I never think of the Michigan Agricultural College that the intervening years and all their weight of work and care do not slip away, and I am a boy again. Time is stationary when my thoughts are on that place. The incidents of my student life are vanishing one by one, but the joy of the old associations grows deeper with the years. My days at M.A.C. set the direction of my life.

L.H. Bailey, Class of 1882

Liberty Hyde Bailey was once a face at MSU. Now he is a building. Imagine where, or what, you, and all the thousands of faces gathered in this volume, will be in a hundred years.

MSU students and alumni alike made their way Back Home to Spartan Country during a fun-filled week of homecoming festivities at MSU. A Spartan hoe-down at the Union kicked off the week's activities, complete with western games such as billiards and panning for gold, the bluegrass music of Mustard Retreat, and, of course, the mechanical bull. Campus hayrides, western games, and a Dallas night at Dooley's were just a few of the events planned by Homecoming Co-Directors David Diedrich and Amy Brownell and their Homecoming Committee, guaranteeing everyone a real foot-stompin' time.

The culmination of these events was the Homecoming Parade. Several hundred MSU students participated in the parade after spending many hours perfecting floats and decorating cars. The men and women of Lyman Briggs College developed their own theme with a car symbolically decorated as a calculator. However, most floats chose the country-western theme of this year's homecoming. The spirited MSU Marching Band led the parade down Abbott

Road and onto campus followed by cowgirls and cowboys in varying shades of green and white. The parade ended at the field across from Case Hall where a bonfire opened the festivities there. The band played Celebration — a fitting song for the evening.

Coach Muddy Waters took the podium leading the crowd in cheers for the football team and rousing spirit in anticipation of the football game the next day. The floats were judged — Delta Sigma Phi took first place with their five-foot bull bearing the slogan Bully the Badgers. The Straight Shootin' Spartans Saloon of Delta Chi and Sigma Kappa received second place. The annual Yell Like Hell contest was won by the band, whose overwhelming enthusiasm was difficult to surpass.

Finally, the moment everyone had been waiting for: the announcement of the Homecoming King and Queen for 1981-82. The two students chosen for their outstanding contributions to life at MSU were Stuart Moses, a political science major of Alpha Phi Alpha, and Linda Pilette of Kappa Delta, an accounting major.

However, "Coming Home" was truly achieved the next day when the alumni returned to MSU. With green and white corsages pinned to their lapels, the class of 1956 met at the Kellogg Center to celebrate its 25th reunion. The 33-14 victory by the football team over top-ranked Wisconsin added to the alumni's spirit.

Homecoming Co-Director David Diedrich was pleased with this year's Homecoming. "We hope the 1981 Homecoming will lay the groundwork for future homecomings so that it can be the successfully traditional event it should be. This year, we attempted to incorporate both the student body and the local area businesses and that really went well. This is the most successful homecoming MSU has seen in twenty-five years." Being back home in Spartan Country was without a doubt an exciting time for alumni and students both.

Making It

Michigan State students, like many other people, have been forced to find alternative incomes to help pay the bills. Loans, scholarships, and mom and dad just can't keep up with the high cost of everything. Many students have found, to some degree, an answer to their problems: part-time work.

Working at night or between classes does not always mean taking the traditional jobs of flipping burgers, pushing mops, busting suds or waiting tables.

Take John Gilbert for example. John works in the nude. Three years ago, he heard about a job opening for models at Kresge Art Center. He applied, got the job, and now spends seven to 10 hours per week posing nude in front of 20 to 30 students. "The most difficult part about this job is the first time you have to take your clothes off," Gilbert explained. "But it is really nothing now."

Gilbert said he took the job because it is easy money with little deducted for taxes. He said the job brings out a wide variety of reactions from people. "Some people are really appalled when they find out what I do. It came as a mighty big surprise to my parents and friends."

Nevertheless, Gilbert wants to continue modeling until he graduates. He said he finds it interesting to see how others sketch him. "It's amazing to see 30 different pictures of yourself in the nude."

Another quick money opportunity is donating plasma. The qualifications are simple. The donor can be on no medication, have had no recent surgery, and be in good health. A maximum of $18 a week can be earned in two to five hours.

"We're tightly controlled by the Food and Drug Administration and a person is limited to two visits within a seven-day period," said Diane Underwood, manager of the American Plasma Center. "Everyone gets a pretty good physical check-up when they first come in to donate."

Underwood said that half of all her donors are MSU students. She said the donation takes from one to two hours per visit and can be easily arranged around class schedules. The procedure is painless and has no physical side effects.

That MSU institution devoted to making your automotive life miserable, DPS, employs students in a wide variety of part-time jobs. Special event crews take up a good hunk of the total employee pool. Some 125 students are used for football. Basketball requires 40 students, while hockey uses 25. Concerts and special lectures demand one to 10 students. About 35 to 40 others are hired to operate the Dial-A-Ride program, work the impound lot, and maintain parking enforcement. Jobs pay about $3.67 an hour and workers are drawn from all academic departments.

Working for DPS can have its drawbacks. It can even get a little dangerous. John Keniston was working during fall registration at the men's IM parking lot, and it was his job to make sure students did not park in the lot while they registered. Keniston motioned for a car to stop, instead, the driver retaliated. "I was working by Sparty and it was cold and raining," Keniston said. "I motioned for him to stop and he turned his car toward me and headed right at me. He hit me twice in the shins and knocked me back about six feet. Normally, if you disobey a DPS deputy, we can arrange for an arrest, but I was so mad I forgot to get his license plate number."

If you are looking for work that is a little less dangerous, but still out of the ordinary, here are a few other jobs available:

That Velvet Fingers ad that the State News runs every day is not entirely correct. They need topless masseurs, not escorts. Pay is $6 an hour, plus tips.

If you are the blood-and-guts type, a job in the microbiology lab might be for you. Students clean up anything left over after experimentation. Pay is a little above minimum and is easy if you "can tolerate the smell and stand washing the glass plates."

The Department of Osteopathic Medicine has positions for breast and genital models. The pay is $7.50 an hour for breast models and $15 an hour for genital models, but employment is only for a week.

Northwestern Mutual Life hires students to sell life insurance on a commission basis. The market is aimed at whoever wants to buy insurance, and students who prove successful occasionally choose to make it a career.

Summit Travel Inc., based in Columbia, Missouri, hires students to market, promote and sell spring-break vacations to Florida and Texas. Pay is on commission and employees receive discounts and travel packages.

Or, you can sell Utopian sandals, if you can ever get them to answer their office phone.

Keith Milan speaks for the 30 or 40 maniacs of Shaw Hall's Terrace West when he says of the annual Beach Party: "It's just a tradition we have to follow — to be outrageous." No one is sure what prompted the first Shaw resident to mix up a strawberry daiquiri, don his flowered trunks, and hit the snow drifts of the Red Cedar with a shout of "Cowabonga." Milan says the Beach Party has been going on for six years, and that it usually is a reaction to the first big snow of fall term. This year there was no major fall snow, so the party was postponed until Saturday, February 27.

Florida? Who needs it? Not these thick-skinned Spartans. Instead of dodging snow plows, searching for buried cars, and worrying about salt stains on their cowboy boots, they pull up a towel, kick off their Nikes, and enjoy the Michigan sun and snow.

MSU Jugglers

Students are always juggling — jobs, classes, profs, boyfriends, girlfriends. But there are a few students at MSU who juggle for sheer enjoyment. These students, who toss clubs, rings, lacrosse balls and rubber fish, are members of the MSU Juggling Club.

According to Dan Sadoff, president of the club, juggling is a way “to keep from getting bored. It’s fun and relaxing — a continual learning process.”

Lane Miller, a graduate student in math, and has been a juggler for five and a half years. He finds juggling to be “something you can do your whole life.” He used to take breaks from his studying to juggle, but now says, “I take breaks from my juggling to study.”

Sadoff, who founded the club in 1978, says the MSU Jugglers are a loosely organized group. People come and go. Even MSU President Cecil Mackey joined in the juggling spirit once last spring.

As Jeff Herzbach says, “Juggling isn’t a spectator sport — it’s contagious.”

The $1½ million Shaw Hall Parking Ramp jams 1,000 cars into six floors and hosts a community of tanners in the spring and summer months.

Located on Service Road, across from Power Plant '65, the Laundry processes over 45,000 pounds of laundry a week, including 50,000 uniforms, 45,000 sheets and 3,000 tablecloths.

The Wharton Performing Arts Center, scheduled to open in September, 1982, houses a 600-seat theatre (above) and the 2,500-seat Great Hall. It will host most Lecture-Concert Series productions, the Lansing Symphony Orchestra, the Lansing Opera Guild, and acrobatic skateboarders in the $30,000 sculpture that sits in front of the structure. The Center largely replaces the antiquated MSU Auditorium, designed originally to accommodate everything from stage shows to formal dances to tennis matches.

Communication Arts And Sciences Building Opens On South Campus

The $21.5 million long-awaited Communication Arts and Sciences Building opened October 22, 1981, after two years of construction. Students majoring in Communication Arts and Sciences formerly had classes in the Journalism Building, Linton Hall, the Union and the Auditorium. Pat Cesarze, the building manager, explained that the purpose of the building was to put everyone under the same roof.

The installation of new and updated equipment was one reason why people looked forward to the opening of the building. Eighteen enlargers and more working space are a big improvement over the cramped darkroom in the basement of the Journalism Building. Another new addition is 36 computers for journalism students in reporting and editing classes.

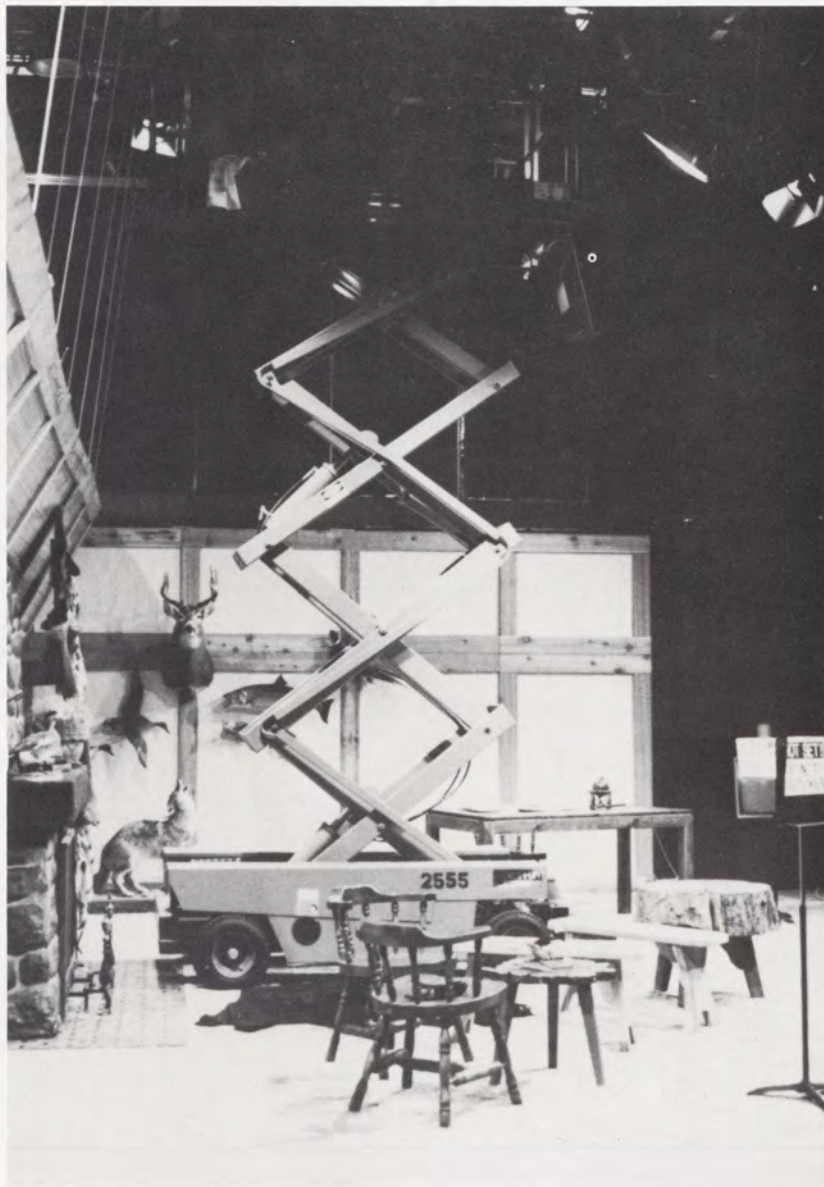

The Anechoic Chamber and the Reverberant Chamber supplement the speech and audiology department. The Anechoic Chamber is a room constructed of huge foam rubber cones which cover the ceiling, floor and walls. Wire covers the floor so people walking in the room will not sink. These foam rubber cones absorb all echoes. The Reverberant Chamber performs the opposite function of the Anechoic Chamber — it amplifies echoes. MSU and the University of Michigan are the only two places in the state to have such chambers. Students from physics and engineering also use the chambers for research.

Plans for the new 2.5-acre building have been considered since the sixties. The last five years have brought serious planning and the actual construction of the building.

Classrooms are constructed along the outside of the building to buffer any noise which might reach the television studio or the radio station. A thin metal strip absorbs ground vibrations and airborne noise, so no disturbances will interfere with the sound sensitive regions.

Communication Arts and Sciences majors are enthusiastic about the new building. Amy Gross, a sophomore Telecommunications major, shares the opinion of most students in the college saying, "It's the best building on campus!"

The Cedar Village Apartments office is a hive of activity for this Thursday afternoon; tenants mill about the office signing and terminating leases, getting things fixed, wandering through with drinks in hand, or just "hanging out." It's a scene most adults over 30 would strive to avoid.

Trying to lend some organization to the chaos, Richard V. Hidey, Sr., Cedar Village Apartments manager for 17 years, stands back and takes these events in stride.

"I love this job, otherwise I wouldn't have stuck with it for this long," says the man most tenants know simply as Hidey. "All these years and no two days are the same. I hate routine, it gets boring. But this job is always a challenge, always something different."

Hidey's blue eyes, constant smile and sense of humor keep his booming voice and Marine Sergeant build from being too intimidating. A perpetual storyteller, Hidey is always happy to find a new audience in his visiting tenants.

Chris Hottis

Gregg Blackburn, a resident for two years, says, "the man is just awesome." "Kids are always stopping by to talk," he said. "I enjoy it. It's exciting. Actually, it's probably force of habit on their part. They're far away from their parents but they know I'm always here and I've always got the time for them."

"The one thing I've always maintained is that the tenant comes first what," said Hidey. After 33 years of marriage you learn that to get along with people you have to give and take, give and take."

Hidey plans to retire from his job in four years, spending his winters on his 34-foot boat, "The Hidey-Ho," down in the Florida Keys, and working on Mackinac Island in the summer.

"I'll miss this job, sure," he said, "But I like people and I'm sure I'll meet enough new folks to keep me occupied."

Kim Shortz

"Michigan will come back," said a determined Jim Dunn, U.S. Representative for the 6th District. "Michigan will come back even if I have to drag it back myself."

The statement was made in jest and accompanied by a wry smile, but there was a feeling that the Congressman more than half believed what he was saying.

An MSU graduate raised in the unemployment-plagued Detroit area can understand students' and constituents' financial concerns. While he supports governmental budget cuts, he is opposing proposals which would make cuts in higher education. He has organized a group of freshmen Congressmen who have formed a Coalition Against Reduction in Education (CARE).

"The magnitude of reductions in education proposed by the (Reagan) Administration in the 1983 budget is unfair in relation to allocations in other budget areas," Dunn said.

He said CARE is opposing cuts in the Guaranteed Student Loan, Pell Grant, Campus Based Student Aid and Categorical Support programs, and opposing the elimination of State Student Incentive Grants and Talent Search and Educational Opportunity Center (TRIO) programs.

"We have more federal dollars coming into the 6th District than ever before in terms of grants and special projects," the 38-year-old Congressman said. "We have a unique situation with MSU research facilities and we should use them to our advantage. We can broaden the base of research, have composite research, and through that involve the whole community," he said.

The direct and energetic Dunn describes himself as an optimist: "I'm definitely an optimist because that's the way to get things accomplished."

"I'm more of an independent than a Republican or Democrat," Dunn said. "I've supported the Republican Party 52% of the time, but you have to look for independent solutions that will work."

Connie Stewart, MSU's first woman vice president, is enthusiastic, energetic and, above all, optimistic.

Stewart, vice president of University Relations, handles the whole sphere of public information in MSU — from public relations to publications. Her main concentration is on federal relations, where she acts as a liaison between the university and various federal agencies.

"This is an outstanding university which has been brought to its knees and is now going through a period of reawakening," Stewart says of the recent budget problems. "We've been tested and I think we've come through. A student can be proud of receiving a degree from MSU."

Stewart stresses the importance of emphasizing MSU's strong points to convey a good image. "This university is going through major economic and financial problems and we have to reestablish the good points through communication about activities like the cyclotron and the Open House. These are the programs that should be emphasized."

Describing herself as the eternal optimist, she is also realistic about the problems faced by the university. "Sometimes you can't make something positive. Faced with federal cuts in education, we had to repackage our financial aid and change our internal formulas to try and make the best of a tragic situation.

"You have to remember that cuts in education affect everyone," she points out. "We're cutting what holds the key to our economic future. And in trying to remedy the situation, we're grappling with lives and emotions."

Stewart's view stands in contrast to what many see as an uncompromisingly bleak situation. "I compare the university with a growing plant. When you prune a plant, it might be a painful process but the new growth that returns to the plant is healthier, better and stronger."

Fred Sanderson has a terrific sense of perception. It has a lot to do with his point of view. "When I was growing up I used to love to play baseball. I didn't realize, until someone told me, that the reason I couldn't hit the ball was because I couldn't see it."

Blind from birth, Sanderson knew early that his handicap affected only how others perceived him, not how he perceived himself. Today, as MSU's coordinator of Handicapper Services, he is dedicated to helping area students develop good self-perception by providing them with the necessary means of reaching their scholastic and personal goals.

The Office of Handicapper Services is designed to provide students in the MSU community with special transportation, reading of texts, note-taking and the use of various educational aids.

Fred Sanderson's advice to MSU students is to "decide what you want to do and then decide not to be stopped."

Ray Bowman has spent the last 11 years of his life running circles around MSU.

"I would say the majority of students I come in contact with know me as Harry O. Some people never realize that I have a real name," said Harry F. Carswell, Jr., resident director of student life at Wilson Hall.

"The name came from that old detective show," he explained. "There was this nice guy who always seemed to get a raw deal or the dirty job, but somehow he would always end up smelling like a rose."

Carswell describes himself as a positive person who enjoys his job.

"I'm a partner to the management team," Harry said describing his job. "The hall manager takes care of the building — the walls, halls, floors and doors. I take care of the people inside those walls, halls, floors and doors. I'm here to advise, assist and pretty much be the light that's in a dark room."

He has worked his way up through the system as a minority aide, a graduate assistant, head advisor and resident director, and has worked in every complex on campus.

"I don't care how educated you are, if you can't relate to people, then what good does it do? I know kids with 3.9 GPAs but they can't sit down and tell you how they feel or what their values are. I tell them it's OK to cry, to care and to say 'I love you.'"

Carswell's outlook on life is partly from his involvement in martial arts — having studied Aikido and Kung Fu for about 13 years.

"I treasure Kung Fu," he said. The philosophy comes through in life; it's the essence of everything. The discipline, concentration and relaxation help me to be able to be accepting of others."

Carswell sees himself as the number one black role model in Wilson Hall, but relates to all groups in the residence halls.

"There are too many good people in the world to start restricting yourself to certain groups," he added. If you have many different friends, you open yourself to the opportunity to be taught and the pleasure of learning." Carswell says racism and prejudice exist throughout our political and domestic system.

"Prejudice exists in our society because it's a comfortable indulgence and it's going to take effort to change. After all," Carswell said, "isn't it easier to take the choice of a pile of pillows rather than a concrete slab?"

The teachings of Martin Luther King, Jr., are an important part of Carswell's beliefs.

"The future depends on what we do now," he said. "I can wait until there is a need to plant seeds, or I can say, 'Gee, I'd like a garden down the road, maybe I'd better plant now.' You have to be confident in what you do, confident enough to challenge what you see and take a risk."

Mark Neville

Morten Andersen was 17 years old when he came to Indianapolis from Denmark on an exchange program. His American dad had two sons playing football and introduced Andersen to the game. At first he was turned off by it. But now, he will soon be making his living at it.

Denmark is a long way from the screaming football fans that fill American stadiums in the fall. For Andersen, Big Ten stadiums have allowed him to demonstrate his incredible kicking ability. Against Indiana this year, he became MSU's all-time scoring leader and against Northwestern he set the Big Ten record for most field goals in a career. Against Ohio State, he nailed a 63-yard field goal that could have cleared the post from 70 yards. He was 28 for 28 in extra point attempts, 15 for 20 in field goal attempts, and was named to the 1981 All-American team by UPI — the 55th Spartan to have received such an honor. Despite all the records, Andersen is still able to put his position in perspective.

"A kicker is just a glorified position," he says. "The line is in there the whole game; they're the guys who are really working their butts off. The kicker gets the credit for the points but it's really a three-man job. A good center and holder make my job much easier."

He may find his position overrated, but Andersen is not hesitant about accepting a big pro contract. "Salaries are pretty ridiculous. It seems a bit unfair to pay a football player who can't write his name a half-million while an engineer might start out at $25,000. But if somebody wants to pay me a million or so, why not? That's the free enterprise system."

