More Political Unrest In South Asia

SAIGON, -Cambodia and South Viet Nam appeared on the brink of diplomatic rupture Sunday as Cambodia officially disclaimed all responsibility for a raid on a Vietnamese border village in which 54 were killed.

Viet Nam has formally charged Cambodia with responsibility for the April 20 raid, claiming it was "premeditated" and led by Cambodian government guards. The village, Vinh Lac, is less than a mile from the Cambodian border, 120 miles west of Saigon.

WASHINGTON, (P) - President Kennedy and British Prime Minister Macmillan held the door ajar Sunday for a summit meeting with Soviet Premier Khrushchev but blamed Russia for failure to agree on a nuclear test

Their agreed positions were made clear in a communique which climaxed a weekend of talks. A social White House luncheon concluded the fifth session between the two leaders, then Macmillan flew on to Canada.

Informed sources said that the European Common Market occupied more time in the discussions than any other issue. But no final decisions were reached as the leaders exchanged ideas on how to deal with this growing economic force which Macmillan wants to join and with which Kennedy wants to cooperate closely.

The communique declared also that Kennedy and Macmillan "reaffirmed their willingness to consider meetings of heads of government whenever there is an indication that such meetings would serve the interests of peace the Delta College Collegiate, Bay and understanding."

Plan Needs Okay From Congress

Could Implement By 1963

ROTC at Michigan State would probably switch to a shortened two-year program by the 1963-64 academic year, if an Army recommendation to the Department of Defense is approved, said Col. James Skells, head of the military science department. "The college population is expanding so rapidly that there are too many people to take into the program Skells said. Rather than spend money for four years, it is more practical to spend it on a two-year program.' Skells emphasized that the Army recommendation is still in the planning stage.

"This plan is going to take much more time to get into operation than most people realize. A possibility is that it will be ready by the '63-'64 school year. But the probabil ty is that, if it is passed at all, it will be ready by fall of '64."

The Army proposal, would mean drastic changes in the ROTC academic curriculum and would also provide for increased

College Education: More Than Memorization

Guest Editorial from the Kansas State Collegian.

Many scholars and writers have criticized the American educational system for not making full use of its potentialities. For one reason or another they feel that the average college graduate of today is possibly a little half-baked in his reasoning and at best holds only a few foggy notions about what life is all about.

They may be right.

Writing for the October 1961 "Harpers," Christopher Jencks, associate editor of "The New Republic," says, "The failure of college students to gain a sense of the possibilities of life -- to go beyond the hackneyed alternatives presented by our everyday culture -- is never precisely recorded . . . "

While Jencks criticizes the educational system itself, its lack of originality and failure to experiment, he fails to clearly point out that much of that which is learned in a college or university must be sought after by the student.

On the K-State campus a student, may qualify for graduation without once really using his analytic reasoning facilities. He doesn't really need to think. It is assumed that he will, but if he doesn't, no one will object -- or

A university offers as much out of the classroom as it does in

A university student meets people -- small people, big people, generous people, selfish people. He meets the intellect and the intellectual boor. He meets sick people, he meets wholesome people. All of those whom he meets have knowledge and experience to offer a listener. Some have more than others.

But the student is not required to meet people -- he is not required to learn from them. Moreover he is not required to associate classroom knowledge with that learned out of the classroom.

For some, then, a college experience can be a long list of memorized words, taken from many books and meaning little by themselves. Everything has been taken for granted. Nothing has been left to chance, question or debate.

A college education can be much or little -- depending on the student. It may not show on the records, but we see it in the conversation and actions of students. Of some we say, "He has listened and weighed and developed his own ideas."

Of others we merely warn, "Don't give him anything to do that requires much thought."

Education is the responsibility of the student. He can gain knowledge without thinking, but without thinking he can't become edu-

Extra-curricular Activities: No Dice With AT&T

10,000 executives of American Telephone and Telegraph -- as reported in the National Observer -- revealed some interesting information and reached some significant conclusions.

The findings convinced the country's largest corporation that a student's standing in his graduating class is the most important indicator of success with

Using salary as the standard of success, the company ranked each executive's salaries in comparison with salaries of executives employed for the same length of time. Then each man's comparative success was checked against what he achieved as a college student in grades and activities.

"Extra-curricular activities, long the refuge of those who claimed well-roundedness was more valuable in business than scholarship, proved much less accurate a forecaster of company success," reported the National Observer.

Outside activities were a useful gauge only for the few outstanding students holding high positions in important campus organizations.

"A busy round of social acti-

A study recently undertaken of vities did not forecast a distinguished business career," the Labor. newspaper article said.

