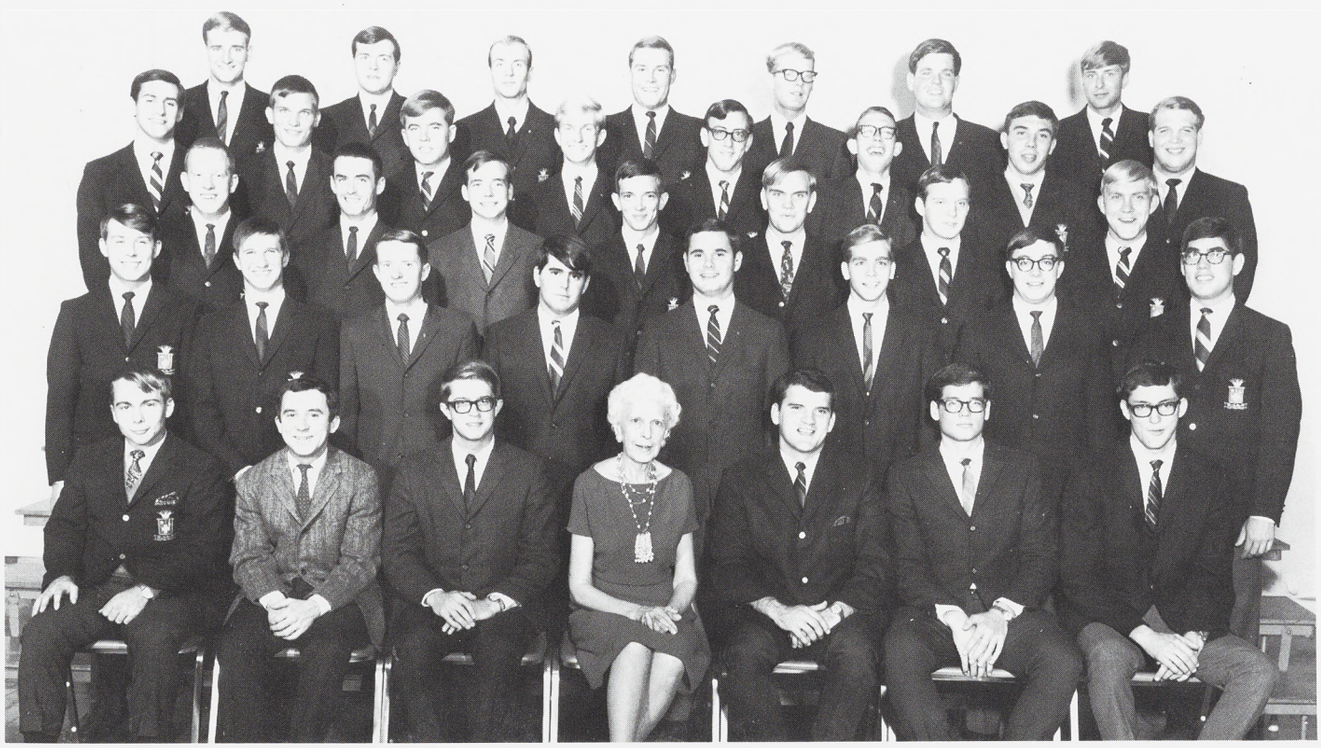

Spartan spirit plays an important role in the life at Sigma Phi Epsilon. With two cheerleaders and the MSU mascot in the house, few Sig Ep's fail to rally in support of their team at every given opportunity. This spirit carries over into campus activities as Sig Ep's are seen heartily participating in Homecoming, Greek Week, and in all IM sports. Individual members of Sigma Phi Epsilon serve on the State News staff and hold various governmental positions including Union Board president. The brothers take pride in the time and effort spent in support of both the UNICEF fund raising drives and the children's camp sponsored by the Sig Ep national.

SIGMA CHI

Though the Sigma Chi's may be most famous for their Sweethearts and Coral Gables get-togethers, the men of MSU's Gamma Psi chapter are also scholars. Sigma Chi earned first, second and third place scholastic rankings among fraternities for fall, winter and spring terms respectively. Another achievement for Sigma Chi this year was capturing the fraternity All-Sports trophy by a comfortable margin, thus distinguishing themselves as capable athletes. One of the favorite activities of Greek Week is the Sigma Chi Street Dance. This has indeed been the "year that was" for Sigma Chi. Growth and achievement have projected them into prominence in the eyes of the national fraternity, campus and community.

Using the slogan, "the newest sensation in fraternities," Tau Delta Phi began to build its reputation on the MSU campus. Designed to fulfill a need no other fraternity could fill, Tau Delta Phi chose its first members from among student leaders who had an unconventional attitude toward fraternal living. The Tau Delt ideal has built a growing and prospering community of individuals who continue their participation in student government and campus activities. The brothers compete in all intramural sports and are represented in many honoraries. As the youngest fraternity on campus, Tau Delta Phi is ready to be molded by the men who join its ranks.

TRIANGLE

The symbol of the triangle represents the common interest which the brothers of this fraternity share in engineering and the sciences. Having maintained a scholastic rating among the top three fraternities at MSU for two consecutive years, Triangle takes pride in having a large percentage of its members represented in honorary societies. The men of Triangle have demonstrated their tough competitive spirit by capturing the Homecoming display trophy four times in the last six years. Some of the past year's social activities included a scavenger hunt, a hayride, and the annual Sweetheart Ball. Highlight of the year was a large party held in Chicago's Merchandise Mart. Mutual concern and participation among the members of Triangle have built a meaningful experience in brotherhood.

With the establishment of 100 active alumni chapters across the nation, Phi Gamma Delta sets its sights beyond the University. Selecting men from a vast range of interest areas, the brothers believe that a well-rounded chapter is the foundation upon which diversified and capable citizens are built. The largest events of the year for the Fijis are those which are celebrated nationally. Traditional social events include the Purple Garter, the formal spring term party appropriately named "Fiji Island" and the Frank Norris Pig Dinner, their annual stag alumni party. The tradition of participation is strong in the Fiji house. The men have used it well, for they have placed first in Greek Sing and first in Greek Week participation for two consecutive years.

PHI KAPPA SIGMA

The men of Skull House place special emphasis on scholastic achievement. Reaping the rewards of scholarly pursuits, they receive many scholarships annually and can boast that twelve of their forty members are national merit finalists. Social events, too, are an important part of Phi Kappa Sigma life. Each year the Skulls hold a spring formal and sponsor special activities for parents in conjunction with the all-University Parent's Weekend. The men of Skull House have taken home first place honors for Greek Sing in two out of the past three competitions. Brothers also hold positions on Student Board and Greek Week and Water Carnival committees.

A six-and-one-half ton granite rock graces the lawn of Phi Kappa Psi. Named simply, "The Rock", the phosphorescent eyes painted on its surface catch the attention of every passer-by. Water Carnival is the campus activity which receives primary emphasis from the Phi Psi's, who are leaders in its organization and are responsible for creating its theme each year. Phi Kappa Psi members are also active in student government and in the State Singers. Alumni breakfasts, held each year on the days of Michigan and Homecoming football games, and a Founder's Day celebration are only part of the Phi Psi tradition.

PSI UPSILON

Unity, versatility and tradition are emphasized at Psi Upsilon. The brothers vigorously participate in student government and intramural activities, while rarely failing to rally for a Psi U social event. Studies are not forgotten, however, as well over ten percent of the brothers are in Honors College. The prominent role that tradition plays in Psi Upsilon is due, in large part, to the age of the fraternity. Founded nationally in 1833, it traces its history at Michigan State from 1889. Psi U takes special pride in the distinction afforded them by their perennial homecoming display: a large sign reading "Rah."

ALPHA GAMMA RHO

Chartered in 1922, Tau chapter of Alpha Gamma Rho is the oldest fraternity on campus. Initially, membership in Alpha Gamma Rho was limited to students majoring in agriculture, but as agriculture has broadened, so has AGR, until today its brotherhood spans a diversity of interests and academic pursuits. Campus activities are an important part of the life of each AGR, and the men take great interest in Homecoming, Water Carnival, Junior 500 and Greek Week. Intramural sports receive special emphasis as the AGR's look forward to each new season.

ALPHA EPSILON PI

Traditions play an important part in the life of each member of Alpha Epsilon Pi. This closely-knit brotherhood of forty-five men takes great pride in the benefits each member receives from an experience in fraternal living. By taking part in campus activities such as Homecoming, Water Carnival and Greek Week festivities, the AEPi's have developed a program of diversified activity to encourage the development of the individual. Intramural competition and countless social functions rounded out the year's agenda of activities designed to build a brotherhood of well-rounded men.

ALPHA PHI ALPHA

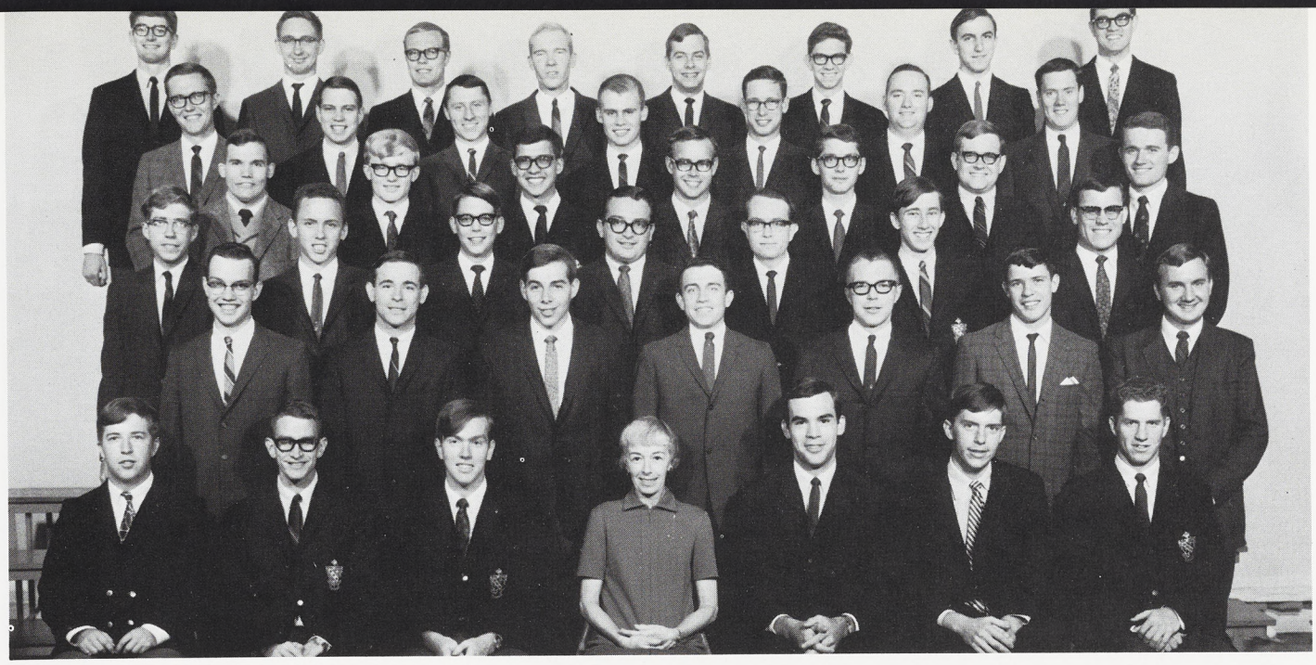

The underlying tenet of Alpha Phi Alpha finds its culmination in the bond of brotherhood which is built upon the common interests and ideals of its members. The brothers seek to broaden their perspectives and enrich their lives through a mutual association which finds its purpose in the ideals of the fraternity. Academic endeavors, community service, athletic competition, and social activities make up the framework within which each member of Alpha Phi Alpha structures his standard of living and working.

DELTA SIGMA PI

Stressing professionalism, Delta Sigma Pi is composed of men in the college of business and related fields. Professional tours and speakers demonstrate the practical aspects of business to the brothers while supplementing classroom material. In addition to sharing a common field of interest, the forty-four members of DSPi actively participate in campus affairs. Football season '66 saw "Wipe Out Michigan" flung across the DSPi house on bold strips of "toilet paper".

FARMHOUSE

For the first time in MSU history, the Interfraternity Council Scholarship trophy has been retired. Farmhouse has claimed it by achieving the highest house grade point average in IFC competition for two consecutive terms. The men have also claimed trophies for second place in Greek sing and third place in both Winter and Water Carnivals. Farmhouse strives to fulfill its motto, "Builders of Men" through its belief that good leadership is dependent upon good intellectual training.

THETA CHI

First place trophies in Homecoming display competition have come to be almost synonymous with the name Theta Chi. The men have been undefeated in the float competition for the past three years. Theta Chi's heartily participate in a variety of campus activities, holding executive positions in student government and many honorary organizations. Theta Chi serves the community by providing taxi service for citizens on voting days while Kappa Alpha Theta women baby-sit for those parents who wish to take advantage of the program.

KAPPA SIGMA

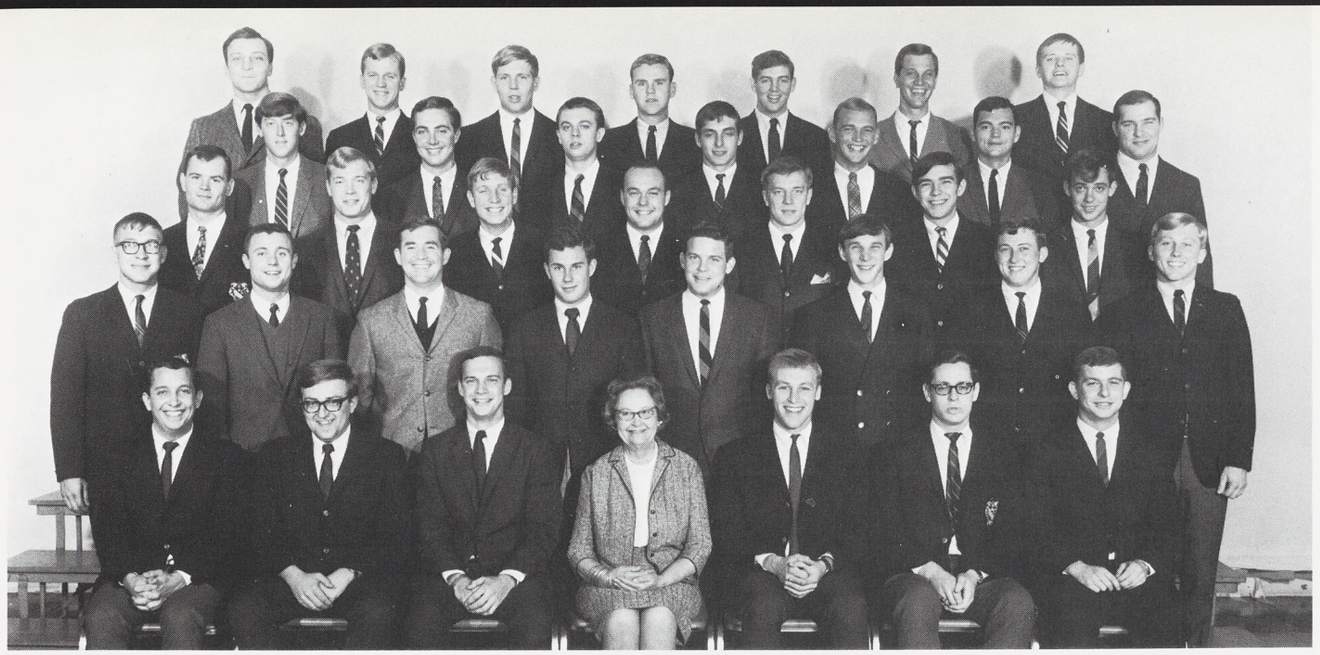

The annual Powder Puff football game between Gamma Phi Beta and Delta Gamma receives a special brand of support from the men of Kappa Sigma. Members traditionally make up the cheerleading squad for the Gamma Phi's. Not only do the Kappa Sig's have cheerleaders in their midst, but they also boast a semifinalist in the "Ugliest Greek" contest as one of their brothers. In addition to Greek activities, all phases of campus affairs play an important part in Kappa Sigma life. The men have excelled in intramural hockey, bringing home first and second place trophies for the past two consecutive years.

PI KAPPA PHI

Helping to collect money for the annual Muscular Dystrophy drive is one of the community services to which the men of Pi Kappa Phi devote much time and effort. Their winning spirit is reflected in their enthusiastic participation in campus as well as community activities. Such events as IM sports, Homecoming, Water Carnival, and College Bowl find staunch supporters among the Pi Kapp's. The brothers also host social functions of their own, a favorite being the annual Spring Rose Ball. This small but active group of brothers also places heavy emphasis on the scholastic as well as the social aspect of Greek life.

SIGMA NU

Enlarging upon the great American tradition of the backyard barbecue, Sigma Nu hosted the annual Greek Feast as part of last spring term's Greek Week activities. In addition to being enthusiastic participants in such University activities as Homecoming and Water Carnival, the brothers annually host a semi-formal Christmas party and a Homecoming dinner in honor of returning alumni. But, for the Sigma Nu's, enjoyment of social functions goes along with a larger sense of social responsibility, as they are presently supporting an orphan girl in Europe.

PHI DELTA THETA

MSU can boast a new first thanks to the men of Phi Delta Theta. This past year, the men began an annual Frisby tournament and emerged victorious. Future plans for the furthering of Frisby on a national basis include a challenge to Notre Dame to join in next year's competition. Outstanding members of Phi Delta Theta are leaders in student government and many have been honored with memberships in Blue Key. Phi Delt's give much time and effort toward the betterment of their community and traditionally declare a Community Service Day on which they give special emphasis to this pursuit.

Phi Kappa Tau

An apartment-style house distinguishes the Phi Taus from the majority of the Greek units on campus. Residents include men who hail from New Hampshire to Hawaii, and who embody the Phi Tau goals of close fellowship and cooperation. Among the brothers are members of Phi Kappa Phi, Phi Eta Sigma, Marketing Club, Varsity Club, and Honors College. The Phi Tau spirit has been manifested this year in its rapid growth and enthusiasm in Intramural Sports, Greek Week, Junior 500, and Homecoming. In its forty-third year on the Michigan State campus, Phi Kappa Tau is even more active and diversified than in the past.

Phi Mu Alpha

Men who are actively engaged in the study and practice of musical pursuits make up the brotherhood of Phi Mu Alpha. Their purpose is to advance the cause of music whenever and wherever possible, and they do so by participating in numerous concerts and recitals both on and off campus. Collectively, the Phi Mu Alphas sponsor a jazz show and an American Composers Concert each year.

Phi Sigma Delta

Moving into the new house at 505 M.A.C. has facilatated an increase of one-third in the Phi Sigma Delta membership and has given the brotherhood a new perspective. Community service work is one of the more prominent endeavors of the house. Last spring term, Phi Sigma Delta collected well over three hundred dollars in its national fund raising campaign for the fight against muscular dystrophy. This same spirit has carried them to the top of the list in blood donations with seven straight trophies. Music is of particular interest to the brothers, taking its place at the center of almost all informal activities.

The year's reflections accumulate behind a facade of contemplation.

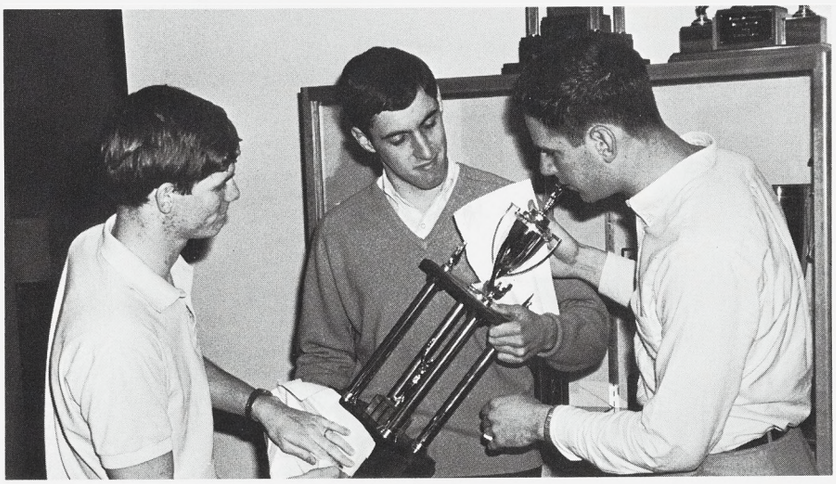

Chef's duties are a part of each member's contribution to cooperative living.

Bethel Manor's way of life emphasizes the development of Christian character, spiritual brotherhood, and a sense of leadership with belief in Christ and His teaching as its foundation. In addition to sponsoring a contestant in the Miss MSU pageant, Bethel Manor's social activities included a sleigh ride term party. ASHER WOMEN

Having spent a year in their new coed house, Asher women have found that their proximity to Asher men provided enjoyable social contact as well as supplying extra muscle for special projects. These service-minded Christian Science women may often be found mending books and toys in the MSU nursery. At Christmas time, Asher women serve their community by helping to trim trees along Grand River Avenue. This closely-knit group encourages high academic performance with such plans as the Study Table Program, which requires a specific number of supervised study hours for students having difficulty maintaining grades. Asher women have also proven themselves successful athletes by earning first place in the all-University canoe race and by tying for top honors in both intramural basketball and volleyball.

Membership in Asher Student Foundation for men has increased by one-half this year due to the completion of their new, larger house on Abbott Road. Asher house has the distinction of being the first approved off-campus coed living unit in MSU history. With religion as a common ground, the purpose of the Asher organization is to provide and maintain a home for Christian Scientists at MSU while serving to promote an environment encouraging academic and religious growth. Avid participants in campus activities, Asher men took third place in the Junior 500, second place in Homecoming display competition and brought home a first place Trophy for the all-University canoe race.

EVANS SCHOLARS

The benefits of professional golfing are reaped annually by more than 600 men throughout the U.S. These are the Evans Scholars, members of the largest scholarship organization in the nation. Founded in 1916 by progolfer Chick Evans, the Evans Scholars offer a potential four-year scholarship plus the benefits of fraternal living to each of its members. Each fall term, the MSU chapter pledges sixteen men who must someday lead the house in many campus activities, including Homecoming, Water Carnival, Junior 500, and intramural sports. This year's roster of guest speakers featured Duffy Daughtery, John Bennington, Bruce Fossum and founder Chick Evans.

1967 marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of continued service to the men of MSU by Elsworth Cooperative. To celebrate the occasion, Elsworth burned its twenty year mortgage nearly three years in advance of its due date. Financial stability continues to play an intricate role in life at Elsworth House. Individual members are honored each year as awards are presented for the highest grade point, best athlete, and most outstanding contribution to the house.

HEDRICK HOUSE

As the pioneer in cooperative living at MSU, Hedrick House holds a position of leadership and excellence in its field. Although economical living is the "reason why" for Hedrick men, they find time to actively participate in campus affairs, sponsor many social events, and also to bring home honors in the Gables' spring chugging contest. The academic side of life at Hedrick House suffers no neglect, however, as can be shown by their victories in off-campus College Bowl competition for the past two consecutive years.

Supervised housing provides privacy and economy.

Off-Campus Living:
A Collage of New Experiences

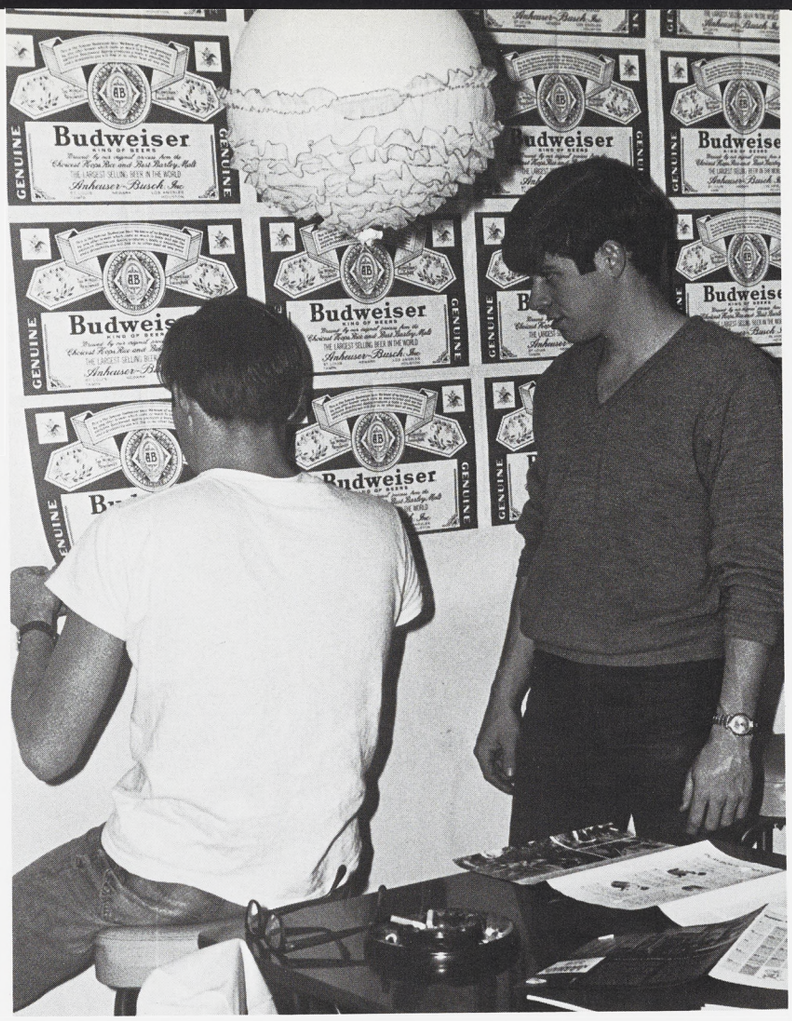

A typical supervised residence.

Apartment decor is often inspired by interests of the occupants.