Andersen has favorite teams he would like to play for, San Diego and Denver among them, but considers the challenge of playing pro ball paramount to what city he will play in. "No matter who picks me," he says, "I'm going to give it my all. This is a once in a lifetime chance and I'm going to try and do my best."

During the fall, Andersen practiced kicking off the ground, since pro kickers are not allowed to use a tee for field goals. Andersen prefers kicking on artificial turf in warm weather, but feels he can adjust to adverse weather conditions without too many problems.

Andersen predicts that in the future college football will move kickoffs from the 40-yard line to the 30 or 35-yard line, simply because too many kickers can kick the ball through the end zone, making the kickoff a formality instead of a strategic part of the game. He feels points should be awarded to the team whose kicker can split the uprights on kickoffs — something Andersen is known for. "If a kicker is accurate and strong enough to knock it through from that far out," he says, "I don't see why he shouldn't get a couple of points out of it."

Andersen says he came to MSU because of the German undergraduate program and the people. No one need worry, he claims, about the loyalty of Spartan fans. After four years in an MSU uniform, he has yet to see a more supportive following. Andersen is quick to compare American football fans to European soccer fans. Both have their share of die-hard fanatics and both love to have a good time rooting for the home team. Like most college football players, he glows in the fact that the team's performance sometimes causes the fans to lose their inhibitions.

"So what if they rip down the goal posts?"

"When I began working on live television, I had to work all day, do all the shows, the hosting — everything. If I had a show to do on Saturday, I got the script on Monday and had to agonize over it all week in order to memorize it. I got paid ten dollars for the entire day. And if I had decided I no longer wanted the job, there would have been a million people in line for it."

Joyce Ramsay is frank about the difficulties which face actors who are starting in the profession. As the department of theater's artist-in-residence, who both teaches acting and directs plays, she must be careful with the advice she gives to her students. "I try to be as totally honest with my students as I can and work with them on an individual basis. But there is no way I can tell someone whether or not they're going to be a success. Acting is so subjective."

Ramsay came to MSU after attending an American Theater Convention in 1977 where she interviewed with the theater department's staff. With her, she brought the valuable experience she gained from performing in films and on television, radio and stage, in both New York and Hollywood. Her credentials include feature films for United Artists, Warner Brothers, and Columbia and over 4000 hours of live television. "I think that actors today really need to be able to focus themselves in a more general way. If you want to make your living at this craft you must be able to act in different media."

Along with her teaching and directing responsibilities at MSU, Ramsay is an active member of the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists, as well as the Screen Actors Guild. Both are organizations which elect representatives who negotiate for actors' rights. Ramsay sees this as a vital step in upgrading the acting profession. A vibrant and talented artist, Joyce Ramsay is also a dedicated political spokesperson for her profession. "The only true democracy is in theater."

College is ... MSU. College is ...

Ruth McNally, a senior psychology major who somehow must balance her studies with a recent marriage and a part-time job. But don't worry, it is nothing serious. McNally knows how to keep all the complications of college life in perspective — and the result is pretty comical. "Someone told me once that I was not taking the job seriously enough," she shrugs her shoulders and laughs, "But it is a comic strip!"

McNally's strip is a uniquely MSU-oriented piece which spoofs some of the hazards and joys of college life. The characters in her strip get tripped, meet their cafeteria crushes, and paint the rock. "I get most of my material from when I used to live in the dorm," says McNally. The people, places and things about dorm life which impressed her were recorded as colorful sketches in a small sketch diary. Though she has never formally studied drawing, McNally's sketches became popular among friends because of their quick wit and keen insight.

Hired by the State News in 1979 to do editorial cartoons and work on display ads, McNally took over the reins of student staff comic strip artist, from her predecessor, Gordon Carlton, a year later. The transition from cartooning as a pastime to cartooning as a profession has been difficult. McNally admits that restrictions imposed by a deadline can sometime hinder creativity.

Because she recognizes the limits of the College is ... scope, McNally's future plans include continuing her journalistic career in display advertising, or perhaps opening a boutique where she could sell her hand-made dolls.

Until then, we can all laugh at that familiar part of all of us we find in McNally's drawings. After all, that's what College is.

Perhaps the Curious Book Shop should be renamed Curiosity's Book Shop, for it is Curiosity which is invited to shop there. "I wanted to have a store that carried the kind of things that I always looked for in a bookstore but could never find," says the shop's owner, Ray Walsh. "We specialize mostly in science fiction because that is what I am most interested and most knowledgeable in." But the science fiction is just one thread in the multi-colored tapestry that is Curious Books. Its main floor boasts of a fine collection of books on Michigan history and fiction, children's literature from Dickens to Disney, poetry from every era richly bound and embossed, an unusual selection featuring Big Little Books, sheet music, pulp magazines, and old sports programs from the area.

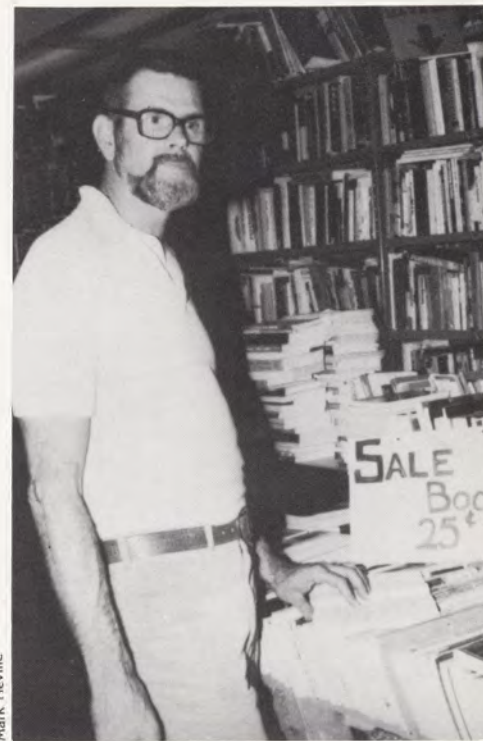

On the second floor, along with more paperback science fiction, is one of the most extensive collections of comic books in the area. Employee Beppe Sabatini says that comic book buying, like anything else, goes through different fads. "The Teen Titans are the biggest sellers now." But Curious also carries Marvel, DC, Elfquest, Freak comic books and foreign comic books. Elfquest and Freak can only be found in comic books shops.

Curious Book Shop is a store which satisfies in many customers what its creation satisfied in Ray Walsh. "We have had outstanding physics professors come in and not even go near the section on physics, but look up a cookbook, instead."

And, if Curiosity's appetite is still not appeased — and he has the courage to venture upstairs into the hall crowded with colorful paintings of life-size superheroes and spies — he will find the wall outside the comic book section lined with shelves filled with Forgotten Works and 50-cent Classics. For instance, there's a book by Charles Viret which he subtitled a little treasury of Victorian Dustcatchers, and entitled And So's Your Antimacassar! Antimacassar?

You feel a little bit nostalgic entering Gibson's Book Store on Grand River Avenue. It's a feeling reminiscent of corner drugstore afternoons with phosphates, a treasured fraternity pin, and pony-tailed undergrads. But more, it's a feeling of warmth and tradition.

Piles of comfortably used books rest on a worn floor. A local team's efforts on the gridiron are announced through a fuzzy transistor among the shelves. Behind the cash register hangs a picture of the owner's son in his NBA attire. Surrounding the picture are several bowling trophies and an autographed photo of baseball manager Sparky Anderson.

Owner Charlie Poquette operates the shop which once belonged to his father-in-law, Walter Gibson. Its staff consists of family members who bustle between the used classics to wait on a distinctive clientele. "We have customers we've served for years," says Poquette with an easy smile. "Most are graduates who've gone on to other parts of the world." He points to a stack of books which he is sending to Australia.

As rival university bookstores have grown, ironically enough, Gibson's has decreased the size of its operations on Grand River. In fact, book lists are still handwritten in a spiral notebook. Poquette recalls, "When the other bookstores started expanding, we shrank. It came down to either being competitive or being happy."

On the way out of the store you pass a few gallons of maple syrup made at home by the Poquettes. Obviously, they've opted for being happy.

"I've got a bad case of senioritis," the young man said.

The malady here is not remarkable; the senior, Kam Hunter, is. Hunter is a 16-year-old graduating with a 3.6 GPA in a dual major program of zoology and physiology.

"I'm excited about graduating," Hunter said with a smile. "Well actually, I'm more excited about the achievement than the event, because it's not an end to my studies."

Hunter plans to attend graduate school at MSU and eventually become a physician in clinical practice and research. "I'd like to do research," he said. "I like the idea of discovering a lot of different things."

"But I don't know, I'd like to teach, too. It's a challenge completely different from clinical medicine," said Hunter with the decisiveness only a 16-year-old has.

It is easy to forget Hunter's age. Friendly and outgoing, he has the confidence and self-assurance that come with handling adult situations for most of his life. But then, with a brief action or word, Hunter seems like anyone's little brother. The slouch. The slang.

Hunter attended kindergarten, then completed a Spanish class while in first grade. He then moved to high school classes. "The jump from first to ninth grade was huge in comparison with the jump from high school to college," he said. "I had to adapt and learn what to do in different situations. By the time I got to college all that was second nature."

"There were sacrifices with college, though, too," Hunter added. "I never really had a chance to go out for sports teams or anything. That's why working with the football team was so important to me." Hunter has been a student manager for the Spartan football team since 1978.

"It's a funny thing about talent," said the slightly built youngster. "It's all give and take. Sure, I'd like to be able to throw a football like (John) Leister and I'm sure at times he might want to solve math problems like I do, but what happens, happens. It's all give and take."

"The first poem that I remember writing when I was around seven was about a rosebush. What I remember was feeling a sense of excitement at the extraordinary beauty in the natural world, and as a little girl not really knowing how to express those feelings inside of me. I had an anthology of poetry called Silver Pennies. Many, many of the poems in there were poems about the beauty of nature and I guess I immediately made the connection in my mind that writing poetry was something you could do to respond to those feelings inside yourself."

In the 1950s the woman who saw such beauty in a rose bush left her rural home in southern California to attend Berkeley. There, she was thrust into an environment filled with students stretched on an intellectual rack. "In a sense, the mid 20th century was a coming of age for the American culture. There was an interesting kind of tension between the sense of the skills and the disciplines of the past which were in some ways necessarily European which had to be learned and mastered and an enormous value, though unspoken, on individuality."

The destruction caused by the war made it more difficult for young American artists to reconcile their belief in the beauty of the world and reality. The young woman returned to her vision of the rosebush. "One of the most important aspects of poetry is that it tries to create a special way of using those feelings that you have about the beauty of the world that perhaps don't fit into our everyday life."

That young woman was Diane Wakoski. Today, she is the English department's poet-in-residence. A stirring poet and respected educator, she is keeping her vision alive.

Sister Virginia Moller, F.S.E., a graduate student in Animal Science, tells a story about an unruly child she taught in a former class whose social behavior improved significantly after he formed an attachment to Sister Moller's dog, Lika, who accompanied her daily to class.

"This attachment that humans develop for pets, according to researchers, is related to two prominent qualities of many animals: their ability to offer love and tactile reassurance without criticism, and their perpetual infantile innocent dependence that stimulates our natural tendency to offer support and protection."

Sister Moller, along with help from various area professionals, is developing an interdisciplinary program unique to MSU for those people interested in animal and other contemporary therapy. The program has what she terms a trans-therapy core because it draws from a variety of disciplines.

The interdisciplinary aspect of the program is important because, as Sister Moller explains, "those people who don't respond well to animals may respond to art or music instead."

Both the students and the animals with whom Sister Moller works are protected, by rights, from mistreatment. The animal-child relationship is monitored carefully so that the interdependence does not become too magnetic and completely draw away the child from his social environment.

Sister Moller feels that companion relationships with animals are an effective source of therapy for humans. By their nature, animals have the ability to improve the way people see themselves and interact with one another.

The value of this bond is, therefore, enormous. "The implications this proposition opens to us are far-reaching," said Sister Moller. "With increased knowledge of the use of animals as a prevention form of therapy, there is a need to develop new projects and models that can bring these types of opportunities to youth."

The closing of the 1982 baseball season brought not only hopes of next year, but also fond recollections of years past, as Danny Litwhiler retired ending 19 years of service as the Spartan baseball coach.

"At age 65, I thought it was time to find something else," Litwhiler said. "I don't really know what I'll end up doing. The only thing I can say for sure is that it will have something to do with baseball."

Calm and relaxed, Litwhiler leaned back in his chair and surveyed the walls of his office — covered with memorabilia from his baseball career which began in 1936, and also photographs of players, such as Kirk Gibson, Steve Garvey, Larry Pashnick and Rick Miller, whom Litwhiler coached along the way to their own major league careers.

In the pros, everything is win, win, win," Litwhiler explained. "There isn't the same opportunity to teach.

"While quite a bit depends on a player's natural talent, college presents more of a teaching situation," he added. "We just try to combine that talent with the fundamentals and get going on the right track."

Litwhiler played with the Philadelphia Phillies, St. Louis Cardinals, Boston Braves and Cincinnati Reds during his pro career and was a member of the Cardinals' 1944 World Championship club. He was the first major-leaguer to complete an errorless season, when in 1942, he handled 317 chances in 151 games as an outfielder.

Litwhiler managed minor league baseball for three years and then became Florida State University's head coach in 1955, before coming to MSU in 1963.

Litwhiler was honored in a ceremony before the Spartans' final home game. An easy-going man, he seemed slightly surprised by all the commotion. "It was nice," he said, "but a little embarrassing. All I was doing was my job. I have to give back to baseball what it's given me. Everything I have — my family, my house, my belongings — is because of baseball. It's a good life and an honorable profession."

If the Statue of Liberty could persuade someone to hold her torch for a minute, she would unfasten her crown and let her hair down. At least that's what Marty Karabees was counting on when he introduced his Men of MSU calendar.

Basically a money-making project, the 12 months of MSU beefcake also gave Karabees a chance to put his interest and experience in graphics, layout and marketing to use.

Although individual good looks were important, the models were also chosen for their involvement in MSU activities. "I wanted a group that would be fairly representative of students at MSU," says Karabees.

The idea must be catching on. A Men of Madison Heights calendar was also produced this year along with a Boys of East Lansing High School calendar. Hmmm . . . I was walking by Hannah Middle School the other day and . . .

Some people try to avoid students. Not so with Moses Turner.

Turner, vice-president for student affairs and services, has made a career of working with students.

Turner was appointed to his position in 1979 by the MSU Board of Trustees upon President Cecil Mackey's recommendation. "Dr. Turner is well attuned to the needs and interests of students. He has a record of success in academic, administrative and student affairs areas, as well as a demonstrated effectiveness in working with people," Mackey said at the time of the appointment.

The student affairs and services office handles problems in student housing, student counseling, intramurals, financial aids, the university health center and various student organizations.

Turner, 44, has had a great deal of experience in dealing with student problems. Before coming to MSU, he served as the director of student life at Texas Tech University for two years and spent five years as the assistant dean of students at Washington State University.

"Rugby is considered a gentleman's sport," says Tommy King. "Soccer is for Hooligans."

King, a centerforward for the MSU soccer team, was born in Green Bay, Wisconsin, and raised in England. He came back to the US when he was 19, as part of the MSU-Surrey Exchange Program. When his family later returned to Wisconsin, King transferred to Michigan State.

"The standard of education here is high, just as it was at Surrey," King explains. "There's more pressure at the end for exams in England, though, because they're cumulative for the year. The three-term system here alleviates much of the pressure."

"School was very strict, but without the education I wouldn't be here today," the HRI major says. "I was lucky to go to a school with a serious program, where certain levels of discipline and respect were maintained."

King can barely keep the excitement from his voice when he speaks about soccer. "The season here is frustratingly short. There're only two months to the season and 10 weeks can make or break you. It's different in England; it's part of growing up. It's your whole social life."

There are other lifestyle changes King has adjusted to. "Wages here are twice what they are in Britain," he says. "It seems as long as you're willing to work there's more of an opportunity for success."

"A major difference, though, is the people. They're less reserved (in the U.S.) and more friendly. I love it," he smiles. "They've treated me as good as gold."

The political arena is one from which many gracefully bow out. But for those who are drawn to it, it is said the challenges are many, the frustrations great and the schedule exhausting. Yet it is a desire to see change; a need and ability to listen to the concerns of people which will not allow some individuals to rest until they take an active role in the social and political machinery of this country.

Bob Carr is one of those people. As a student at the University of Wisconsin in the early 1960s, he became active in politics as a result of his disagreement with

Don Koski

U.S. involvement in Vietnam. Attracted first to politics of an issue, he later changed his focus and began to work as a representative of the people.

Elected to the first of three consecutive congressional terms, Carr acted on his earlier feelings about the war in Vietnam and organized congressional opposition to U.S. military aid for the South Vietnamese.

Carr has sponsored movements to cut military spending, opened congressional committees to public scrutiny and helped to stop the disposal of nuclear waste in Michigan.

For all the legislation Carr has proposed however, he is the first to recognize the limits of the political structure.

"Never let one defeat demoralize you," Carr said. "Politics is a process."

And Carr has not given in to defeat. In May he formally announced his candidacy for the newly remapped 6th Congressional District, and will face Rep. Jim Dunn, the man who narrowly defeated him in 1980.

In ancient Greece, Spartan warriors were known for their physical prowess, pride and endurance. At MSU that tradition has been kept alive thanks to the members of Sigma Phi Epsilon who animate MSU's giant mascot, Sparty.

The six-foot tall, fiberglass warrior weighs over 60 pounds and is supported by the strength of a single backpack frame and a lot of muscle.

Few people would label reviewing a "simple task." The anticipation of negative feedback alone is enough to shake most of us from the editor's chair, but State News reviewer and Entertainment Editor William Barnhardt remains in place.

The key to good reviewing, he says, is to be in touch with your own intuitive and aesthetic responses. "A reviewer's job is to be informative. The truth of reviewing something is, does it work?"

"The most important thing in reviewing is to do your homework on something and then give an honest opinion on it."

It seems Molly Brennan is sprinting through life, leaving her peers to walk in her wake.

Brennan is a Rhodes Scholar award winner, she is lettering in track, and she is part of a world record setting women's relay. She'll also graduate in the top three in computer science, while dual majoring in Humanities.

"I don't think I'm different from anyone else," Brennan says. "I just try to go through life and live it."

"I guess you could say I'm just an optimist who lives each day as it comes. I'm a realist but I haven't lost a sense of wonder about the world."

The Pontiac native has a hectic schedule with class, track, speaking commitments, and the media all vying for her time and attention. "The attention doesn't really bother me," Brennan says. "Everyone is always asking different questions. It helps me note the similarities and distinctions about myself and my world, and it gives me a good understanding of who I am."

"Sometimes I just manage within bounds," the eloquent world-class sprinter added. "You could start to go crazy if you didn't put things in perspective. I think that's why I always put people first. School work is secondary in that regard. Interacting and relating with people is very important."

Brennan leaves for Oxford, England, in September for two years. It will be the longest she has been separated from her family.

"My family has always been very supportive," Brennan explains. "They've given me a firm base."

She flashes a smile at the mention of graduation. "I'm excited about that, too," she says. And she adds, "My experiences at Michigan State University have been nothing but good."

"Please, please, ask anything you want, but no more parking questions," said Major Ferman Badgley of the MSU Department of Public Safety.

"Our image problem would be nonexistent if we only didn't have to handle campus parking problems," he said.

Badgley, an MSU graduate in police administration and 19-year veteran of DPS, says, "I wouldn't trade my job with anyone. Working with the student population is a unique situation and I really enjoy it."

"Students aren't going to passively accept things. They're always challenging the way things are and always asking questions. That really keeps you on your toes. You don't find that in other communities."

Badgley explains that one of the goals of DPS is to help people help themselves. "We try to educate the public, within the realm of our ability and our budget," he said. "But it's frustrating at times because the student turnover rate is so high. The most we can hope for is to instill the basics in people and hope they use them now and later in life, too."

"We cannot prevent all criminal activity, but a little education can go a long way."

The Superconducting Cyclotron

Dennis Hutson

Dennis Hutson

With the successful testing in November 1981 of the superconducting cyclotron, Michigan State University has moved a step closer to the elite schools in the field of scientific research.

MSU's National Superconducting Cyclotron (more commonly referred to as an atom smasher) is one-fourth completed, according to cyclotron associate director, Walter Benenson. With the testing of the 500 million electron volt cyclotron scientists and engineers have turned to the next phase of the project: the 500 MeV Cyclotron, set for completion in 1985.

Benenson said the superconductor will improve MSU's stature as a hard science school. "We may not be on the level of an MIT," he said, "but we certainly have world-class scientists working on this project and in other scientific fields at MSU."

The construction of the superconductor started in 1978, Benenson said, with funding from the National Science Foundation. The MeV cyclotron is being funded by the Department of Energy. He said when the entire project is completed in 1985, it will carry a price tag of $38 million.

The sole purpose of the cyclotron is to allow scientists to study the nucleus of the atom: what it is made of and what holds it together. The cyclotron's job is to accelerate atoms to tens of thousands of miles per second while the atoms are held in orbit by a powerful magnet. They are then smashed into the nuclei of other atoms, allowing scientists to study their cores. When the MeV is completed, it will be able to accelerate heavy nuclei up to 100,000 miles per second.

