Academic Council OKs all-'U' selection group

By MARILYN PATTERSON State News Staff Writer

Establishment of an all-University committee for "search and selection" of President John A. Hannah's successor was approved Tuesday when the Academic Council went into its first round of meetings on selection procedures.

Establishment of such a committee was the primary recommendation of the Ad Hoc Faculty Committee on Procedures for Selecting a New President. The ad hoc committee, chaired by John F. A. Taylor, professor of philosophy, made its preliminary report to the council Tuesday.

Composition of the "search and selection" committee and methods for nominating faculty members to the committee were the topics under immediate discus-

According to the recommendation of the Taylor committee, the chairman of the Steering Committee of the Faculty, four faculty members, an administrator at or above the level of dean, one Oakland University faculty member, the ASMSU Board chairman, the president of the Council of Graduate Students (COGS) and one representative of the Alumni will be members of the search and selection commit-

Completing the 12-man committee will be one representative of black students and one black faculty member.

The addition of the black representatives was suggested by the Board of Trustees when it heard the report at its meeting Friday.

The Taylor committee had originally proposed that the chairman of the Board of Trustees be included in the search and selection committee, however, Don Stevens, board chairman, declined.

Because the search and selection committee will report to the trustees, Stevens thought it would be inappropriate that he serve on a committee which was to report to him. The trustees requested that the trustees' representation on the committee be replaced by black student and faculty representation.

A motion made by Gerald J. Massey, professor of philosophy and approved by the council, made these black representatives special appointees to the committee.

Massey said while provision for black voice in the selection of a president was important now, it might be inappropriate

"It's important to have black students and faculty on the committee for reasons that I hope will not long pertain," he said. "It's a bad precedent to have black faculty.

and students or any other identifiable group accorded specific status.'

"In the future the same sort of occasion which prompts us to ask blacks to participate will be run into with another group," Massey said.

The Massey amendment stated that "such additional representatives, not to exceed two, could be appointed by the Academic Senate and the Board of Trustees." In this instance the Academic Council will recommend to the Senate that a (Please turn to page 11)

Amendment approved on faculty nominations

By LINDA GORTMAKER

The Academic Council accepted Tuesday an amendment to the preliminary report on selecting a president that "saved" part of one proposal formulated by MSU's chapter of the American Assn. of University Professors (AA UP).

Walter, Adams, professor of economics, proposed the amendment calling for nominations of faculty members to a "search and selection" committee by any member of the elected faculty coun-eight nominees to be chosen by the Committee on Committees, an all-university committee of elected faculty that staffs standing faculty committees.

Adams presented his amendment after the council defeated a proposal made by Albert Rabin, AAUP president, asking that faculty members of the search committee be chosen by "open nominations by the entire voting faculty of MSU.

The council also defeated another of Rabin's AAUP proposals that the chairman of the steering committee of the council not be included in the search committee, as stipulated in the preliminary report.

Adams called his proposal that was accepted by the council a "modest a-

This amendment accepted by the council will speed up the process, Adams said.

Blasts rock Israeli cities; reprisal likely

JERUSALEM (AP) - Explosions rocked a market in the Israeli city of Lydda and the British consulate in East Jerusalem Tuesday, probably setting the stage for more reprisals against Arab nations.

Before the bombs went off, Egypt had announced a state of emergency thrughout the country in expectation that Israel would strike in answer to previous Arab terrorist attacks.

A bomb shook the market place in Lydda, 10 miles southeast of Tel Aviv. and officials said a local Arab was wounded. Three Arabs were held for questioning. The market was closed when the blast went off, tearing down electric lines and wrecking a motorcycle. The blast came four days after a. Jerusalem supermarket was wrecked by a bomb that killed two young Israelis. Powerful Israeli air raids on Arab guerrilla camps in Syria followed.

In East Jerusalem, police said an explosive charge was placed on the window sill of a ground floor at the

The explosion ripped out three doors of a storeroom but heavy window shutters apparently shielded a lounge where Joan Bennett, a secretary, was drying her hair. She escaped injury.