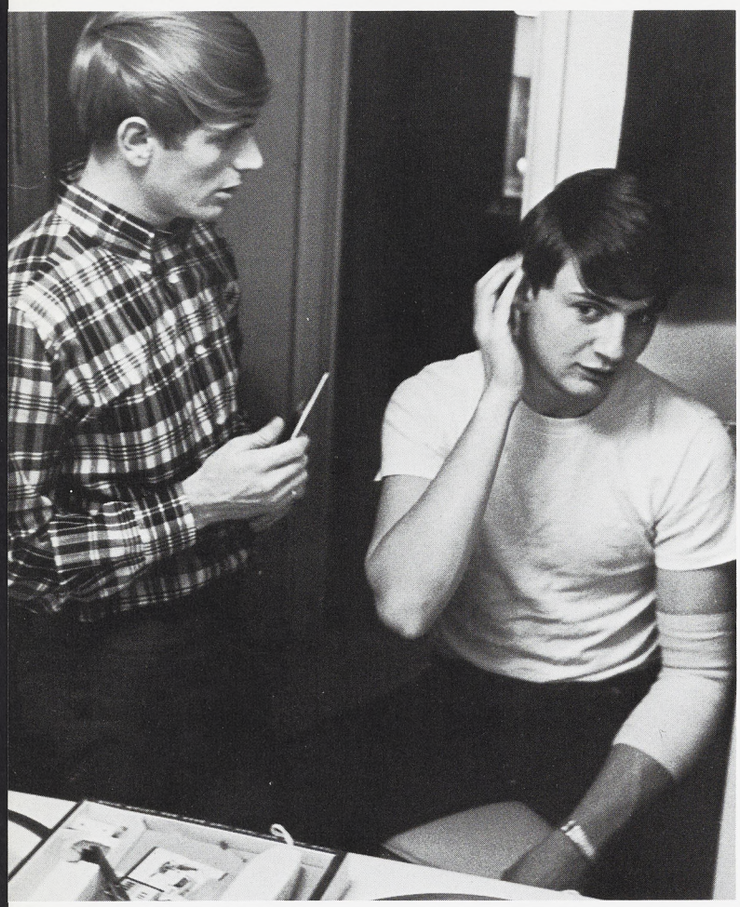

When a student decides to reside off campus, he has a choice of living in either supervised or unsupervised housing. Supervised housing requires a city license and a supervisor in charge who enforces many of the same regulations as in the residence halls. Unsupervised housing can include any type of residence from a single room to a housetrailer to a one or two bedroom apartment. This type of housing is usually most in demand by students because of the greater amount of freedom involved.

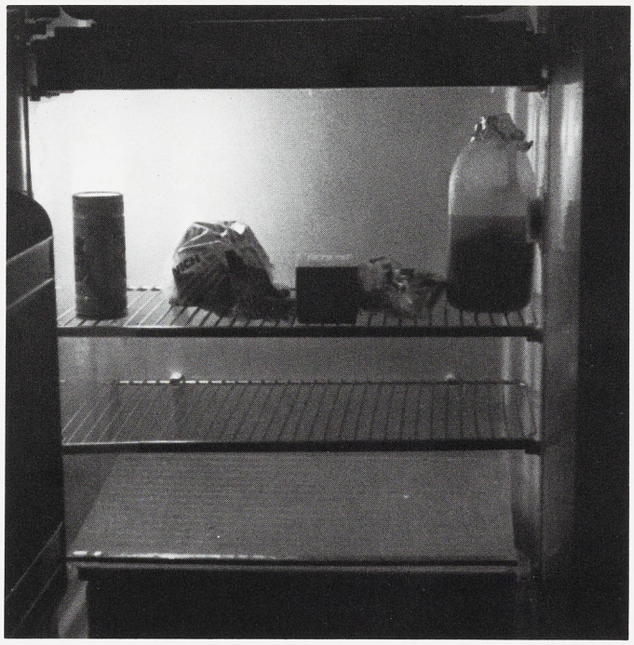

The main advantage of supervised housing is its economy. Most supervised residences are rooming houses containing several double rooms and cooking facilities. Students who do not need elaborate furnishings and private telephones to be contented are able to save a considerable amount by obtaining this kind of housing.

When four or five students start looking for housing, they usually think in terms of a luxury apartment or a whole house. Two bedrooms, one or two bathrooms, living room and kitchen make up the typical residences. Because of the larger size, there are more possibilities of decorating to the tastes of the inhabitants. Whether original artwork or pinups adorn the walls, the chance for diversity offered by these apartments is only another reason students are anxious to move to them, away from the uniformity of residence halls.

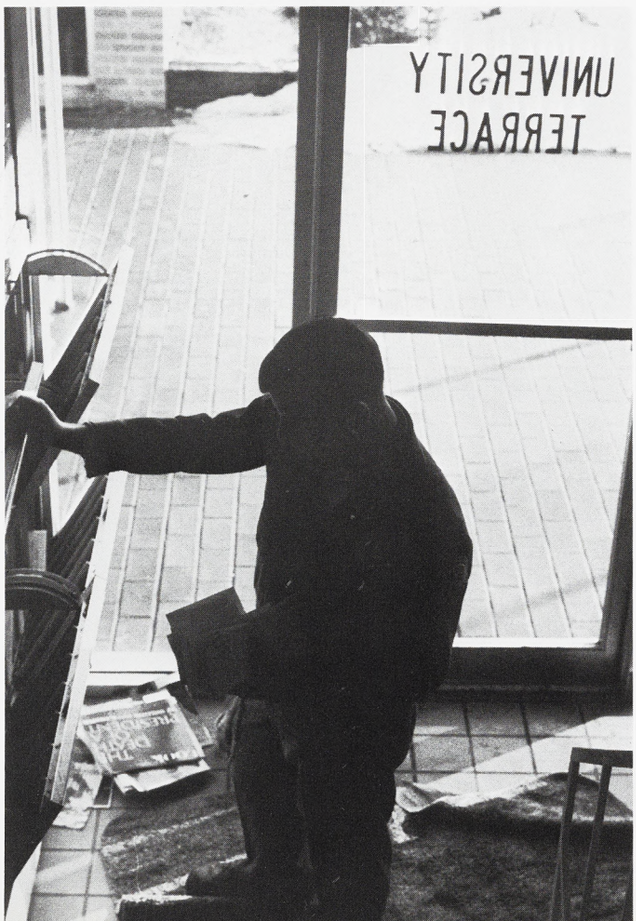

Barbering skills may be one reason for choosing a roommate.

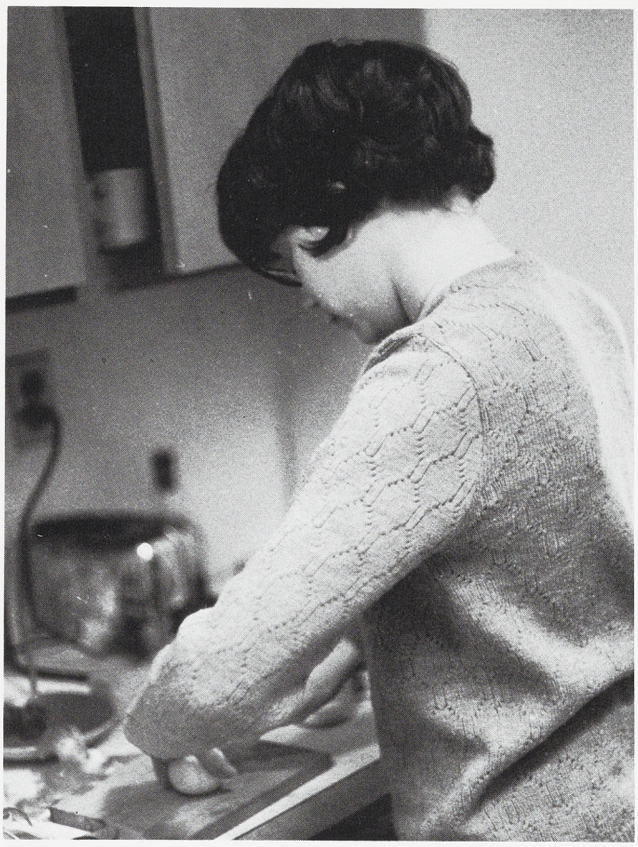

The bare essentials

The end of the month brings the postman with unwelcome bills.

"Getting an apartment" is a dream uppermost in the thoughts of the average dorm-bound collegian. Thoughts of nightly parties, television in bed, and Playboy pin-ups everywhere flash through the heads of those considering the move. But as anyone living in an apartment or rooming house knows, the many responsibilities incurred by moving off campus with three or four others may out-weigh the social benefits of having one's own apartment. Paying utility bills, preparing balanced meals, shopping for the week's supply of food, doing dishes and performing other household chores take time and are things that might otherwise be taken care of by the dorm cafeteria or the University itself.

Independence can mean it's your turn to empty the garbage.

The independently-minded student who decides that the austere and many times noisy atmosphere of the residence hall is not the place for him must pick his roommates carefully, choosing people he can get along with and who will shoulder a fair share of responsibilities. If an argument should arise, there is no resident assistant down the hall to arbitrate a settlement. Basic routines must be established in regard to study times, meal hours and party-giving. All these problems must be considered in advance if the peace and serenity envisioned before moving is to be realized.

Another thing for potential off-campus residents to consider is that even though they are students at Michigan State, they are also residents of the city, and must abide by local laws. Consumption of alcoholic beverages, garbage disposal and excessive noise all concern the community, and are regulated by its agencies. This added responsibility of participation in the life of the community makes off-campus living suited only for the very mature.

Pop! Chug it . . . "Ready for another yet?"—one of the distinct advantages to living in unsupervised housing.

One big reason many students move off campus is the vast social freedom they enjoy. With few restrictions to limit their weekend fun, parties and informal get-togethers are common events.

Although some off-campus students feel somewhat isolated from the university, others point out that they still enjoy university-sponsored affairs such as the Lecture-Concert Series, Popular Entertainment, and athletic events. Of course, participation in off-campus functions is never doubted, especially when the apartment dweller entertains all the friends he never knew he had.

CEDAR VILLAGE TG ASSOCIATION

To increase contact among tenants and promote a spirit of group co-operation usually missing from apartment life, residents of 251 Cedar Street have organized themselves into an unsupervised, off-campus living unit. Membership in the Cedar Village TG Association, so named because of its sponsorship of several popular Friday afternoon social functions, is open to all residents of the building's twelve apartments. The association's structure is informal, with all members sharing in the work and enjoyment of giving large weekend parties, often opening several apartments at once to handle overflow crowds. A spirit of friendliness and co-operation not often found in apartment buildings has been created by the association. Fellow members share household problems, decorating ideas, and weekend guests, while at the same time experiencing the absence of restrictions which are imposed on supervised living facilities.

Married Housing: A Nucleus of Hard Work, Patience and Love

Household chores become joint efforts for some student couples.

What is a home? A place to live, some furniture, someone to come home to at the end of a long day. Married couples looking for a home on the University campus can find their individual niche in any of the 2,468 partially-furnished apartments in Cherry Lane, University Village, and Spartan Village Apartments.

There are many reasons why married couples choose to live in married housing units on campus. The low cost of renting these apartments and their proximity to the campus are two important factors. Families living in married housing are also usually in similar economic and social circumstances, which encourages pleasant relationships with neighbors. Reciprocal arrangements for babysitting, car pools for shopping and other plans helpful to student wives can be easily worked out. With bus and telephone service similar to that available in residence halls, married housing offers an irresistible bargain to many newly-married couples.

Going to school isn't too bad if mother and dad go too.

The world of children can be as limited as a tiny corner of Spartan Village.

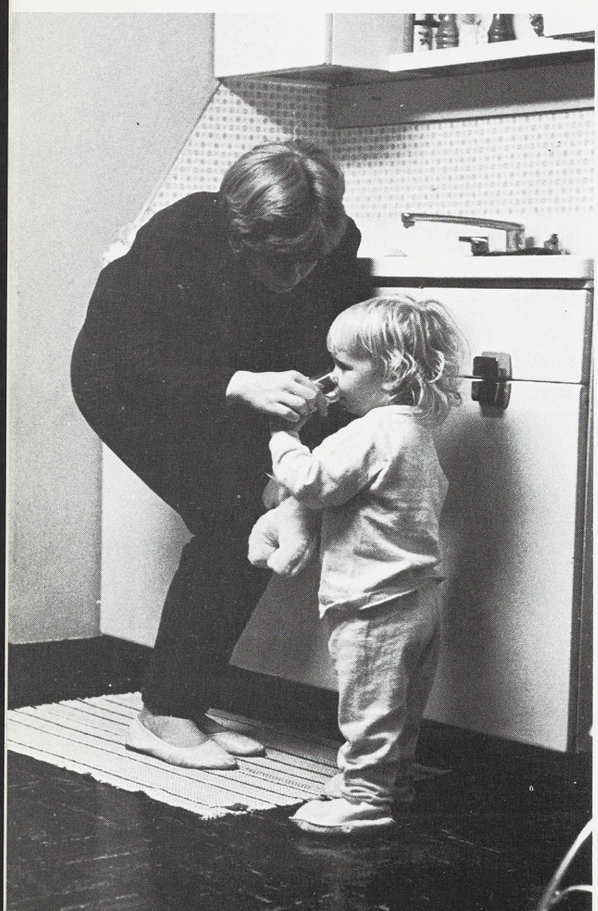

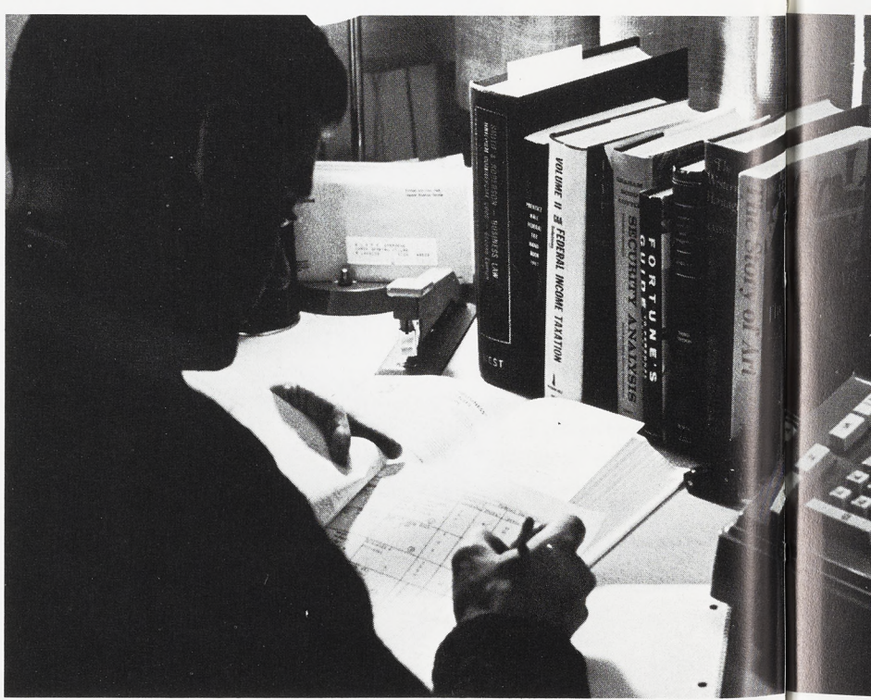

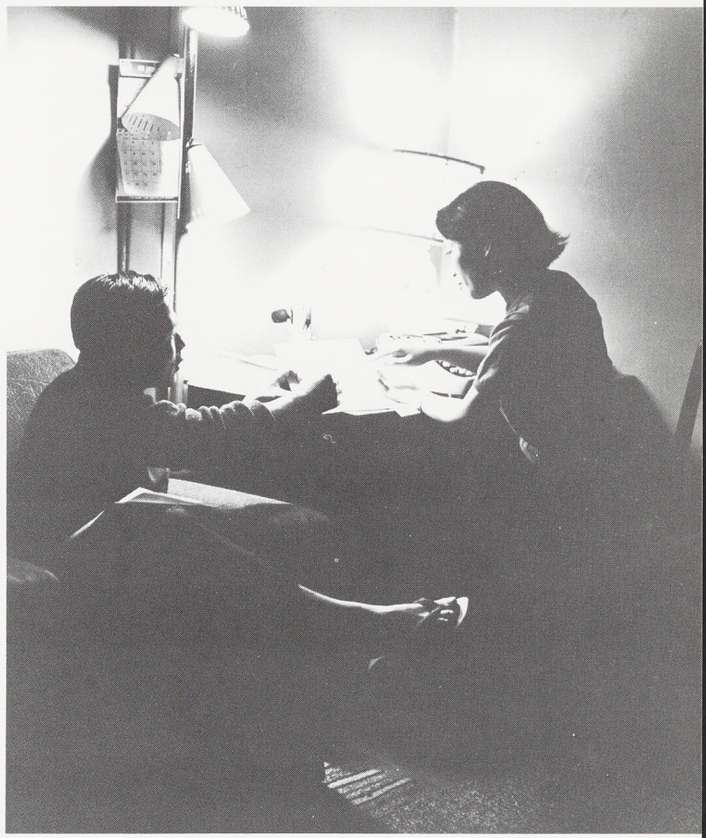

To children of student parents, married housing can be an exciting and yet confining place to live. With the whole University as their play area, however, the small apartments seem less cramped to children than to their parents. Whether feeding the ducks along the Red Cedar, visiting a farm animal exhibit or participating in the excitement of a home football game, youngsters of married students experience a much greater variety of events than the average child. Even though at times the restrictions seem to outweigh the advantages, as when Billy couldn't have the puppy in the pet shop window, or when the neighbors complained about the noise of the children's antics, the benefits of their first college years will remain with these children until they return to campus as students themselves.

ATHLETICS

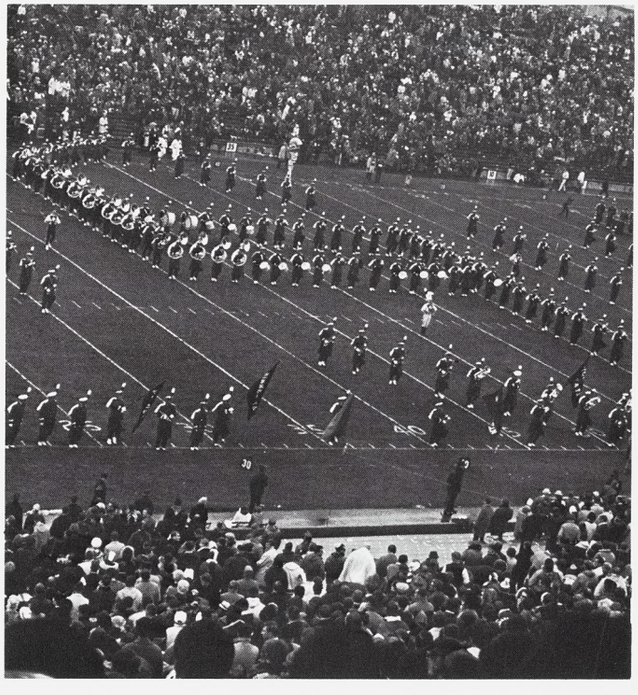

The multiversity offers a myriad of challenges to the body as well as the mind of the interested student. Much more abounds than just the thundering face of football and the intercollegiate sports. Even an amateur's amateur can find a place of distinction in some phase of the multiversity's many athletic programs . . .

Diversity Is . . .

FOOTBALL

When 67 football players reported for fall practice, they became part of a dream. The dream—to avenge last year's loss of the top national ranking—soon became the obsession of each and every player. When the students checked in a month later, the dream became theirs, too. The season began with convincing victories! It was within reach. The scores got closer. The dream receded. The season ended with a tie. The dream didn't. To the majority of the judges, the team (and the students) failed in their dream. To the team (and the students) their dream became fact. The 1966 Michigan State football team will be remembered as one of the best of all time.

The success of a season is not based on comparative scores, but on a demonstrated superiority over the competition. Superiority means a combination of individual achievement and outstanding team work. The best indicators of individual achievement—personal records—were not lacking as several Spartans enjoyed remarkable seasons. Sophomore quarterback Jimmy Raye passed for a season total of 1,110 yards, the second Spartan ever to pass the 1,000 yard mark. On the other end, Gene Washington set two team records, catching 16 touchdown passes and gaining 677 yards on pass receptions. Sophomore end Al Brenner set a Big Ten mark for punt returns when he sprinted 95 yards against Illinois. Clinton Jones continued his assault on Spartan records in the Iowa game as he rushed for a Big Ten high of 268 yards. At season's end the Cleveland star had also set an MSU record of 396 carries in his career. All these numbers do not mean much until one realizes that they were the end result of a team spirit that meant the difference between pride and over-confidence.

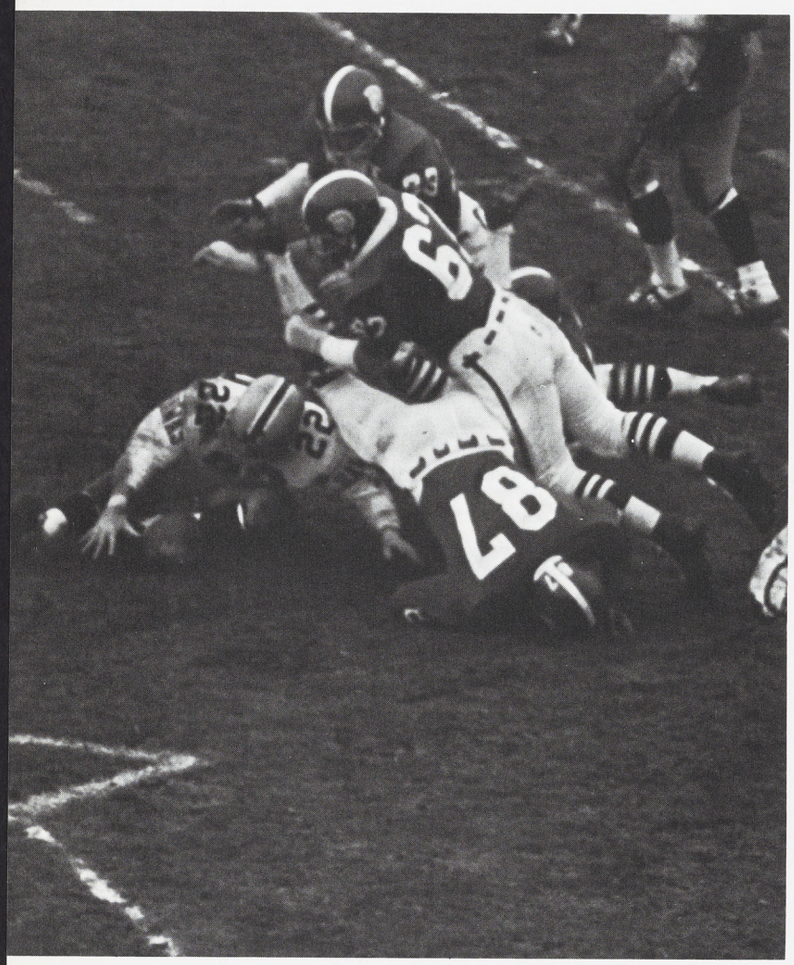

Strength was the keynote as the powerful defense forced 35 fumbles. End George Chatlos led the way, causing an opponent to fumble in each of the first six games for a Big Ten record. At times, strength had its disadvantages: the "Greenie Meanies" were penalized 59 times for 635 yards in comparison with their mild-mannered but less successful opponents' 31 penalties for 283 yards. Power had its application offensively too, as the Spartans out-gained their weekly enemies on the ground by 2305 yards to 514 yards, a statistic which gives credit to offense and defense alike. This combination of offensive and defensive power often made the difference during the regular season, but even so, it couldn't crush a nearly equal amount of Irish ability in "the game" at season's end.

The Spartans opened their campaign for the national championship against North Carolina State and Penn State. MSU's two solid victories did little for their opponents' confidence as the team showed all the speed and drive which was to aid them in a second consecutive undefeated conference season. In the beginning, the fans did not display much confidence in the passing attack, but after the first two games, with Jimmy Raye completing 10 of 20 passes for two touchdowns, they knew, as the coaches had known, that the offense could do the job, both on the ground and in the air.

When Big Ten competition began, not only the student body but the whole nation awaited an indication of the ability the Spartans had to have with 24 lettermen returning. The indication and ability were there, but the competition did not seem to be as MSU outfought the fighting Illini 26—10. After another rout over traditional rival Michigan 20—7, the balloon was broken by a combination of an aroused Ohio State team and one of the "sloppiest football fields ever played on" (UPI). The narrow 11—8 victory over the Buckeyes lost State the No. 1 rating it had held in both of the polls since the start of the season.