The uniqueness of the superconductor is in its magnet. Older cyclotrons have been limited due to the electrical resistance of the copper wire used to build the magnet. The new cyclotron magnet is made of the alloy niobium-titanium. This alloy causes absolutely no electrical resistance, which allows magnets to be smaller, more powerful, and cheaper to build and maintain.

Long-term benefits of the cyclotron could come in the fields of medicine, agriculture, biology, and geology. But for now, the cyclotron is purely a research tool. At this time "there is no real practical purpose for this cyclotron," Benenson said. "The purpose is to allow us to study the nucleus of the atom."

A five-man staff, the Program Advisory Board, has been set up by cyclotron director Henry Blosser to screen experiments proposed by scientists from around the world. "MSU is the ideal place for this type of research," Benenson said. "We've had an excellent history in the area of scientific research. Funding organizations and university officials have supported our efforts to build the cyclotron."

To accommodate the masses, Campus Corners added the Godzilla Game Room; Absolute Sound was transformed into the Skate Escape Video Game Family Fun and Entertainment Center; Campus Tux vacated for the neon Pin Pan Alley (above). The flashing, squealing machines popped up in Pinball Pete's, Aladdin's Castle, and in scattered bars, stores and snack shops on and around campus. World wide, video games collect billions of dollars in exchange for a few minutes of battle with unfriendly aliens, hungry crocodiles, insatiable goblins and an oversized ape hurling barrels.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

May 3, 1982

To the 1982 Graduates of Michigan State University:

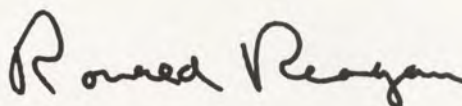

Today you celebrate an achievement in which you can rightfully take great pride and satisfaction. As graduates of a fine American university, you are an important part of our nation's hope for the future.

You are here today because of your own effort and because your families and teachers had faith in your abilities. They made sacrifices to help you achieve this goal and you worked diligently to justify the opportunity which has been afforded you. But your work is not ended. As you move forward in new directions, you will work to fulfill the hopes and expectations which have been invested in you. In so doing, you will renew the great faith which our nation has traditionally placed on the value of education.

Scholarship has prepared you, in mind and in spirit, to function at a higher and more complex level. Now it is your responsibility to play your part and to enhance the history of mankind's accomplishments.

I join all those saluting you, your parents and your teachers. May you continue to hold their admiration and to earn their pride. May you always dare to dream and may you find the means to make your dreams come true.

Congratulations.

Dear Graduates:

You are about to embark on a journey into a world that is becoming increasingly complex with each passing year. While many of you look forward to meeting the challenges that lie ahead, some may feel apprehensive. It is always difficult to leave what has become familiar and boldly move forth to an uncertain future.

In your lifetime alone, the United States has survived such dramatically unsettling events as the assassination of a President, the resignation of another, and involvement in a major military conflict. Our country has witnessed fantastic social change, spurred on by courageous and aggressive leadership from blacks and women. Major advances in science and technology have placed people on the moon and enabled us to communicate and expand our ability to learn in ways previously thought impossible. And the pace of change seems to only get faster.

Until now, you have been preparing to deal with these changes. You have been educating yourselves through books and lectures, learning of the past and present with an eye toward making a contribution in the future. The time has arrived for making that contribution.

The United States, and indeed the world, is depending on you to actively strive toward making this planet better for all people. You have a responsibility to put your best foot forward and offer your unique abilities to improve the plight of humans everywhere.

The future is always uncertain. But we can look forward to tomorrow with anticipation. Even with all the difficulties we face, advancements in many areas have made the world a much better place. And as long as you remain committed to giving your best effort and treating others with compassion, it will continue to improve.

The world is depending on you and other young people to provide that sort of leadership. I have no doubt you will succeed.

Sincerely,

Jim Dunn
Member of Congress

Highlights From Gov. William G. Milliken's Address To The Graduates

June 12, 1982, Spartan Stadium

It is a great pleasure to be with you today and a privilege to share a part in this very special occasion in your lives. You have just brought to a successful conclusion a course of four or more years of study, and I am very pleased to offer you my warmest congratulations on your accomplishments.

Your degree bears the name of the country's first land grant college — the first college whose mission was to address the economic issues of primary importance to this state. In 1855, it was agriculture — in 1982, it is agriculture still; it is also the sciences, the arts, medicine, communications, business, education, engineering and high technology. In fact, it is every segment of our economy in which highly trained, thinking people are needed. The idea of the land grant college — born here in East Lansing — has been exported all over this country from east to west, but it is still nowhere more successful than here at Michigan State University.

It is my understanding that you who are today's graduates exhibit a lively interest in the hard realities of life — the first and foremost of which is the need for a job. I also understand that those with jobs to offer know where to recruit, and that they recruit here in larger numbers than at any other university in the country. Their interest is a tribute to you, to your hard work and to this university.

It is right and natural that your attention should be dominated now by your efforts to make a living. You have been given an especially difficult time in which to begin.

Destiny also places squarely in your hands the necessity to deal with the issues your predecessors have failed to resolve. Of course, each generation of graduates is asked to confront the world's problems, but I wonder if there has ever been an array of problems so resistant to solution and so cosmic in scope as those in your hands!

You will have no greater test than your handling of what is perhaps the ultimate problem of today's world — the issue of nuclear arms and the potential for nuclear war. It was John Kennedy who said, "We have the power to make this the best generation of mankind in the history of the world — or to make it the last."

You will have to share in the decisions and, of course, the consequences, of whether a nuclear arms race is a race with a winner. The logic of "keeping up" seems so clear and yet so clouded with disaster.

I do not know the answers, but I do know it is an issue on which the time for solution is at hand. It is an issue that must be taken up by minds educated to think, to question and to care. If we do not gain control of the headlong rush of nuclear arms, it will gain control of us and the rush will be to oblivion. The urgency grows — so do the weapons, in number and in deadliness. Unlike most problems, this issue allows no second chance, no margin for error. The world will resolve this problem only once

Yours is indeed a dramatic time in history and you — the trained professionals and specialists of this dramatic time — will be responsible for the direction of the drama. You cannot simply hold your jobs and lead your private lives. Too much is at stake. If you choose to focus your lives solely on personal gain and self-centered aims, you will have failed the purpose of your education, and society will pay the price of your failure

You are the citizens with the knowledge to contribute your reasoning to the problems of your time. What no one can give you, what no degree can bestow is the will to contribute

Intolerance seeps into our national life. It arrives as a gift of tyranny and terror from the left or a flag-draped Trojan horse from the right. It saps our commitment to equality; it saps our will to uphold the rights and ideals of our heritage. And often its deadening work is done in the name of morality, in the name of Americanism, even in the name of God

The politics of hate sprouts like a well-fed plant in our nation's fertile ground. It is evident in the growing intolerance to opposing views and the increasing willingness to follow demagogues who feed on the very worst in each of us. It is evident in the back room and the barroom talk that blames our economic troubles on a race, a sex, a class of people. It solves nothing; it only places blame

America is uneasy . . . Pressures from recession at home and tensions abroad are starting to wear people down. Most are sure the country will snap out of it eventually, but they are getting tired of waiting — and want somebody to blame.

And yet I look across the field and see the solutions. It is you in your thousands. And I do not see doom and gloom, but promise, enthusiasm and imagination

The world must hope that you have learned what you were taught and, most of all, that you will use it.

You here today represent the fortunate. You are fortunate because you have had the opportunity to savor the sweetness of the educational experience that only a small fraction of the world's population has the chance to taste. You have it within your power to apply the sense, as well as the substance of that education to your dramatic time in history.

My generation leaves you a litany of problems, but we leave a legacy of promise as well. You are that legacy.

I congratulate you on your achievement today. You have my best wishes for successful, productive lives — lives that make a difference.

To the Class of 1982, I offer my warm congratulations and sincere best wishes for the future. You have graduated from one of the major universities in the country. Michigan State has had a long and distinguished history as a premier land-grant university, and in recent years, it has become a respected research and graduate institution and an outstanding undergraduate university.

As an MSU graduate, you have not only achieved an important individual goal, you also have become one with thousands of other proud and capable Spartans.

I am keenly aware that these are extremely difficult economic times for Michigan and for Michigan State, particularly. I do believe, however, that because of the decisions the University has made during the last two years, we are in reasonably good shape.

- We continue to fulfill our basic mission as a comprehensive land-grant, research, and undergraduate university.*
- Faculty achievements in teaching, research, and service are outstanding.*
- The quality of the educational, working, and social and cultural environment remains high.*
- We continue to make major contributions to the knowledge and economy of the state.*

I deeply appreciate the achievements of staff, faculty and students which have enabled us to do as well as we have in very difficult circumstances. We will continue to do our best to sustain the quality of your University, but we will need help — from the State, from our graduates, and from others as well.

When you leave Michigan State, I am hopeful that you will become active alumni. The University and its alumni and friends have broad mutual needs and interests, and your role can be an important one.

Once again, I congratulate you and wish you well.

Sincerely,

Cecil Mackey

Opera. The word is a little distant, slightly antiquated, faintly European. The word strikes fear, embarrassment, in us. Opera is just one more of those things that we ought to enjoy and — believe it or not — understand. Thanks to the Opera Company of Greater Lansing we not only have the chance to enjoy professionally produced opera at MSU, but also the chance to understand it.

Before this year's performance of Carmen, January 15-17 in the MSU Auditorium, selected cast members visited Lansing and East Lansing Schools and various spots on the MSU campus to talk to students about opera and to stage isolated performances of individual roles.

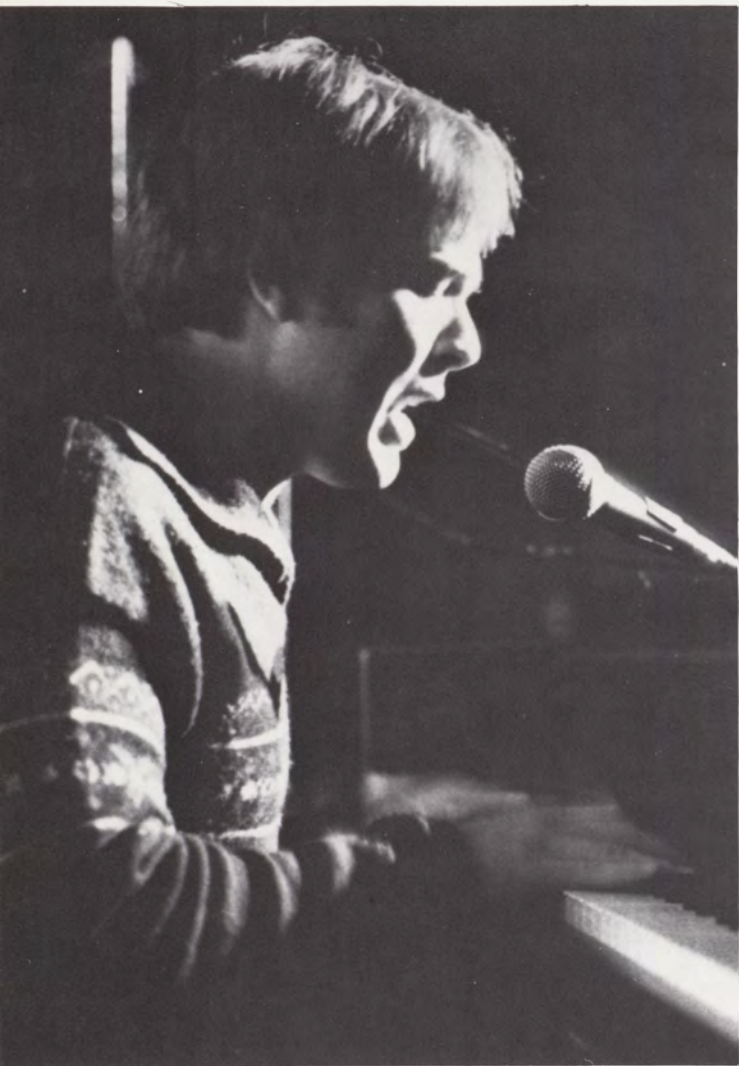

It is the Opera Company's hope that by introducing students — from elementary children to MSU graduates — to opera, the company may instill in them an understanding which will develop into an enjoyment of opera. The education program also helps to foster good will between the Opera Company and the community and university, on whom the company is psychologically and financially dependent. Dennis Burkh, artistic director for the company, describes the relationship as "a collaborative effort based on a marriage of necessity and mutual benefit."

Carroll Anne Curry, the mezzo-soprano who played the lead in the Sunday performance, recognizes this same mutual dependence between the opera and the community. "We all have something that makes us special. Our job in life is to find it and give it back."

A slender man strolls up to the microphone. Half the crowd bursts into applause, the remainder gasps in astonishment.

Color outlines his sharp features. Red over his forehead and down his face contrasts the straight green lines that surround his eyes and nose. The brightness of his blue eyes stands out, and the white glint of teeth shows against the painted background.

Jim Cartwright, also known as "Cinnamon Splash," solemnly begins his poetry readings as part of the 1981-82 edition of Open Mike in the Union Grill.

Open Mike is a talent show sponsored by the Union Activities Board and the Student Union Programming Board.

"We have a show of four to five acts every Thursday," said program director Colleen Holmes.

"Open Mike gives people a chance to express themselves that they wouldn't normally have."

Students both on and off campus and faculty make up both the volunteer talent and the majority of the audience.

"Our peak usually comes in the winter, when we'll get audiences of 50 to 60 people," Holmes commented. "It's a nice, relaxed atmosphere and there is a lot of talent. It's also fun, free entertainment for when people are broke."

Holmes said the staff tries to vary acts as much as possible.

"Actually, one of the hardest things is to make the transition between acts. 'Some,' she said with a glance toward Cartwright, 'just can't be followed smoothly. I mean, what can follow that?'"

Cartwright, a sophomore English major, is a tough act to follow. Dressed in hiking boots with blue socks, tight fitting blue print underwear, a backwards yellow cotton shirt, and a bright red bandana that can't quite manage his curly brown hair, Cartwright specializes in humorous verse.

"I started writing poetry two years ago and songs one year ago. My material could be described as satirical, but a lot of people just think it's sick," he explained with a laugh.

"I think it's just fun," he continued. "It makes some people happy, and that's good, but sometimes people that don't know me get freaked out."

Anne Kellogg, a graduate student in geography, is on the other end of the performing spectrum from Cartwright. A singer and songwriter, her main interest is contemporary folk music.

"Music has always been a part of my life," remarked Kellogg. It's a way of communicating, a way of sharing. But even when I'm frustrated with communicating, I can't go without music."

Describing her performances as fulfilling a need, she said, "Open Mike gives me an opportunity to sing for the people and share part of myself. The East Lansing area is very knowledgeable about folk music, and I wouldn't have a chance to sing professionally without devoting a tremendous amount of time to it. So Open Mike presents an ideal situation for me."

Time is always running short for the energetic dark-haired singer.

"I'm a teaching assistant and I'm working on my PhD. Also, being a single parent keeps my schedule hectic," she explains with a sidelong glance and a smile. "Trying to fit in performances can be tough, which is why I'll be keeping an amateur status."

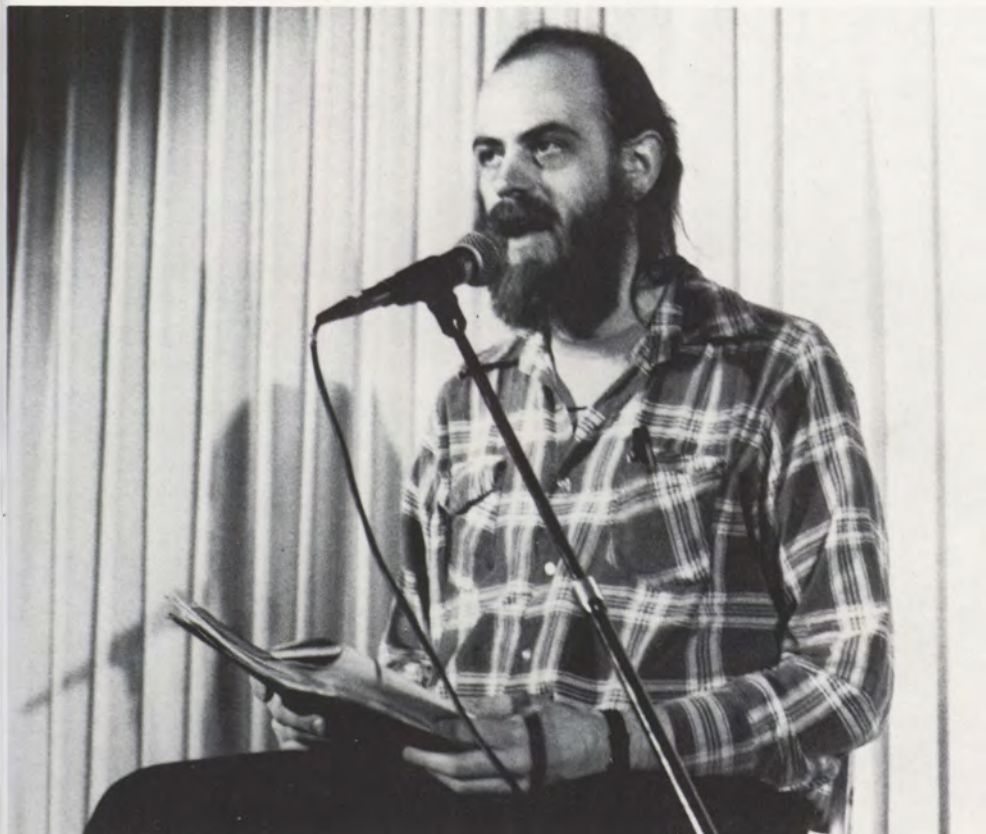

It's obvious by the tone of her voice and the gestures that accompany her words that Kellogg enjoys an audience.

"I've been performing for 15 years," the affable guitarist said, "and there's always a bit of nervousness that can't be shaken off. But it's there to keep an edge on — to make your reactions sharper. It's exciting. There's nothing like a live performance."

The variety of live entertainment is an Open Mike strong point.

"Diversity is the key to our success," said Colleen Holmes. "The fact that we can handle a wide range of acts can only enhance our audience's enjoyment."

Typically open-mike night is where they will be found. Student performers are subject to gurgling stomachs, sweaty palms and cracking voices as they await that fleeting moment when they will get the microphone — clinging to hopes that they will get a bigger round of applause than the previous act.

The traditional student act is just that — rarely permanent. That is, until Olga's discovered Rhodework. The two-man band consists of a guitar, an electric piano, a tambourine, John Reynolds and Jerry Addison.

The music of Rhodework creates a diverse atmosphere — from foot stomping to hand holding. The hospitality of Olga's appears in the form of wicker baskets of free popcorn, and beer served in Ball Mason jars. It is not difficult to see why Olga's becomes a regular hangout for many students. "It's nice to be able to come here and play pool and Pac Man, then go into another room and listen to the band," comments MSU sophomore John Heubler.

Rhodework members, John Reynolds, second year James Madison students, and Jerry Addison, 1977 MSU graduate, specialize in Jimmy Buffet, Dan Fogelberg and their audience. When asked why two such talented musicians confine themselves to East Lansing and student audiences, Addison says, "We like playing for students. It may be our own insecurity, but we always get a good reception. We know these people listen."

It seems that Reynolds and Addison depart from the basic love song repertoire. Although they like playing the music of Buffett and Fogelberg, half of their act is original composition. Listening to their music the audience finds that Rhodework doesn't completely abandon the love song. Their love songs are for their audiences. An original lyric like this one performed by Reynolds, "take a stand and remember I care for you," seems to lack originality on paper, but provides a new and honest message to Rhodework audiences, because of Reynolds' sincere delivery. He was adamant with reference to his reasons for playing and composing. "I play and write music to change things. I don't do it for the money. It sounds corny, but it really is my contribution to change. I want outsiders to know that we are a generation of people who care."

Olga's has employed Rhodework since February 1981 when the inspiration to provide entertainment for Olga's patrons became a reality. It is appropriate that Olga's theme is quite complimentary to a message contained in a song performed by Rhodework. "Blow up your T.V. Throw away your newspaper. Move to the country — build you a hole. Eat a lot of peaches."

Juilliard String Quartet

As part of their residency at MSU, members of the Juilliard String Quartet, long recognized as one of the world's great string quartets, both instruct students and perform for MSU audiences.

Juilliard alumnus Robert Mann, first violinist and only original quartet member; Earl Carlyss, second violinist and alumnus of Juilliard; Samuel Rhodes, violist and alumnus of Princeton University; and Joel Krosnick, cellist and an alumnus of Columbia University compose the quartet. They became artists in residence at MSU in 1977.

"The quartet is very sensitive to audience response," James Niblock, chairman of MSU Music Department, said. "Because of enthusiastic audiences here, the members say that MSU is one of their favorite places to play."

Jazz Band I Selected For Montreaux

The highly rhythmic full sound of big-band jazz had been thought in remission as a form of popular music — out with sock hops and the jitterbug. But big-band jazz is indeed alive and playing in East Lansing thanks to the renaissance sounds of the MSU Jazz Bands.

Jazz Band I has accumulated outstanding reviews nationally and was honored with an invitation to the prestigious Montreaux International Jazz Festival in Switzerland. The Montreaux festival is an international celebration occurring annually in July, applauding outstanding jazz musicians and jazz itself. MSU was among only four colleges chosen to perform at the festival.

"We are honored," said Ron Newman, director of jazz studies at MSU and coordinator of the band, "but to take the band to Montreaux would cost a lot of money. We just don't have it."