"I pull the shutters every evening,"

Miss Bennett told reporters. British Consul John Lewen said the only reason he could think of for the attack was "garbled reports of British arms to Israel." He said he knew nothing of an impending agreement. There have been reports in the Arab press that Britain will sell Israel Centurion tanks. The Centurion greatly contributed to Israel's swift victory in the Police said eight pounds of explosives were placed by someome who climbed over a low wall which surrounds the building.

The consulate had a narrow escape Friday when the bomb went off in the supermarket. Police dismantled a charge that apparently was to explode at about the same hour the time bomb wreckdd the market.

In Cairo, the newspaper Al Ahram reported the state of emergency was declared Monday. It said readiness had been raised "100 per cent as regards the popular and civil defense apparatus, popular organizations, hospitals, fire birgades, etc.

Sirhan seeks plea of guilty

LOS ANGELES (AP)--Sirhan Bishara Sirhan's defense lawyer said Tuesday the young Jordanian immigrant wants to plead guilty to first degree murder in the slaying of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, and take his chances on the gas chamber. But the attorney, Grant B. Cooper, added: "We are not going to let him." Sirhan obviously was anguished over revelations in his own handwriting that he was a Communist supporter and drew up a private timetable for Kennedy's assassination. "He's blown his top, that's all," Cooper told newsmen.

Cooper said that Sirhan evinced a desire to retract his innocent plea during a conference in chambers.

The 24-year-old Jordanian Arab interrupted court proceedings later with an attempt to gain the judge's attention. The trial was adjourned over night at the request of the defense. Earlier, it was revealed that Sirhan wrote in his diary about three weeks before he shot Kennedy that "my determination to eliminate RFK is becom-

the Kangaroo bag

You can't get there from here without a "bad" bag like this. The Kangaroo Bag packs everything from swim flippers to suits. Yet it weighs just 5 lbs., 2 ozs. and travels right under your airplane seat. It's definitely the way to make the scene if the scene's your main concern. And its rugged good looks say you know where you're going. Made of a new material called Skai, it's a dead ringer for a good piece of cowhide, yet it outwears leather by six times. Don't pack out 'til you've packed The Bag, brown or black. And Knapp's is where it's at.

Sounding out students

The Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Procedures for Selecting the Chief Administrative Officers of the University (good grief), or the "Taylor" report, is now public, and at last we can evaluate all of the promises that have been so liberally dished out concerning student representation.

Section 2.2 of the report concerns composition of the committee for selecting the president. It states that the chairman of the ASMSU Board shall be a member of the committee.

But an option is also given that another student "especially chosen for this office by the Student Board' may represent the student body.

This option seems to be the most equitable means of selecting a representative. Since the Ad-Hoc Committee has been so generous as to give us one student on the Search Committee, we'd better make the best of it. And that means representing as large a proportion of the student body as possible. After all, the faculty, who comprise a much smaller number of people than students have four elected representatives on the committee. We've only got one. (Perhaps that suggests tokenism but when you haven't even been awarded tokenism in the past it's a step in the right direction.)

With such a limited voice, it is important that as many factions of the student community as possible be incorporated into selecting a representative. Placing the chairman of the board on the committee will not necessarily make him the right person to represent students.

Another reason why the board should select someone else is that selecting a new president could be a long process and will demand the full attention of all the committee members during this period. (The report states that it is not uncommon for a university to take a year or more to find the right person.) With the regular duties the new board chairman will have, the added burden of serving on the Search and Selection Committee could prove to be too much. Dividing his attention between board duties and student representative duties would only deter his effectiveness at both.

Two things are at stake on the Committee of Search and Selection. Not only must a new president be selected, but all voices within the academic community must be heard as well.

To provide a liaison between the student body and the student representative, a committee comprised not only of members of the ASMSU Board, but other student groups as well might be established to accept student nominations for president and review them before submission to the student representative.