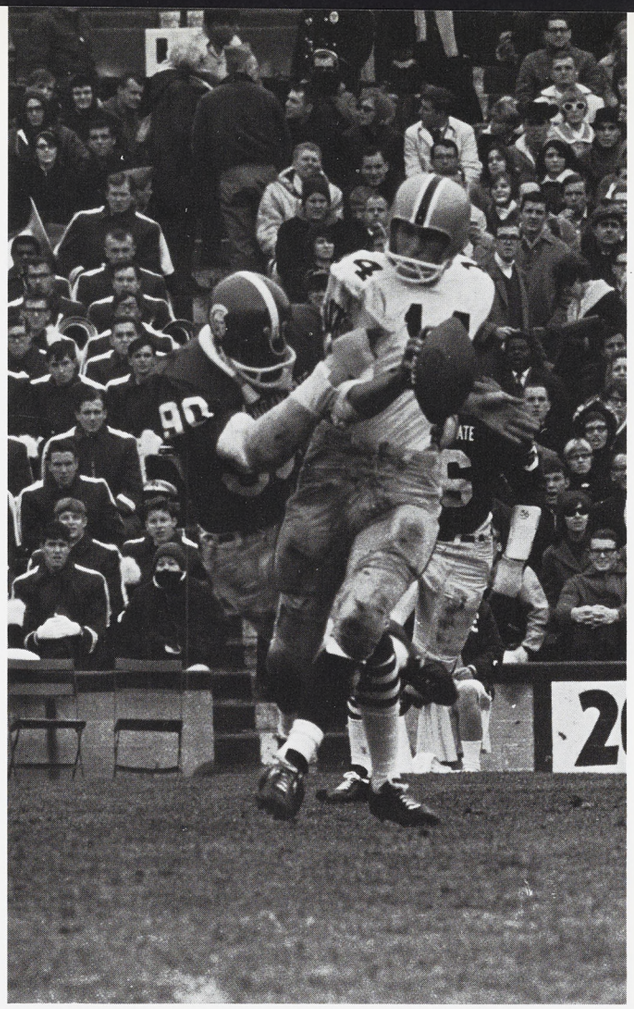

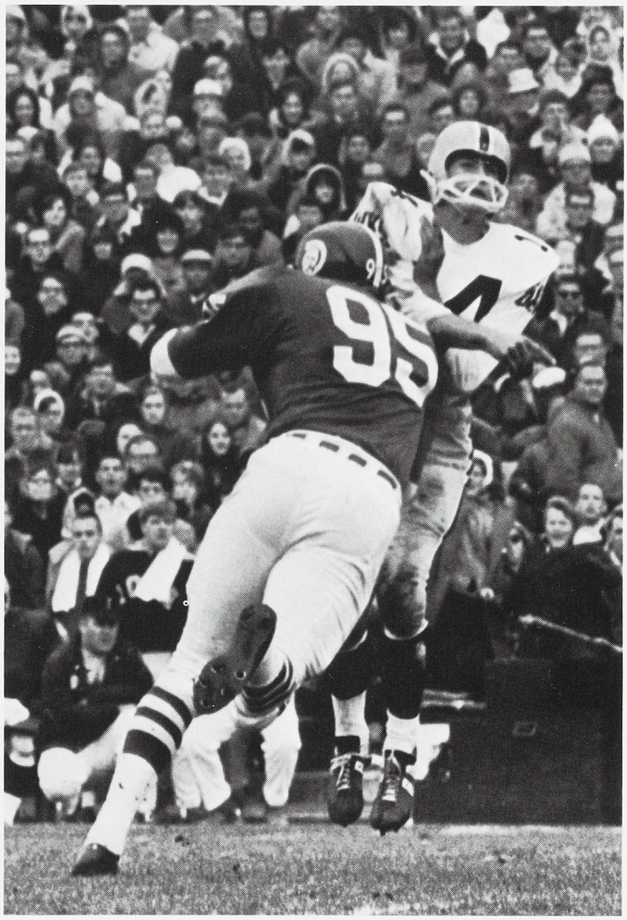

Overwhelming victories returned for the rest of the conference schedule, but the dream seemed to be out of reach as Notre Dame took over the top spot. Even though the Spartans continued to subdue their opposition, that "other team" still seemed to be gaining a wider margin each week. It seemed as if the only hope left for the success of the dream would be "the game": the "Poll Bowl" against Notre Dame. After demonstrating their bench strength against Indiana, 37—19, and setting one record and tying another, the team was ready. They had just completed their second consecutive undefeated conference season and had won the championship twice in a row for the first time since Ohio State did it in 1955-1956. The students, too, were ready and many of them turned out to welcome the team home and demonstrate their loyalty.

Late in the season, Clinton Jones started to make the yardage expected of him. Two of his better games were against Iowa (below) and Notre Dame (above, left). The defensive line spent most of the Iowa game in the Iowa backfield as first Webster (above), then Smith (below, left) battered Hawkeye quarterback Stavroff.

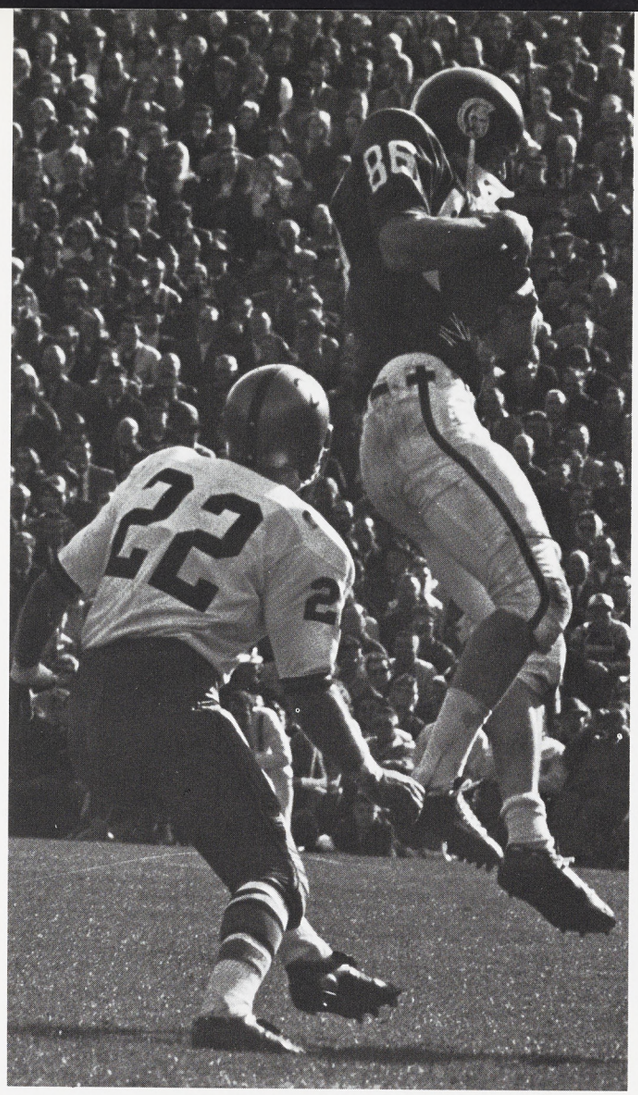

Dawn on the day of the Notre Dame game brought warnings of bad weather for the afternoon, a fitting background for the attitudes of the two giants of college football who would be contesting their claims to national supremacy. The first half was all MSU, except for about one minute during the second quarter. Regis Cavender scored from nine yards out and Dick Kenney kicked a 47 yard field goal, the longest of his career. Then came the one minute: halfback Tom Gladieux caught a Coley O'Brien pass for 34 yards and a TD with four minutes left in the half. The score at the half was 10—7 but the only indication that any scoring had ever taken place was on the scoreboard as two fine defenses contained two fine offenses throughout the second half. The only scoring was a 28 yard field goal by Joe Azzaro of Notre Dame, three points sufficient to give the Irish the tie it seemed Ara Parseghian, Notre Dame coach, wanted for his team. With Notre Dame in possession and time running out, the Irish had a chance to win and prove their superiority, if it ever existed. They didn't choose to try against an aroused Spartan defense as O'Brien called three line plunges before nearly 80,000 booing fans and millions more on nationwide television. The gun went off. The game was over and so was the season. The dream was over, too. On the field State hadn't won, but neither had Notre Dame. In the dream they hadn't won, but the Spartans had.

BASKETBALL

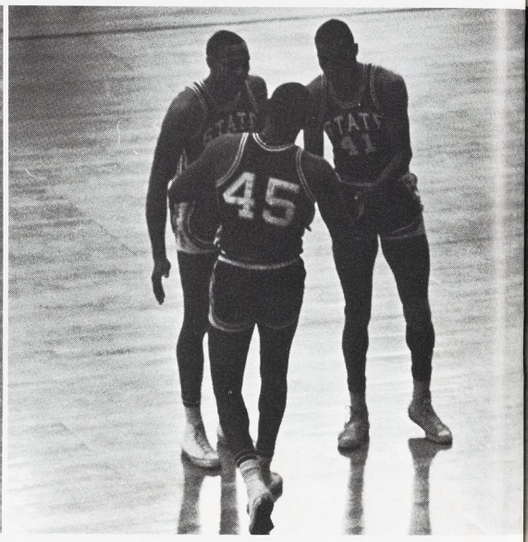

Traditionally, the game begins with the introduction of the players. Until the coach began moving players like chessmen, it often sounded like this: "Starting at forward, Number 41, Art Baylor . . . At the other forward, Number 35, Lee Lafayette . . . At center, Number 45, captain Matt Aitch . . .

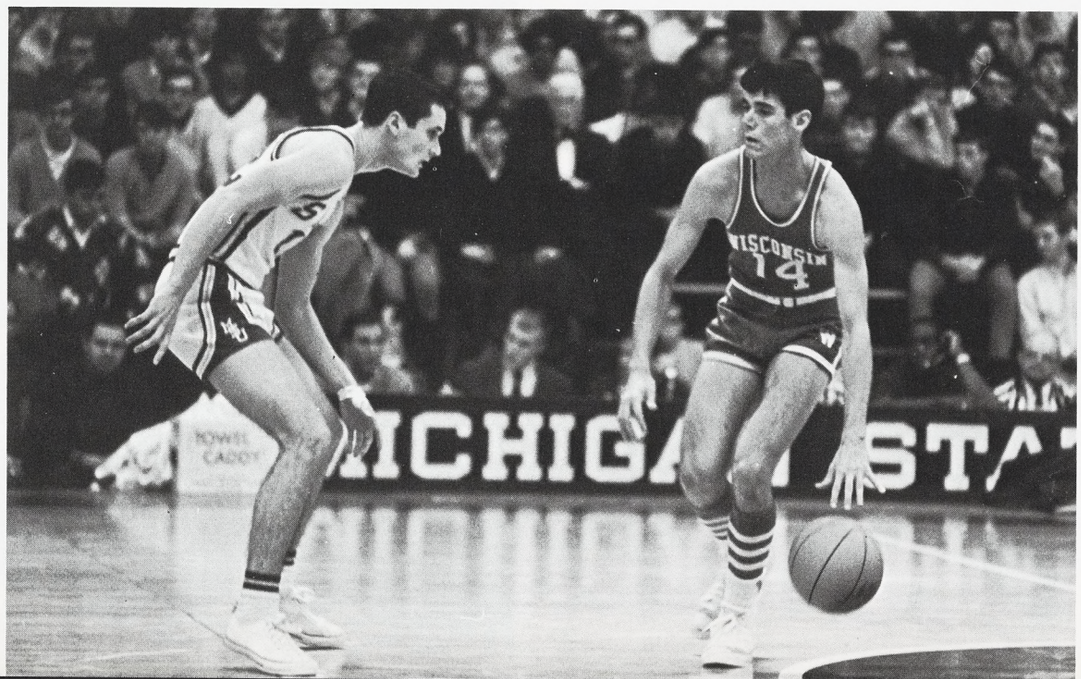

Spartan basketball hopes were high as the new season began. With three starters returning from last year's second place team and with sophomore Lee "Tree" Lafayette breaking into the lineup, MSU looked to be the best in the league. State looked to be one of the best in the country, too, as they opened with impressive victories in their first four games. The wire services agreed and ranked the Spartans in the top ten for the first three weeks. But that was before a disastrous road trip which saw MSU lose three out of four games as well as their national ranking. As Big Ten action began, the victories returned. The rating never did.

As they had in the season, Michigan State started fast in Big Ten competition, winning its first two games over highly-touted Illinois and Iowa. Again, a road trip made the difference. Michigan's Wolverines outscored the Spartans 81—59, dropping them into a tie. In two weeks, MSU was on the road again. This time they lost to Indiana, putting the Hoosiers into first place.

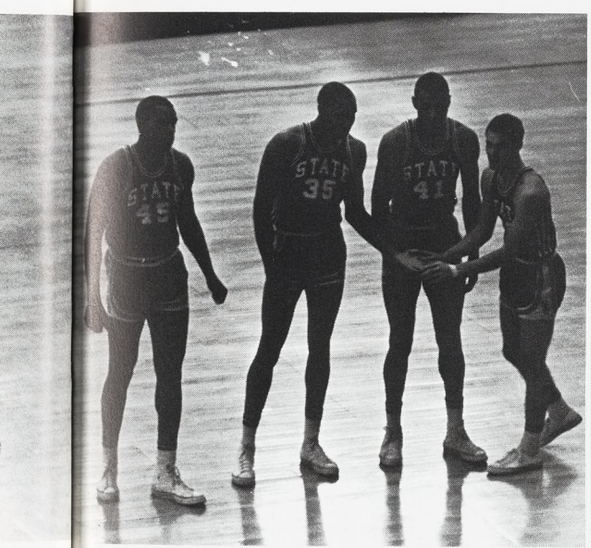

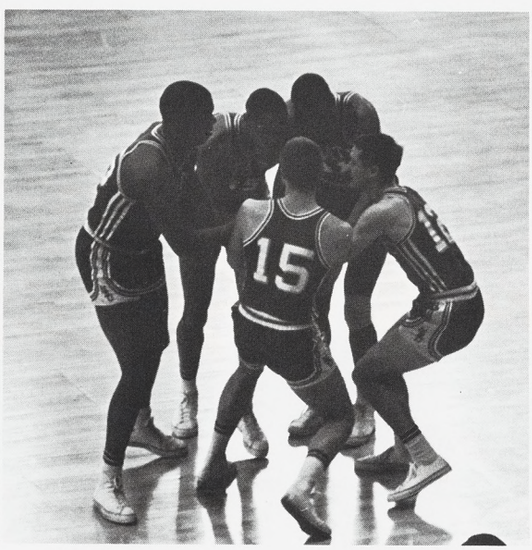

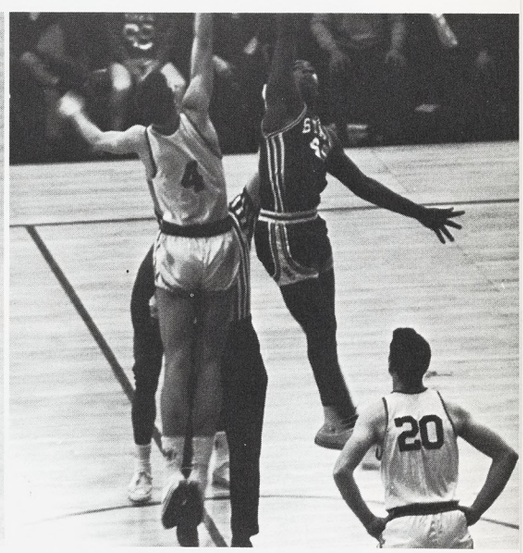

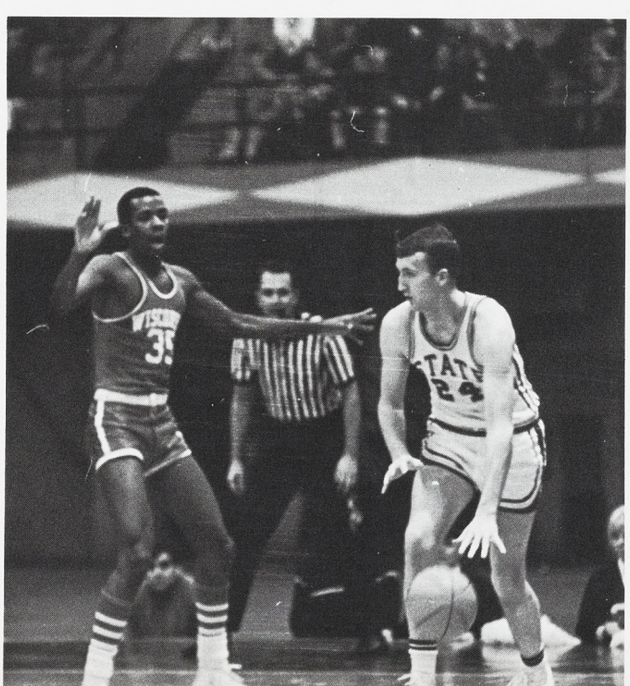

. . . Starting at guard, Number 12, John Bailey . . . and at the other guard, Number 15, Steve Rymal. The Spartans are coached by John Bennington. And so it begins.

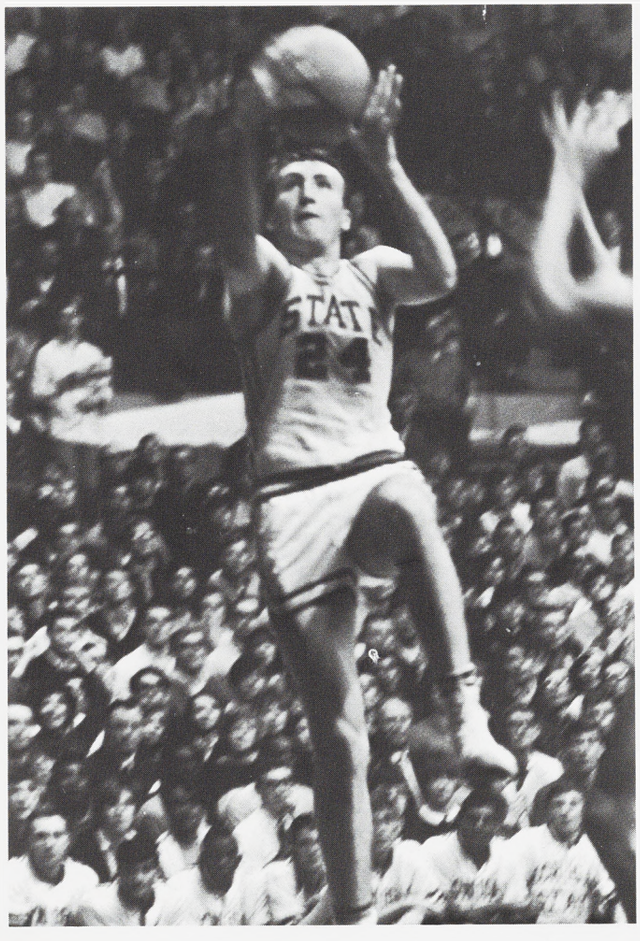

Top row: J. Richter; M. Pelton; M. Poplawski; K. Powell; M. Sapp; B. Barnes. Bottom row: G. Hampel; S. Stephan; C. Gruber; W. Risto; W. Jones; T. Mitter.

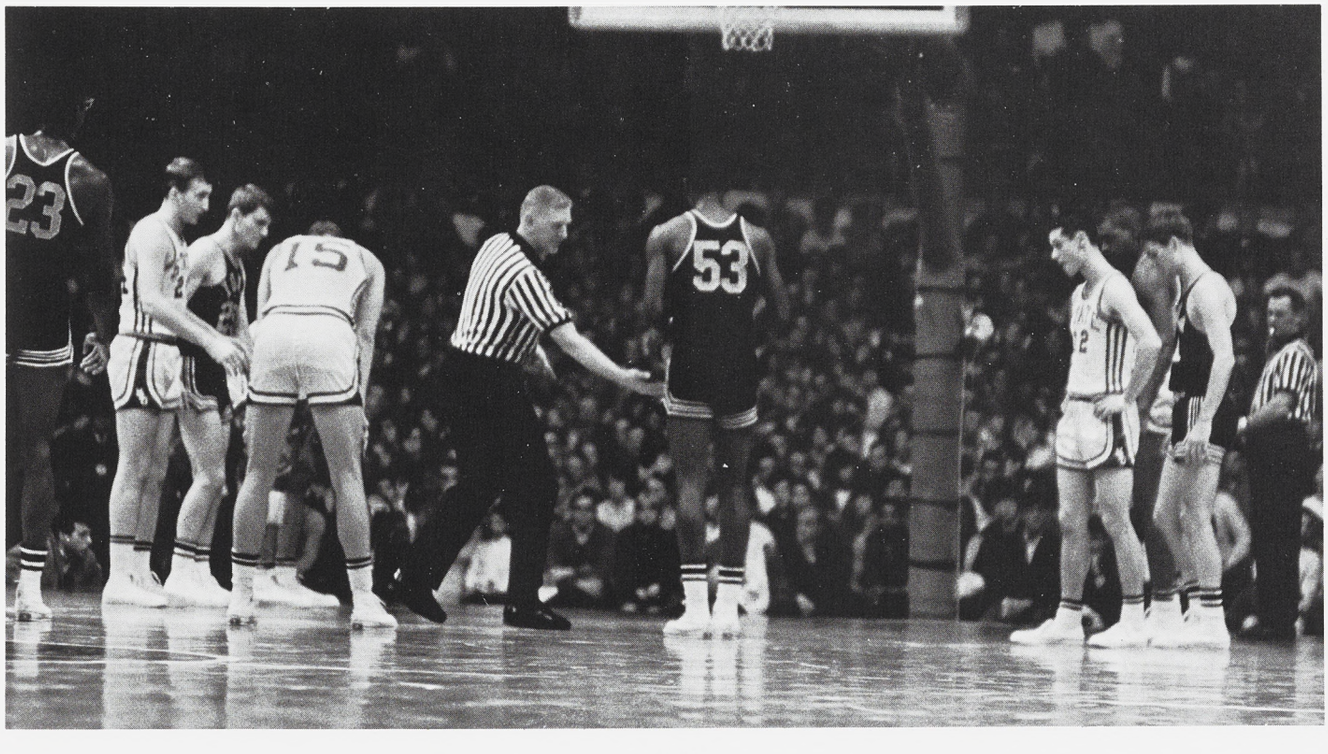

At the beginning of the year, the big question was, "Can Michigan State find a strong enough offense to compliment its always-strong defense, and if so, can they find it in time?" It seemed that they had, as Coach Bennington shuffled players like chessmen and MSU began their drive for the title. The starters weren't starters and reserves became heroes as John Holms, Ted Crary, and others all contributed.

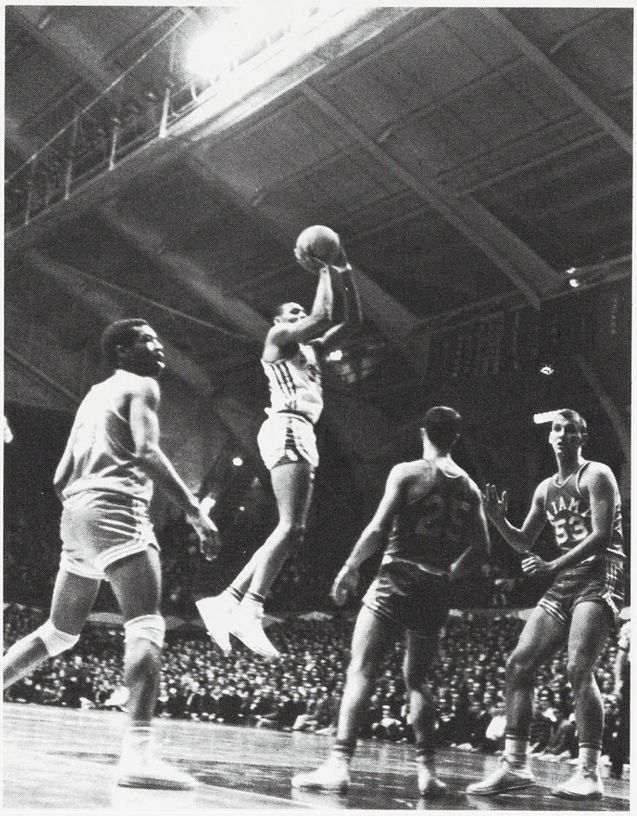

The standings remained "2. MSU" until, with two weeks left in the season, Indiana showed signs of faltering. Their loss threw the Big Ten into a tie again, as the wildest season in conference history drew to a close. Throughout the year, Michigan State had been hot and cold, but finally the Spartans put together a four-game winning streak to look like what they started the season as—the best in the Big Ten. It went down to the wire. The stage was set for the last Saturday of league competition. The Big Ten representative, the best in the league, would be decided in the last games of the season.

Spartan victories this season often needed exceptional individual performances, rather than team supremacy. When the player wasn't already in the starting lineup, as was sophomore Lee Lafayette (above, right), Coach Bennington had to shuffle his personnel to find a new star. One such was another sophomore, John Holms (above, left).