Joe Luloff, lead alto player in Jazz Band I, said the local honors the band has received — such as hosting the Montreaux Detroit Festival for the past two years — make up for the deferred trip abroad.

"We haven't given up hope about going," he said. "We are constantly looking for ways to add to the trip fund. Besides general public support we need big donors with real interest in the band."

The main ensemble annually attends jazz festivals at Ohio State and Aquinas College in Grand Rapids, and was named the outstanding collegiate big-band in the Midwest when they attended a jazz festival at Notre Dame.

Jazz Band I also recently released an album, Back on Track, which Ron Newman said captures the band's spectrum of musical talents.

"I'm happy with the album," he said. "It has a good variety of the jazz music the band plays."

Jazz bands I, II and III are all composed of musicians of various backgrounds — not only music majors. Auditions for the band occur during registration each term.

MSU's Lecture-Concert Series presented another transporting season of entertainment. On their ever-popular World Travel Series they toured Britain, Mexico, Vienna, Tokyo, Australia, Iceland and a handful of other stops around the globe. The Lively Arts Series offered the consummate talents of violinist Itzhak Perlman, pianist Ivan Moravec, mime Marcel Marceau (above), Peter Nero and the Philly Pops, and the Phillip Jones Brass Ensemble. Chamber Music Series hosted the Mirecourt Trio, Hermann Baumann, the Harvey Pittel Trio and three nights of the Juilliard String Quartet. The Broadway Theatre Series examined a musical love affair in Neil Simon's They're Playing Our Song, interviewed aspiring dancers in A Chorus Line, followed the fortunes of a New York orphan in Annie, revived the broad, bawdy days of burlesque in Sugar Babies and visited a rollicking bordello in The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas. On the bill for the University Series were Murray Perahia, the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, the Mazowsze Dancers, The Sofia Philharmonic Orchestra, Flamenco guitarist Carlos Montoya and the Philobolus Dance Theatre. Special performances were given by the Coldstream Guards and Hal Holbrook in his classic recreation of Mark Twain.

The MSU Spring Break Experience

"Pass the potato chips."

"Is there any beer left?"

"Hey! I have to go to the john. How many miles to the next rest area?"

"What? I can't hear you. The radio is too loud."

Isn't it great? Six people in a '76 Mustang all the way to Fort Lauderdale. Never knew four people could squeeze into the back seat of a Mustang for 27 consecutive hours? Then you haven't heard of the MSU Spring Break Experience. It's a mandatory ritual for the fanatical Spartan. There are four phases to this ritual: the pilgrimage, the enlightenment, the initiation and deification. To survive this ritual, the MSU student must push to the limits of physical and mental duress. The sole motivation for partaking in this experience is the reward of admiration by one's peers for the feat accomplished.

The ritual begins with the pilgrimage: a 27-hour non-stop ride from East Lansing to the strip of Lauderdale. The requirements for the pilgrimage are an overcrowded car, three cases of beer, a McDonald's game card, and an assortment of 50 cassette tapes. (Special reverence is given to those who are forced to listen to an AM radio the entire distance.) The trip begins as people and luggage are randomly shoved into the car. Enthusiasm pervades the atmosphere. The first four hours are quite enjoyable — laughter, conversation, jokes. One case of beer is gone, so the first rest/munchie stop is made at a McDonald's. Game cards are checked for instant winners. After six hours, the rest of the pilgrimage becomes a blur. Only bits of reality are grasped or remembered — darkness, Tennessee, flashing fireworks advertisements, four a.m. rest stop because finished off the last case, breakfast at McDonald's (no instant winner), rotate seats, sore butt for the person on the hump, lunch at McDonald's, instant free large fries, grumbling about being squished into the door handle for an hour, rest stop, more complaining, speeding ticket just over the Florida state line (they were only going 78), dinner at Burger King for variety, restlessness, the sun is setting but, they made it to Fort Lauderdale's strip along the ocean. They rush to the hotel to check in for phase two.

There's hardly time for showers before the initiation begins. The first step is to announce the arrival by heading to Highway A-1-A. The evening is spent walking up and down the strip as people sitting along the sides shout comments. "Hey, good looking, want to get lucky?" "Look at the muscles on that guy!"

"Look at those. They're the size of watermelons!" "You're gorgeous, where can I meet you tomorrow?" A degrading, obnoxious experience, but one which must be endured to validate the Spring Break Experience. Each night a different shrine is visited: Art Stock's Playpen, Flanigan's, Button's, and the hotel room of an Ohio State Buckeye met the night before. As proof of visitation, the Spartan returns each night with an identifying relic, be it T-shirt, windjammer glass or hickey.

Enlightenment is attained the next morning while soaking up rays and nursing a hangover on the beach. After the first night, the typical MSU student will wake up to a head which feels as if it is being hit with a steel mallet. The Spartan slides into a swimsuit, reaches for a hotel towel, and crawls out the door, across the street, and collapses on the beach. Slowly, the warmth from the sand and sun starts penetrating the body. The muscles relax and the hammering fades. At the moment the body is saturated with heat, the Spartan reaches a spiritual revelation, and a content smile appears on the face. The true meaning of life has been discovered. The ultimate existence is catching rays, scoping and imbibing massive quantities of alcoholic beverages. The MSU student would vow never to return north were it not for the promise of deification.

The Spring Break Experience is sanctified back in East Lansing. The Spartan stays hidden in the dorm room overnight purifying the body — applying After Tan, washing hair until it's shiny and squeaky clean, looking for the white outfit saved for the occasion, and practicing the look of aloofness. The Spartan emerges the next day at lunch and makes the first cafeteria appearance. Everyone is eagerly waiting to see who was there. Later comes the ultimate ego experience on the third floor of the undergrad library. This is where the After Tan and perfected nose in the air are utilized to their fullest. Various empty chairs are passed while leisurely strolling around looking for the perfect seat — the one that's visible to the majority of the students. As the Spartan saunters to the drinking fountain and then to the pencil sharpener, people gasp in awe: "That tan looks gorgeous, especially with that white Izod shirt." Smug, the Spartan smiles and reflects upon the new god-like status attained — a result of a successful MSU Spring Break Experience.

INTERVIEWING

Photography by Kemi Gaabo

After a term of collecting those pink, green and yellow Placement Bulletins, picking lint from your gray camel's hair suit, and standing in lines in room 113 of Student Services, you're ready for the big one — an interview with Upjohn, General Mills, IBM, Marshall Field's. Good luck getting it.

MSU Placement Services is about the hottest spot on campus for the graduating senior. Stop by on a Thursday afternoon and just try to get in the door.

"MSU Placement Services offers the choice for more employers in one day than some schools offer in one year," says Jack Shingleton, director of all that placement pandemonium.

Predictably, most of the interviews are in the fields of business and engineering. During the 1975-76 academic year there were 16,309 campus interviews. But that's small potatoes. During the 1980-81 year there were 32,113 campus interviews.

So keep your pants on. You may have to wait in a few lines before Procter and Gamble discovers you — but that's still better than the unemployment line.

Women's Cross Country

No-Name Harriers Place Fourth In Nation

Probably the best kept secret in Michigan State athletics was the 1981 women's cross country team.

Here is a team that was nationally ranked between sixth and ninth the entire season, won the Big Ten championship, placed three runners on the All-America squad, won the NCAA districts, and placed fourth at the NCAA championships. But despite all the accomplishments, the local media coverage was hardly overwhelming.

"The newspapers haven't caught up with the running craze yet," said third-year coach John Goodridge. "Publishers who put out running magazines are selling them by the hundreds of thousands, but we still have to let them (the mass media) know how many people are actually participating in our sport. We finished fourth in the country and when we came back from the nationals we got about six lines in the State News. We were rather disappointed in that."

Lack of media attention aside, the fans were beginning to come out and watch cross country. "I wish I would have counted how many people were at Forest Akers (golf course) when we ran the Big Ten championships," Goodridge said. "A lot of people would have been surprised to find out how big our turnout was."

Those who did attend a meet were treated to the All-America talents of Anne Pewe, Jill Washburn and Karen Campbell. Purdue transfer Diane Bussa and Lisa Last round out MSU's starting five: a group that logged 60 to 70 miles per person per week, all year round. Pewe was the highest finisher for MSU at the nationals, finishing tenth or 14th, depending on how you look at it. Runners at the nationals were running either on an individual basis or a team basis. Pewe was the 14th runner to cross the finish line, but when the team standings were figured, those who finished before her and were running on an individual basis were thrown out, and she finished tenth.

Probably the highlight of the regular season was facing top-ranked Virginia in the Virginia Invitational. The Spartans placed second behind the Virginia squad that would go on to win the NCAA. Throughout the season, only three schools — Virginia, Oregon and Stanford — placed ahead of the Spartans. Those three teams also finished first through third, respectively, in the NCAA finals.

Coach Goodridge commented that every year it becomes more difficult to compete on a national level, mainly because of the vast number of quality runners in the country. He said he would not be so bold as to say MSU would win it all in 1982. But he was quick to point out, and local sports editors take note, that all five starters, a group that included three All-Americans, would be back in the fall.

Mark Neville

Mark Neville

Victorious in eight of their last nine matches, the Spartan soccer team tied the MSU record of 12 season wins held by the 1967 national co-championship team.

Led offensively by center forward Tommy King, who had 15 goals in 14 games, the Spartans posted a 12-5 record for the season.

"At the beginning, we knew we had a team that was capable of tying or breaking the record," remarked head coach Joe Baum, who was a member of the 1967 team. "Had we started fast and had no injuries, things would have been different. As it was, we're thrilled that we tied the record. The team could have folded after the injury to Mark Neterer (senior co-captain) and the early losses, but instead they pulled together and worked harder."

The turning point according to Baum was the 2-1 victory over Ohio State when the Spartans had a 3-3 record and were facing powerhouse Indiana the next day. "We were the underdog in most of those games," said Baum, "and we played Ohio State under extreme pressure. We knew we had to win on the road against a strong team to keep our heads above water."

The record went to the last match of the season when the team shut out Bowling Green. "We beat a nationally ranked team," said Baum. "That highlighted the whole year's work. It was the icing on the cake."

"Our players don't get as much exposure as those at Indiana, Akron or Bowling Green," he said, "but they have ability. Co-captain Matt Davis was named Outstanding Defensive Player, Big Ten East Division. Defender Dick Huff is an inspirational leader. What he lacks in ability he makes up in drive and he plays his heart out." Baum went on to explain, "Half back Bruce Wilden was also exceptional. He's hard working and plays well both offensively and defensively." Goalkeeper Lee Kazma, with a 1.25 GAA, played far above expectations, Baum added.

"We're not as developed as Ohio State, Bowling Green or Western," said the veteran coach, "but MSU soccer is now achieving a high level of respectability."

Slow Start Leads To Mediocre Year

Illinois 27, MSU 17: The 1981 season started out like a Xerox copy of the 1980 season. The offense managed only 15 yards rushing and the defense gave up 244 yards in the air. Quarterbacks John Leister and Bryan Clark combined for 313 yards passing, but threw four interceptions.

Ohio State 27, MSU 13: The Spartans once again beat themselves. The offense was intercepted three times, fumbled twice, and managed only 99 yards on the ground. The bright spot: a Big Ten record 63-yard field goal by Morten Andersen.

MSU 10, Bowling Green 7: For those who managed to stay awake, Spartan fans witnessed the first win of the season. Thanks to a game-long effort by the defense, State managed to hold off the Falcons. Lance Hawkins scored MSU's lone touchdown and Morten Andersen added a 47-yard field goal.

Notre Dame 20, MSU 7: The Irish snapped a two-game losing streak, thanks to MSU turnovers. State had a chance to make it 20-14, but fumbled the ball on the Irish 20. The Spartans never recovered as the Irish rushed for 300 yards — compared to MSU's 21 yards.

Michigan 38, MSU 20: For two and one-half quarters, MSU was dreaming upset. But the U-M ground game wore out MSU's defense, opening huge holes for tailback Butch Woolfolk. The ground game remained a problem, netting only 89 yards — compared to 264 for Woolfolk alone. Bryan Clark threw for 316 yards with two touchdowns and three interceptions.

MSU 33, Wisconsin 14: Thanks to an awesome defensive effort, the 1981 Spartan football team finally came to life as they upset the highly rated Badgers. MSU never once turned the ball over as the offense tallied 485 yards (194 rushing, 291 passing). The homecoming victory was their first win in Big Ten play.

Purdue 27, MSU 26: Morten Andersen's last second 56-yard field goal attempt missed, and it was another heart-breaker for MSU. The Spartans, leading 26-21, had a chance to put the game away, but a poor pitch-out gave the ball to Purdue. Lance Hawkins scored two touchdowns, John Leister threw for 198 yards, and the Spartans chalked up 399 total yards.

MSU 26, Indiana 3: Within two minutes, Indiana had a 3-0 lead. After that, it was all MSU. The offense dazzled as it rolled up 523 total yards. Morten Andersen became MSU's all-time leading scorer, kicking two field goals and two extra points.

MSU 61, Northwestern 14: It was no contest. MSU's lopsided win gave the Wildcats their 29th consecutive loss, an NCAA record. Morten Andersen set a Big Ten record for career field goals with 45 to date. Bryan Clark and Rick Kolb combined for five touchdown passes.

MSU 43, Minnesota 36: It was the game of the year. State had a 28-6 half-time lead, only to watch the Golden Gophers score 30 points in the third quarter. But Bryan Clark halted the embarrassment by scoring the winning touchdown on a quarterback draw. Clark set an MSU single-game record with 372 total yards.

Iowa 36, MSU 7: Iowa's Rose Bowl dreams were too much to overcome, and MSU was doomed to a losing season. Iowa's 488 offensive yards helped send them to their first bowl appearance since 1959. MSU's final record: 5-6 overall, 4-5 in the Big Ten.

Turnaround Icers Become Contenders

"Contenders this year — next year we're legitimate," said MSU hockey head coach Ron Mason of his team and the chance of winning the NCAA championship. The Spartans finished the 1981-82 season with a 26-14-2 record and the CCHA playoff title, a sharp contrast to last year's last-place finish in the WCHA.

From the beginning of the season, Mason's primary goal was to finish in one of the top four spots to gain home ice in the league playoffs. Key victories early in the season, over such CCHA powers as Bowling Green and Notre Dame, got the Spartans off to a good start.

Just prior to Christmas, MSU posted a league-leading record of 11-4-1 and a bright future. "Pretty soon, just placing in the top four teams was not enough as we began flirting with first place," said Mason.

Mason accomplished his early season goal by finishing the regular season 21-10-1, second only to Bowling Green, and anticipated the league playoffs next on the agenda. In the first round, MSU beat Lake Superior State in a two-game, total-goal series 12-5. The Spartans then travelled to Detroit to outlast Michigan Tech 3-2 in the semi-finals, and outskated Notre Dame 4-1 in the finals of the CCHA playoffs.

Next, the icers moved east to the University of New Hampshire for the Regional Quarterfinals, the first time since 1967 for MSU to participate in such NCAA action. The Spartans lost the series 9-4, but still came home with a school record of 26 season wins.

All-American goalie Ron Scott, a sophomore, led the CCHA with a 2.75 goals-against average, 21 wins and a .903 save percentage. Sophomore Newell Brown broke the CCHA assist record and placed second in league scoring with 15 goals and 44 assists. Also, captain Mark Hamway, a junior, tied the CCHA goals-scored record and placed fourth in league scoring with 28 goals and 26 assists.

Throughout the year, over 100,000 fans filled Munn Arena to see the MSU icers in action. Winning fever once again spread across the MSU campus and the hockey team was the reason. The Spartans, returning next year with most of their leading scorers and solid defensemen, were a promising squad for NCAA success.

When the 1981-82 men's basketball season ended, everyone was left grasping for answers as to why the Spartan's suffered their third losing season in a row. In interview after interview, Jud Heathcote wasn't sure whether to blame himself, the officials, the players, or just plain bad luck. If anything was to blame, it was the Spartan's confirmation of the old adage: experience is the best teacher.

If pre-season optimism and confidence could put points on the board, MSU would have been national champs. Heathcote and company believed they had the raw material to put a winner on the court. They took on the semi-complimentary role as a dark horse. The talent was clearly there, but no one, not even Heathcote, had figured out how to teach consistency. The Spartans looked like conference contenders one moment and the next moment they looked like a team promoters book to play the Harlem Globetrotters.

In their non-conference schedule, MSU struggled to beat teams like Detroit and Wisconsin-Green Bay. An omen of the Big Ten season to come was that exactly half of MUS's non-conference games were decided by four points or less.

The Big Ten season started off with a bang with a 65-58 upset over then 20th-ranked Indiana. But high hopes quickly died as the Spartans dropped six out of the next nine. Fans, reporters and coaches realized the inside game hardly existed. The Spartans lacked a strong, aggressive player who could take it to the basket. Kevin Smith was often their lone offensive weapon as Derek Perry, Kevin Willis and Ben Tower ran hot and cold. Sam Vincent, MSU's hope for the future, was still finding his way in Big Ten ball.

The reality of the situation set in against Northwestern. The Spartans dominated the first period and led by 13 at the half. Then they made a 180-degree turn. Quite simply, the roof fell in on MSU. They scored only 13 points in the second half, and so many players fouled out it looked for a while like Jud might have to suit up. The Spartans lost by five, and everybody scratched their heads and wondered just what kind of team this was.

With a 51-49 last second loss to Purdue, Heathcote was doomed to suffer another losing season. The Spartans went to the wire with every team, but no one could figure out how to cure the dry spells that proved fatal game after game. The critics were probably right: the raw talent was there. Late in the season, Willis and Vincent gained confidence and poise with every game. If experience is the best teacher, this 1982 class of Spartans just might improve their grades in the following years.

Talent And Success: A Consistent Combination

On the surface, the 1981-82 men's wrestling team did not have the kind of season that grabbed headlines and caused panic at the ticket office. But to appreciate the season (fourth in the Big Ten and 25th in the NCAA), one had to keep in mind that MSU had never had a losing season as long as Grady Peninger had been here, which stood at 22 years and counting.

Keep in mind too, that the Spartans had to face such national powers as Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Iowa and Iowa State. Against those four schools, MSU took a beating: 39-0, 27-9, 43-3, and 44-2, respectively. "We should have finished second in the conference," commented Peninger, "but two of our wrestlers lost important matches and we slipped two notches. Everybody gets upset, and I guess it was our turn."

What was particularly disheartening for the wrestlers was lack of media attention. "We kicked Michigan's butt this year and it didn't even make it in the paper. I'm not bitter, but we should emphasize the positive news around here — whatever it is. With the way things are at this school, we need to blow up our successes. I couldn't care less if I'm mentioned, but the kids are only here for four years and they deserve the attention."

Lack of attention was in no part due to lack of talent. Junior Greg Sargis set a school record with 17 pins and accumulated more points on the year than any other wrestler. The Spartans sent seven wrestlers to the NCAA's, including two-time All-American Mike Potts (190 lbs.). Potts and Sargis would be returning, but Peninger felt that Sargis would wrestle at 158 lbs., leaving a big question mark for the 150 lbs. class.

Peninger was expecting several battles for top spots in several weight divisions. Besides the 150 lbs. class, the heavyweight spot was the only class that remained wide open. Dan Dudley, who was the current heavyweight, would run out of eligibility after fall term.

MSU's only conference loss was to powerhouse Iowa, and if the Spartans hope to bring the 1982-83 Big Ten crown home, Peninger would have to figure out a way to stop them. Peninger did not hesitate to admit that he foresaw a second-place finish for his club.

"We're all out there battling for crumbs while Iowa sits there and eats cake," he said.

ASMSU

The Associated Students of Michigan State University has changed for the better.

In the past, the ASMSU governing board has been split and unproductive because of disputes and personal conflicts among its members.

The climax came earlier this year when Bret Waller, former ASMSU president, received a vote of no confidence from the board during the first meeting of the term, and was ousted from his seat.

Nominations from within the board were taken and voted on the next week. The new president, former representative from the College of Education, Scott Kennedy, believes the board "has become a lot more cohesive" since he has taken office.

Kennedy said part of the change has occurred because he is "very flexible and listens to everyone. I refuse to take sides and listen to prejudice. I simply will not deal with it.

"My biggest challenge this year is to be an effective leader and to gain recognition among students," he said.

Part of that challenge, he said, is in changing MSU President Cecil Mackey's attitude toward students.

The highlight of that ambition was met when ASMSU issued a statement in the State News encouraging Mackey to donate 10 percent of his salary or $8,825 against ASMSU student leaders' salaries. The donation was to go into a financial aid fund for students.

"When I read my challenge statement at the Board of Trustees meeting, Mackey chuckled and laughed. He thought it was cute," said Kennedy.

The challenge went unanswered. Students, on the other hand, responded overwhelmingly, Kennedy said. A copy of the challenge was sent to all students in residence halls. They were asked to sign in support of ASMSU efforts as well as to donate one cent.

"We received 700 pennies with signatures," he said.

Kennedy said he realizes that cuts in programs and personnel have to be made, but he feels Mackey and his administration could be more understanding.

"We want to see him reach out to students more and make some personal sacrifices," Kennedy said. "We want this empathy and we want him to communicate with students."

He said ASMSU will send petitions to faculty, staff, unions, alumni and students asking them for their support in the campaign.

"In order to get more state funding," Kennedy said, "Mackey is going to have to have a better rapport with legislators.

"Mackey is costing us money."