> AT&T's recruitment of 3,000 college seniors yearly has been aimed at those in the upper half of their graduating class. By covering 10,000 company executives, the study surely must reveal a meaningful pattern. It has emphasized that grades are the most important indicator of success. And the business is recruiting accordingly. Apparently in most cases, participation in extra-curricular activities tended to lower grade point averages. Moreover, well-roundedness failed to balance out the lower

> Which all means that if you are an ambitious student aspiring to become chairman of the board of AT&T or a high company executive, the time has come to quit your fraternity, resign from student government and/or retire from the State News. By doing so and devoting more time and energy to the books, the law of probability guarantees that you have a better chance of being a company success than if you spend too much time and energy becoming well-rounded by attending weekend parties, initiating AUSG legislation or writing editorials.

MSU's Labor and Industrial Relations Center is to be highly commended for its contribution toward the public enlightenment with its presentation,"A Night of Absurdities and Reaction with the Illogical James Mitchell".

Mitchell's appearance certainly impressed upon the audience the need for a sweeping away of the attitudes and philosophy which he espoused last Thursday night (Apr. 20) in Kellogg Center, and during his tenure as the Eisenhower Secretary of

Mr. Mitchell was "chuck full" of the usual platitudes, empty To the Editor: as they were, with regard to provement of labor's economic status; but he went no futher (eg. he provided no logical, effective means by which the status of labor and employ-

He warned against too-much reliance upon the Federal Government as a means by which to remedy our chronic unemployment, under-employment, etc., saying that these problems must be fought at the local and state level of government. Sounds good --- doesn't it? But then, Mr. Mitchell went on to demonstrate that his proposition was an untenable one, pointing to his home state of New Jersey as an example of state inability to cope with such problems.

At this point Mr. Mitchell became entangled in his own politico-economic dilemma (ie. Federal Government hands-off, state and local government inability to cope with problems of such magnitude). For it is ted student of political-economic governments simply do not have the means (financial capacities and capabilities) nor the administrative capabilities and pro- Monkman Case grams to improve the employment and economic posture of

He demonstrates, although seemingly oblivious to the fact, the incapability and ineffectiveness on the part of local government to tackle such problems. In this manner, Mr. Mitchell fully confirms our belief in the intelligent voting behavior which took place in his home state last fall, he was overwhelmingly defeated in the contested Governorship of New Jersey.

The real issue upon which Mitchell lost his footing, and what seems to be all rational and logical reasoning, was his plea aimed at public responsibility by both labor and management. He then went on to slap down the Kennedy Administration (the elected custodian of public interest) for its role in the recent, concerned steel price increase.

Now, I ask you ---- was this a demonstration on management's part with regard to national and public interest? I think

To the Editor

During this year at MSU there has been an increased interest in and an awareness of the academic standards of our University. It is generally conceeded that this standard is a poor one in comparison with other large Universities. Both the Administration and AUSG have recognized this and have proposed various programs for improvement: The Great Issues course, attracting 'name' faculty, etc. I think however, that the real problems of academics here will not be easily solved by these somewhat superficial means.

Our academic atmosphere is sick. Students are able to pass certain courses in the basic college with a minimum of effort, spewing back what these courses call for, then forgetting the names and ideas as soon as possible Wrong Emphasis because they are taught independently of the general conceptual To the Editor: schemes on which they fit.

school, the University of Michigan, is required for two years rather than for one or not at all as is done here.

A liberal step-scale insures that the poor student will be kept here rather than being thrown out as he would be in schools of high academic standings. Poor students often enhance an athletic atmosphere, but manage to drag the standards of each and every course taught down a few pegs, making it im-possible for a student interested in the material to gain maximum benefit from his courses.

Further, we see only a year English required, that being ATL, which is thought by most students as a course thought up by a madman, the discussions in class often having nothing to do with what is expected on the lavish multiple choice final. Whatever happened to essay finals in a course which proposes to teach writing? I think enough has been said to indicate that a high academic rating for this University shall be established only if the present lackidasical standards are removed and students are made to work at being students rather than objects of ' experiments in ed-

The critique of the St. Matthew Foreign language at our sister Passion performance appearing in a recent edition of the State Journal ended on a somewhat discordant note. Although it began as a critical appraisal of the performance, it soon developed into an audio engineer's estimate of the worth of the Auditorium as a concert hall.

I submit that Edwin Wintermute missed the entire spirit of the performance. His undue emphasis upon the setting for the performance is analogous to complaining about the taste of a meal because it was served on mismatched china. I for one was deeply moved by the performance which was presented as MSU's Good Friday observance, and which, as such, should be approached as one approaches a worship service. B.W's comment that the libretto was "stilted and pietistic and real" typifies the tone of the review. Art, it has been said, is in the eyes of the viewer; where lies the unreality of the message of Friday night's performance?

No mention was made of the standing silent tribute given by the audience (taken by a few benighted souls as a signal to begin leaving). To Gomer L. Jones and the personnel of the choirs, orchestras and to the soloists, I say bravo! well done.

larevton delivers the flavor

"Tareyton's Dual Filter in duas partes divisa est!"

says veteran coach Romulus (Uncle) Remus. "We have a saying over at the Coliseum - Tareyton separates the gladiators from the gladioli'. It's a real magnus smoke. Take it from me, Tareyton delivers de gustibus - and the Dual Filter