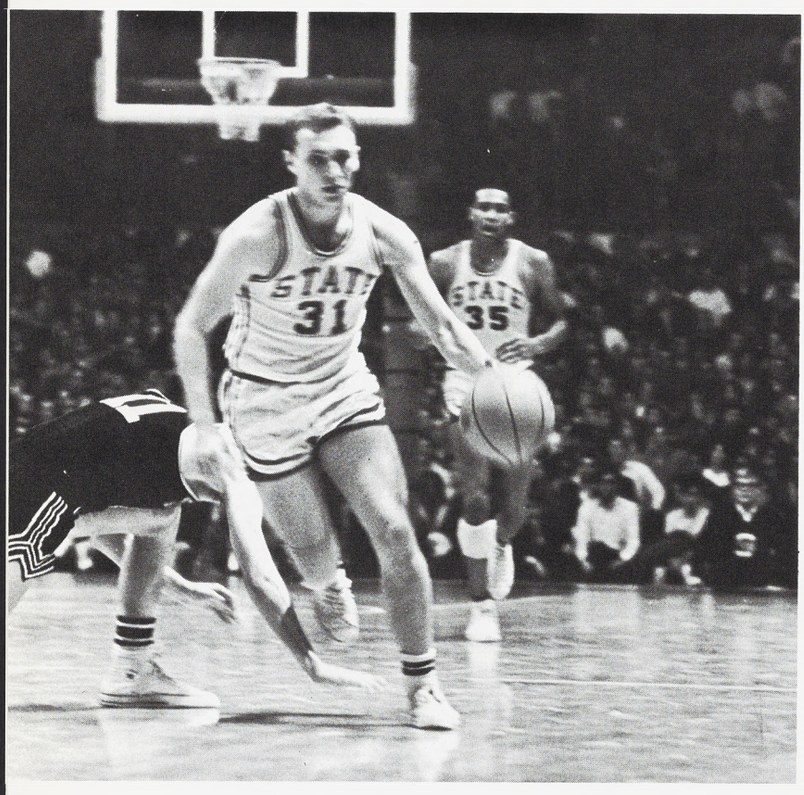

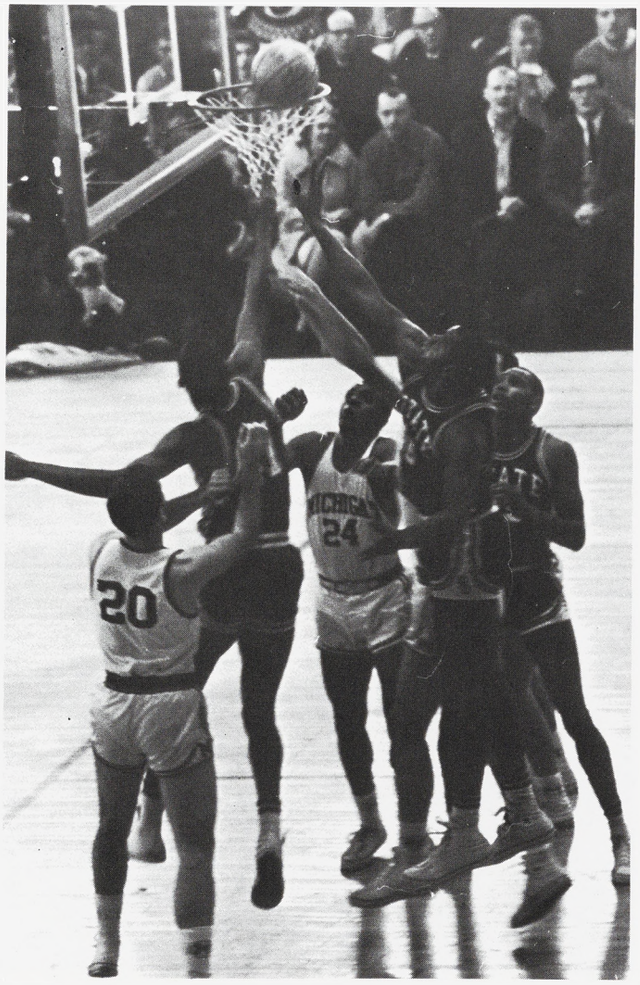

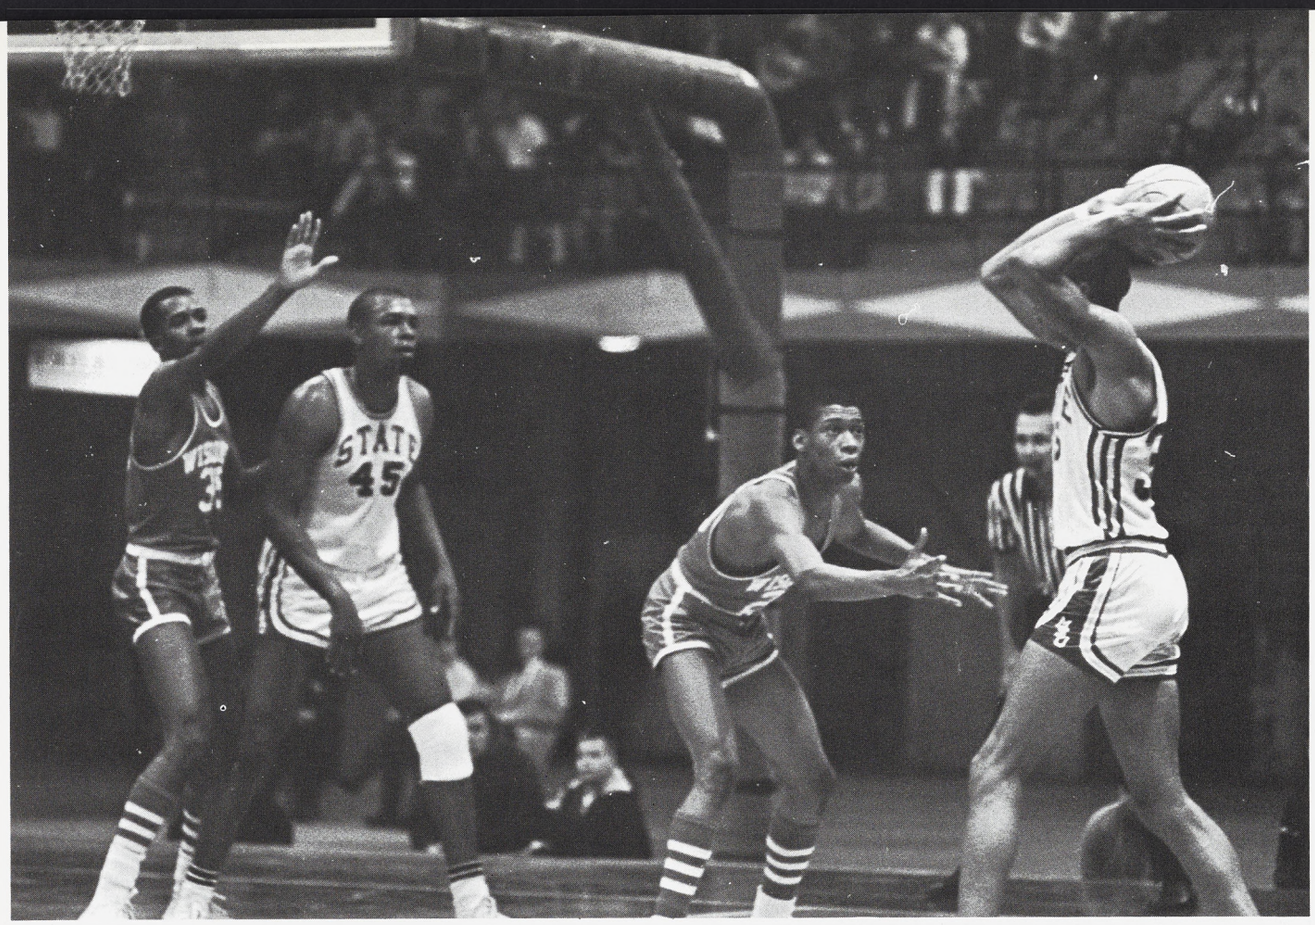

The game carried ominous overtones from the results of another season. Again, as in football, a MSU victory could mean the difference between the best finish in a decade and a state of inconclusive superiority. Purdue was playing at Indiana, Michigan State faced the Northwestern Wildcats. An Indiana loss coupled with a Spartan victory would mean an undisputed championship. Michigan State won, but Indiana won too. Again the season had finished in a tie with neither team the loser, with neither team the winner.

They announced the score at half-time. Indiana had clinched a berth in the NCAA since in case of a tie the team which has not gone for the longest time gets the bid. It didn't matter to the Spartans, though, as Matt Aitch—in his last game in green and white—and Heywood Edwards sparked State to a 79—66 victory.

For the first time in MSU cage history, junior college transfers made important contributions to the success of the team. Shannon Reading (below, left) and Matt Aitch (nearest to camera, below right) all sparked Spartan victories throughout the season, Reading, with his outside shooting, and Aitch with his strong work under the basket.

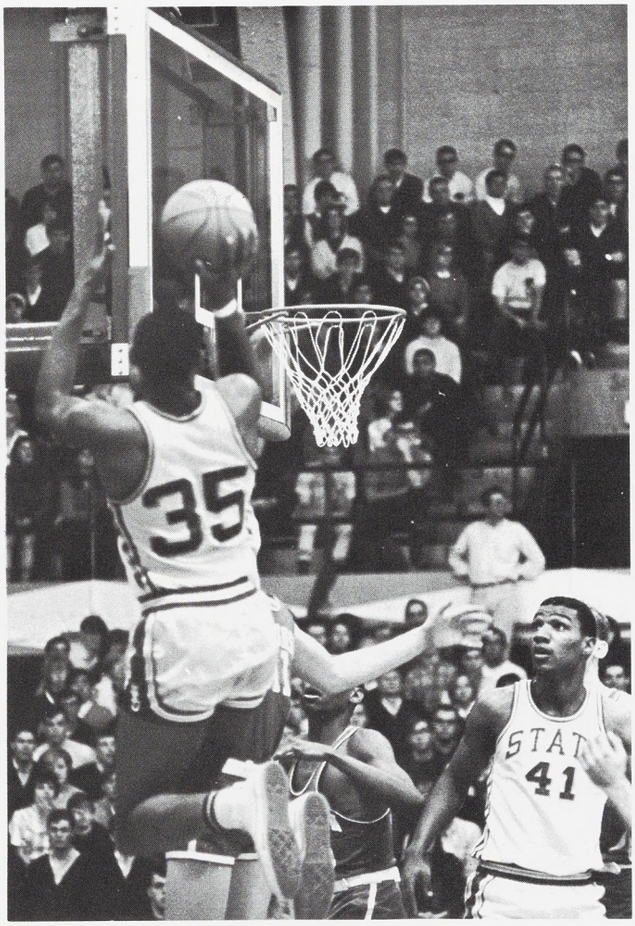

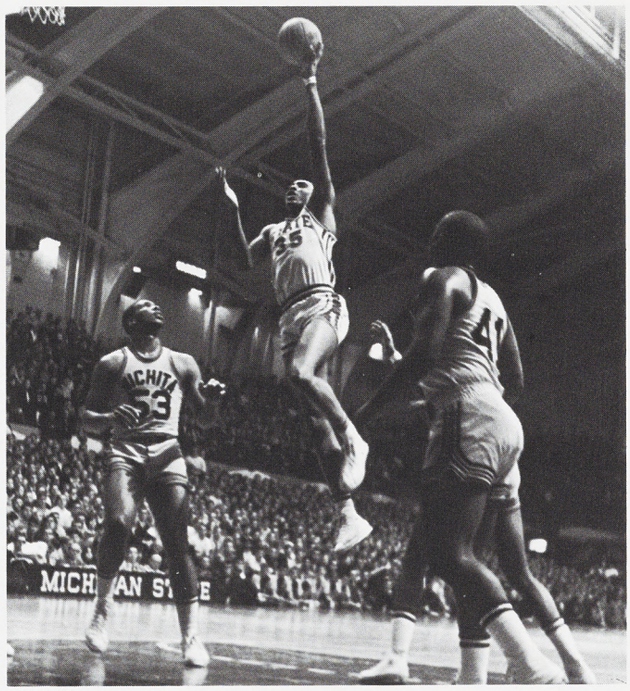

Sophomore Lee Lafayette (number 35, both pictures) was counted on heavily this year. When Lee was "on," it meant 20 or more points. When Lee was "off," the lineup began to change.

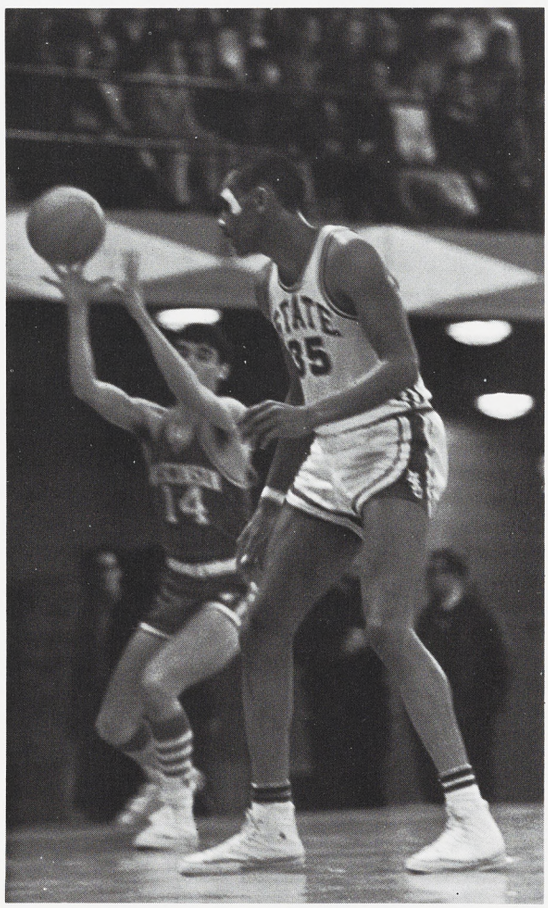

In the last game, as throughout the season, Spartan defense was without comparison. In holding Northwestern to 66 points, Michigan State established a new record for least points allowed in a Big Ten season. The defense had to be good; the offense wasn't exceptional. Defensively, they allowed an average of 68.8 points per game, the problem was that the offense only scored an average of 73.8 points. This situation indicates two things; either the team lost several games or they had problems putting an offense together, or both. The Spartans did both. Coach Bennington's starters changed so often that a favorite pre-game question was, "Who's going to start tonight?" At season's end, however, despite all comments and comparisons, and disregarding all ties, the team had passed the most important test a team must face, they won.

SOCCER

Frustration struck again for Gene Kenney and his boosters as they went undefeated throughout the regular season only to lose on a technicality in the NCAA semifinal. There was little opposition in the regular season as the team simply outran and overpowered their opponents. That is, they did until they played St. Louis in St. Louis. In a game marred by accusations of biased officiating and poor field conditions, the Billikens hustled hard enough to preserve their unbeaten record on their home field. After the 1—1 tie, there was talk of dropping St. Louis from MSU's schedule until conditions—of the field and locker rooms—improved. With that debacle the only blot on an otherwise perfect season, the Spartans entered the NCAA tournament as favorites to end their perennial bridesmaid's role and capture the title. It was not to be, however, as Long Island University eliminated MSU after four overtime periods had ended in a 2—2 tie. The decision was based on the number of corner kicks awarded each team. In the fourth overtime, the Blackbirds were awarded six corner kicks to the Spartans' five, a slim enough margin, but one sufficient to give Long Island a birth in the finals as the Spartans again returned home untitled.

Graduation hurt the Spartans less than might be expected since only captain Terry Bidiak and Manny Ruscheinski will not return for another season. Guy Busch and Tony Keyes will be back, however, to pace a team which allowed only six goals in twelve games while scoring 66. Goalie Kevin O'Connell returns to maintain his fine record in the nets as he, along with the rest of the team, is planning on improving on a near-perfect season and avenging the loss of the national championship. More and stiffer competition is in prospect for the future as Coach Kenney has scheduled the Air Force Academy and plans on taking the boosters further afield in search of opposition which will provide an indication of the Spartans true ability.

CROSS COUNTRY

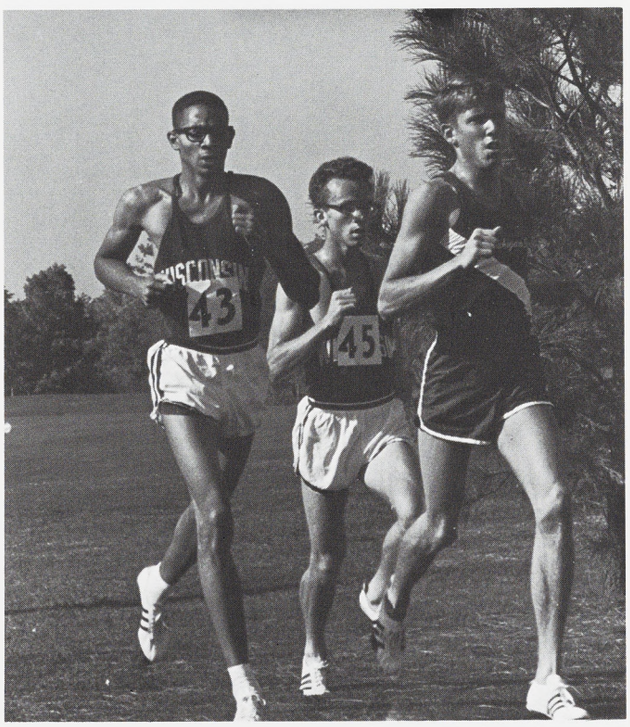

The Michigan State cross country team had a big job in store for them if they were to continue their record of recent years. Since 1955, Spartan harriers have won 17 team titles and 7 second places in 33 championship events. Four times the Spartans have made a grand slam—winning the Big Ten, IC4A and NCAA in the same year.

The team had a good season and they ended with a 4—1—0 record, second in the Big Ten meet to Iowa and third in the IC4A meet. Top man for the Spartans was captain Dick Sharkey. An All-American in his sophomore year, he was kept out of action last year with a knee injury but returned to win all five of his dual meets starts and take second in the Big Ten and IC4A meets. Behind Sharkey were veterans George Balthrop, Eric Zemper—another senior who sat out last year with a knee injury—and junior Art Link. The future looks bright as sophomores Merchant, Wilson and Rosenberg all had promising years.

INDOOR TRACK

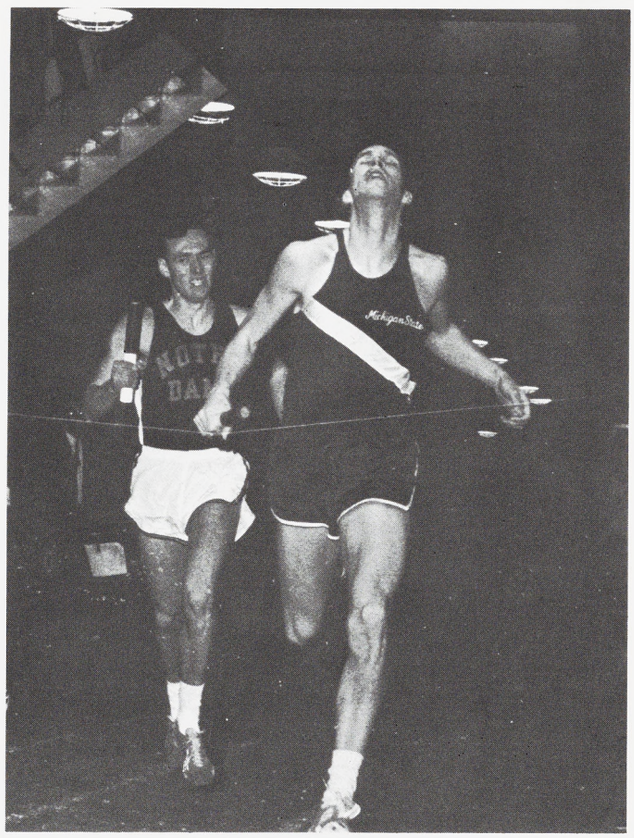

The results of this winter's track season showed a lack of emphasis on any single event as talent was evenly distributed throughout the team. Although hurdles didn't have its traditional depth due to the loss of Clinton Jones, Gene Washington, and sophomore Charles Pollard consistently finished first and second place in both the 70 yard high and low hurdles. At the annual Michigan State Relays, a new meet and field-house record of 8.56.8 for the two mile run was set by Dick Sharkey. Continuing his record-setting habits, he set a new varsity mark of 8.51.2 at the Western Michigan University Invitational. Following his example, the rest of the team added enough support in other events to make MSU a favorite to annex the Big Ten championship.

Unexpected strength in the field events wasn't enough as MSU's upset made Wisconsin tops in the Big Ten. Reversing the usual trend, Pollard lost in the 70 yard high hurdles. Washington was second in both that event and the 70 yard low hurdles, running it in 8.3, which would have set a new Big Ten mark. The record went to Wisconsin sophomore Ray Butler who set the record of 8.2 seconds. The upsets continued throughout the afternoon, leaving Coach Dittrich and his thin clads without a championship but with hopes for next season.

This year's track team expected consistently good performances from both the hurdlers (below, left) and the relay teams (below, right), but not even their record-setting efforts could generate the enthusiasm sparked by Kansas University's Jim Ryun when he competed in the MSU Relays (above).

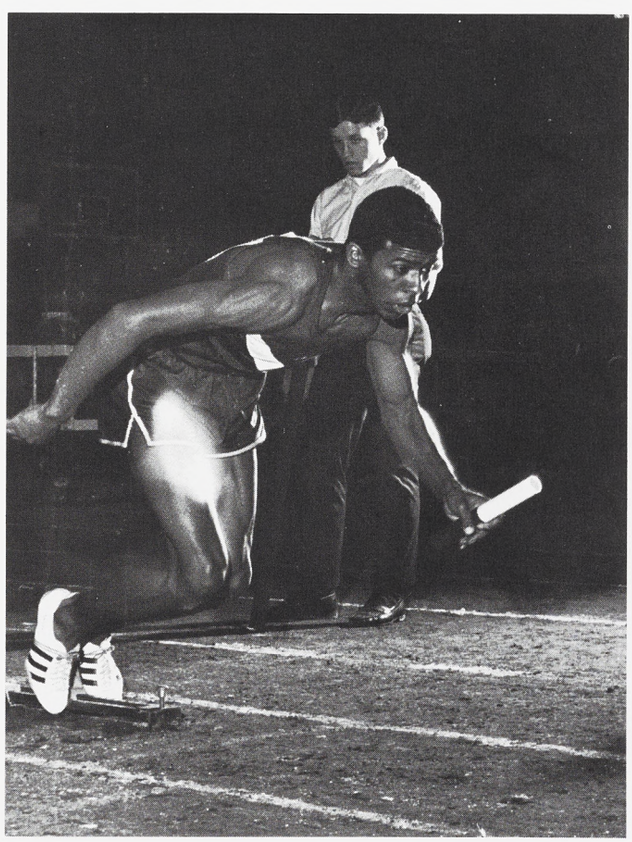

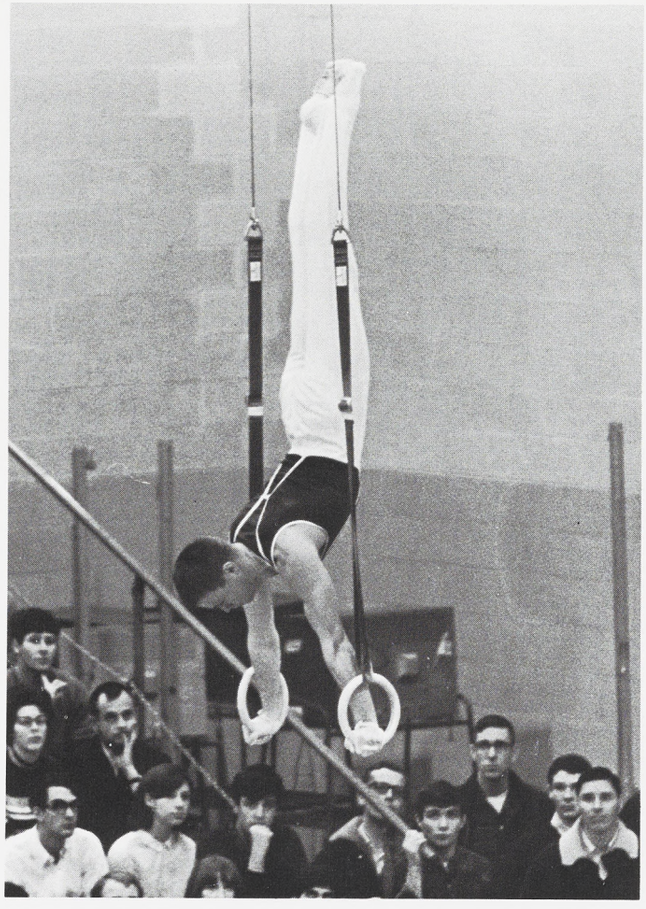

A race demands intense concentration from the start (below), to the jockeying for position at the final turn (above).

GYMNASTICS

Every year gymnastics coach George Syzpula warns MSU fans that he has a lot of fantastic freshmen waiting to take the team by storm—and that he does. This year as in 1966, the Spartans boasted a young team with only two senior lettermen returning. The "youngsters" included Toby Towson, Big Ten Champion in floor exercises, Dan Kinsey, part of "one of the best ring quartets in the nation" and Norm Haynie, a top scorer in all-around horizontal bar and floor exercise. The "older members" of the team such as junior Dave Thor, All-American and two-time Big Ten Champion, junior Ed Gunny, 1966 NCAA still ring title holder and Dave Croft, another two time Big Ten Champion give the team the depth it needs as it comes from a 1966 third place national finish.

The Spartans, under 1966 national coach of the year Syzpula, ended the regular season 5—3 in dual meet competition. The losses include one to Southern Illinois, last year's national champions and a loss to still-undefeated Iowa. The gymnasts wound up the season with third place in the Big Ten and three Big Ten champions. As they moved into the national championships, Syzpula predicted that again in 1968, the gymnastics team will be one of the nation's finest.

The key to good scores in gymnastics events is a sense of grace and poise in the midst of a difficult and strength-demanding routine. Top events for the Spartans this year were still rings (above, right), parallel bars (below, right) and free exercise (below, left).

WRESTLING

It was a strong season for the strongest wrestling team in Michigan State's history of competition in the sport as the Spartans finished the season with a 9—1—1 dual meet record, annexing the Big Ten title in the process. When the season began, everyone knew that State had a good team. Proof of that prediction wasn't long in coming as the grapplers overpowered their first four opponents by huge margins before tying Oklahoma State 14—14 and squeaking past Oklahoma 15—14. Following that first month of competition, MSU was ranked first in the nation, vindicating the promise of the team's potential.

Only a pin in the heavyweight match of the last dual meet of the season ruined Spartan hopes of an undefeated season as Michigan won 16—14. Vengeance was State's in the Big Ten meet, however, as MSU amassed 91 team points to erase the old record of 82 points held by—who else?—Michigan. MSU's next and final test was the NCAA championships, where they were favored to confirm their number one ranking in competition with the other top-rated teams in the nation.

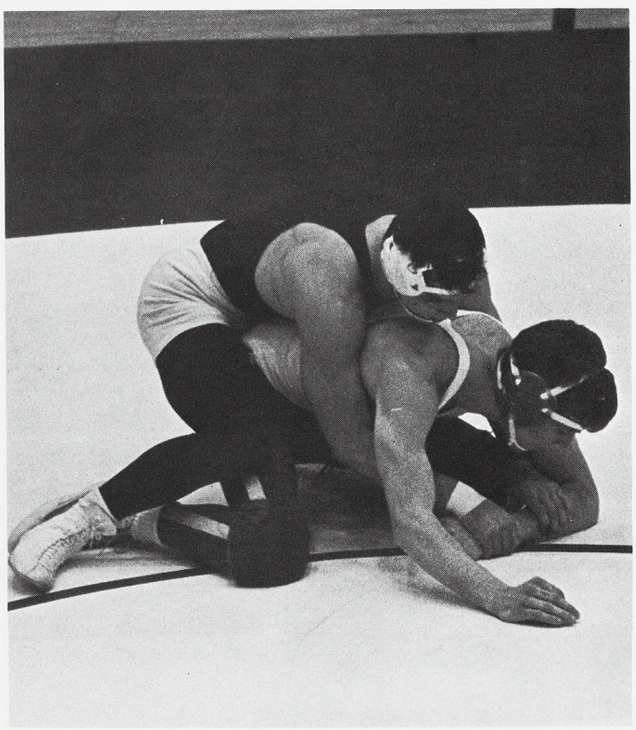

The success of a wrestling season depends on a combination of ability and coaching, all leading to that moment when the referee blows his whistle and says "wrestle." (below, right). Throughout the match, the wrestlers strain for supremacy, as does Jeff Richardson over his Ohio State opponent (below, left).