The Office of Black Affairs acts as the official voice for black students at MSU. Staff members work to provide social, political and cultural outlets for black students.

Programs are sponsored throughout the year to bring students together and make them aware of events happening in the world around them. February is black history month and this year OBA presented Crossroads Into the 80s — A Tribute to Black History Month. Well-known lecturers and movie presentations were sponsored during the month. Georgia congressman Julian Bond was a guest lecturer speaking on political issues facing blacks in the 1980s. Movies included a film on the life of Malcom X and a play on the history of black women.

OBA works to provide programs which will benefit MSU and the surrounding community and to keep students abreast of political issues in society that may have an effect on them.

Sponsored programs of OBA include a black student orientation in the fall for incoming freshmen, a minority careers program held during winter term, leadership seminar workshops, OBA Speaker Series and a campuswide picnic spring term.

In promoting education and service, Achievement Day is held in the spring. At this time, outstanding black students and faculty are commended for academics and service to the university community.

The State News is a campus newspaper with a unique angle. Although it is East Lansing's largest daily, the paper is written and funded by MSU students. Not intended solely for students, however, the State News covers local, national and international news as well as important campus issues.

Louise Whall, editor-in-chief for the 1981-82 school year, believes that the State News "is more of a community paper than a campus paper."

Focusing on the community as a whole, Whall said she and her staff have developed special page sections which include issues on lifestyle, science and the community.

Such topics as Michigan's future in agriculture and the booming genetics business have given color and variety to the State News.

Whall said her most challenging story this year has been her survey conducted in early January on President Cecil Mackey.

In the poll, students, faculty and staff were asked to rate Mackey's performance over the last two years on issues ranging from the way he dealt with the alumni association to how he handled the university's budget.

According to the State News, 67 percent of 268 students polled rated Mackey's performance as below average or inferior; faculty dissatisfaction was similar, as 49 percent of 232 questioned rated him below average or inferior.

Whall said she conducted the survey because "the budget crisis affected everyone in some way or another. I wasn't really sure how people felt and I wanted to get an overall opinion."

Although she has had no feedback from the administration, she has had calls from across the country about the poll, including an article in the Detroit Free Press and an interview on Jackson's radio station, Q-106.

Senior Class Council

The Senior Class Council has earned the reputation of being a respected, knowledgeable organization. This year's group of 25 students carry on this distinction through their commitment to the needs and interests of the senior class.

The SCC provided several activities during the school year. Autumn involvement began with homecoming, with one representative from SCC working on Homecoming Committee. Three SCC members made the Homecoming Court.

Bar nights hosted by the SCC kept up Spartan Spirit. Go Green — Go White and Beat Michigan pep rallies provided enthusiasm. Senior Celebration took place every Wednesday night with specials at Casey's for seniors. Ring in the Holidays at Dooleys added Christmas cheer. These bar nights helped raise funds for SCC activities and services.

Strong planning is going into Career Conference 1982. The program features various galleries specifically designed to benefit seniors.

In conjunction with the Development Fund, the SCC devoted time during winter and spring term to raise funds through the Senior Class Challenge Call-a-thon. All seniors were telephoned and asked to pledge money for the Class Gift.

The SCC again hosted the Spring Banquet. Among those honored were the 25 Outstanding Seniors, chosen for exceptional performance during their college careers; and the Outstanding Faculty Member of the year, chosen by student groups and honorary/academic societies.

The end of each term brought newsletters to all seniors, representation on the Commencement Committee, and special commencement receptions held at the Cowles House.

1982 Class Challenge

The Michigan State campus awaits another gift from the Senior Class. Through its Senior Class Challenge Call-a-thon, the SCC hopes to raise $82,000 necessary to fund the 1982 Class Gift.

Prior to graduation, seniors are telephoned during the Call-a-thon and asked to pledge money for the class gift. These pledges are collected one full year after graduation over a five-year period.

This year the funds raised will go for renovation of the Red Cedar Terrace. The plan includes new canopy trees, planter boxes with attached redwood benches and shrubs to provide an open, airy walkway. Additional bike racks will complete the plans to make an expansive, appealing addition to the existing back entrance of the library.

In addition, three flag poles will be installed to fly the American, State of Michigan, and Michigan State flags in front of the Administration Building.

The SCC would like to thank all those seniors who gave part of themselves through their pledges to the 1982 Class Gift — one that will beautify the campus over the years to come.

Inter-fraternity Council

Inter-fraternity council is the governing body for the 26 campus fraternities. It consists of representatives from all the houses and the president of each fraternity. IFC is presided over by six officers, selected for their leadership skills and campus activities.

IFC representatives meet to discuss issues of common concern to the houses, such as rush regulations and scholastics standards for members. They also work to maintain good inter-fraternity relations, arranging activities such as "brother-swaps" and a Pledge Day. The Inter-fraternity Council, in conjunction with Panhellenic Council, oversees all Greek Week events, and chooses the Greek Week Committees.

Student Foundation

MSU Student Foundation is the organization dedicated to the maintenance of school spirit at Michigan State. With over 2,000 student members, they are the second largest group funded by the ASMSU Funding Board.

Student Foundation sponsors a number of activities each year. Probably the best-known is the card block section at football games, flashing: GO GREEN — GO WHITE throughout the game. Spartan Spirits and Spartan Slapshots help promote spirit at basketball and hockey games.

Stu Fu also works to raise funds for MSU. A 10,000 metre run, co-sponsored by Nike, attracted over 500 runners spring term to raise money for Sports Medicine. Thirty-four campus groups, including the MSU Board of Trustees, participated in Tel-an-Alum this year. For 17 nights the groups called alumni across the country, raising over $205,000 for student scholarships and grants.

The Student Ambassadors program, begun this year, is an attempt to attract high school students to MSU. Students accepted to the university are phoned by a student representative, who answers any questions they may have regarding campus life. The student ambassadors also visit Michigan high schools, accompanied by a university admissions representative, to present programs. In addition, Student Foundation conducts regular campus tours for interested high school students.

Panhellenic Council

The Panhellenic Council serves as the representative body for all 15 sororities at Michigan State. They oversee sorority rush, offer leadership workshops, and serve as a liaison with the East Lansing community.

Panhel sponsors the Greek Roundtable each year in conjunction with the Interfraternity Council. At this event greek leaders, University administrators, residence hall presidents and local businesspeople have an opportunity to discuss issues pertaining to the campus and to the university as a whole.

In the face of the current enrollment decline at MSU, Panhel sends representatives to the local high schools to promote MSU.

Student Alumni Association

Students helping students: past, present and future.

The Student Alumni Association (SAS) is concentrating this year's goal on recruiting prospective students and promoting the university.

"We do friend raising, not fund raising," said tour guide chairperson, Jeff Gates.

Sponsored by the Alumni Association, SAS works closely with local alumni groups.

The association gives slide presentations throughout the state with alumni and talks to prospective students and their families about the advantages of joining MSU, said Gates.

Not only that, SAS members also visit high schools during winter and spring breaks and answer any questions students might have.

At the beginning of every term Gates said, SAS members offer walking tours of the university to all new students and their families.

Student Council

The MSU Student Council — the voice of the student body when it comes to university policy — is a part of the Academic Council which draws students, faculty and administrators together to formulate university policy considerations by the Board of Trustees.

The Student Council discusses and advises on a wide range of issues — from the proposed budget cuts to tuition increases and financial aid policy.

This year the Student Council is focusing on the declining enrollment. "Michigan State has been too impersonal in the past," says chairperson Kelly Signs. "I think academic advising is the key to keeping students. Right now MSU's advising is marginal, if not inadequate."

The Student Council will send a statement to President Cecil Mackey and the provost advising them to professionally train academic advisors to better prepare students for graduation.

Retailing Club

This year, the MSU Retailing Club chose the theme The Anniversary Year to celebrate an active 50th anniversary.

Joseph L. Hudson, chairperson of the board of Hudson's Department Stores, began the year with a presentation commemorating the store's 100th anniversary. Other speakers were also featured during the year.

The Retailing Field Training Program offered juniors and seniors opportunities for a one-term placement with prestigious retailers such as Macy's and Lord and Taylor.

Also, an Outstanding MSU Retailing Alumni was honored in the annual spring Alumni Awards Banquet.

"Overall, the year has been very successful," according to president Diane Young. "With it being our anniversary year, we looked at the past and moved forward."

Members of one of the largest houses on campus, the men of Delta Chi have a reputation for being active in a multitude of campus activities. Greek Week, sports and clubs all occupied the attention of the D-Chis in the past year.

"Delta Chis is a very strong house in sports," said Jim Holman, member of Delta Chi. They field teams in all inter-fraternity sports, generally coming out among the top five fraternities. This past fall they placed a close second to Theta Chi in football, and achieved high standing in the racquet sports and swimming.

Members of Delta Chi were leaders in a number of campus organizations. Jim Lemle headed Senior Class Council, while president Terry Rombalski chaired the inter-fraternity Presidents' Council. Howard Klausmeier was active in the Order of Omega, which inducts the top 10 percent of the greek men each year. Michael Sheehy was on the Student Advisory Council, and Scooter Wurster was appointed to the Student Juciciary Council.

Delta Chi sponsors a Casino Night each spring at Long's Convention Center to benefit the American Cancer Society. They also placed second this year with their homecoming float. All in all, members of Delta Chi show a wide range of talents.

The SAEs hosted their province basketball tournament this year, with all six Michigan chapters competing. Members of Omega province also congregated for the annual Founders' Day banquet at Porter Street Station in March. The event was attended by over 200 alumni and actives. The Michigan State chapter received the province Best Chapter award for the second year.

The SAEs organized the Shaw Hall 10,000 metre run for the benefit of the March of Dimes, with over 250 runners. Members Dave Rosati and Mike Donzen were active on Greek Week committees, and Chris Rizik wrote a column for the State News.

Again this year, Alpha Phi has succeeded in obtaining quota for the fall pledge class. These 33 pledges were described as "energetic and active," and proved it with a complimentary trip for all members to the Detroit Renaissance Center. They raised approximately $300 for the occasion by selling carnations during the month of November. The 65th floor was the site, and members of Psi Upsilon were the guests for an exciting Alpha Phi night on the town.

Alpha Phi alumnae are also active ingredients in the house. Last summer, the alumns had the entire upstairs and spiral staircase recarpeted, and more recently, redecorated the main living room with carpeting, furniture and draperies.

Yet with all the excitement of social and house activities, Alpha Phis do not slight their philanthropy of their time or dedication. The Michigan Heart Fund receives donations from Alpha Phi for use in area hospitals.

Members stage two fund-raisers for the Heart Fund. During winter term, members sell lolli-luv-pops on a massive scale throughout the campus and greek system.

Alpha Phi's Run-for-Fun also raises money for the Heart Fund by exercising participants' cardio-vascular systems during a run/walk, 24-hour marathon. A large number of students, as well as representatives of local police and fire departments, spend one day in Jenison Field House not just for fun, but for a good cause.

The Arthritis Foundation also received help from Phi Mu during their local fundraiser, Casino Night.

A social service award presented during State Day, a meeting of all Phi Mu chapters in the state, recognized the MSU chapter of Phi Mu for its outstanding performance in raising funds for charitable organizations.

Phi Mus are involved in a wide spectrum of campus activities. A number of members are active in high academic organizations including the Golden Key National Honor Society, the Tower Guard, and the Chemical Engineering Honorary Society. ## KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA 605 M.A.C. 98 Members Est. 1930

The Kappas started off the year with an excellent rush — getting quota with 33 new pledges. Fall term the Kappas were involved in lots of activities, including trick-or-treating for UNICEF, Founder's Day, Dad's Day, and a sheik serenade of 15 fraternities. For homecoming they built a float with the men of Psi Upsilon and held an open house for alumnae.

Kappa Kappa Gamma's goal this year was to work on inter-greek relations. This was facilitated by scheduling many exchange dinners with other houses, both sororities and fraternities. As part of their philanthropy program they worked with the Lion's Club of Lansing to raise funds for the Michigan Eye Bank.

Intramural sports were also participated in, including softball, in which the Kappa Killers took first place in the spring of 1981. Many members were involved in a variety of campus activities, in which several had leadership positions. Campus leaders included: Karen Kluge, president of Panhellenic Council; Kathy Williams, president of Student Foundation; and Carolyn Lettas, varsity cheerleader and Mortar Board member.

The Kappas stressed dedication this year, according to one member. They pledged dedication to the institution of Kappa Kappa Gamma, dedication to Michigan State University, but, most of all, dedication to each other.

The men of Phi Delta Theta perform well in many areas of social and academic life here at MSU. So well, in fact, that they have been named a Gold Star Chapter for chapter excellence and were a runner-up last summer for the Harvard Trophy for the national outstanding chapter.

The Phi Deltas hosted numerous social functions in the 1981-82 school year. Fall term was livened up with the annual Oktoberfest celebration, to which eight houses are invited for a huge tent dance. The Send-a-Kid-to-Camp kega-thon at Casey's was extremely successful, raising over $4,000 for the St. Vincent de Paul program. Spring term the Phi Delta Theta White Carnation Formal was held on Mackinac Island, and the Phi Deltas again sponsored the Frisbee Tournament during Greek Week.

Phi Deltas stress involvement outside of the greek system as well. Ted Rusztowicz was president of MSUMA and Mike Erickson was president of HRI Association. Thomas John led the Varsity Club and Brian Ford served as vice-president of the Finance Club. Three men were appointed to Senior Class Council — Ronald Aubrey, Scott Smith and Jere L'Heureux.

The men of Theta Chi are known for being strong in both sports and scholastics. Each year they excel in sports, and have won the inter-fraternity All Sports Trophy five of the last seven years. This year was no exception, with the Theta Chis placing first in football, and second in both racquetball and bowling. This was the result of a winning combination of good athletes and fan support. Scholastically, the Theta Chis also rank high, consistently among the top ten fraternities.

Each year Theta Chi sponsors a Las Vegas Night for the benefit of the Arthritis Foundation. This gambling fund-raiser brings in over $7,000 annually. Additionally, this past year, the Theta Chis have begun working at a neighborhood patient care facility for emotionally disturbed adults. They make physical improvements on the house and assist the staff in working with the patients.

Theta Chis are represented in many campus organizations. ASMSU reps this year include Ty Damon for the Communications Arts College and John Nonnamaker for the College of Education. Gary Naeyaert served as Executive Vice-President of IFC, and Mark Schafer was parliamentarian for ASMSU. Off-campus, Mike Corcoran worked as an aide to Governor Milliken.

Beta Theta Pi is renowned on campus for the architecture of its house. Designed by a student of Frank Lloyd Wright, it is the only house on campus built specifically as a fraternity house. It has separate residential and social areas, and boasts a 400-square foot dance floor — "great for parties." The location on the Red Cedar River makes it an ideal spot for the Beta Canoe Race each year during Greek Week.

The Betas stressed alumni involvement this past year. Homecoming Weekend brought a large number of brothers back to campus for the activities and the game. The Fifth Annual Alumni Golf Outing held each spring is another alumni activity. Alumni are kept informed of house activities with an alumni newsletter published every term.

The men of Beta Theta Pi are kept busy with a full social schedule. The Beta Day TG each year fills the house and the backyard with six other Greek houses invited. Members participate in all intramural sports, and are represented on Motar Board, Homecoming Committee, I.F.C., and Greek Week Committee. "Some of the advantages of being a large house," said Mark Theoharous, controller, "are lasting friendships with both brothers in the house and alumni, and the satisfaction of being involved in the house's many activities."

"The Gamma Psi Chapter of Sigma Chi is a diverse group of men," according to president Kerry Hunt. Good citizenship, maintenance of high academic standards, and development of leadership skills are all emphasized by the house.

Athletics are also stressed at Sigma Chi, with brothers participating in many IM sports. In 1981 Randy Check established a new intramural record with his 6'8" high jump, helping the Sigs to win the fraternity all-sports trophy for the 80-81 school year.

Sigma Chi sponsored many social events throughout the past year. Derby

State Days brought together Sigma Chis from six chapters across Michigan for various contests. Homecoming, Sweetheart Ball, Parent's Day and the Annual Rival Run for the Michigan game were all great successes. The Sigs were also active in Greek Week — participating in Greek Sing, and sponsoring a dart tournament for Greek Games.

The men of Sigma Chi work hard to support their national philanthropy — the Wallace Village for Children in Broomfield, Colorado, for physically and emotionally handicapped children. Fund-raising events are held throughout the year, culminating in the Tramp-a-Thon each spring.

Alumni involvement is high at Sigma Chi. Publishing a newsletter every term informing alumni of activities keeps all past members informed. Notable alumni of Sigma Chi include MSU football coach Muddy Waters, MSU President Cecil Mackey and actor Warren Beatty.

Anchor Splash, the popular fund raiser of Delta Gamma, is held each winter to raise money for the Michigan School for the Blind.

"Having fun, making money and helping other people," says Janelle Hanlon, "is a good feeling."

Phase one of Anchor Splash began with a Bar Night at Dooley's, held February 17, where a fraternity was chosen Mr. Anchor Splash. Members of Beta Theta Pi were chosen for the award by a panel of three judges, including house-mother Barb Crothers. The decision was based on the contestant's costume, behavior and poise. Proceeds from the Bar Night were applied to new equipment for the school.

Phase two featured a day of swimming competitions held February 28 at the I.M. pool. Fraternities participated in various events including the Tazmanian Yahoo, a series of innertube races, and the Synchronized Swim, a nautical performance to music.

Delta Gammas are also active in such campus organizations as Omicron Nu Honorary Society, the MSU Track team, ASMSU and the Women's Advisory Committee.

"Kappa Delta friendships formed will last longer than just the college years," says Michelle Roy, editor of the house. These friendships are developed through and enhanced by the many social and community activities of Kappa Delta.

Sigma Chi's Derby Day placed high among fall term's highlights. The KDs captured first place and a stereo as grand prize. Points were earned during the day for different events including derby collection, mud volleyball, and mud wheel-barrel racing.

Fall also brought the highlight of member Linda Pilette being chosen as MSU's Homecoming Queen of 1981.

Community service provided special moments for Kappa Delta. Fall pledges treated themselves and the St. Vincent's Home for Children in Lansing by making yarn dolls for the home.

Annually held late spring term, the Kappa Delta Golf Klassic is another popular community service. Couples participate in a nine-hole scramble with all proceeds going to KD's national philanthropy, the Crippled Children's Hospital in Richmond, Virginia. The Klassic is popular with greeks and non-greeks alike, combining participants from Kappa Delta members, their parents, MSU faculty, and many others.

Just about everything comes in threes. Well, not for everyone, but for the house of Tri Delta it does. The house has three floors, three panes of glass in the windows, and three brick sections in the fireplace, just to name a few.

Tri Delta is also a place where friendship grows. Three rushes are held each year for interested ladies to join the sorority. Sorority member Marilyn King says developing leadership characteristics in the members is important. A three-day retreat is held for officer elections and the president has the responsibility of writing and implementing a leadership program. King says 18 officers are elected to carry out a number of duties.

"Trying to be the best that you can be is the basic underlying philosophy for Tri Delta Members," King says.

The members are now working to make one of their community service projects an annual event. A 10-Kilometer Run for the Young is a fund raiser event. Funds raised from the 10-K Run in spring of 1981 were donated to the Michigan Chapter of the Leukemia Foundation. King says an effort is being made to continue sponsoring the event to donate money to charity.

Life at Tri Delta is warm and friendly. The house was painted and remodeled last year and has a bright contemporary look. The living room is spacious with a fireplace and piano — a normal place to find the members singing and laughing together. Ski weekends and a house party each term are other events that bring all the members together for fun and enjoyment. In the spring a Pansey Breakfast is held where members bid farewell to the seniors in the house.

An emphasis is placed on scholarship for the members, and many are members of Mortar Board. Tri Delta nationally is the second largest sorority, and speaking of threes, the chapter has been at MSU 33 years.

A priority publicity event of Anheuser-Busch is Pi Beta Phi's annual Keg Roll-a-Thon. In conjunction with Phi Delta Theta, members roll a keg throughout the streets of Lansing and East Lansing during May. Donations are collected door-to-door along a 30-mile course for Camp Ozanam, a Lansing area St. Vincent DePaul affiliate.

Another fund-raiser featured a Hat Night at Casey's with proceeds going to the MSU Day Care Center. The event was arranged by this year's pledges, who raised $230.

The Pi Phis also take to the streets during Homecoming Week with Alpha Tau Omega for a roller skating serenade. Members visit various greek houses to provide musical entertainment to those busy constructing floats.

Pi Beta Phi retains respect as a high academic/social organization. They placed among the top three sororities academically at MSU, yet still found time to place second in IM football last fall under the leadership of quarterback Laurie Shedler.

Phi Kappa Psi belongs to the smaller house, white division. The members enjoy the smaller house because it gives more people a chance to be involved in different activities. In a big house only a select few can hold offices, participate in Greek Week, and join in other activities. Ed Sadilek says a small house gives more of a family feeling than a big house. "You feel like brothers because you know everyone personally, not just by a name matched to a face," he said.

Phi Kappa Psi is also known as "the house with the rock." The rock is usually painted with the season, or commemorating special events. If you would like to visit Phi Kappa Psi, but cannot find it, just ask for "the house with the rock."

Delta Sigma Phi builds a strong fraternity by building strong characters. Upholding the standard of brotherhood, members work together throughout the year to improve their organization and themselves.

This commitment to character was displayed fall term when Delta Sigma Phi won the 1981 Homecoming Float Competition. Keeping with the western theme, the float featured Sparty riding a bull which kicked a Wisconsin Badger. The float theme was "Bully the Badgers."

