bestsellers and a determined foe of segregation, is caught inseveral moods as he addresses the Cursillo Conference which met last week in Brody Hall.

Golden Slams Shame In Threat Of Backlash

Best-selling author Harry Golden told an audience of more than 1,000 here Thursday that the threat of a "white backlash" in the November presidential election is a national shame.

Addressing the 6th annual Roman Catholic Cursillo Conference in Brody Hall, Golden said that resistance to the civil rights movement is incompatible with America's position as the leader of the free world.

"We hear of the 'white backlash' and we are told we must fear it," Golden said. "We hear all." this at the very moment we also hear that America is the leader of the free world."

Golden emphasized that an America which would deny Negroes their "lawful and moral rights' cannot in the same breath call itself the leader of free nations.

Golden publishes The Carolina Israelite, an outspoken anti-Photos by Ken Roberts segregationist newspaper. He is the author of two best-selling books, "Only In America" and "For 2¢ Plain." His newest book, "Mr. Kennedy and the Negroes," deals with the late President's influence on the civil rights

Of Time And The River

The pollution problem which is causing the decline of the Red Cedar River is not about to be solved quickly or easily. Before any clean-up can be expected, more interest and sympathy for bollution *problems must be aroused, and all parties involved in the question must learn to coordinate their efforts and energies to effect a program of river improvement.

Communities upstream from MSU are showing some concern for pollution, and East Lansing and the University are currently working on their major problem, the elimination of sewage overflow into the river. But there is little real coordination of efforts, no over-all plan for river improvement.

The one body that is in a position to call for immediate action on the river is the state Water Resources Commission, which is empowered to study water problems, and, through court action if necessary, to bring about solu-

Officials of the commission, however, point out the need for exact data regarding a problem before they can begin action. They are hampered by lack of funds and facilities and by the state law which defines pollution and the commission's powers.

The University, even though it does not come under any provisions empowering the resources commission, is unquestionably the largest agency along the river and is in a position to initiate ariver clean-up.

The solution is to arouse concern among officials of the University and other agencies along the river for the river, to encourage meetings and coordinated research and planning to clean up the river. The need for greater cooperative effort becomes obvious in view of the difficulties of tracing the current pollution of the river, or of finding the cause of the occasional fish kills or extreme discolorations of the river. Both within and among the agencies along the river more coordination of effort is necessary.

One solution within the University that would help out would be the creation of a single office for river improvement, similar to the University's radiation office or pest control office. This would help eliminate the problem found during last spring's fish kill-that of the "right hand" of the administration and non-academic departments not knowing what the "left hand" of the academic departments and researchers was

The greatest need is for someone in a position to act to take the lead and face candidly the pollution of the river. The pleasant wish that pollution will go away if we pretend it isn't there will not clean up the river, and will not avoid the potential health problem

It may be embarrassing at first for the University to face the fact that in spite of its scientific and agricultural leadership in many the wake of the Republican Nafields it has allowed itself to fall behind in this very obvious area. ## Proposals Question Power Split In U.S.

State News Staff Writer

Two proposals under consideration by Congress to limit the power of the Supreme Court over apportionment of state legislatures raise some serious questions about the definition of legislative, executive and judicial power in the U.S. Constitution.

The Senate proposal, sponsored by Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen, would have federal courts direct delays of any state legislative reapportionment orders until Jan. 1, 1966. The amendment is tacked as a rider onto President Johnson's $3.3 billion foreign

In the House, congressmen are considering a constitutional amendment which would prohibit the Supreme Court from dealing with any suits involving apportionment of state legislatures.

Aside from the advisability of adopting either proposal, it has become apparent that something more than one amendment is needed to define the powers of the federal judiciary.

Regardless of whether one approves of the Supreme Court's decisions of the past decade, it is undeniable that the "Warren Court" has moved into numerous areas which were previously considered the prerogative of the legislative branch of the government. ## WMSB To Show Poetry

Four acclaimed poets, Ogden Nash, John Crowe Ransom, Stephen Spender, and Richard Wilber read and discuss their poetry during the provocative series "Of Poets and Poetry," to be seen again on WMSB, beginning Sunday at 12:00 and Frday, September 4th, at 12:30.

The series of eight half-hour programs is designed to heighten an adult audience's appreciation of poetry by introducing excellent poetry and the poets who created it. With Martin Levin, an editor for The Saturday Review, Poet Nash discusses humor and the apprehensions beginning writers suffer. John Crowe Ransom talks about the merits of archaic and obscure poetry with Galway Kinnell, former N.Y.U. professor who taught at the University of Teheran in Iran.

Stephen Spender discusses the poet's task and his unusual use of military and industrial materials with Louis Simpson, a poet and teacher. Richard Wilber. who won the Pulitzer Prize in 1957, talks about the order, clarity, and tonality of his own work with Barry Ulanov, a professor of English at Barnard College.

Ogden Nash's first published poems appeared in 1931. His work appears in The New Yorker and other magazines. He is also cowriter of the book from which the musical comedy, "One Touch of Yemp," was taken. Poet John. Crowe Ransom has been a professor of English at Vanderbilt University, Kenyon College, and the University of Indiana.

The three scientists --Yasuyuki Yamada, S. H. Wittwer and M. J. Bukovac -- reported here Monday that urea, a synthetic nutrient high in nitrogen, has almost unmatched ability to penetrate the membranes that cover plant leaves.

This finding, they noted, may mean that the presence of urea in fertilizers will increase the effectiveness of foliar (leaf) application of fertilizers and other materials applied as sprays.

The MSU researchers reported their study to the American Society of Plant Physiologists in session during the annual meeting of the American Institute of Biological Sciences at the University of Colorado.

Their research, supported by the Atomic Energy Commission, involves the use of radioactive materials to trace the movement of nutrients in plants.

For their study, they have been chemically "dismantling" the leaves of tomatoes, onions and other plants to discover how they absorb and retain substances.

representation at the convention would probably entangle our legislators in a dilemma which would extend over several years. Imagine it! Some of the Southern states would probably want the same percentage of representation which they had in 1789!

Even if a workable formula could be devised to convene a Constitutional Convention, it would almost certainly result in a stalemate. Some of our lawmakers would undoubtedly want to write into the Constitution all the conservative provisions which the Founding Fathers left out of that remarkable document.

In spite of the fact that a second Constitutional Convention is probably an unworkable idea, Americans have a right to expect that their legislators will carefully consider any amendments dealing with governments' power.

These matters are too far-reaching to be tacked onto the end of a session of Congress when everyone is already sniffing next fall's