Big Ten Meet—First
NCAA Meet

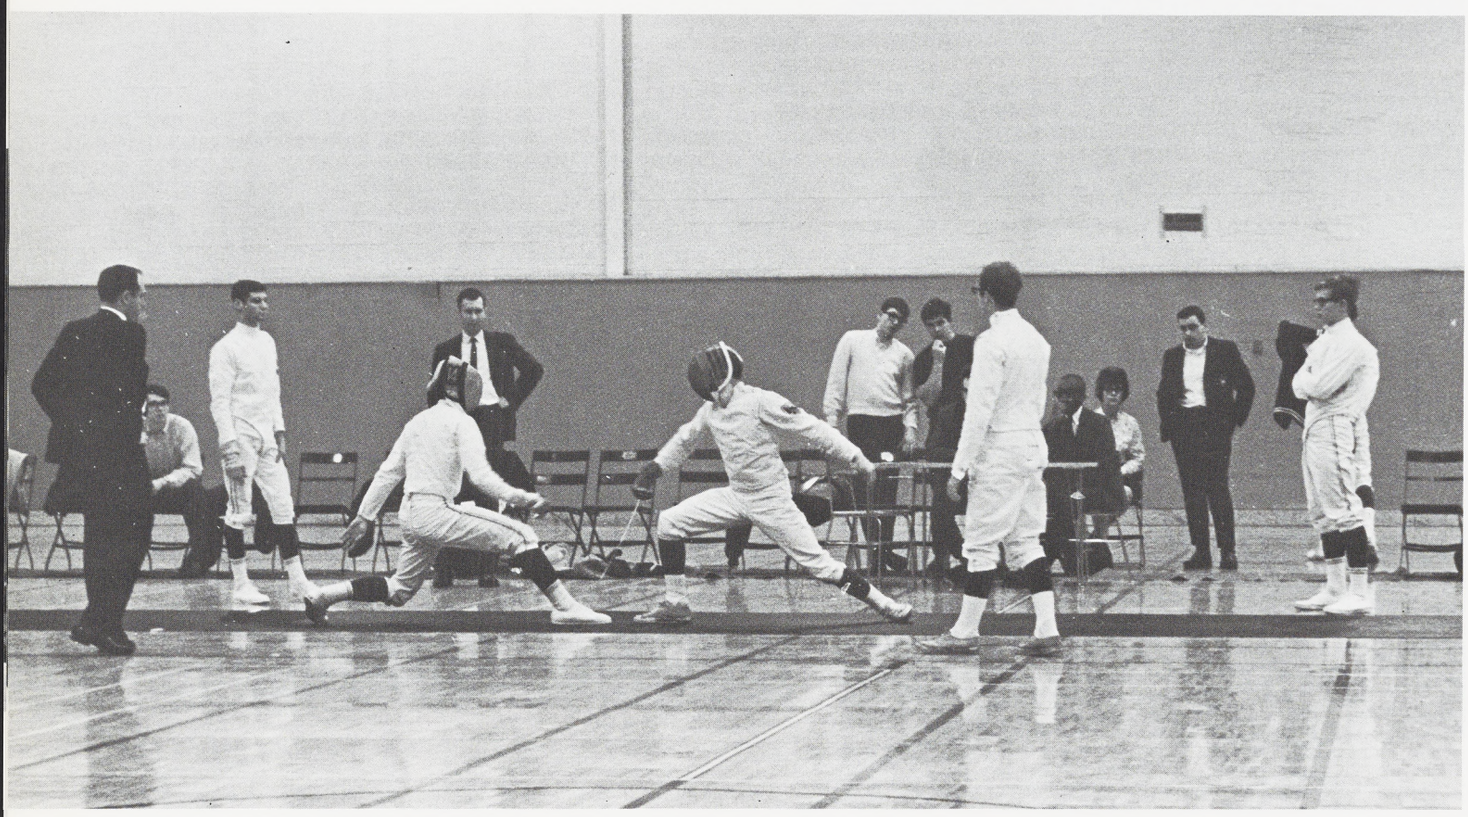

A mediocre season in any sport, especially in one so unfamiliar to the ordinary fan as fencing, is reflected in sparse attendance, composed either of relatives or avid aficionados.

FENCING

The Spartan bladesmen ended a disappointing season with a 5—7 dual meet record, finishing third in the Big Ten meet at season's end. A possible reason for this scarcity of victories was a lack of team balance as epee was a weak spot all year long. Not so in sabre, however, as Charlie Baer compiled an impressive 27—9 record. Foil was perhaps the strong point of the team as Terry Givens, Rodger Loutzenhiser and Sergio Montalvo all sported winning records.

Unfortunately for next year's prospects, Loutzenhiser, Montalvo and Frank Schubert (epee) will graduate this year, leaving coach Charles Schmitter with a large group of juniors who might, or might not be a possible championship team. When asked about next year, Schmitter replied, "I expect better balance and team depth, but next year is still a question mark."

HOCKEY

Every year MSU's hockey team starts off slowly and seems to pick up speed as the season moves on. But this year, the Spartans couldn't seem to shake the "first of the season jinx" as they ended the season with a disappointing 13—14—1 record. Coach of the year for 1966, Amo Bessone attributed the Skaters' failure to win to their "lack of consistency in the forward line" and their "inability to win back-to-back games all year."

As defending national champions, State had 15 returning lettermen and many promising sophomores. However, the lettermen did not seem equal to 1966 as Doug Volmar, high scorer in the WCHA last season did not even finish first among the Spartans this year. Top honors in scoring went to co-captain Tom Mikkola in spite of his missing the first four games due to a wrist injury.

Without a good goalie, a hockey team might as well play in tennis shoes. As the season wore on, goalies Gaye Cooley and Jerry Fisher became the centers of a heated controversy.

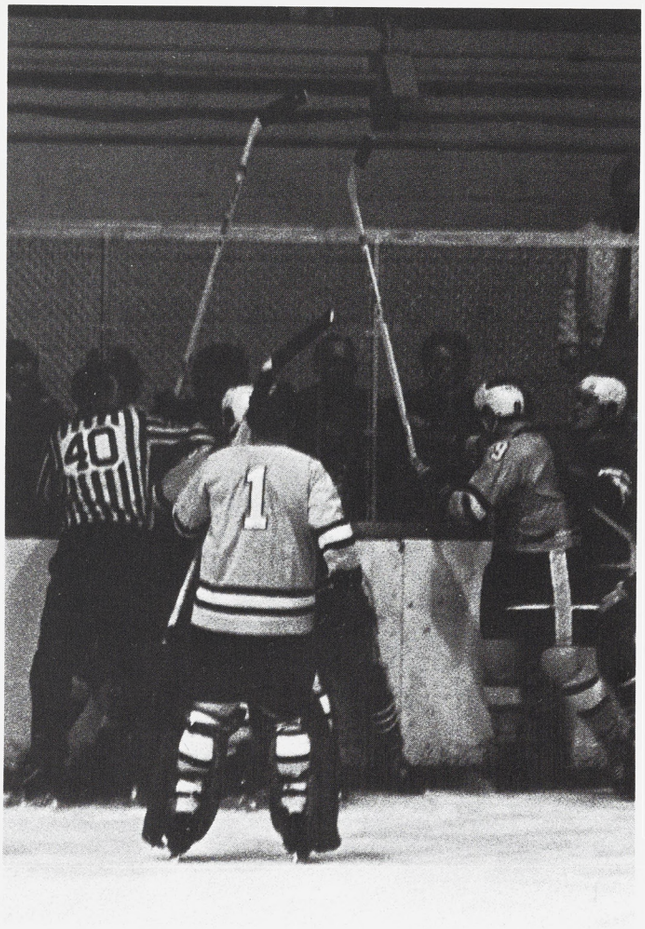

Hockey action begins when the puck drops for the opening face-off (above) and continues from one end of the ice to the other (below, left) as the players bring spectators to their feet with strong board action (below, right).

Another bright spot on the team was senior goalie Jerry Fisher who owned MSU's lone shutout and ended the season with an excellent 2.6 goals average.

The 1966-1967 hockey team's first series was a forecast of the season to come as they split with Minnesota and continued to lose either one or both games of nearly every series they played from this game on. The Spartans did not pick up steam until the first part of January when they swept a series from WCHA leader Michigan and another from Minnesota before losing two to North Dakota. Although late, the surge was enough to give the Spartans first place in the Big Ten over Michigan and Minnesota to turn a mediocre season into one with a championship ending. The victories continued to add to the Spartans traditional late-season surge as they opened their defense of their NCAA crown with a 4—2 victory over arch-rival Michigan. Coach Bessone pointed out that the players seemed to play better under championship pressure and predicted that MSU would go further than expected in the NCAA playoffs.

Whether a player is attempting to clear the puck (below, left), freeze it (below right), or merely inflicting a little "disciplinary action," action near the boards is an integral part of the excitement of hockey.

SWIMMING

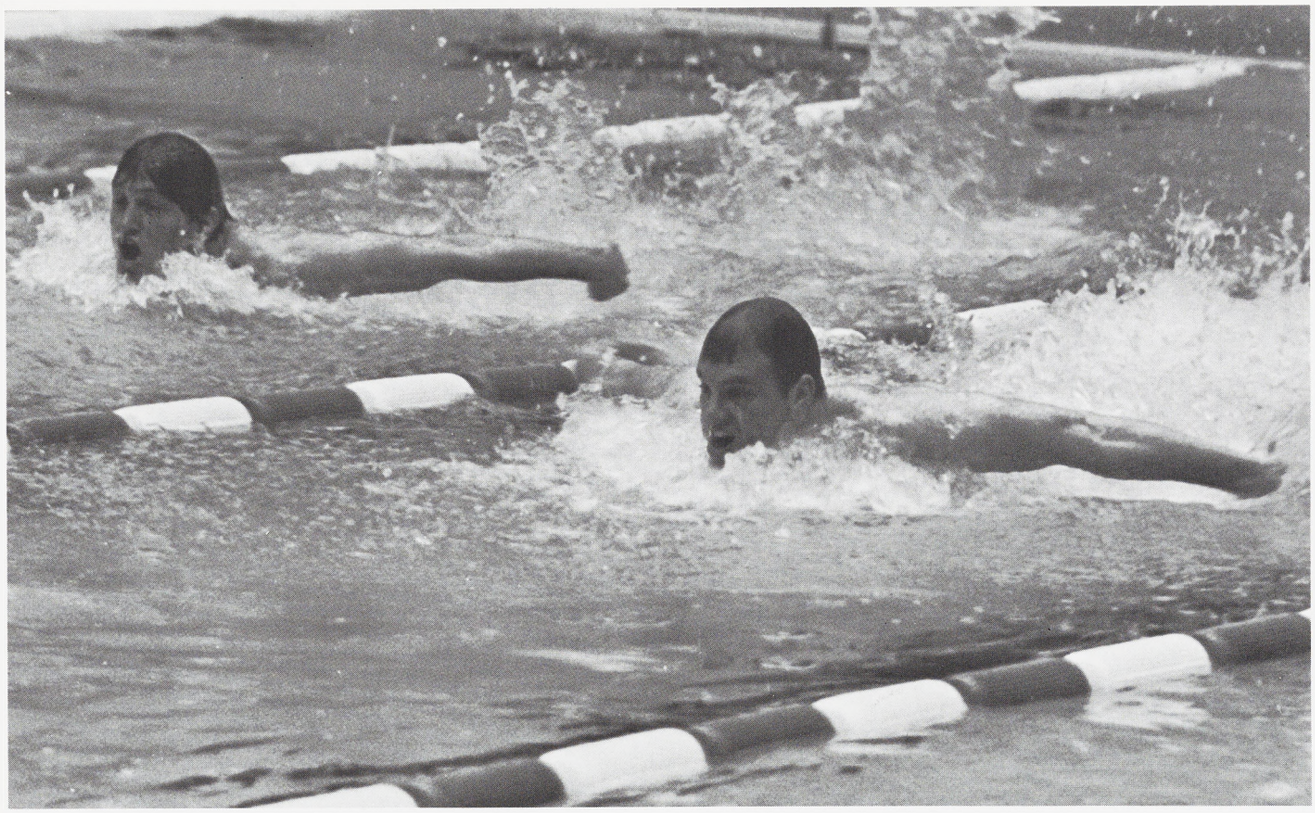

"The 1967 swimming team will be even better than the 1966 squad." These words of Spartan swimming coach Charles McCaffree proved ever so true as the tankers swept through the regular season with only one loss—to Indiana, last year's Big Ten champs and a perennial power. The team started the season by taking a third place in the Big Ten relays behind U-M and Indiana. At the relays, Pete Williams, Ed Glick, Ken Walsh and Rollie Groseth set a new record in the 400 yard free-style relay, the first of many to be set during this year's season.

The individual swimmers have accumulated such a collection of awards that it was only natural the team would be a good one. Gary Dilley, senior backstroker and silver medalist in the 1967 Tokyo Olympics, termed "the best in the world," is all-American in four events and NCAA champion in the backstroke.

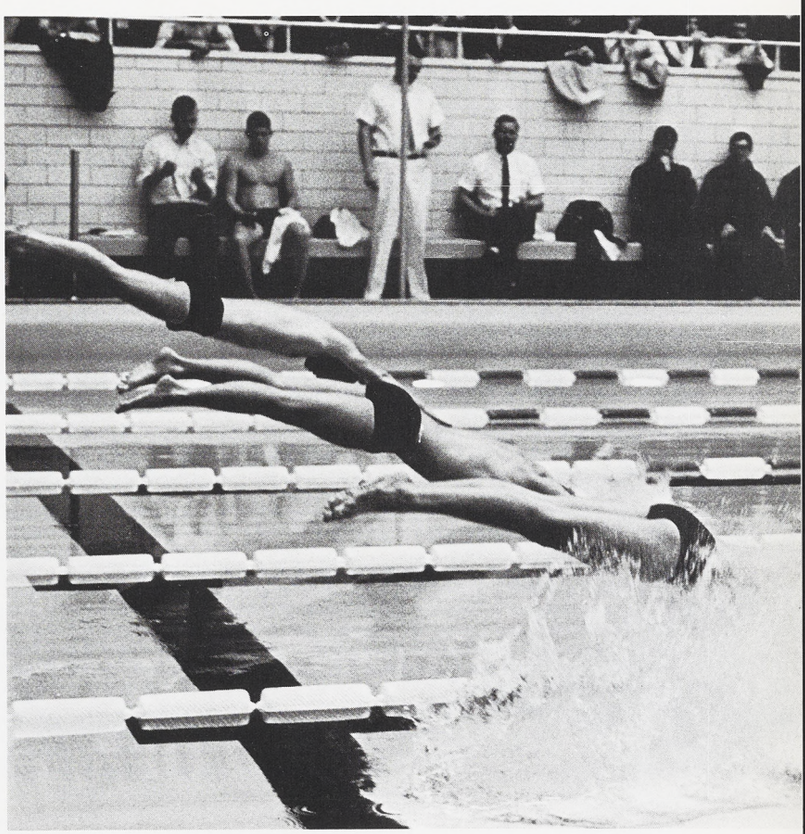

The start is all important to success in a race, whether it is a relay (above) or the backstroke (below). MSU backstroker Gary Dilley pioneered a new type of start where the swimmer stands with his hands higher than the traditional position.

Spartan strengths all year were the butterfly (above) demanding more strength than any other swimming event, and the backstroke (below, right), as All-American Gary Dilley won medals all season long.

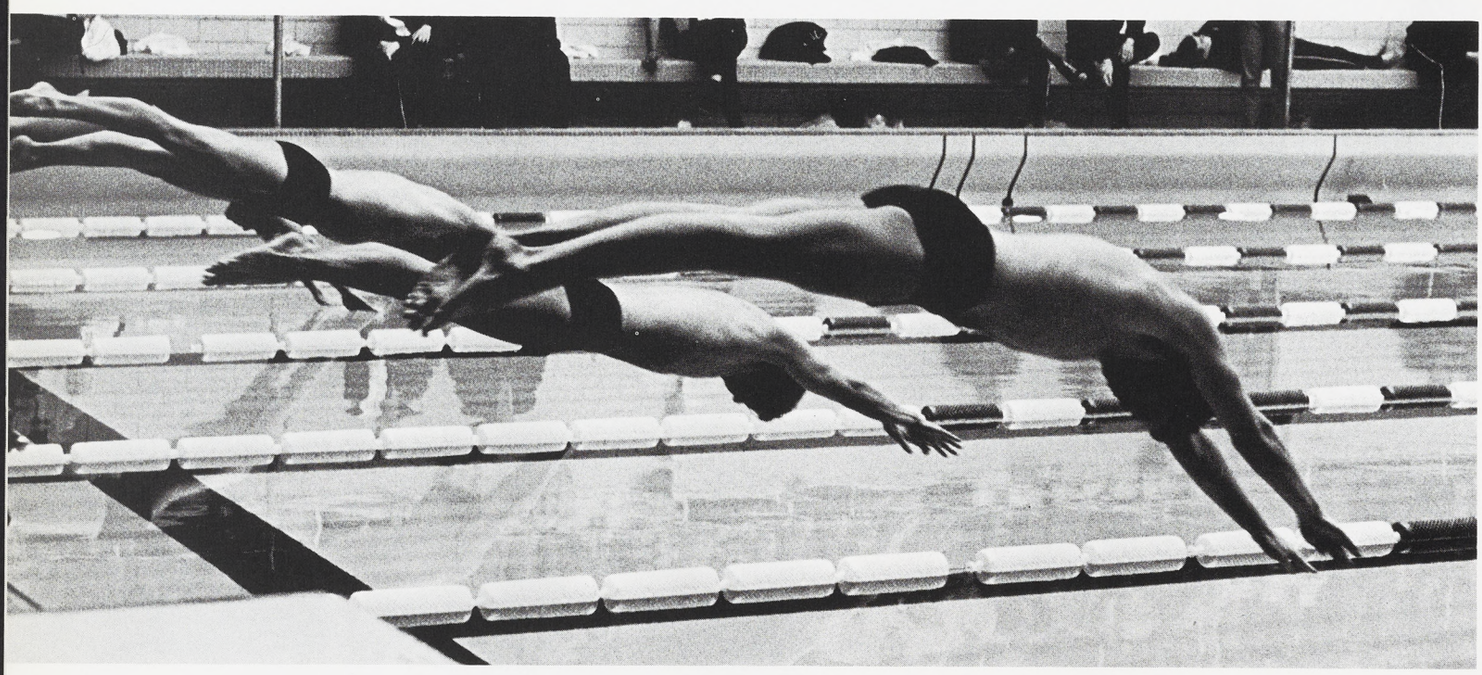

Behind Dilley are four-time all Americans; Glick, Walsh who has placed first 11 times this year, and Pete Williams. A high spot of the season, the team's 63—60 "upset" over U-M, rested with the success of the divers. Senior Fred Whiteford, Duane Greene and Doug Todd, tutored by second year coach Fred Narcy, downed the U-M divers 14—4 in two diving events.

Once was enough, though, as the Michigan tankers got revenge and forced MSU to third place in the Big Ten, behind them and Indiana. The Spartans managed three victories, though, including the 400 yard relay team of Williams, Dilley, Don Rausch and Gary Langley. Dilley added two more Big Ten championships to his tally in the backstroke as did freestyler Walsh.

The team wound up the season with Big Ten championships in five events and a 7—1 record as it awaited the national tournament.

Spring Sports

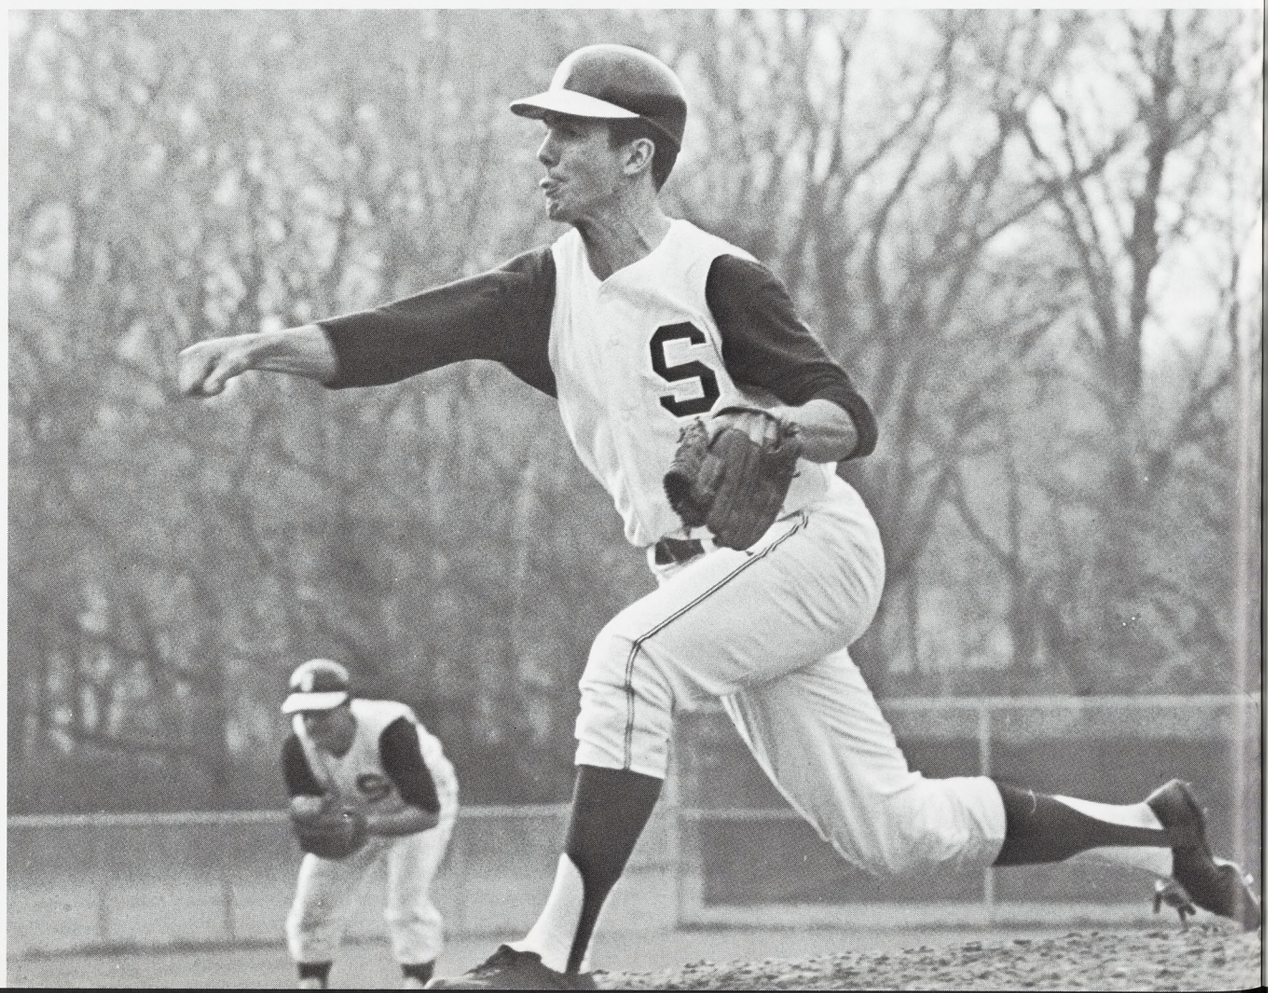

"Victory is oft a shadowy thing, meaning much, without form." —Anonymous

The tension of a baseball game shows itself in a multitude of ways. The expressions of tension range from the force of a runner trying to score to the grimaces of a good pitcher in a tight game.

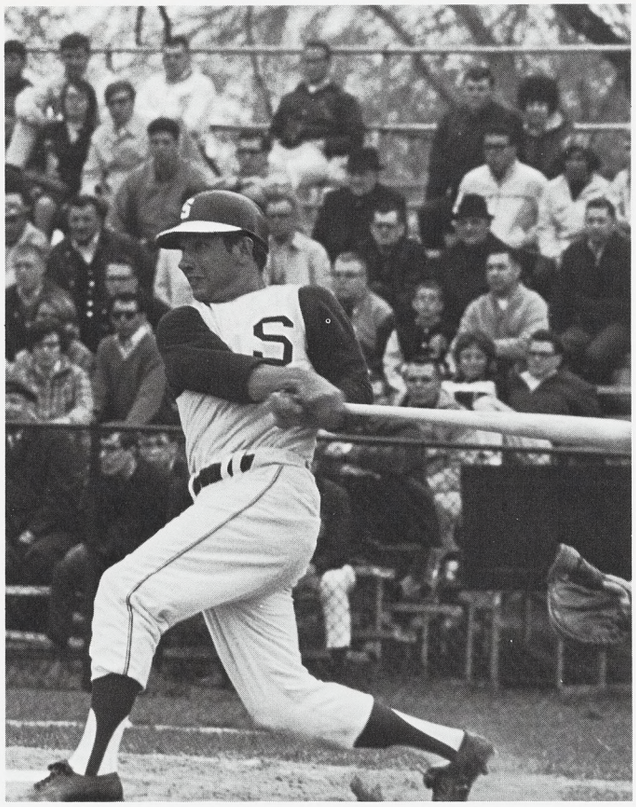

Baseball

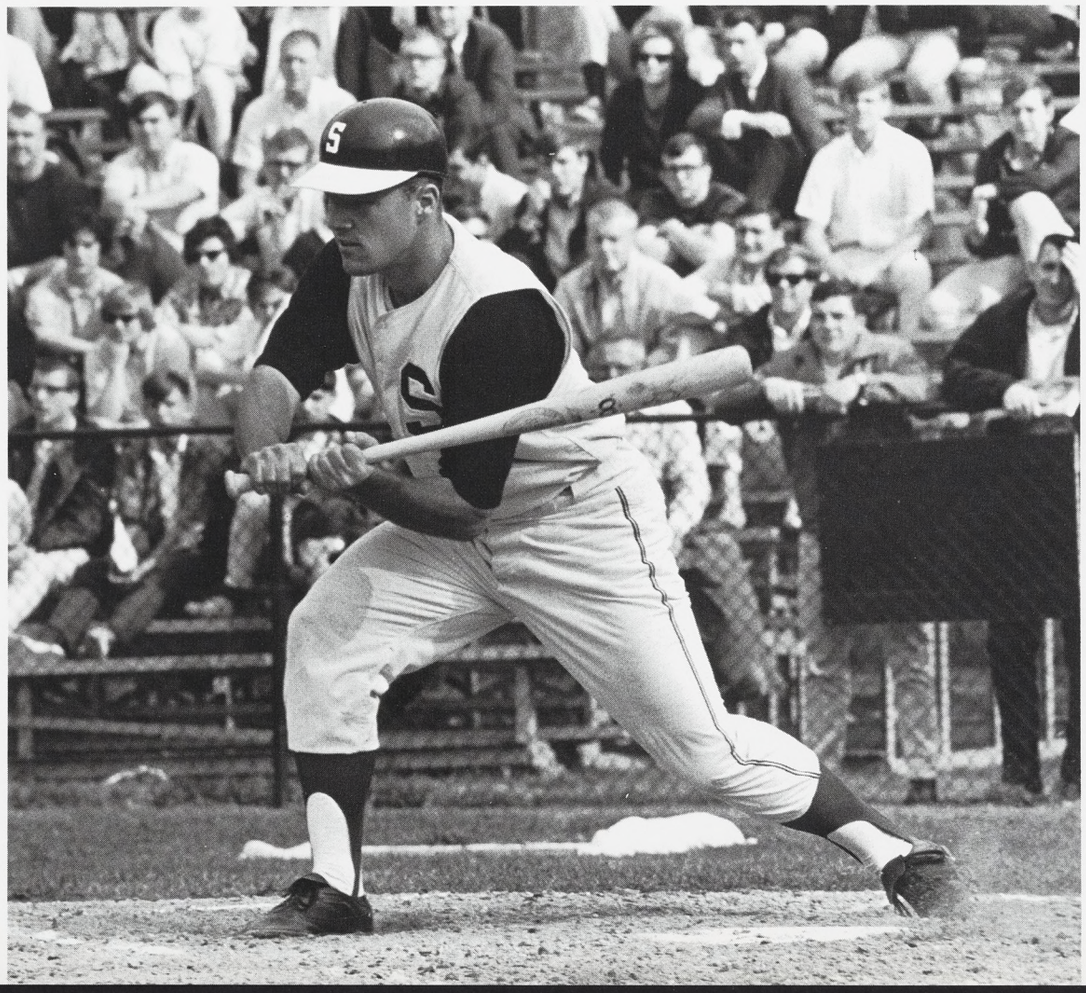

On paper, the Spartans expected one of the stronger teams in the school's baseball history. Coach Litwhiler had the three top hitters returning, in addition to the pitchers responsible for 21 of the record 28 victories posted by the 1965 club.