Delta Sigma Phi exhibited its distinction again spring term when they sponsored the Greek Chug. This event kicked off Greek Week, which to many is itself the character of fraternal orders.

Funds are raised during the year to support Camp Sechelt, a camp for underprivileged girls located in Vancouver, Canada. Locally, Gamma Phi raises funds for home improvements including a house painting project completed last summer.

Backyard beach volleyball, G&Ts on the roof — the Delts had a relaxed and eventful year. Room 25 rocked Ohio with all the latest tunes, and shish-kebabs helped stave off hunger at a tail-gate party with Chi Omega before the Michigan game. Upside-down margueritas were the any-time drink all year. At the annual Polynesian Party spring term, sand in the living room, a water-fall down the stairs, and a pig roast in the backyard helped provide atmosphere for the evening.

This year over 200 people danced in the Delta Tau Delta Dance for Strength marathon, co-sponsored by the Miller Brewing Company. In its eight years of existence, the marathon has raised over $400,000 for the defeat of multiple sclerosis. "It's a lot of work to put it on, but everyone in the house pitches in, and we have fun doing it. The marathon has become a Delt tradition here at MSU," says one member.

The Delts pride themselves on being well represented both inside and outside the greek system. They supplied two vice presidents of the Interfraternity Council, and Tom Weiser and Dave Finney were active on Senior Class Council. Along with all their other activities, scholastics were still important, as shown by the fact that the house grade point average was consistently above the all-university men's average.

"The Thetas are glad to donate time and money to Hospice," said Joan Daly. "We can see that our donations are really appreciated, especially for an organization just starting out." Lovely Legs raised over $1000 for Hospice this year, nearly twice as much as in 1981.

Alpha Gamma Rho is MSU's agriculture fraternity founded to further knowledge in the field. Members are selected from agricultural majors or some related field.

One of the most important activities for AGR is spring orientation for high school seniors and transfer students in the field of agriculture, acquainting them with the college. During the orientation, guides take the new students around to the different buildings and farm fields, present a slide show on current happenings, and field any questions the new students may have.

Many people who work with the university now were members of AGR during their college days. The fraternity aids in awareness of new developments and research carried out by MSU agriculturists, keeping us tops in the field.

The 1981-82 academic year was a very active one for the men at the Hut. Under the leadership of Cultural Director James J. Murray, the Lambda Chis attended a number of plays and concerts as a group. They also sponsored a blood drive each term for the benefit of the American Red Cross.

Fall term the LCAs worked hard on their homecoming float, assisted by the women of Chi Omega, and placed third in the competition. The Lambda Chi

White Rose Winter Formal, held at the Grosse Pointe Yacht Club, was attended by more brothers than ever before. As usual, the Lambda Chis excelled in sports, placing first in tennis, paddleball and ping-pong, and second in badminton. The Lambda Chi Junior 500 Road Rally was again held during Greek Week, with brothers officiating.

Lambda Chis were active outside of the house as well. Jamie Browning served on the Student Foundation Executive Committee, and Rob Durot was the ASMSU College of Business representative. Mark Mushro chaired the MSUMA Communications Committee, while Chuck Lotzar was president of the Order of Omega. Some LCAs even found time for varsity sports — Dan Crowder (cheerleading), Steve Frederick (track), Scott King (tennis), and Ken Stockwell (football).

Recipes sometimes have a special ingredient which adds uniqueness to their results. Sororities also have certain extras which make each one special. Chi Omega's secret ingredient is a fine blend of spirit, motivation and unity.

The Chi-Os add excitement to everything they do. Whether it be contributing to the Glass House, a local alcohol rehabilitation center, or making a homecoming float with the Lambda Chis, a sense of dedication and pride prevails. The Chi-Os hold the 1980-81 Greek Week championship title and have a tradition of high competitiveness.

Chi-O members are actively involved in MSU. Missy McClellan and Laurie Bell are both officers of the Panhellenic Council, and five other members participate in varsity sports. The group's involvement in the university has led to its success of placing among the top five houses at MSU for academics in the past three years.

This year, Chi Omega is pleased to have a number of out-of-state members, as well as one international Chi-O. Angeles Sanches-Armass from Mexico City, Mexico, sees Chi Omega as her "home away from home." During spring break, a group of 15 members may find Angela's home their "home away from home" as they spend a week in her family's villa in sunny Acapulco. Other spring break trips include journeys to Colorado for skiing, and Florida for sunning.

With the slogan Block Diabetes — Go State, members of Alpha Gamma Delta sold over 2000 balloons before the MSU-Indiana football game on October 31. These balloons were released during State's first touchdown of the game. Proceeds from the sale went to the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation.

That same night, AGDs went trick-or-treating for UNICEF and collected over $500. Contributing time and money to charitable organizations is an important segment of life at Alpha Gamma Delta.

Members also find time to participate in various other activities including the MSU Greek Week held in the spring. AGDs sponsor the popular Slime In event. From each of the fraternities and sororities involved, two people are selected to dive for golf balls in a sandbox full of mud.

AGDs skillfully maneuvered through Delta Chi's Road Rally to a first place finish, and also earned top honors in the limbo contest during Greek Week 1981.

The stage is set, the lights are on, and the audience of 33 pledges is waiting. Alpha Chi Goes Broadway, the theme for Fall Rush, is under way.

Members of Alpha Chi Omega present a combination of skits and presentations to acquaint the new members with the house. the razzle and dazzle of A Chorus Line, My Fair Lady, Annie and South Pacific are highlights of the two-week rush.

The entertainment continues as homecoming approaches and alumni members participate in the Homecoming Day festivities. The events follow a schedule prepared and mailed to alumnae weeks before. The day begins with a brunch followed quickly by the traditional tail-gating behind the library. A seating block is arranged for Alpha Chi alumnae to enjoy the game together, and an informal dinner concludes the memorable day.

Alpha Chis also have another chance to entertain. A few weeks before Christmas, members gather to serenade homes for elderly in the area. Throughout the year, Alpha Chis continually contribute to the community by supporting various charitable organizations including St. Vincent's Home for Children, Easter Seals and St. Jude's Fund.

Individualism is the key word at the Fiji house. "We have a motto," says president Jim Sanford, "'self-deception is the most flagrant violation of human integrity.' We really try to live up to that."

Whether working for the Diabetes Association, putting on a bike-a-thon, or planning Fiji Island in the spring, Fijis add their own distinctive touches to each event.

The Fiji Regatta, held during Greek Week, shows the Fiji philosophy. Prizes are awarded to the most original and ingenious float, not to the best-looking or impressive.

Fijis do their own thing, and are proud of it.

Epsilon Kappa is the MSU chapter of Kappa Delta Pi, an honor society in education.

On February 14 the Initiation Ceremony was held to induct new members. Advisor Dr. William Walsh says membership primarily consists of undergraduates in education, but occasionally graduate students are selected.

With the decreasing enrollment of students in education, "finding the members is quite a task," Walsh says.

Activities are geared toward improvement and excellence in education. At the winter initiation two scholarships are presented to qualified members. Walsh says the chapter is one of few able to distribute scholarships out of its own funds. "We try to operate as economically as we can," he says.

PRE-VET CLUB

Exploring the alternatives to heavy studying and intense competition concerns the members of the MSU Pre-Vet Club.

William Van Bonn, club president, says that the main objectives of the club is to "get away from the competition."

Tension is created, he says, because of the fierce competition to gain admission into MSU's School of Veterinary Medicine. "We're all working for a spot in the program," he says, "but we can be friends at the same time."

The club has formed about 130 study groups so that students can help each other achieve good grades, Van Bonn said.

Making friends is not the only advantage to joining the club. Guest speakers talk on topics from how to fill out applications for admission into vet school to lameness in thoroughbred horses.

Support is sent annually to the Marine Coast Sea Mission, a project which sends a ship along the East Coast to distribute food and basics to low income people and to the American Farm School, an international girl's school in Greece.

As you walked around campus during fall term it may have looked like you were in the midst of a 1930s gangster flick. Al Capone, Pretty Boy Floyd and John Dillinger look-a-likes were the men of Sigma Phi Epsilon. Called to duty during the spring of their junior year, Mortar Board members spend their senior year serving the MSU community.

The major activity this year for members was acting as publicity representatives for Abram's Planetarium. The Planetarium status changed to a self-supporting entity and members helped advocate the use of its facilities. Other activities include ushering the MSU Faculty Retirees Program and Faculty Awards Event.

Members are nominated by faculty, staff and friends for membership. Involvement in university clubs and activities, community service, and a high grade-point average are criteria. The Tapping Ceremony, the initiation for new inductees, is held in the spring each year.

Mortar Board is a national senior honor society with over 182 chapters across the country. President Tim Kroninger says less than one percent of the juniors at MSU are chosen for membership.

Tower Guard

Tower Guard is a unique organization.

Not only is it the only lower division undergraduate honorary society on campus, but it offers a special service too, says president Carol Miller.

Every member of Tower Guard is expected to spend four hours a week reading to blind students, she says.

Members can either read directly to the students or into cassettes on the fourth floor of the Undergraduate Library.

The organization has also started a new service — taking notes for the deaf.

Taken from the top 200 ranking freshmen, 75 students are chosen through interviews to become members during their sophomore year.

Any blind or deaf student can request the service, says Miller, just call the office on the second floor of Beaumont Tower.

Varsity Club

The S Club is made up of members from each varsity athletic team at MSU who work together to service the East Lansing and Lansing community.

"The group serves as a fellowship for the athletes," says John Thomas, president of the club.

The group is a non-profit organization which serves the community. The members visit children in hospitals and also bring children to campus for athletic and recreational events. The activities largely involve handicapped and underprivileged children who really look up to the athletes and enjoy the opportunity to spend time with them.

The highlight of activities each year for the group is the Celebrity Softball Game held in the spring. This year is the fifth anniversary for the game, which hosts athletic celebrities from around the country. Children from area agencies such as Big Brothers, Teen Ranch, and St. Vincent's Home are brought out to enjoy the game and see their favorite athletes.

"The nice thing about the whole event," Thomas says, "is the professionals finding time to commit to helping the kids."

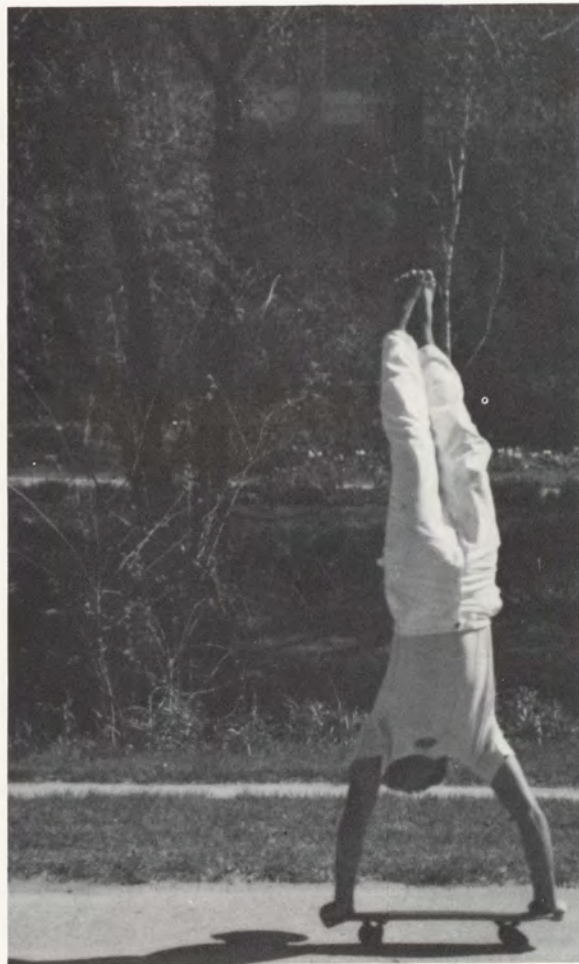

The softball game is just one of many special events the club sponsors each year. All of their functions are fundraisers. The income, along with donations received from area businesses, is turned over to local charities.

The objective for the group is "to promote high standards of community involvement and community service."

Marketing Club

The MSU Marketing Association, the collegiate chapter of the American Marketing Association at Michigan State, was awarded the Outstanding Chapter Performance award for its activities during the 1981-82 school year.

The focus of the chapter is on allowing students from a variety of majors, including business, communications advertising and English, to gain experience in their fields through practical experience.

MSUMA sponsors numerous programs each year for the benefit of the entire MSU community. Programs for the 1981-82 school year included American Hospital Supply, Owens Corning/Fiberglass, Bell Systems, and Eastman Kodak.

The Marketing Association also participated in a year-long promotional campaign with Squirt Company. This project allowed members to work closely with representatives of a large company, and to gain knowledge in execution of marketing programs.

A variety of services are provided for MSUMA members. Many students obtain internships in the Lansing area through the Business Internship Program. Members have the opportunity to have their resumes printed in a book distributed to over 180 companies. The Student Advertising Agency, affiliated with both MSUMA and the Advertising Club, gave members experience in handling the advertising for a local, bi-weekly tabloid, the Lansing Star.

Maranatha Christian Fellowship

Maranatha Christian Fellowship is a church dedicated to witnessing Christ and spreading His word to the MSU community. Begun in the summer of 1981, Maranatha has expanded to a congregation of nearly 100 in only nine months — "and is constantly growing," says Minister Daniel Crawford.

The church's message is that of "radical Christianity, living a non-compromising Christian life," according to Crawford. "The Lord enters into all areas of life — including politics. Crawford says that Maranatha is currently working to eliminate separation of church and state, and for the passage of legislation against abortion.

Maranatha meets on campus two nights each week, and holds dorm Bible study sessions throughout the week. They maintain good relationships with other Christian groups on campus, such as Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship. They also sponsor a four-year Bible training program for college students. To carry on their work, Maranatha has a staff of two full-time and three part-time ministers.

Maranatha Ministries is a world-wide organization. They currently have approximately 90 ministries on several continents. Maranatha's goal is to have a New Testament church on every major university campus in the world.

Changing with the times, the MSU Evans Scholars instituted a new program this year — co-ed housing. For the first time, female Evans Scholars lived in the chapter house. The presence of women has had a positive effect on the chapter, according to the members, bringing chapter unity to a new high. "Activities in the house have been more successful than ever before," says Steve Hickner.

The Evans Scholars' annual Winter Run for charity was held again this year.

This three-mile run around campus attracts talented runners from the Lansing and East Lansing area, and is sponsored by local businesses. The pledge class community project, headed by Carol Wendling, was a blood drive for the American Red Cross.

Other events included a Buddy Day, a spring term pig roast for Family Day, and the annual Golf Ball in Chicago, attended by Evans Scholars from all over the country.

Although all the Scholars share a common background as golf caddies, their interests vary. In addition to turf-grass management, members are in telecommunications, engineering, business and many other fields. With their new living arrangements, the unified Evans Scholars plan to become a more visible force on the MSU campus in the 1980s.

Pop Entertainment

Michigan State University enjoys the efforts produced by Pop Entertainment to bring class acts to the campus. As an organization funded through ASMSU, it books and promotes talent for the university with efforts to appeal to varied musical taste.

Students themselves operate this creation and culmination of entertainment. The organization has over 150 members whose responsibilities vary from director to those in charge of hospitality. This interaction offers a great opportunity to get involved with the music industry. In fact, many of those who leave the university and Pop Entertainment after graduation venture into the professional field of entertainment.

Pop Entertainment not only offers many cultural events to the university, they provide a resourceful, educational experience to all those involved with the organization.

MSU's Beta Beta Chapter of Alpha Phi Omega celebrated its 45th anniversary in April.

Janice Wheeler, publicity chairperson, says the group is a co-ed service fraternity working with the campus and surrounding community. Representing the group as mascot is a stuffed teddy bear named Beta Beta Buddy Bear.

Each term undergraduate students are invited to join Alpha Phi Omega. Wheeler says the 10-week pledge period does not include hazing. They seek students willing to devote their time and service. Three cardinal principles are expressed: leadership, friendship and service.

For three years the group has sponsored Call-A-Ride Service, (353-CARS). Wheeler says a ride board in the Union Building is monitored to match riders with drivers travelling beyond the local community.

The group is affiliated with the Boy Scouts of America. The Fourth Annual Trade-O-Ree was held the weekend of March 19-20. This event draws chapter and scout members from different states for a weekend of trading patches and other memorabilia. An auction is held and tables are set up awarding trophies to the top three displays.

Other services the group has provided include working with the Red Cross to conduct blood drives; distributing Easter Seal containers; helping Multiple Sclerosis Society with wheelchair maintenance clinics; and working with the Arthritis Foundation.

Members of Alpha Kappa Psi gain numerous leadership opportunities within the house through committee membership and the Executive Board.

Not all activities at Alpha Kappa Psi are business oriented. "We are more social than people realize," says president Mark Hagan. The Champagne Party and Spring Dinner-Dance are formal events, and the Homecoming Pig Roast brings in alumni from across the country.

Alpha Kappa Psi is different from other MSU fraternities — it is co-ed. Women are on equal footing with men and hold several offices. This helps to give members a more realistic view of the business world, and also makes in-house social events more enjoyable, says Hagan. Having women in the house certainly helps in sports — the women of Alpha Kappa Psi took first place in football this year.

Dairy Club

For the fall 1981 Annual Christmas Cheese Sale, 8,000 pounds of cheese was purchased by the Dairy Club to sell to the university community. Everything from Gouda, Colby, Cheddar and Muenster was available. President Nancy Blaauw says it's the biggest event of the year for the club and a time for everyone to participate. She says at least one-third of the customers have the cheese sent as gifts and have it shipped all over the country.

Just before the sale is the 20-year tradition of the Bean Feed — an evening when club members and dairy faculty and staff sit down and have a dinner together. Afterwards, the tables are cleared and everyone participates in an assembly line to help label and package the cheese to be used for the sale.

Advertising Club

The MSU Advertising Club offers experience valuable before and after graduation: contact with professionals and practical training in the field.

Throughout the year, advertising professionals have visited MSU and addressed various topics, including How Detroit got the Superbowl. Speakers from D'Arcy-MacManus and Masius, J. Walter Thompson, Kenyon and Eckhardt, and Ross Roy have provided members with interesting examples and insight.

Members have also had the opportunity to actively participate in different club projects. The Student Advertising Agency, which handled the Lansing Star account in 1981-82, offered firsthand experience, and Career Night allowed students to talk with recent MSU graduates in the advertising field.

In addition, juniors and seniors could opt to join the American Advertising Federation (AAF), an organization featuring a national student advertising competition. During the spring of 1981, a group of Ad Club members captured first place in the national AAF competition with their Coor's Beer campaign.

This year, a group of students under direction of advisor Sandra Moriarity, and in conjunction with an Advertising 486 class, researched and created a campaign for Corning Glass Works. The MSU team traveled during the spring to Chicago for regionals and Atlanta for national competition with plans on repeating the 1981 tradition.

Women's Hall Of Fame

Anna Howard, Sojourner Truth and Annie Clemnec were among the women chosen to be recognized in the Michigan Women's Hall of Fame. The Michigan Women's Studies Association, Inc., was working to undo what textbook history had done to women achievers.

"Women have been forgotten in history. They have been erased," said Gladys Beckwith, president of the Michigan Women's Studies Association and Coordinator of the Women's Studies Program at MSU. Beckwith and her colleagues were hoping to create an historical center that would show appreciation for the accomplishments of Michigan women and also act as a showcase for all women's creativity.

Organizers of the Hall of Fame were planning a broad-based facility that would attract all types of women. "Often this kind of institution draws support from women in the academic world. This is fine, but we'd like the Hall of Fame to be a center for all women," said Beckwith.

The site of the Women's Hall of Fame was the Frank E. Cooley House on West Main Street in Lansing. The Association leased the house for a dollar a year from the city of Lansing. Although the rent was low, Beckwith emphasized operating costs, maintenance, staff and displays for the hall would be costly. "We are depending on private contributions at the moment, but we're working hard on organizing fundraising activities."

Beckwith was surprised at the little campus support for the project. "Not many MSU students have organized fundraising activities for the hall. After all, it seems to me the facility will benefit younger women."

Many other states had similar facilities in the planning stages. The Lansing Hall of Fame was set to open in the spring of 1984.

"All over the country there is a new awareness of women achievers," Beckwith added. "I think people are starting to realize that women have made some very valuable contributions to history."

Fighting Against Rape: Self-Defense For Credit

One in five women is the victim of a rape or attempted rape, and a quarter of all women in bonded relationships are routinely battered. With these staggering statistics we see why women's self-defense became a part of MSU's curriculum.

"Women's self-defense was never taken very seriously, until the administration became aware of an increase in violence against women," said Joan Nelson, instructor of Women's Self-Defense. In the past couple of years the notion of the classes became more popular as it drew support from the different women's organizations at MSU. Nelson agreed MSU was really breaking ground by instituting women's self-defense classes for credit.

These classes were designed to capitalize on women's strengths and stress that men too have vulnerabilities. Students were instructed in the verbal, psychological and physical aspects of self defense. "This class concentrates a lot on women overcoming their inhibitions about hurting people. This is difficult because all of our lives women are taught to be passive and nurturant instead of aggressive."

Women in the classes were taught a variety of rape prevention skills, including kicks, punches and hold breaks. "The threat of physical retaliation looms over a woman's head. Therefore, self defense is a very practical skill considering the pervasiveness of rape," said Nelson.