Whatever course is taken, two things must be insured-that the student voice be representative of the broadest spectrum of student views and that a means of communication be provided between that voice and the student commu-

FORUM ON ECONOMICS

The economic consequences of Mr. Johnson

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article was written by Charles P. Larrowe, professor of economics, and submitted at the request of the editors on Jan. 22. We had hoped to receive several faculty statements on the "Johnson years" but since the response was less than overwhelming, we are now printing Larrowe's controversial views. We invite any interested student or faculty member to comment on these words, appearing more than one month after the end of the Johnson Administration, or present a viewpoint on an aspect of the administration other than the economic.

It is a commonplace to observe that the quality of life in this country deteriorated almost unbearably during the five years of Mr. Johnson. That this should be true is bitterly ironic when you look at Johnson's noble blueprint for the Great Society, and how well the economy performed, in some respects at least, while he was in the White House. Here's Production of goods and services: up 29 per cent. Unemployment: cut almost in half. Wages and salaries: on the rise. Profits: setting records. Poverty: reduced by almost a third. Economic security: strengthened by Medicare and the employment provisions of the Civil Rights Act. Conservation: more land reserved for public use and enjoyment than under any president in recent history. (The less said about the ravaged land in Vietnam the better. But we're talking about our economy.) Education: generously supported with federal money. That's the good side.

Then there's the bad side. Most of our gold is gone. (The DAR, which from time to time sends a delegation to Fort Knox to see if the gold is really there, isn't going to like that.) The dollar is dangerously weak, the result of having to spend lavish sums in countries all around the globe to feed. house and equp our military forces stationed there. If it gets much weaker, the result could be disaster to the economies of countries dependent on us.

Inflation is almost out of control. Interests rates are the highest they've been in 40 years. Everybody knows what inflation does to his purchasing power, and how it singles out the poor for special punishment. Nobody needs to be told that he has to pay more to borrow when interest rates go up. What may not be so obvious is that rising interest rates bite into the dollars of people who don't think of themselves as borrowing. But when you buy on credit, in effect the price you pay goes up to cover the increased interest charge in the monthly payment. And you don't have to be an econometrician to figure out what happens to the cost of buying a house when the bank rate escalates, any more than you have to be a psephologist to know why so many Americans who supported Mr. Johnson in '64 couldn't stand the sight of him four years later. Then there's the 10 per cent surtax and the increased local taxes many Americans have to pay to make up for cutbacks in federal help.

But what about Mr. Johnson War on Poverty! Alas, just as it seemed he was about to order the big guns into position, they were needed more urgently on another front. "I don't intend to go down in history as the first President who lost a war," he used to say, even as he was preparing to surrender

What about the hundreds of humanitarian laws put through Congress? Many are nothing but titles. Having passed a law, Mr. Johnson often seemed not to care whether Congress appropriated the money needed to make it effective. The program to control water pollution, to take on example, hasn't even begun to take shape, though the law has been on the books for three years. The job programs foundered, partly because Mr. Johnson couldn't attract good enough men to run them, partly because they were so poorly designed that they are in the news today, if at all, mainly in stories about the venality and waste that mar the bureaucracy at the top. And readers of a student newspaper scarcely need to be reminded that, for all the aid to education, federal money for research and for student loans has been cut back

What went wrong was that Mr. Johnson had to make a cruel choice, one we economists, with our fondness for the homely phrase, call the choice between guns and butter. (In one of my phantasies I hear another architect of a Great Society asking his Walt Whitman Rostow, "But can't we have both guns and butter, Hjalmar?" "No, mein Fuhrer.") For Mr. Johnson, too, the answer was "no." Once he committed the nation to the goal of military victory in Vietnam, his domestic program had to go.