Spartans first realized that it might take a Cinderella season to annex the Big Ten title after the annual trip south. When the team managed to achieve only a 6—8 record, the fans began to realize the season would be less than phenomenal.

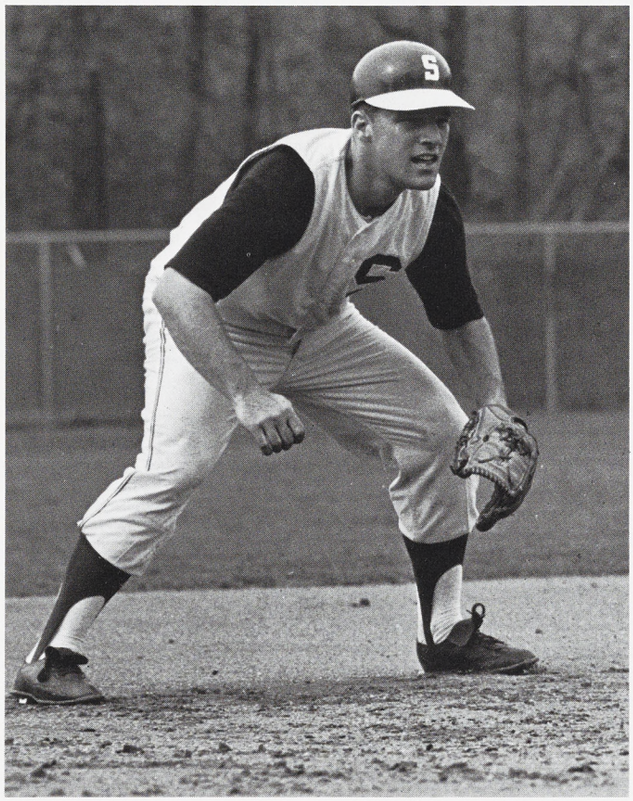

Other than the thrill of a 10-game winning streak which included six Big Ten victories, they weren't disappointed as the team struggled to a 24-13-1 overall and an 8—5 Big Ten record. Prospects for improving last year's fourth-place finish are somewhat less than bright since Coach Litwhiler lost 17 ballplayers through graduation, including the entire starting line-up with the exception of Tom Binkowski at first base. The only prediction the coach could offer was, "The quantity is there, but the quality will have to show itself."

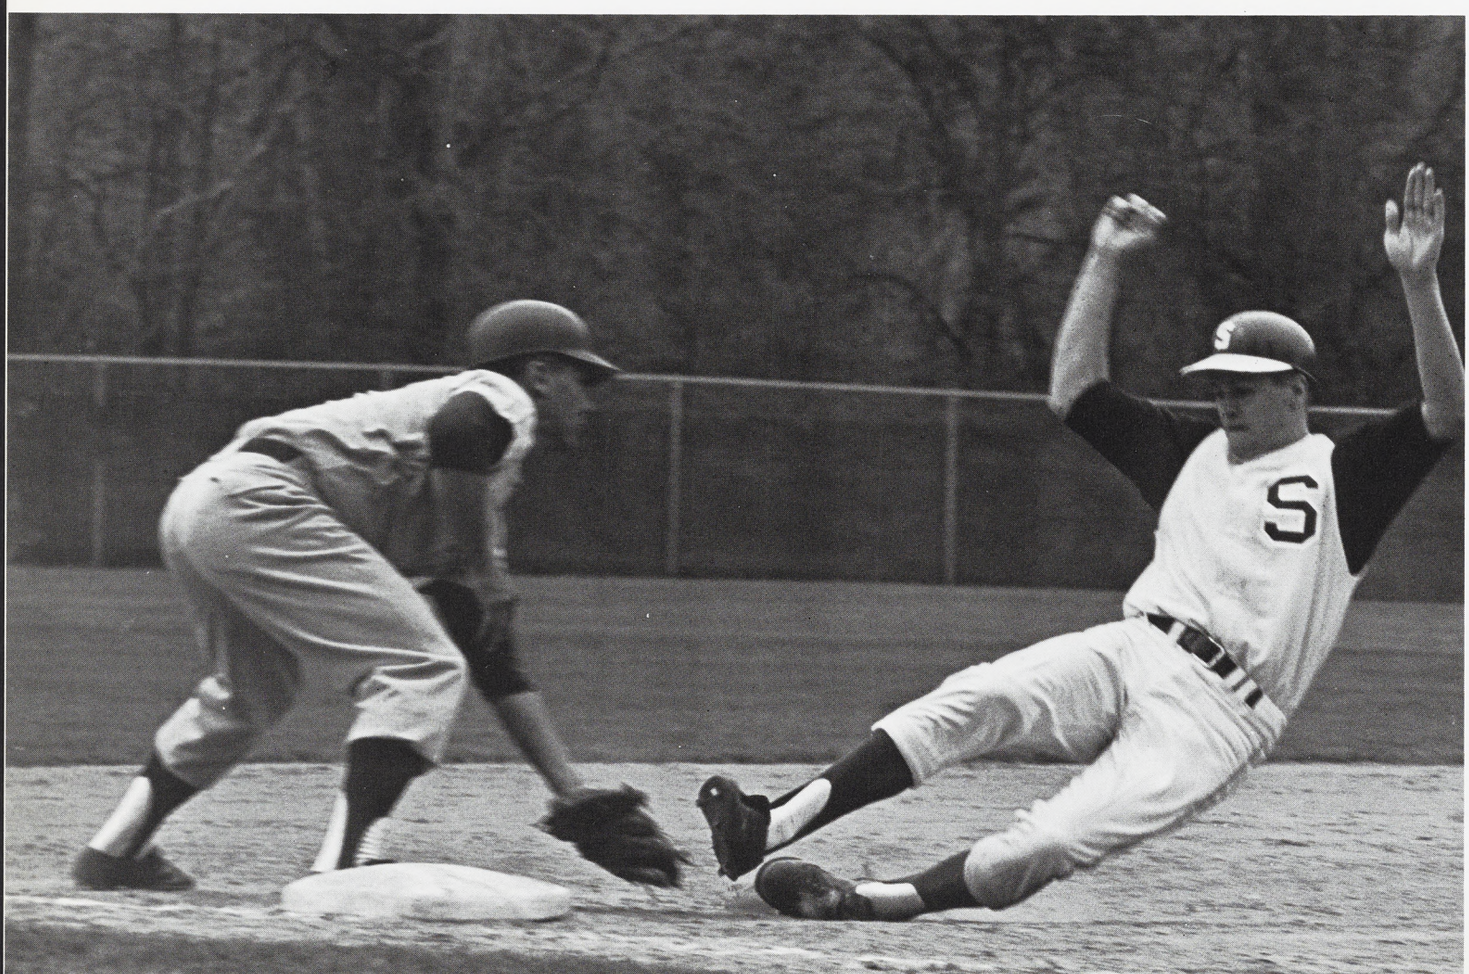

A necessary complement to good defense is powerful hitting. When Spartan bats exploded, which wasn't often enough, the whole team contributed to the offense.

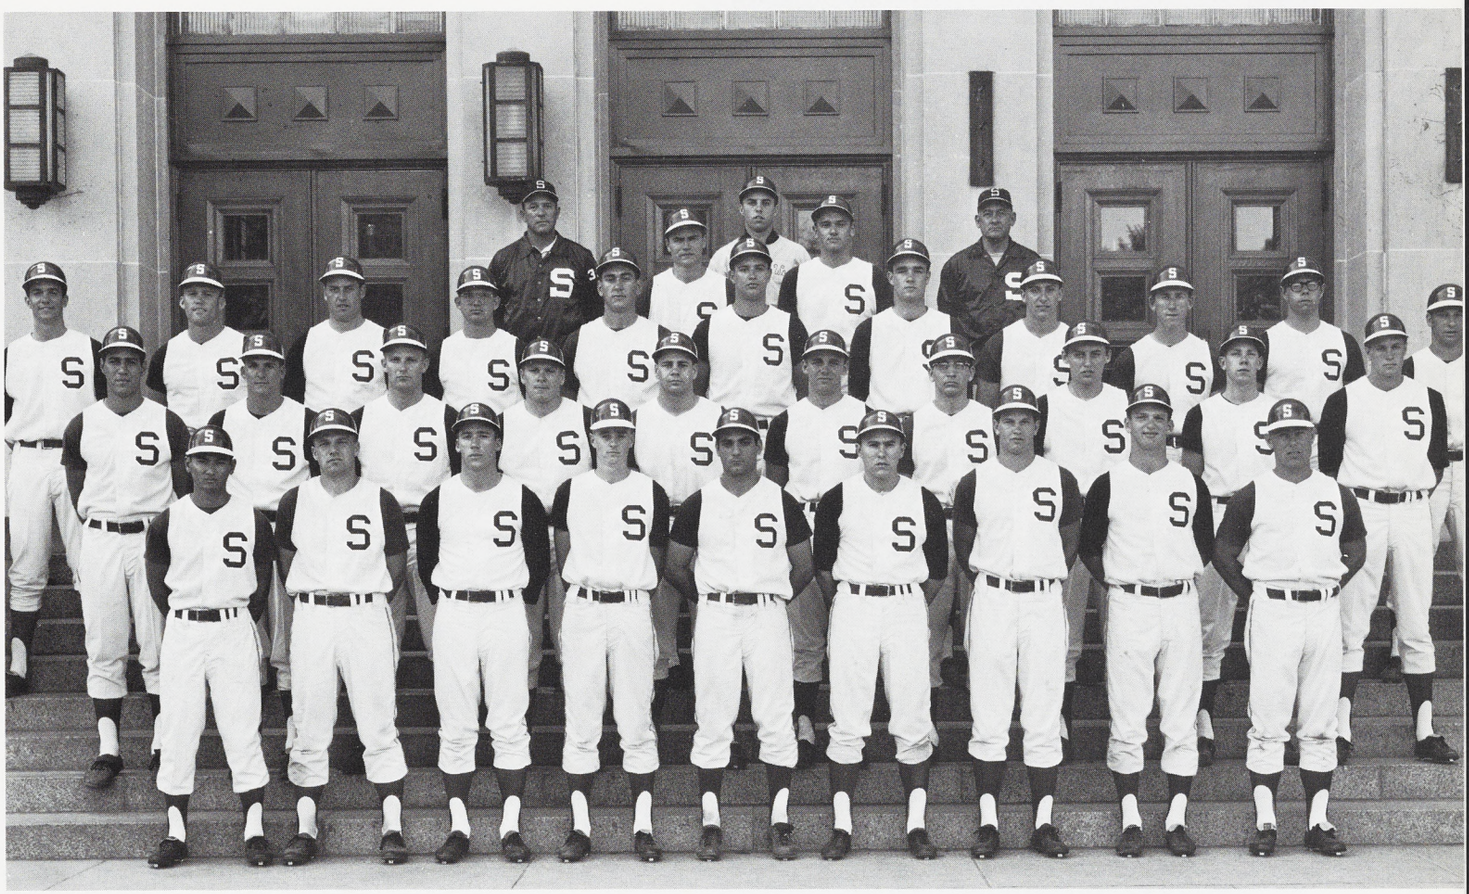

When the league is the Big Ten, the defense is good whether a Spartan (below) or an Illini (above) is trying to stretch a hit into an extra base.

OUTDOOR TRACK

The theme of "The Greatest Spartan Sports Year" was far from dampened as Fran Dittrich's strong young track team chalked up remarkable victories last spring. Boasting a 3—0 record in dual meet competition, they scored their final and most important victory on home cinders when they won the Big Ten championship.

Fine individual performances were numerous as Bob Steele established a meet record in the 440 hurdles at the Central Collegiate meet. His continued improvement led to an NCAA championship in that event, the only Spartan to achieve that honor. Middle distance runners Mike Martens and John Spain led the team to a 104—37 romp over Ohio State. Spain continued the good work to set a meet record of 1:48.8 in the half-mile run as the Spartans beat the Irish 87—54.

Much of the credit for the Big Ten championship is due to the mile relay team of Martens, Dunn, Campbell, and Spain, as they surprised everybody by nosing out Illinois' defending champions. Just as valuable was the point-gathering of footballers-turned-track stars Gene Washington and Clinton Jones. Coach Dittrich, with all but three letter winners returning, is already planning on another successful season on the cinders.

TENNIS

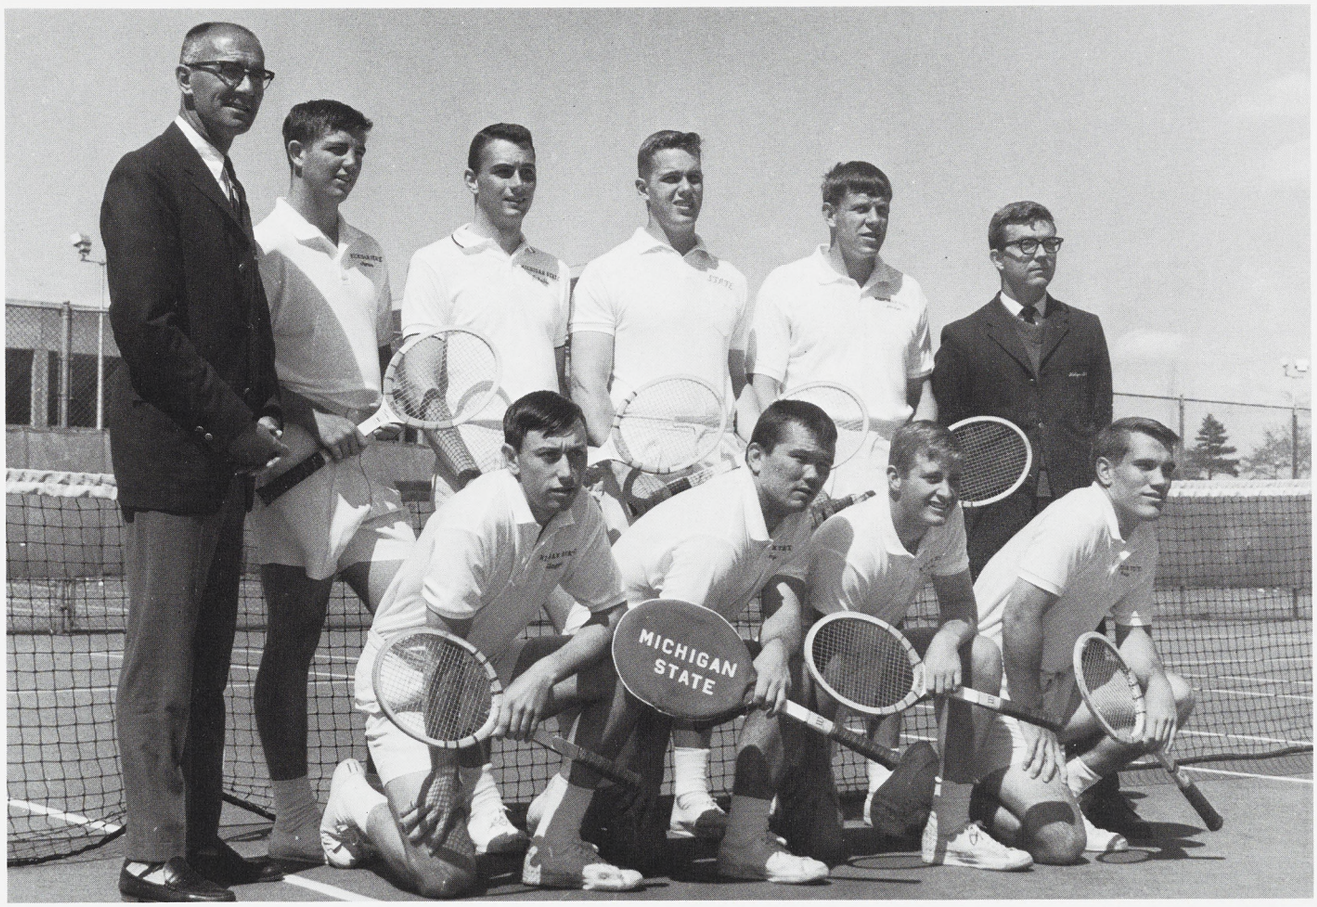

Captained by senior Mike Youngs, the Michigan State tennis team came from a mediocre 1965 season to break the three year jinx which had held them to fourth in the Big Ten. The netters went almost to the top of the league as they finished the season with a 7—1 dual meet record and second place in the Conference.

Vic Dhooge and Mickey Szilagyi were Big Ten champions at No. 5 and No. 2 singles respectively with Dhooge teaming with Jim Phillips to win the Big Ten doubles. Rich Monan copped the No. 1 singles consolation title and combined with Szilagyi to finish runner up at No. 1 doubles in the Big Ten Championship meet, held at MSU last May.

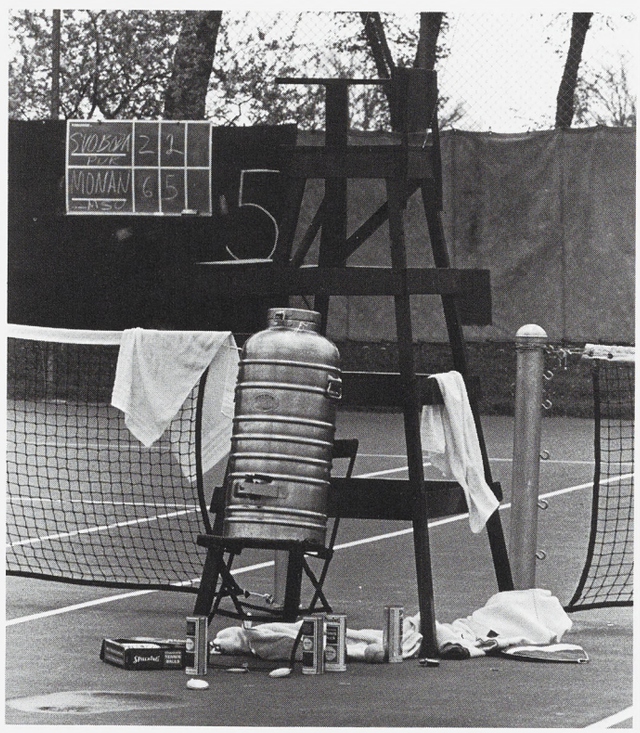

Prospects for the 1967 squad look good as juniors Phillips and Dhooge, with sophomores Monan and Szilagyi, will be returning after their excursion to the National Collegiate championships at Coral Gables, Florida, to lead the netters to what Coach Stan Drobac predicts will be "another great year."

GOLF

For a young MSU golf team with high potential and a coach of Bruce Fossum's caliber, constant improvement is virtually inevitable. That was the story of State's golf team this past spring. Despite an unimpressive dual match record of 6 wins and 7 losses, the Spartans improved on last year's seventh place standing, finishing fourth in the Big Ten.

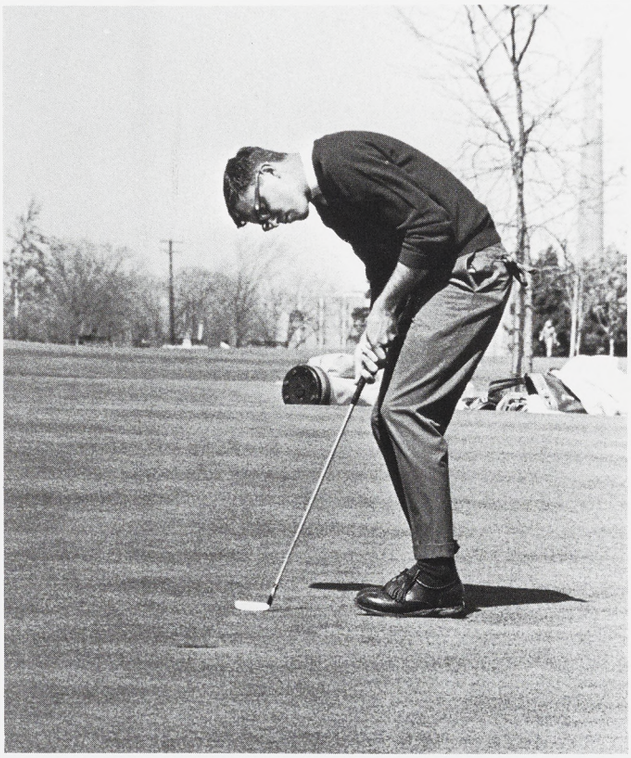

Bad weather and a late spring hampered the golfers but the strong showings of Captain Ken Benson, Rick Mackey, Sandy McAndrew and John Bailey gave the linksmen the highest Big Ten team total in MSU's history. The last two players, McAndrew and Bailey, successfully made the switch from other sports—McAndrew from hockey and Bailey from basketball. Within a year or two, Coach Fossum predicts the theme of improvement will change to a shout of victory as his teams are steadily nearing their goal of a Big Ten championship.

Diversity Is . . .

. . . fighting for victory, sweating for condition, working for self-perfection. Throughout the year, the intramural program offers physical improvement to the members of the multiversity.

Intramurals

"Competition benefits not only the varsity athlete, but also every intramural participant, improving aspects of the individual reaching far beyond the realm of athletics."

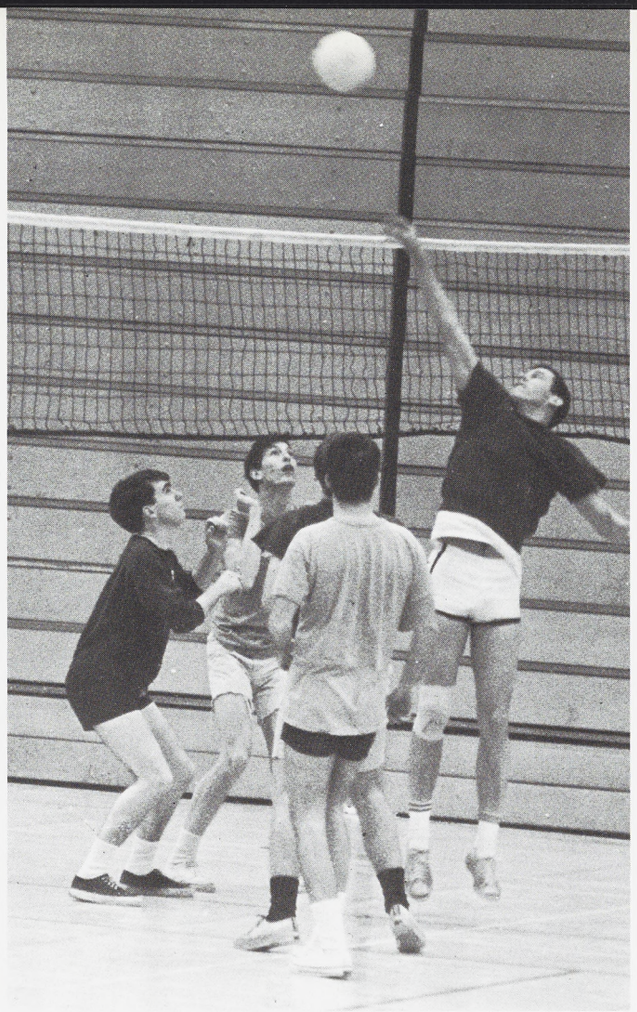

—Clarence "Biggie" Munn

Men's Intramurals

From the huge Men's Intramural building to the rambling sports fields spread from one end of the campus to the other, the Intramural program seeks to expose the maximum number of students to the benefits of healthful competition. To accomplish this end the Men's Intramural Program sponsors All-University sports offering competition to approximately 6,000 male students. The number of programs offered has not materially harmed the quality of the whole system due to the unique combination of excellent facilities and a staff that Dr. Frank Beeman, director of the intramural program, has labeled as "second to none." The calibre of the competition is excellent also, as anyone who has watched the final games of All-University competition at the end of each season can testify.

Each term, one sport seems to have more emphasis than others—football in the fall, basketball in the winter, and softball in the spring—reflecting perhaps the emphasis in varsity competition. This fall 260 teams competed for the All-University Ron Clark Memorial trophy in touch football which was won by the independent Impressions for the second straight year. Football did not monopolize all the attention, however, as badminton, wrestling, bowling, soccer, paddleball, handball, volleyball and the sports skills contests all offered trophy competition to many atheletes. The culmination of the year was the Turkey Trot—a combination of cross-country race, obstacle course, and mud bath awarding a turkey to the winner and a goose egg to the last place finisher.

Intramural sports is a label applied to many activities—ranging from volleyball (above) to canoe racing (below).