Nelson stressed the fact that rape could be prevented. According to statistics, four out of five women who vigorously resist their attackers got free from the rapist. Nelson said, "only the woman that is the victim can judge what is the best thing to do in an actual assault; whatever she does is appropriate."

Although men were entitled to join, Nelson recognized that the class would not focus on their needs. "For years, self-defense instruction has concentrated on teaching men how to defend themselves in barroom brawl situations. Women's self defense is not this type of instruction."

Nelson added, "involvement in women's self defense is sometimes a woman's first step toward taking control of her own life — this is why this type of class is so essential."

ERA Stalls In 1982

Section 1 — Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

Section 2 — The Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this Article.

Section 3 — This Amendment shall take effect two years after the date of ratification.

It was zero hour for this controversial amendment; the deadline for ratification was June 30, 1982. Michigan had ratified the ERA, but the amendment would not pass unless three other states ratified it before the deadline. In the key districts of Oklahoma, Georgia, Virginia, Florida and Missouri, a full-scale campaign was on to urge the legislatures of these states to ratify the amendment. The National Organization for Women (NOW) had raised six million dollars to assemble three television commercials that were being aired in states that had not ratified the amendment, as well as those which had. ERAmerica, a group comprised of 250 professional and non-professional women's groups all over the United States, had been sponsoring fund-raising events which had netted three-quarters of a million dollars. Half of this money would go toward media campaigns. Celebrities such as Marlo Thomas and Alan Alda banded together to urge ratification, and two politicians' wives — Helen Milliken and Betty Ford — sponsored major fund-raisers as well as lobbying from state to state. Businessmen and women also came to realize the importance of such a law to insure women positions in the business world.

The positive economic results of the amendment were being stressed in advertisements sponsored by the National Business Council.

The Equal Rights Amendment was originally supposed to be ratified by March 22, 1979. After a one year campaign, pro-ERA workers succeeded in extending that deadline to June of 1982. If defeated, the amendment could not be reconsidered until the next century. This promised to be a major setback for American women regardless of race, class or religion. Without a proper law to guarantee the rights of women as equals, women's precarious position in American society was threatened immeasurably.

Teaching By The Tube

What? A Western shoot-out? An MSU professor and T.A. were prepared to duel on the screen while bewildered students looked on. The scene was without actual bullets and other attributes of the Old West; it was part of a plot by the MSU staff to enhance a television course. Sound typical of the 1981-1982 academic year? Visual technology had spread to the education systems. But was television the teacher's aid or the teacher?

MSU students, more and more frequently were finding themselves enrolled in television courses. This was due to MSU's — then called Michigan State College — 1955 adoption of television as a teaching method. The Continuing Education Service of MSC and the Committee on Television of the American Council on Education held their first conference on February 21 and 22, 1955, to discuss television credit courses. The conference was successful, with MSC communicating the impact and worth of using television in education. Since then, the credited television course has advanced to the classroom and onto MSU's WKAR Channel 23.

Supporters of the television course believed it was a solution to enrollment problems faced by colleges and universities. By televising courses on MSU network television, they could be viewed by a wider range of students — from dorm residents to students with full time jobs interested in continuing their education. Also, televised courses provided a way to expand teaching functions without affecting the quality of work since more people were able to take classes from the better professors. Student interest was expected to increase with a polished televised class presentation.

But many saw dehumanization as another result of the TV course. William Bridgeland, associate professor of Social Science, said "Television is an excellent teaching device. It is quite supplementary to the basic academic course." However, Bridgeland felt there was "a loss of human contact." He added that "it is not beneficial to just transfer a lecture to the screen."

Carla Brock, a teaching assistant, felt that television was "very helpful in teaching Advertising 205. With the use of television ads, you can show what is being taught. It is best shown on TV." Brock favored television's effectiveness, but also understood the student's viewpoint in this situation. She suggested using a combination of televised lectures with some live teaching by a professor, adding that "the problem the course brings is the loss of face-to-face contact with the professor." Brock felt television "has its place, but it should not be overused."

The absence of the professor was the major disturbing factor concerning televised classes. This was particularly troublesome to those seeking individual help. Although many classes did have a teacher's aide present in the classroom, often they were unable to fill the student's needs. Televised material frequently presented the problem of incomplete notetaking due to the rapidity of covering class material. Because of this, the discussion of many concepts was impossible. In the absence of the professor, this problem often went unnoticed.

Communications Senior Thomas Cutler said that televised classes were an "overall detriment, due to the lack of personal contact between instructor and student." Cutler felt that "the cost of an education is worth getting a live professor and not a pre-recorded message." He suggested providing a channel for student questions that could be answered by the professor. "If given the option between learning and not learning, I would opt for television," Cutler said. But he added that "human contact is invaluable."

The use of television in teaching added, for many, an impersonal touch to courses. Another problem was that students frequently found themselves mesmerized by watching a television screen. This is understandable in a society that averaged seven to eight hours of daily television watching per person. The student had become used to being entertained rather than educated by television.

Had television, originally designed as a teaching aid, in fact taken the place of the teacher? At MSU, the television course had become widely popular, especially within the College of Communication Arts and Sciences. Other programs which offered televised courses were: Advertising, Accounting, Biology, Biochemistry, Shorthand, Typing, Computer Programming, First Aid and Emergency Care, French, Nutrition, Natural Science, Parks and Recreational Resources, Microcomputers, and Spanish. With the growing popularity of the television in the classroom, we saw less of the teachers.

Despite a loss of interpersonal contact, TV courses offered the convenience of organization as well as exposure to the best professors. Good or bad, the televised course had been accepted in the stream of daily life at MSU — as commonplace as General Hospital.

An Opportunity To Live And Learn

The East Lansing community welcomed the opening of a new patient care facility for emotionally disturbed adults in 1982. The City Council approved the plan and the Mental Health Association leased a house.

The facility on Abbott Road opened in early January with accommodations for 10 to 15 residents. The home served as a transition dwelling from institutional living. Residents of the home were neither violent nor criminally dangerous, but they had all spent most of their lives in the confinement of state institutions.

"One of the goals of the house is to provide an environment of healthy social interaction for the residents, as well as teaching these people social skills which will help them to re-enter society," said Gary Naeyaert who is in charge of a community volunteer program.

Naeyaert, who is working with the Mental Health Association and the East Lansing Human Relations Commission, has organized volunteers from the neighboring Theta Chi fraternity to work in the house. "Volunteers work only a few hours a week along with full-time professional and paraprofessional staff," Naeyaert said. Volunteers mainly help the residents to feel more comfortable in the neighborhood and community."

"The house offers these people the opportunity to live and learn," said Jim Paugels, a member of Theta Chi who volunteers three times a week.

"The volunteer work is more of a friendship role than anything else," Jim said. "I like to see them smile, keep them busy and out of the unreal realities they've created in their heads."

Residents of the patient care facility are free to come and go as they please. The facility encourages residents to take care of themselves and manage their own household tasks. Few rules exist and patients pay rent out of social security benefits.

"The ultimate objective is to get these people out living normal lives," said Todd Scott, another Theta Chi volunteer. "If it works for one person, it's worth it."

City Of East Lansing Becomes A True Gem

What better way for a city to celebrate its 75th anniversary than to honor its oldest residents, as East Lansing did during its Diamond Jubilee, May 21-22.

Ruth Newman, a resident for 82 years, and Robert E. Hicks, a 90-year resident, were applauded for their roles in the history of the city. East Lansing Mayor Larry Owen hosted the awards ceremony at Valley Court Park. MSU President Cecil Mackey was one of the speakers for the ceremony and said he felt "the university and the city of East Lansing are inseparably linked."

Activities during the two-day celebration included a parade down Abbott Street with the essential ingredients of balloons, bagpipe players, antique cars and the East Lansing High School marching band, and as well as the 19th annual East Lansing Art Fair, which included artists' displays, live entertainment and general people-watching.

U.S. Rep. Jim Dunn summarized the celebration when he said, "there is reason for everyone here to be optimistic about East Lansing and the next 75 years."

Oil? Who Needs it? Option For The Sun

A common practice among student tenants was trying to fight the high cost of utility bills. But for East Lansing renters there was an alternative. A visitor to the Urban Options Energy House at 135 Linden St. read a sign in the lobby which said, "This house is a demonstration of energy saving techniques and the use of solar energy." The remodeled conservation house with its two-story greenhouse was an example of the many possible ways to store and reuse solar energy. It was the base for many programs to educate the community on cutting utility costs.

The energy house offered a new program in 1981 called the Renter's Weatherization Program. The target group for the program was renters in East Lansing who pay their own utility bills.

Charlie Opcar, secretary to the board of directors for Urban Options, said the Weatherization Program was one of many options the house offered to renters. Thursday evening forums on current energy issues and Saturday workshops on building and devising energy savers were also helpful additives for residents.

"The valuable choice for students is the Weatherization Program," Ipcar said, "because it is aimed at tenants living in houses and paying their heating bills."

The energy house provided $100 worth of material for insulation work on a tenant's house. Members could actually do the work for tenants to help insulate and conserve energy in areas of water heating, caulking or stripping, and interior storm windows.

There were three MSU work-study students being trained to work for the Weatherization Program. Robin Burkhardt, Steve Nugent and Tadd Stuart completed a training program on building techniques coordinated by Maureen Hart.

"When the program's services were offered in September, the response was overwhelming and we reached our quota in a few days," Ipcar said.

Restraints to the program were the cost of materials and the amount of hours the students could work. Work schedules consisted of at least two hours a week. But construction on a house could move rapidly when the tenants help do the work.

The program experienced some changes in its organization in 1981. In the past, a Renter's Self-Help Program was available to East Lansing student tenants. If accepted, students had to get permission from their landlords, buy materials, and install them. Ipcar said the procedure required numerous steps and many students were unable to take part in it.

However, in 1981 funding for the program was provided through a contract with East Lansing under the Community Development Block Grant Program. Ipcar said because the program's quota was reached quickly this year, they hoped this response would serve as a basis for getting more money next year.

The Urban Options Energy House was a membership organization run by a board of directors consisting of local architects, builders, planners, teachers and students. Coordinated by full-time staff members and community volunteers, Urban Options was making energy conservation readily available to East Lansing renters.

Fire Guts Waters Edge

The blaze broke out shortly after 3:30 a.m. on April 30, lasted for six hours, and left over 120 Waters Edge residents homeless.

As the fire spread through the second floor, a number of MSU students alerted the rest of the residents of the blaze, and, as a result, there were only three injuries.

Gary Beyer, a former Waters Edge resident said he was relieved that "nothing too serious" resulted from the fire, but that he was left "leery about living in apartments."

Waters Edge was unequipped with fire alarms, smoke detectors and sprinklers. When the building was built in 1965 it was in accordance with standard fire safety code. Brian Romer, a former resident, said that the building should have been updated to meet 1982 standards. He claimed this was "ignorance on the part of the university and the housing system."

The homeless Waters Edge residents were offered openings in the residence halls and other apartment complexes. MSU Off Campus Housing Service also helped students find rooms. The American Red Cross pitched in with donations of food and money, and MSU also contributed to the residents.

The blaze left only the outer shell of the apartment building and caused structural damage estimated between $200,000 and $250,000. Building content damage and the cause of the fire were undetermined.

Astronaut Lousma Sees Rekindling Patriotism

In a return visit to his home state, Marine Colonel Jack Lousma, commander of the third flight of the Columbia space shuttle, called the space shuttle a symbol of rekindling patriotic spirit and also a good investment for the federal government.

Speaking before a capacity crowd of MSU students, staff and faculty in the Engineering Building auditorium, Lousma said the space shuttle gave the country the opportunity to show its colors around the world.

His MSU appearance on May 6 came a little more than one month after his March 22, seven-day mission around the earth — making 129 orbits.

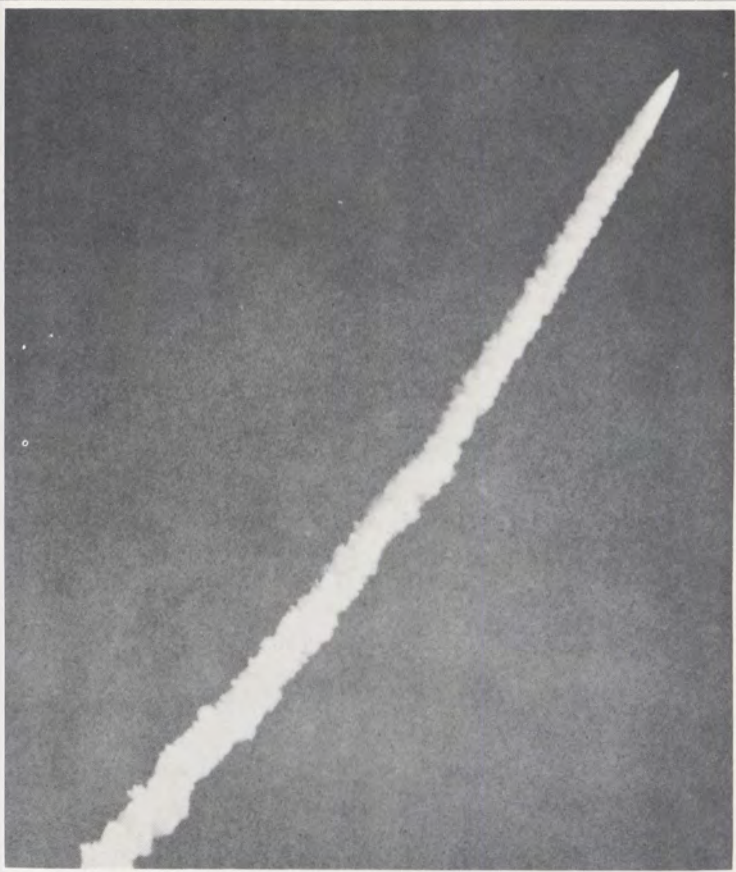

"Many Americans feel the space shuttle is good, but don't know the reason why," he said referring to the shuttle's overall cost. Lousma reported that only a 50th of the federal budget was spent on the space program. The returns for this program would be 10 to 15 times as much as the investment.

He also described the remarkable view of the earth from the space shuttle, travelling at a rate of five miles a second over the ground, orbiting the planet every 90 minutes and seeing 16 sunrises each day. "At one time, we were over the east coast and could see from Maine to Miami," he said.

Lousma reported that future plans for the space shuttle in 1982 included test flights in late June and early November, and hopefully by 1987, 15 to 20 flights a year.

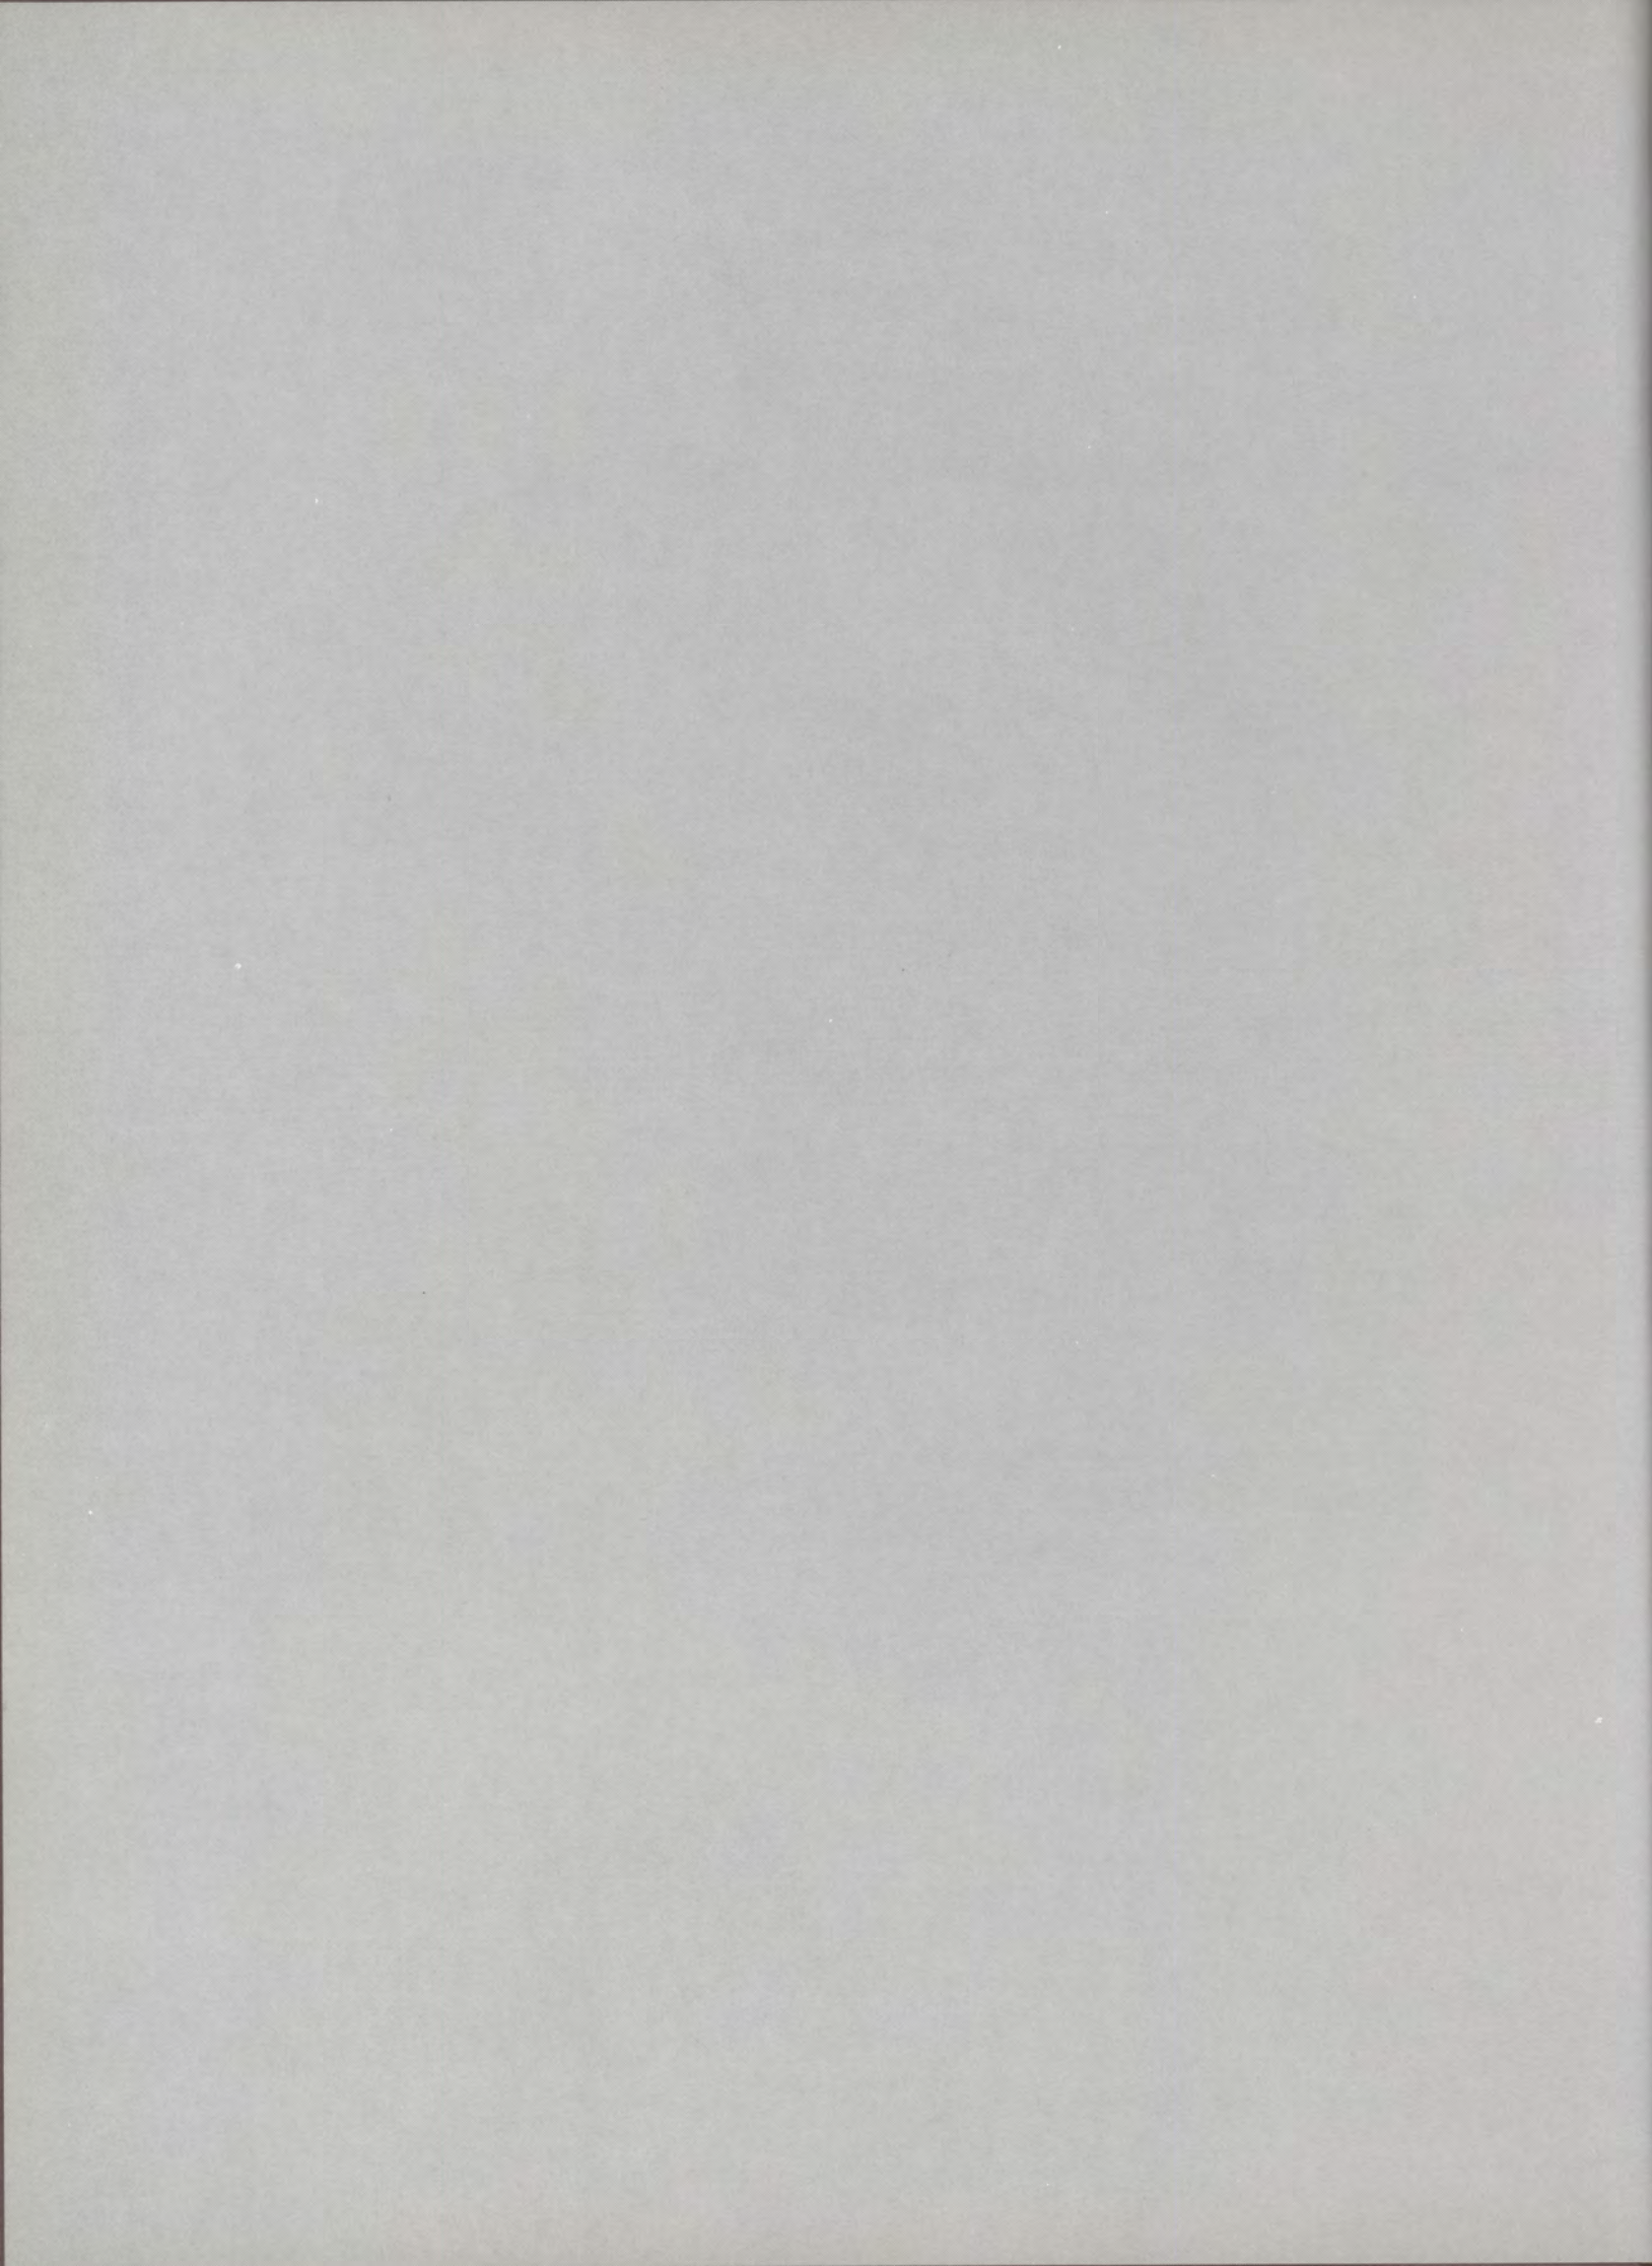

Lousma, a Michigan native, received his bachelor's degree in aeronautical engineering from the University of Michigan in 1959. He served on the astronaut support crews for the Apollo 9, 10 and 13 flights, and was the pilot of Skylab 3 in 1973.

You are graduating at an opportune time and will be facing many challenges and opportunities to contribute to the welfare of mankind. On space ship earth agriculture sustains all life and is sustained by a thin veneer of soil, nourished by the fresh waters of nature, warmed and cooled by the gentle breezes that sweep across the land and energized by the soft rays of the sun. Through countless centuries, nature has developed a delicate balance in its life support system and all of life has prospered. In our quest to exploit and utilize the earth resources and to produce food for an ever-expanding population, man has threatened to upset that delicate balance. As the land resource is continually driven harder in some developed and developing countries, productivity is declining because of reduced organic matter, soil compaction and mismanagement. Further, in many areas the underground water resources are being depleted too rapidly due to excessive water use. These problems demand your attention because the survival of the human race depends upon maintaining a productive soil and water resource base so that future generations yet unborn may live in abundance and prosperity.

Some of you will continue your formal education and in a few years move rapidly to develop new technologies which will both maintain and enhance the productivity of the soil. Others of you will become engaged in production agriculture or in a career in some area of Natural Resources. Hopefully, all of you will continue to be concerned about the pollution of our soil and water resources and letting our environment continue to deteriorate because of man's activities. Collective decisions of society must be made by an informed citizenry and not by a few do-gooders acting on emotions and devoid of the necessary knowledge to make intelligent decisions. Each of you has the background and the responsibility to become involved because these are critically important decisions that must be made. Remember space ship earth, floating endlessly in the dark sea of cosmic space, was the home of our forefathers, is our home and it will be the home of generations yet unborn. Good luck and Godspeed.

Sincerely,

To the Graduating Class of the College of Arts and Letters — 1982:

Liberal education is one of the greatest creations of human civilization. By combining knowledge of the past with the analytical tools of the present, you, as graduates in the liberal arts, are now prepared to meet the needs of the future as men and women of insight and vision.

The scholars, the teachers, and the artists who comprise the faculty of the College of Arts and Letters congratulate you on your achievements. We have tried to share with you the heights of human accomplishment. But we are aware that your experiences here are only a beginning to a lifetime of learning before you. The more wisdom you acquire beyond what we may have been able to impart, the greater our success — and yours — will be.

As you leave Michigan State University, you should remain proud of your degree, for a liberal education in the arts and humanities provides more than preparation for a career. It can serve as the basis for a rewarding, challenging, and productive life — a life of personal happiness, professional success, and significant contribution to society. The faculty and students who have shared with you the past few years in this College wish you well.

Yours truly,

Alan M. Hollingsworth

Dear Graduate:

It is with great pleasure that I take the time each year to award degrees to those who the faculty of the College of Business and Graduate School of Business Administration have recommended for graduation.

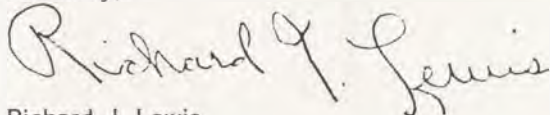

It is not an easy task that you have accomplished. That you have completed this task is a reflection on your desire to be well prepared for the career in your future. It is also a reflection on our desire that a degree from an MSU business program retain its status as a symbol of professionalism.

If I would have you remember one thing about your studies here it would be this:

Once you have graduated, you become a Spartan for the remainder of your life. Before graduation you could have transferred to another college or University or chosen some other career path. Now, however, we, the faculty of the College of Business, can never deny you. In this regard, it is my earnest hope that the College of Business at Michigan State University will always maintain a level of quality that will make you continually proud of your Alma Mater so that you will never deny us.

With these thoughts, please accept my best wishes for a fruitful career and happy life in the years that lie ahead.

Sincerely,

Richard J. Lewis
Dean

To the 1982 Graduating Class:

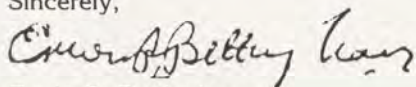

Congratulations!! You are about to graduate from the College of Communication Arts and Sciences. In doing so, you will join over 10,000 people who have graduated from this College in the 27 years since the College was formed. When the College was founded in 1955, it was unique among institutions of higher education in the United States. Those first graduates had to feel a little like pioneers. Communication was a new term in universities. Their programs were experimental in many ways. They couldn't even really be sure there were going to be jobs in their field when they did complete their degrees.

The class of 1982 isn't going to feel alone. There are over 6,000 graduates from our five departments who are working in Michigan alone. Many different universities and colleges in the United States have formed colleges similar to ours. The field of Communication Arts and Sciences is the fastest growing academic area at Michigan State. The graduating seniors sitting around you in their caps and gowns are going to be doing some very fascinating things in the years ahead. Some of you will be working in hospitals with the hearing impaired, or trying to help children with speech defects improve their ability to communicate. Others will be in law school or working for the Federal Communications Commission. The rapidly growing cable industry will become the home for many of you, while others are going to be reporting the news for newspapers and television stations all over America. Industries have learned that our graduates bring special skills to the management process, and now actively recruit our seniors.

There is a common thread that unites each of you, whether you majored in Audiology and Speech Sciences, Advertising, Communication, Journalism or Telecommunication. The common focus of this College is human communication — that marvelous ability that enables us to create literature, preserve our posterity and plan our future.

The faculty and staff of the College of Communication Arts and Sciences wishes you well in the years ahead. It will be an exciting time to enter the field of communication, and we hope to hear from each of you as you encounter new opportunities and new problems in your chosen fields. The national data shows that a full 50 percent of you will eventually seek more education, whether in an advanced degree program, or in short courses, or just in an attempt to keep up with the world. We hope to help you in the future as we have tried to help you in your time at Michigan State University.

Sincerely,

Erwin P. Bettinghaus
Dean

To the 1982 Graduating Class:

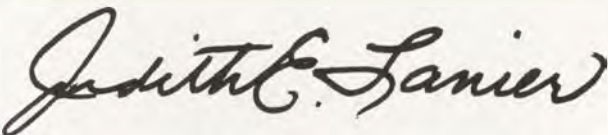

Congratulations on the successful completion of your initial studies in teacher education. As you leave Michigan State University you can take pride in having obtained your bachelor's degree at one of the most outstanding schools in the nation for preparing educators — one whose credential is accepted throughout the country.

We hope you will reflect positively on your academic preparation for teaching, whether it was elementary, secondary, early childhood, special, or health and physical education. We commend you for your eagerness to meet the challenges that teaching provides and hope you are stimulated by a career that involves continuous learning, rigorous use of your intelligence, and critical decision-making. Intelligent choices about what should be taught and how it can best be taught to various learners in an increasingly complex society are needed more than ever before, as are teachers who care deeply about the success and well being of their students. As you know, teaching offers many rewards that come from helping others.

We look forward to learning of the contributions you make to society in general, as well as to individual learners. Your future interactions with students, parents, administrators and colleagues will be challenging, and you will learn from them as they will learn from you. Some of you will find teaching sufficiently rewarding to remain in it for a lifetime, though others will move into school administration, counseling or specialized fields that address particular learning difficulties. Still others will move into educational research, educational policy making, college teaching, and/or careers in state and national government, professional education associations, research and development centers, or business and industry. Whatever career path you choose, we are confident that you will continue your commitment to enhancing the education of America's youth and adults.

We applaud your success and take pleasure in recommending you to school districts across the nation, for we are confident you will represent yourself, the College of Education, and Michigan State University in a most professional manner. We wish you the best for your continued personal and professional growth. We look forward to continuing a relationship with you as active alumni and/or graduate students in MSU's College of Education.

Sincerely,

Judith E. Lanier
Dean

To the Engineering Graduates of 1982:

The College of Engineering of Michigan State University has prepared you well to enter the profession of engineering. We have also prepared you well to enter into a technological race which has no real finish line. We have given to each of you a specific body of knowledge and we have insisted that you acquire a set of skills which will let you use this body of knowledge. We have given you a way of thinking; a way of addressing and solving problems which will provide the basis for your continuing technological growth. We have not yet made you into true engineering professionals. This will come with experience and with time as you make the technological, moral, and ethical decisions that let you move through your engineering careers.

We are very proud of your academic accomplishments and we have every reason to believe that this excellence will continue. Your knowledge and skills will certainly be tested in an environment quite different from the classroom and the instructional laboratory but this you will take in stride.

We are sincerely interested in following you as your careers develop and we hope that you will stay in touch with us.

Sincerely,

L. W. Von Tersch
Dean

College Of Human Ecology

Dean Lois A. Lund

Dear Human Ecology Graduate:

Years ago, when I was finishing work for my bachelor's degree and was preparing for graduation, I received from a favorite aunt a bouquet of roses with the message: "These are the days of your least responsibility. Cherish them." The roses and the message arrived on a day with two finals, an afternoon reception at President Morrill's home, and an honorary society dinner at seven. I remember reading my aunt's note and then setting it down with the thought . . . "How little she knows!"

But as I moved away from that busy week into active professional life, I began to realize that aunts sometimes know more than we give them credit for. Busy as those days were, they were days of lesser responsibility. The job of becoming a full professional with functional knowledge, skills, insights and integrity is an awesome task.

This is the task each of you faces upon graduation with a degree in Human Ecology. Whether your professional goal is to be a dietitian, an interior designer, a child development specialist, a Cooperative Extension home economist . . . whether your goal is to continue your studies toward a Master's or Doctor's degree . . . whether you enter work in business, government, education, or private enterprise . . . you will be facing some of the most difficult yet exciting days of your life. Establishing yourself as a productive and respected member of your profession is worth working toward.

I'd like to paraphrase the closing comments I share with students in one of our courses: "When you leave MSU with your degree in Human Ecology, the College asks only four things of you: 1) that you are ready for entry into the specialization of your choice, 2) that your employer is well satisfied with your performance, 3) that the people and families you serve benefit from your services, and 4) that you contribute to your family, community and nation as an educated person and scholar. When this happens we know we've been successful and are proud to recognize you as an alumnus of Human Ecology.

Congratulations! Good luck! Keep in contact!

Sincerely,

Lois A. Lund
Dean

To the 1982 Graduating Class:

Commencements are aptly titled, for they mark the beginning of new endeavors. Before you proceed onto your new path, I would encourage you to pause for a moment and reflect upon your experiences at Michigan State. Collect some images which you can carry with you beyond the confines of the campus. Take the time to breathe the heady scent of the lilacs and glimpse the delicate beauty of the redbuds. Spend some quiet moments with friends, sharing the triumphs of the past four years, your aspirations, and even your fears.

With the persistent pressure of your undergraduate days almost behind you, consider how you, as an individual, have changed since you entered James Madison College. You have shared the challenges and the delights of a liberal education; in the process, you have become a more thoughtful and deliberate person. You have learned to question your own assumptions as well as those of others. Remember how painful it was to discover that, for many questions, there was no single correct answer? In addition to becoming facile in dealing with empirical data, you have become sensitive to the normative issues which are significant in policy formulation. Have these experiences also bolstered the power of your convictions; have they strengthened your willingness to stand firmly behind your beliefs and to act upon them?

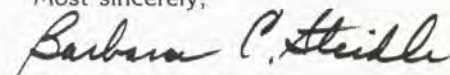

If you have reaped these benefits from your education, you are indeed ready to cross the threshold toward the next milestone, whether it be a graduate or professional degree or a career in business or government. Unlike students in the recent past, however, you undertake these new challenges in the midst of what appears to be a crisis of confidence. We face an era of declining resources, increasing threats to our personal security, predictions of a declining standard of living, and a sense that recent social progress is being eroded. There is a loss of confidence in the policies of the past and a loss of faith in our institutions. It does not appear to be an auspicious time for embarking on new ventures.

But history provides a comforting perspective. In 1787, as John Quincy Adams bemoaned the "critical period" of the new Republic, a South Carolinian viewing the same society observed: "If we are undone, we are the most splendidly ruined of any nation in the universe." A crisis of confidence represents more than imminent failure; it represents the prior existence of a set of expectations and promises. It represents a continuing demand for fulfillment. For you, as a graduate of Madison College, it presents a special challenge to service. You have the expertise and you have the capacity for leadership. Will you also have the vision to promote new responses?

"Some men see things as they are and say, why. I dream things that never were, and say, why not."

I congratulate you on your graduation and welcome you to a new relationship — as alumni — with Madison College. The best wishes of the faculty and staff are with you.

Most sincerely,

Barbara C. Steidle
Dean

Brian R. Bell

College Of Natural Science

Dean Richard U. Byerrum

To the 1982 Graduating Class:

As society has come to rely more and more on the developments of modern technology, the impact on society of using that technology has become greater and more complex. The average citizen is having a real problem in assessing the importance of these technological advances on the well being of society. One need only look at the question of using nuclear fission for energy production. The buildup and disposal of radioactive waste is certainly a serious problem, but sometimes energy production from nuclear processes gets equated with nuclear warfare and this confusion is puzzling to the public. In addition, there has been considerable debate over the past decade about the Navy placing a system in Michigan for transmitting low frequency radio waves for communication with submerged submarines. The public has been and is confused about the facts concerning the environmental impact of such a system and the possible damage to living organisms of low frequency radiation. Those of you who have been educated in science and mathematics are in the best position in our society to provide the facts about technological advances and to interpret the significance of these facts to the public. Such activities should be considered a future obligation of citizens educated in science and mathematics to help void uninformed, emotional discussions which have surrounded the use of some technological advances. Your education has also prepared you to assist society through your participation in research, teaching, business or industry. I hope that each of you can use your education in some meaningful way to improve living conditions for all people in the future.

Sincerely,

R. U. Byerrum

College Of Nursing
Dean Gladys A. Courtney

Dear College of Nursing Graduates:

Congratulations upon successful completion of requirements for graduation. Your acquired knowledge should assist you in living a richer life. You should have been assisted in understanding more about yourself, those for whom you will be rendering service, family, friends, and the world. Hopefully, you will have learned how to learn. There should be a growing awareness that there is much yet to be learned. Perhaps the education you have received has only served to make you thirst for more knowledge and understanding. If this is true, then all of those who have served as your teachers should join you in celebration of this point in your development.

Society needs you! There is a world of unsolved problems which you should help solve. The health care system has a particular set of problems for which you should be uniquely prepared to address. Some of the problems relate to: the structure of our delivery system, availability of health care, cost containment, intra and interprofessional relationships, hindrances to optimum health, disease prevention, care of individuals with disease, and individual, family, and community relationships. As worldwide communication and travel have been enhanced, nurses have become more aware and involved internationally. It is perhaps surprising to learn that most of the health care issues we address in this country are similar to those in other countries. Knowledge is being shared internationally through seminars, workshops, consultation, teaching appointments, international publications, and relocation of practicing nurses.

You surely have already discovered there is also a lifetime of challenges for you in the state of Michigan. Many health care needs are not being met. Individuals and groups representing various developmental stages have health problems associated with the declining economy, the environment, society, and specific diseases. You are wanted here in Michigan to help meet these needs.

Michigan State University and the College of Nursing urge you to become an active alumnus. We will not be able to continue to prepare nurses without such support. Our alumni provide a real source of support through their contacts with clients and other publics including legislators and community and professional organizations. Financial assistance is also provided by alumni.

All of us in the College of Nursing invite you to keep in contact and let us know if we can be of service to you. Perhaps we can help you with your continuing education needs or even further work toward an advanced degree. We wish you continued success and happiness!

Sincerely,

Gladys A. Courtney

College Of Social Science

Dean Gwen Andrew

Dear Graduate:

This is my opportunity to congratulate all of you who are graduating with a major which is included in the College of Social Science. The social science connection does mean something special. It means you have not only the basic knowledge provided by your major, but also a particular set of talents which you share with all majors in the College. You know how to synthesize facts into useful knowledge; how to generalize meaningfully; and how to soundly analyze a problem without permitting prejudices to distort your conclusions. Those talents are characteristic of all the social sciences and related professions; they unite the faculty and you; they will serve you in the future as resources for adding to your education long after you have completed your formal college experience.

You are ready to begin your career in the areas for which your major particularly prepared you — government, public service, and industry. Social science is hard technology science, but it is also humanitarian science. With the proliferation of knowledge of human behavior in its various manifestations made possible by the computer and other technologies, this is a particularly exciting time to embark upon your professional life. New and challenging positions for social science graduates combine scientific knowledge about people and society with technical training. There will be increasing need for people with your background in a wide variety of roles. Some of you will go on to graduate school or to professional study. There, too, the diversity of social science specialties and new career avenues hold possibilities of exciting futures for you.

We wish you well in your career. We especially hope you will stay in contact with us in future years and become active in your alumni group. As you recognize the impact your education has had on you and the privileges and responsibilities that are part of it, we hope you will recall Michigan State University with respect and honor and, yes, even with a contribution for the support of continuing generations of students.

Sincerely,

Gwen Andrew
Dean