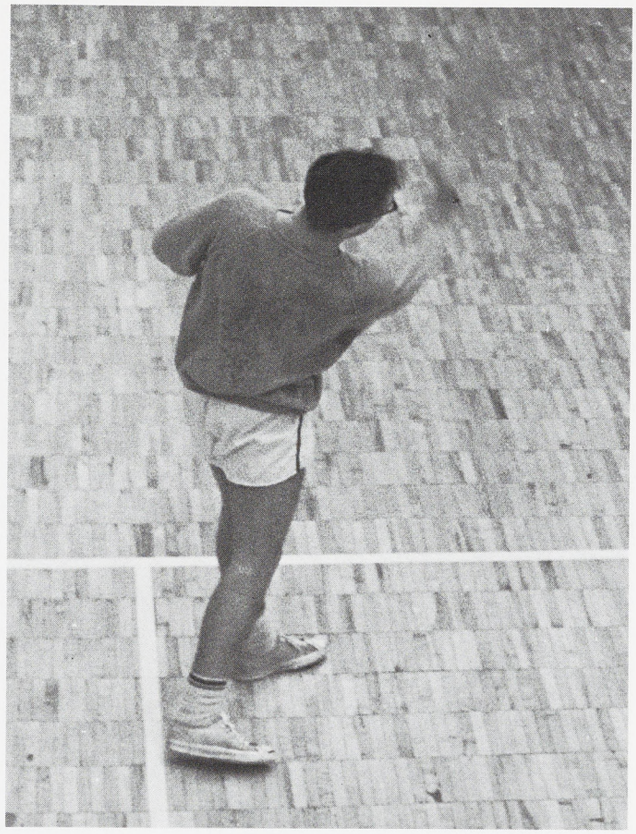

Intramural football season runs from the heat of early fall to the snow of finals week, but it makes no difference as the six lighted IM fields are always in use. New this year were the two lighted fields in East Complex (above).

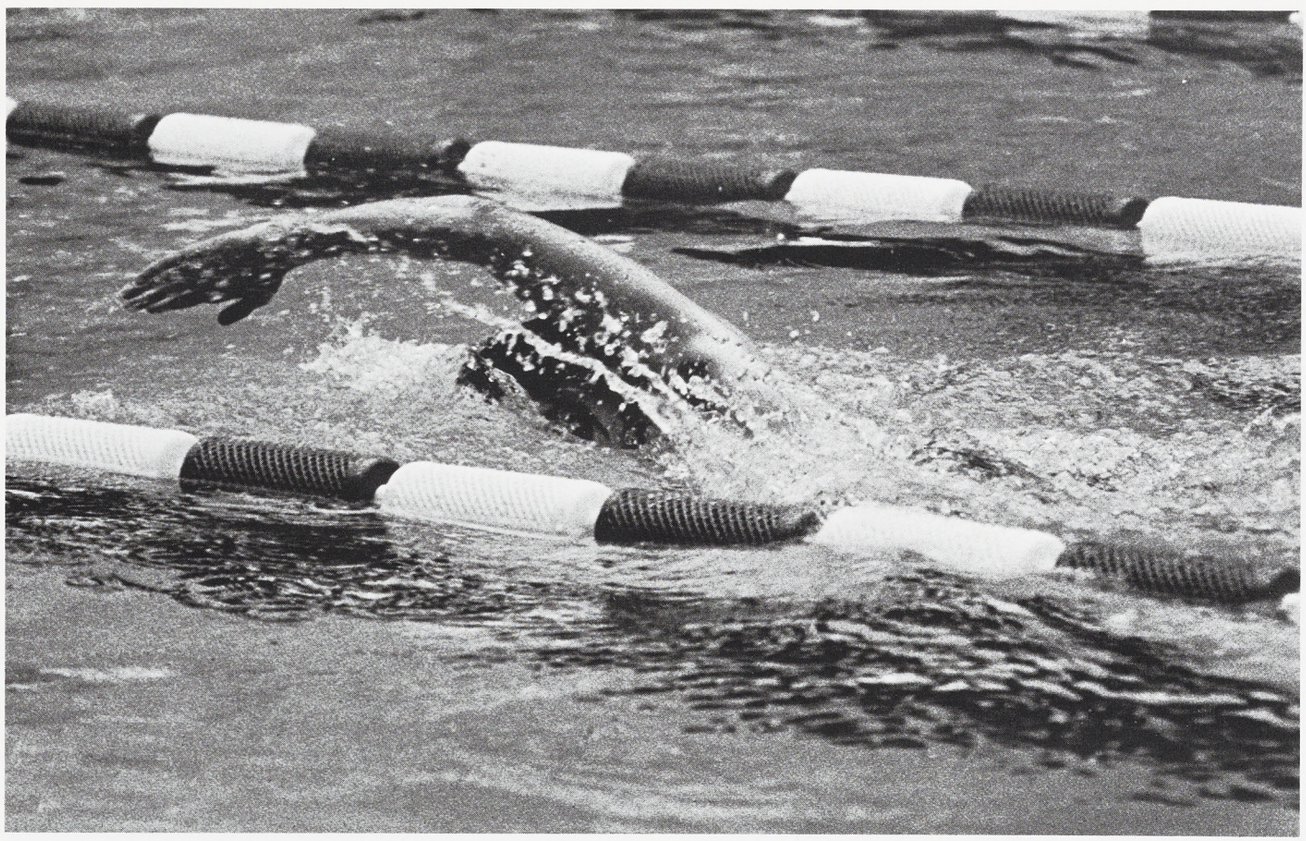

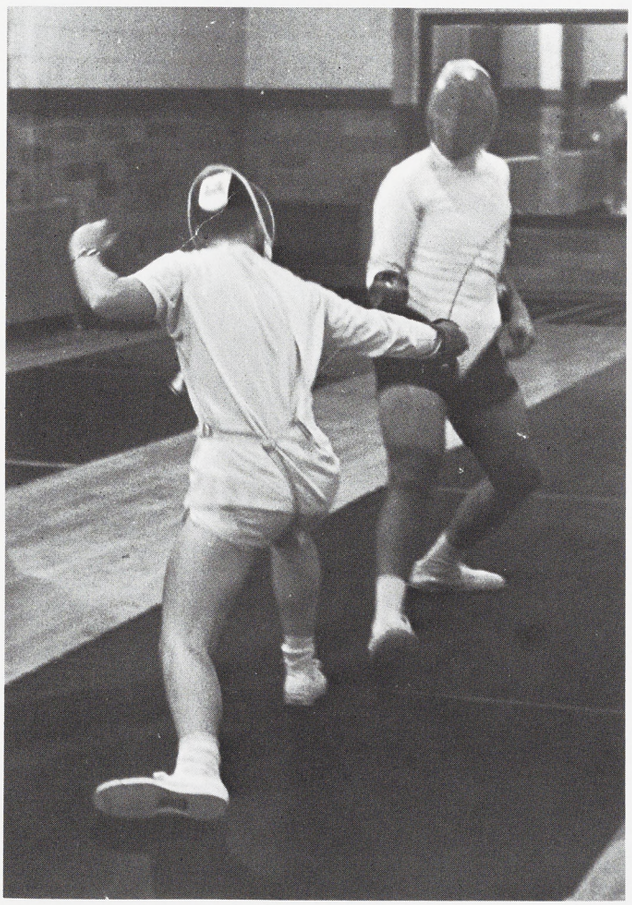

The emphasis shifts in winter term as most athletes are confined indoors by the weather. Not all winter term sports were indoors this year, however. Due to an exceptionally large snowfall, a new sport came into vogue—free-form diving into snow banks from residence hall windows. A few minor sports were changed from fall term, as All-University tournaments in handball, paddleball, bowling, volleyball and other sports drew over 900 students into competition for recognition as best in the multiversity. The amount of competitors in organized competition was not so noteworthy winter term as the rise in participation in informal activities. The rush was not entirely unexpected, but even so, Dr. Beeman must have wished for more facilities to handle the large turnout.

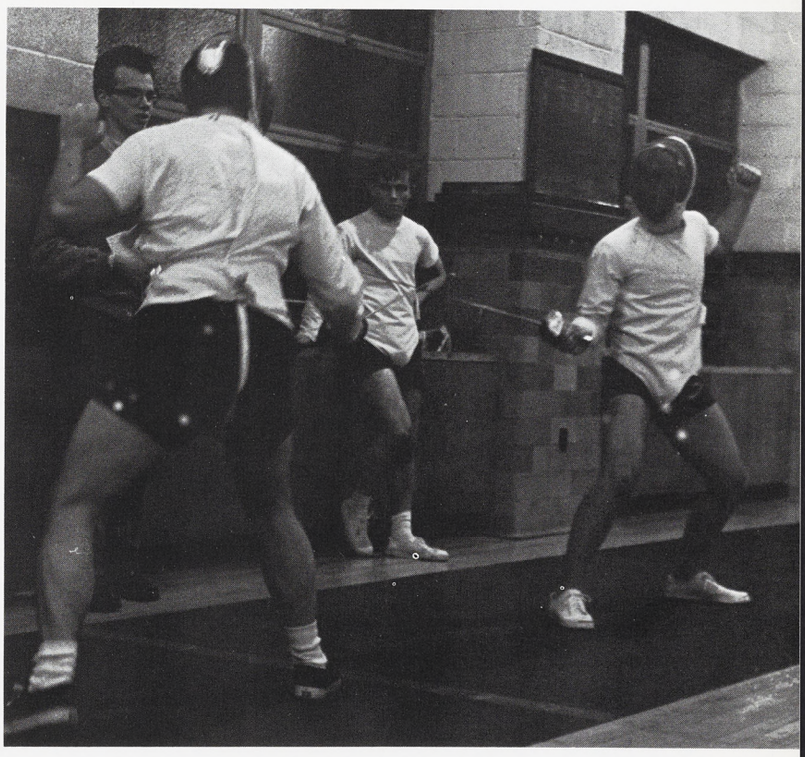

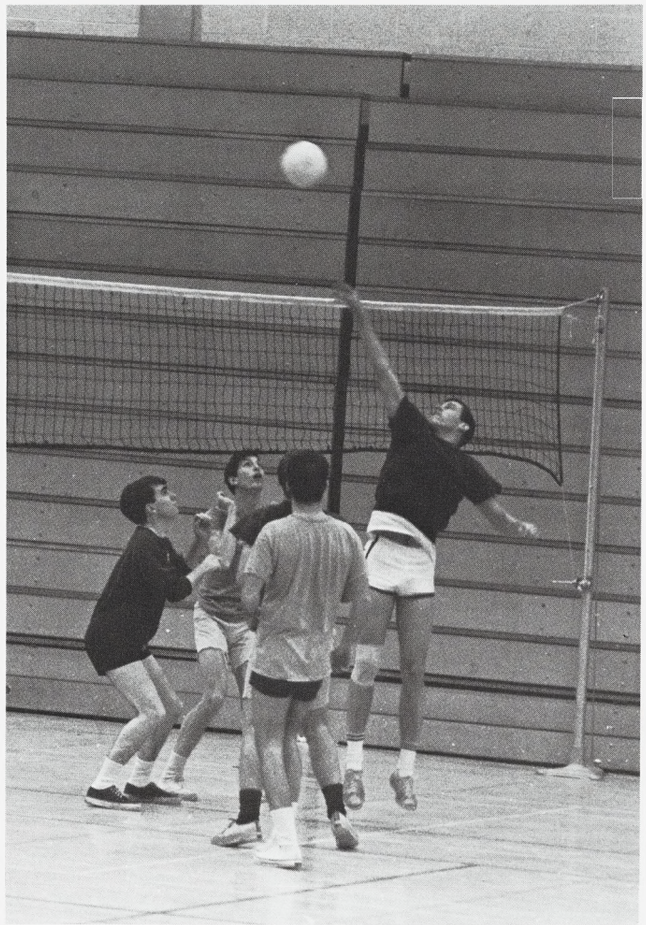

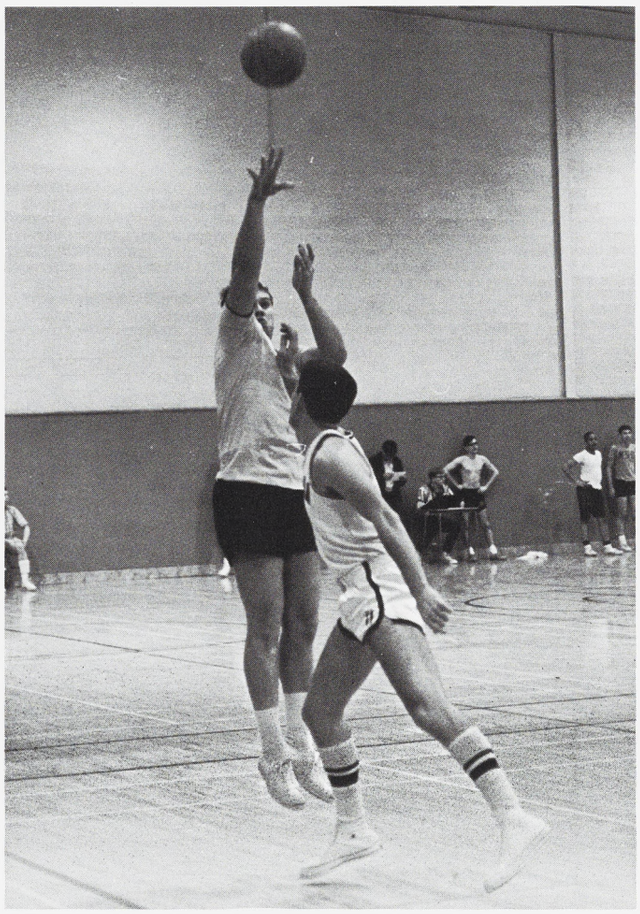

Competition is an integral part of the Men's Intramural Program which sponsors University-wide tournaments in swimming (above), fencing (below), and many other sports, including handball and paddleball (facing page).

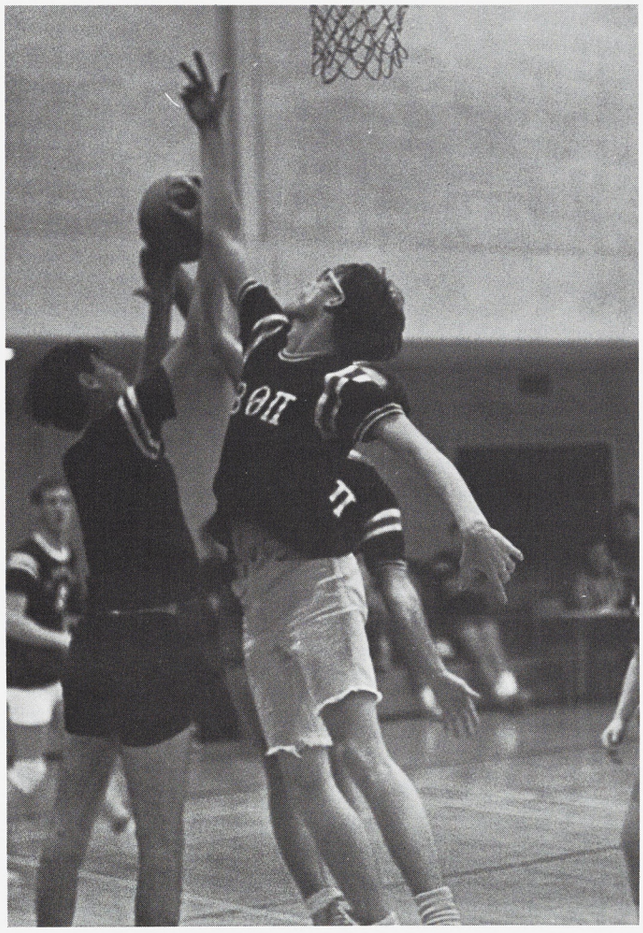

Whether in formal or informal competition, basketball reigns supreme in the winter. Formally, 330 teams competed in the intramural basketball program with the top teams entering All-University competition. This year, Delta Chi took the title, ending the independents' six year grip on the glory. Informal participation can be judged only by usage of the Intramural Building's basketball courts. By this measure, the courts were in use nearly every hour they weren't being used for class. A comment reflecting the attitude toward the entire situation, and perhaps toward the whole intramural program, came from one of the participants in the locker room after a workout: He said, "Yeah, the place was packed. It's great, though."

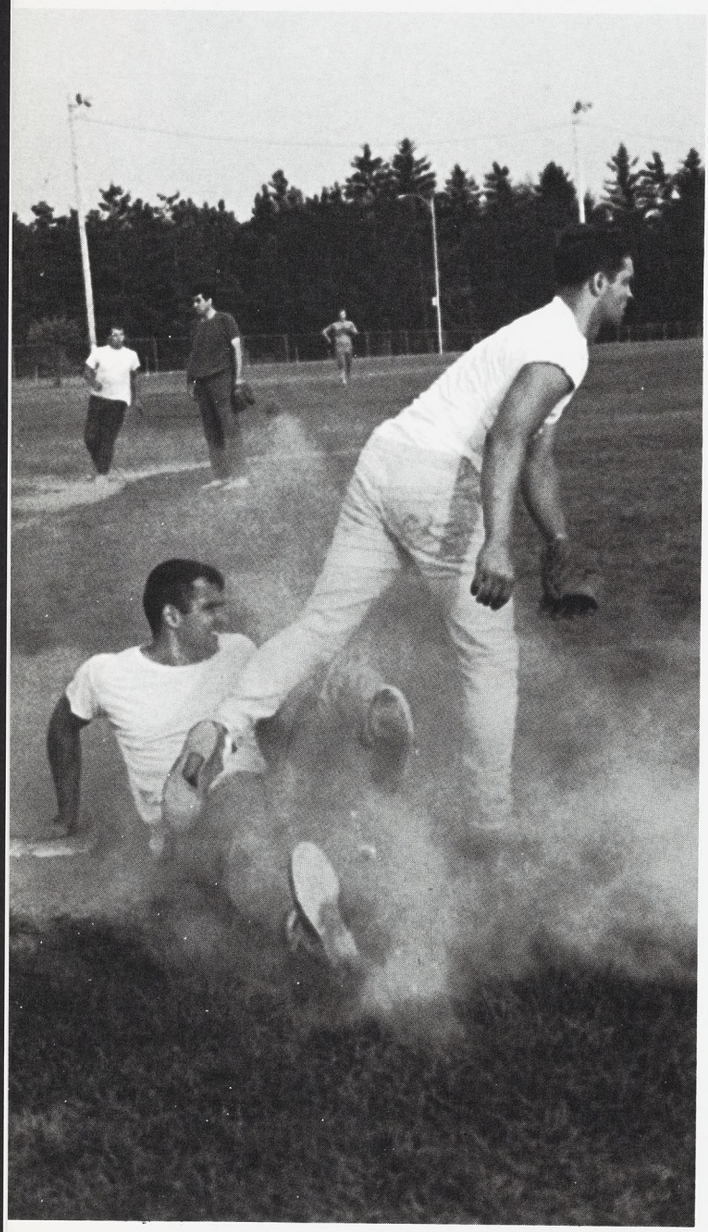

Although the ability might not be of varsity caliber the same intensity of competition is present in IM basketball. The attitude is competitive whether the action is fighting for a rebound (above, right) or shooting from the corner (above, left).

With the coming of spring comes the sharp crack of bat meeting ball, the anguished cries of, "You're blind ump!" and baseball season begins. Last spring was no exception as softball took basketball's place in the limelight and the term-long competitions began again with the addition of tennis and outdoor track to the schedule. The fraternity track meet was no surprise as SAE continued their dominance. The Residence Hall meet was a little different as Wonders turned the tables on Akers, last year's winner. In softball, the preliminary games were close, but not the final, as the Roaches smashed ZBT 11—0. Spring term's most important sports aspect isn't just the current sports competition. It is the final tally of points for the All-Sports trophy in the usual three divisions: Residence Halls, fraternities, and independents. Last year Bailey, Sigma Chi, and the Red Trojans out-scored their competition in a system which gives points to each representative for both participation and order of finish. The All-Sports competition is the ultimate goal influencing each living unit's representative in All-University competition—one more aspect of the challenges and opportunities provided by the men's intramural program.

Baseball isn't the only important spring intramural. The intramural track meet draws many "unknowns" into the limelight as they strain for the glory of victory.

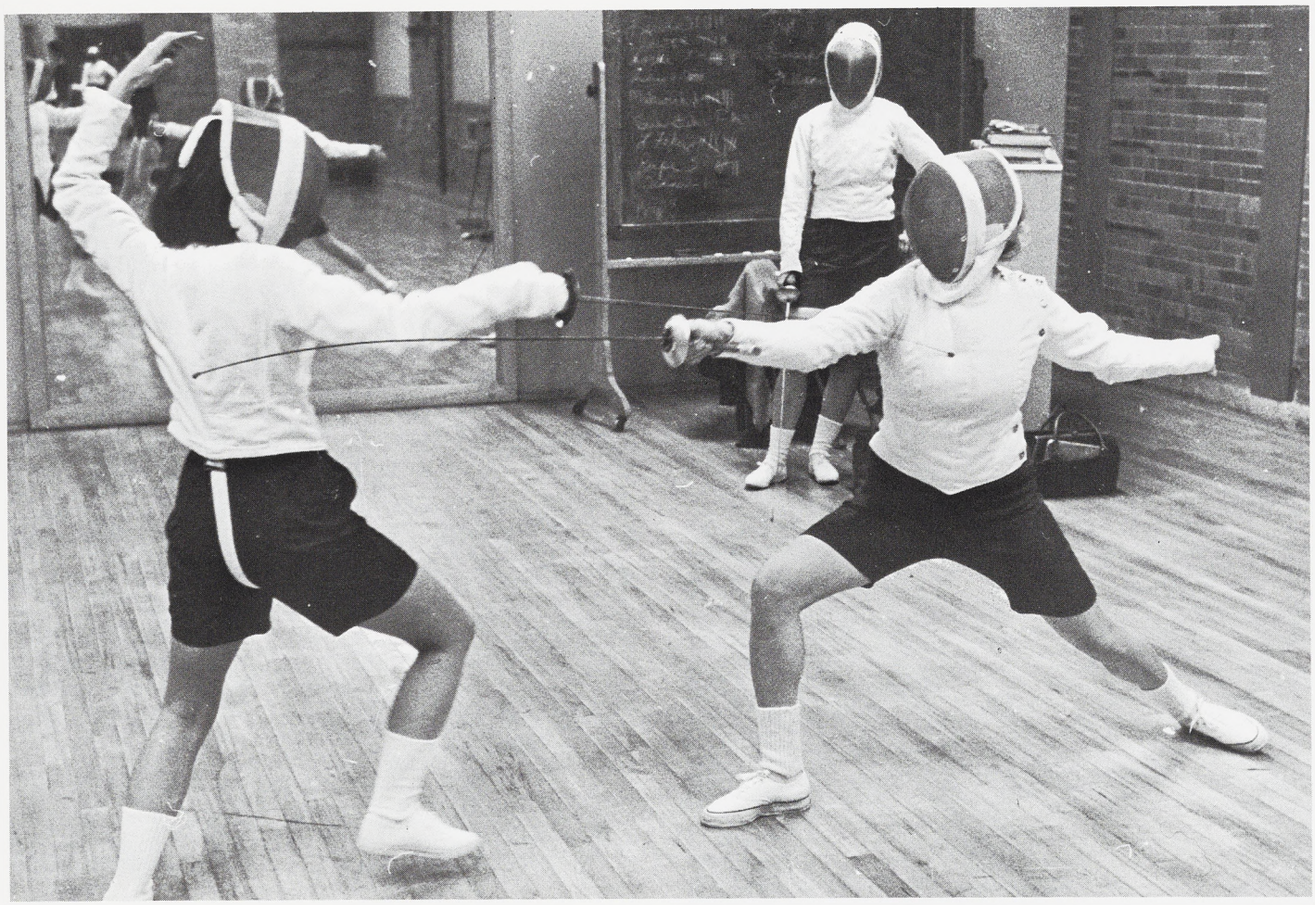

WOMEN'S IM

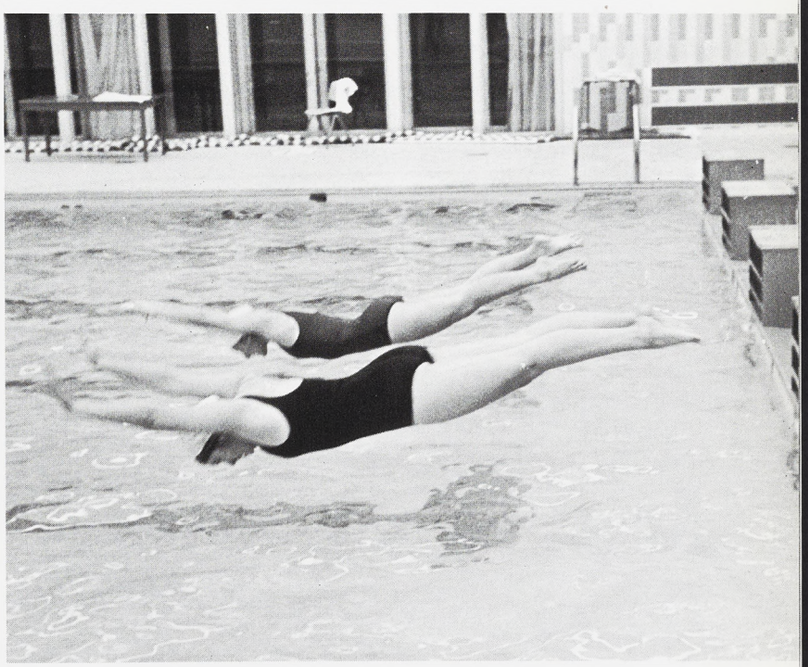

Although the activities of the ten women's intercollegiate sports teams are generally unpublicized, they continually attract both new members and trophies. Any girl who wants, may join a wide variety of teams under the instruction of many well-qualified and trained coaches. Field Hockey, speed and synchronized swimming and tennis all did well this year. Basketball has been outstanding as well as gymnastics, coached by former Olympic gymnast, Miss Ernestine Carter. MSU won the Midwest and National Golf Tournaments last year with the aid of student medalist Joyce Kazmierski. The women's intercollegiate sports offer a large number of opportunities for individuals as well as for teams in general. Each participating girl has the opportunity to form lasting friendships and to travel to various other universities.

Michigan State coeds compete in a wide range of sports from fencing to bowling to swimming. The intramural program provides the raw material whcih forms the several women's intercollegiate competitive teams.

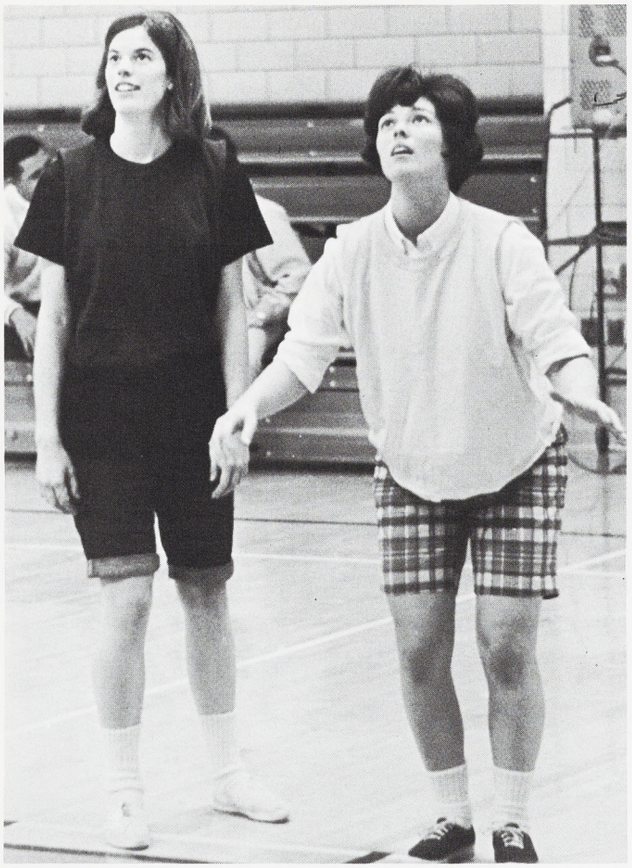

The Women's Intramural Program at MSU is one of the most extensive and well sponsored in the nation. Such facilities as pools, dance areas, activity rooms and equipment are offered to any woman student upon request. Women's Intramurals also create opportunities to participate in activities either informally for individual recreation, or in scheduled competitive tournaments. Women are free to use the IM building facilities informally, and can reserve equipment such as pools, gymnasium, steam baths, exercise and activity rooms, and tapes and records for modern and formal dance practice.

A scheduled consultant is present at most informal activities so that women may learn about the available equipment and how to profit from it. For this reason, the informal program is the most popular with more women participating in it than in the formal program. The Women's Intramural Program, co-operating with the Men's Intramural Program, sponsors a club sports system open to anyone. These clubs include volleyball, synchronized swimming, acrobatics, judo, karate, and the Ski club.

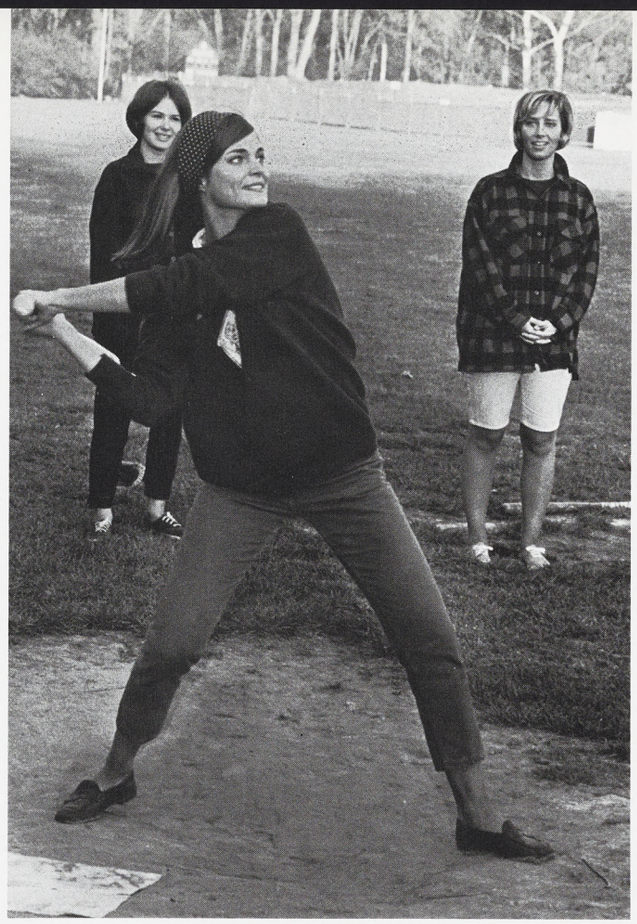

Enthusiasm is more important than ability in women's basketball as scores are low while excitement runs high (surrounding pictures). Another facility for women is the exercise room (below, right) where a coed can combine recreation and conversation.

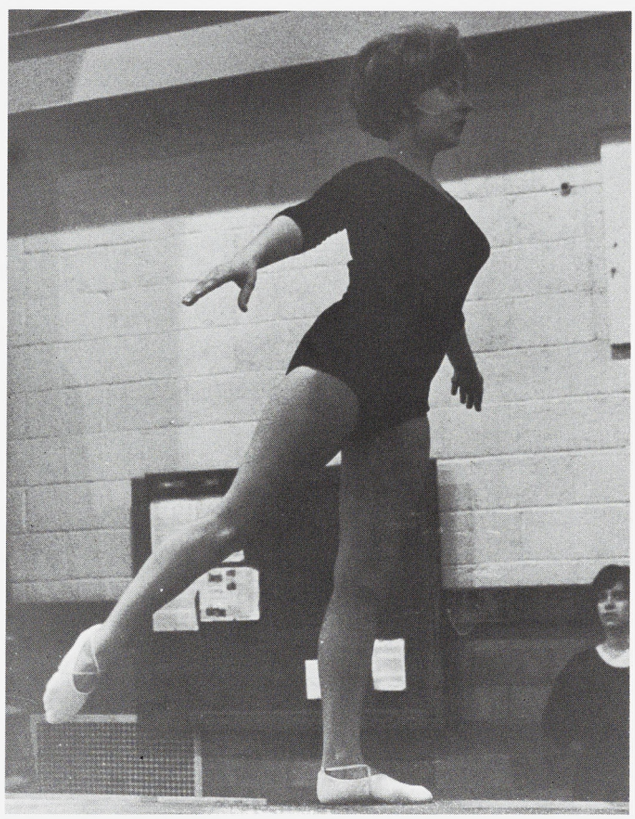

The organization and instruction of the women's team and individual intramural sports events at MSU is one of the best coordinated in the Big Ten. Under the leadership of Director Kathy Harding, the Women's Intramural Program offers a wide and varied range of sports to any coed who participates. Competitive team sports during fall term are volleyball, field hockey, and swimming. Sports events are divided into residence hall, sorority, and independent leagues which give league champions the chance for an All-University championship in that sport. Winter term sports are basketball, swimming, and sorority bowling, while spring events are blooperball and residence hall bowling and softball. All-University individual championship events are also important in women's intramurals. During fall and winter, individuals may compete in free exercise, basketball free throw, badminton, table tennis, contemporary dance, and fencing. More championship events occur in spring consisting of tennis, track and field, archery, skish and golf. Trophies and silver charms are awarded to victorious teams and individuals, and All-University Champions are pictured in the IM building and handbook. Although not everyone is victorious, the growing popularity of the Women's Intramural Program can be easily seen in its increasing participation.

CLUB SPORTS

No matter how large the intramural program is, or how many sports attain varsity status, there is always some interest group or activity not covered by either classification. This doesn't mean that a weight-lifter or sailor or archer doesn't get the attention and criticism he needs to improve, however, for there is a club sport to shape any ability. Interest is the only criterion for existence, a unique situation which explains the support of such widely varying sports as skiing—which boasts the largest membership of any club, and rugby—one of the smallest sports teams on campus.

Lacrosse requires a mixture of abilities, from subtle positioning (above) to brute strength (below).

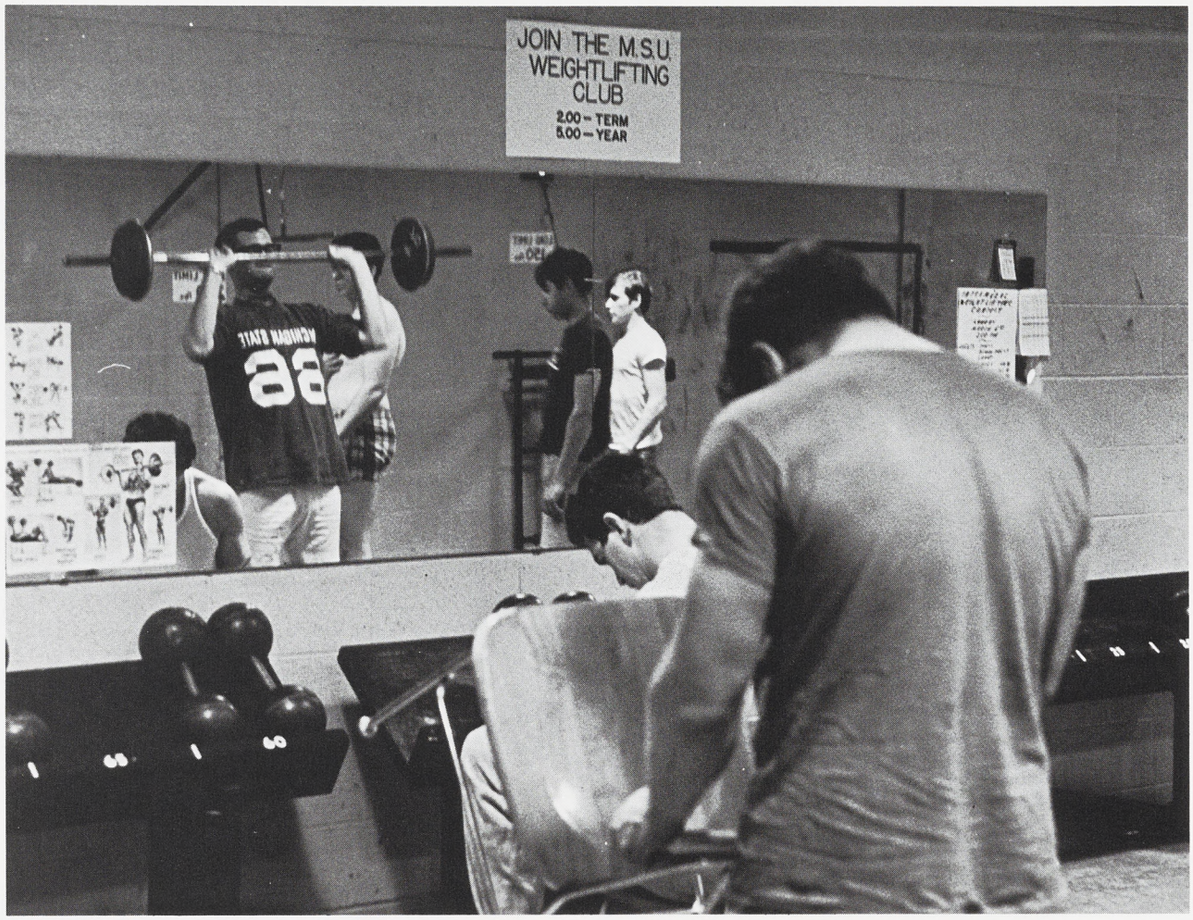

Club sports embrace many types of disciplines and training programs. For all their variety, their schedules all lead to the same goal, the straining speed of all-out competition.

A good example of the possibilites for sports clubs is the Ski Club which has grown from merely an interest group to the point where MSU now fields on intercollegiate ski team. The best bet to repeat the process is the fast-growing Judo Club (above, right).

RUGBY

Organized confusion seems to be the theme of the action in rugby football, with fifteen men on each side and a host of unfamiliar penalties and maneuvers to understand. Actually, the game is rather simple, its sole object being to advance the ball over the opponent's goal line by running past, around or over the other team. It is this very simplicity which accounts for rugby's growing popularity on campuses throughout the nation.

Rugby at MSU is a small sport, followed by a sparse group of dedicated followers and played ferociously by a tightly-knit group of athletes drawn from the entire University community. The State ruggers play in the Midwest Rugby Union, competing against schools and clubs throughout the area, continuing old rivalries and establishing new ones. Perhaps the best known of these grudge matches is the annual competition for the Steebe cup, named after the only financial supporter the club has at the present time. Future plans include membership in the proposed All-America Rugby Union, a move which would mean playing on a nationwide basis, with a consequent increase in the level of competition. As the caliber of play improves, so will the support, as the rugby club continues its growth at Michigan State.

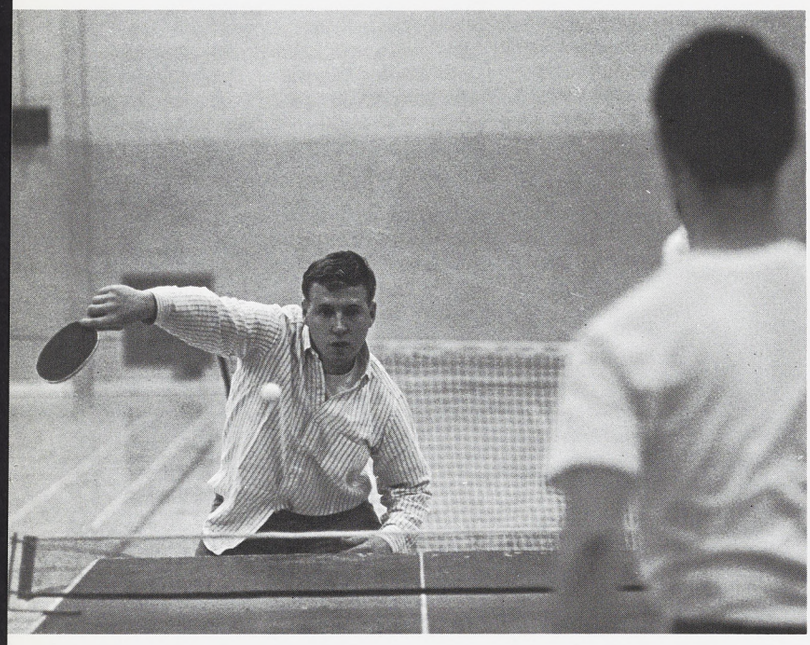

Play stops occasionally for a "scrum" (below) as a "hooker" attempts to get the ball to a "wing", resulting in a resumption of the typically fast and rough action (above).

There are no holds barred in rugby as players can use any method to stop their opponents. Occasionally it is possible to run past the opposition (above). Speed isn't always most important as a player must often simply try to run over his opponents (below).

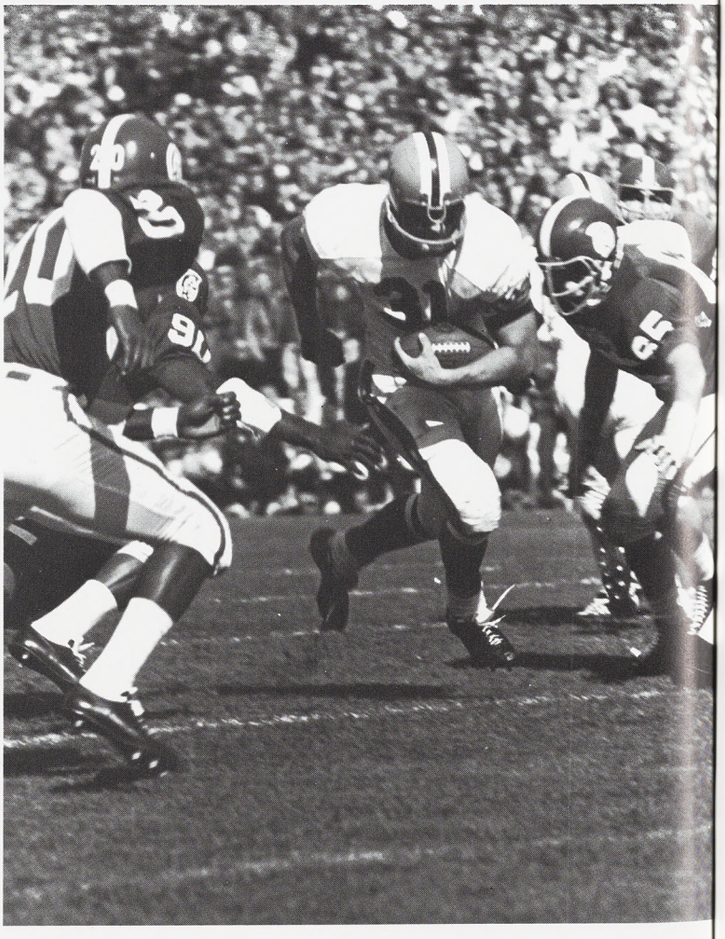

The year for sports fans took on a dreamlike quality. It was a year of near-supremacy in many sports, but that very nearness precluded the supremacy. Perhaps if pre-season polls hadn't installed Spartans as favorites in so many sports, the approach to victory would not have seemed so disappointing

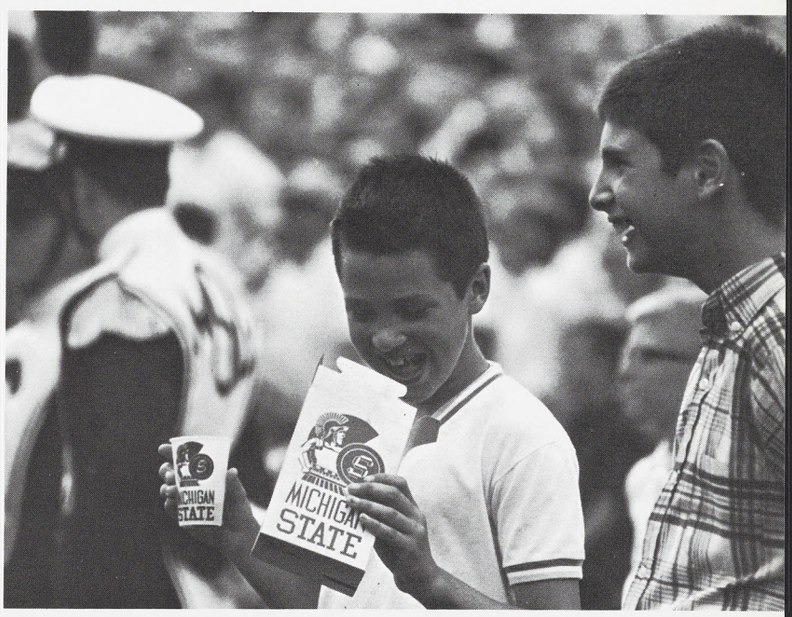

Sports '67: Dreams Within Reach and Promises Fulfilled by a Unity of Effort.

Michigan State's sports programs are all equally important to one man. Conversely, Biggie Munn is equally important to them. As director of athletics, the success of each sport, and of each athlete participating in the sport, form the central interest of his job. When the various teams that comprise the sports program are successful, they reflect the varying success of the multiversity and, indirectly, the success of Clarence "Biggie" Munn.

A consuming interest in sporting events is a common denominator uniting all spectators, whether they are present because of the excitement (above) or because they hope to cause the excitement (wrestling coach Peninger, left). For MSU fans, no matter their age or motives, when the multiversity competes, they are there.

GRADUATES

Four years pass and the one-time Freshman emerges as a not-so-eager Grad. The world is his for the taking and in his hands lies the destiny of mankind. But sometimes, late at night as he succumbs to the first waves of sleep, he wishes, just for a fleeting second, that he could return to the simplicity of the multiversity . . .

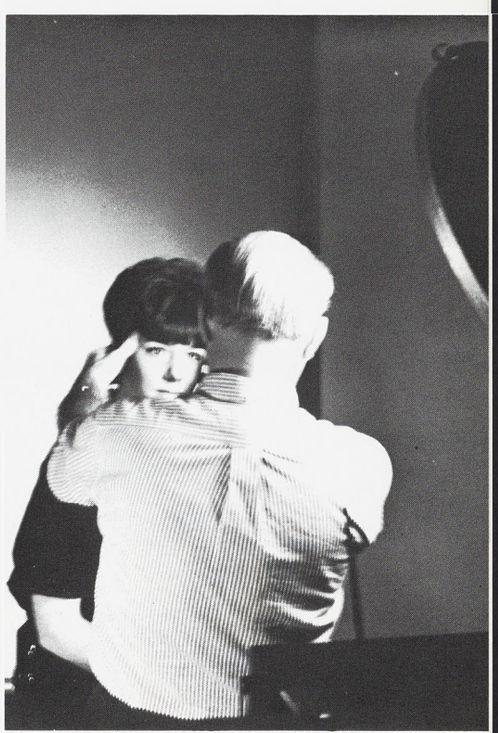

President Hannah personally signs all diplomas

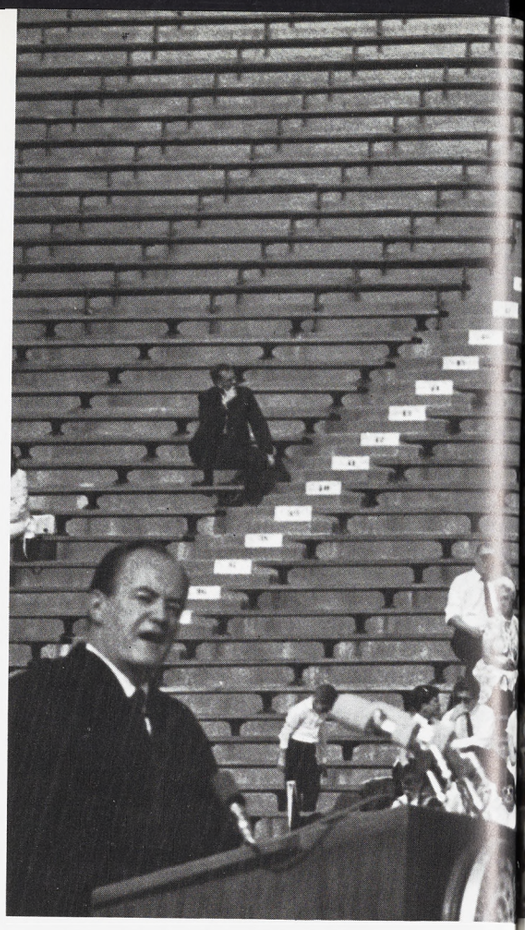

Senior portraits provide a permanent record of the graduate's accomplishments.

Commencement seems a long way off to the first term freshmen. They are met with mountains of required courses, tests and adjustments to a new way of living in the multiversity. It seems impossible that all this can be fitted into the next four years. Twelve terms later, as seniors, they fill out their diploma cards and find it even harder to believe that it has ended so quickly. The multitude of courses has been completed. The once-strange faces are now familiar friends to whom they must bid farewell.

President and Mrs. Hannah receive seniors at Cowles House.

Vice-president Hubert Humphrey speaks at Commencement Exercises in June, 1966.

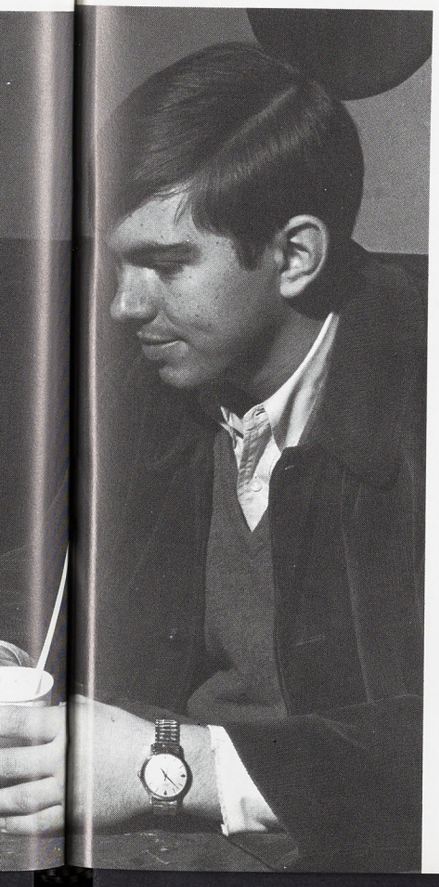

Commencement is a big day for everyone, faculty and family as well as the graduates. To each it has a different meaning. Parents all over the country have eagerly planned to attend the exercises. Few distances are too far to travel to MSU. Kellogg Center is filled to capacity. It is not hard to imagine their delight as their son or daughter, now a poised young adult, step forward in the Commencement processional. With the multiversity behind them, the world is at their finger tips.

Seniors gather at Coke breaks to carve their initials on the tables in Old College Hall.

The Saturday before Commencement, ROTC cadets receive their commissions as Second Lieutenants.

Thus endeth the work on the 1967 Wolverine. This has been my second year at this job and things sure went differently than most would have assumed. The 1966 book went off with hardly a hitch while the '67 book has been nothing but. Lost deadlines ran rampant and overtime at the publishers did much the same. However, now the book is finished and the time has come to rest and think of all that could have been done to make things easier and get the job done faster and less expensively. Those are lessons for next year's editor, though.

To those who worked expecially hard with me in finishing up the book this year, I want to extend my deepest gratitude. First, thanks to Roger Grant, our grad student who originally was hired to keep things running smoothly. At the critical time, he stepped in and ran things himself to get our pictures for us; either getting them assigned or else shooting them himself, sometimes even developing and printing them too. Jack Burns already knows how much I appreciate his willingness to take on any job, no matter what, and get it done. To these two, thanks for your dedication.

Also instrumental in production was Barney White, copy editor, philosopher and clean-up man on late pages. Thanks Barney, and keep it up next year. For those on the staff whom I have not named, (and there are many) I hope that you will return next year and use your experience to help your new editor.

The professional men who have worked with the staff and I also deserve thanks. Ed Hackleman and Ralph VanDyke of American Yearbook Company helped me initiate the design and basic ideas of the 1967 Wolverine. Joseph Dumont of Grafek Arts lent his special talents to design and render our division pages. Bill Hersey, also of Grafek Arts, did his usual excellent job of photographing the organizations which appear in this year's book; often putting up with the typical problems generated when working with groups of students. Also, thanks to Sam Fields of Delma Studios and his photographers, Whitfield Delaplane and Jerry Rosetti, for shooting a record 2751 senior portraits. Finally, thanks to Gary Zook, our man in Hannibal, who put the efforts (occasionally late) of all the aforementioned people together to publish the 1967 Wolverine.

As a close to this rather sentimental last piece of copy in the book, I want to thank our adviser, Mr. McIlrath, for his efforts when we were down. As "Mac" was the only one in our whole organization with the experience and stable head to go with it, he most often came up with the advice and guidance that gave optimum solution to our problems, especially at the last. Thanks, Mac. Years from now, I'll look back on these four years with the Wolverine and really enjoy the memories. As for now, I'm just glad it's over.