We can, economists will tell you, spend $30 billion a year on the war--and another four or five on space--and still pay the bill for the Great Society at home. We could, if we were willing to tax ourselves to do it. But as Mr. Johnson learned to his sorrow, you can't build a Great Society if you dissipate your resources on a war abroad and Congress won't give you the extra money for your war on poverty at home. It's a little like, if the parallel isn't too offensive, a university that sets out to make itself great and then decides to take on residential colleges and a medical school without getting extra money for them from the legislature.

Prediction: If present policy continues. we will price ourselves right out of our world trade markets. Nixon seems inclined to favor tariffs and quotas on steel. and if such restrictions go into effect, they will make lazy oligopolists lazier--Walter

Adams, professor of economics. The employment-price stabilization question has also been given some thought by the chairman of Nixon's Council of Economic Advisors, Paul McCracken. The New York Times reported that Mc-Cracken made it clear when his appointment was announced that he is not a member of the Draconian school of economists and businessmen who believe that nothing short of a major increase in unemployment will stop the present inflation.

The government's policy under Kennedy and Johnson was to move toward full employment and pay the cost of substantial price increases. This undermined our competitive position because our goods then cost more at home and abroad. Kreinin

Price and income level increases generally petermine U.S. balance of payments. If unemployment drops and prices rise in Europe more slowly than in the United States, Europe would capture more markets and could undersell us in our foreign and domestic markets, he said.

Adams pointed out that we must meet prices in the world market if we hope to sell. Constant price escalation at home makes imports more attractive and cuts down the quantity demanded for our exports. He used the steel industry as an example.

The oligopolistic steel industry has no domestic competition, only foreign competition, and if that is shut out by quotas and tariffs favorable to the U.S. steel interests, they will have the field to themselves and prices would inevitably go up,

"The steel industry is composed of lazy oligopolists both on the technical and efficiency fronts who run to the government and say 'Gimmie' rather than compete,' he said.

In the eyes of the steel industry, welfare in Detroit weakens moral fiber, but tariffs and quotas for the support of the steel industry are "all right," he said.

What action Nixon will take on quotas and tariffs remains to be seen, but he did talk about the subject at a news conference Feb. 7.

'I believe that the interests of the United States and the interests of the whole world will best be served by moving toward freer trade rather than toward protection," Nixon said.

"I take a dim view of this tendency to move toward quotas and other methods hold appliances, textiles and leather which require a lot of labor. Kreinin said, but the labor cost differential is narrowing between the United States, and foreign producers, Adams said. Both men agreed that the U.S. has the advantage when it comes to producing technically sophisticated goods.

"In the business machine industry, we are technically superior and efficient. Adams said.

But the advantage--disadvantage production position is relative. Kreinin said: our competition comes from Europe and Japan-they pick up our advances, and we move on to another area

Creativity in black heritage

February is American history month, it seems, for white America. Banks, schools, public buildings and many offices close twice during February to commemorate the birth of two of traditional American history's most legendary heroes--George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. The Father of our country and the supposed Healer of its wounds are given their revered and honored place in America's official

February is also a month rich in the history of the black experience in America. although there is no official recognition at the national level. Perhaps that fact partially expalins why the nation's wounds are still bleeding profusely.

Frederick Douglas, runaway slave, author, probably the leading voice of the 19th centurh abolitionist movement, editor of famed abolitionist newspaper The North Star , was born and also died in the month of February. This month saw the birth of Dr. W.E.B. Dubois, prolific writer, noted historian, founder of the NAACP, certainly the father of the current mood among black youth identity, black culture and black studies, and Langston Hughes, one of the most renowned black of letters in this country.

February is both the month of black recognition and black assassination. Hiram Rhoades Revels of Mississippi, the first black US senator, took the oath of office in 1870 during the month of February. The wise and courageous spokesman of racial truth in America. Brother Malcolm X, was murdered on Feb. 21,

An increasing national phenomenon is the demand of black youth that black history be taught in colleges, high schools and grade schools throughout the land. It is primarily a northern phenomenon, since the segregated school system of the South has long provided black youth with black principals, black teachers and a black curriculum. Graduates of all-black southern schools are familiar with the names and accomplishments of black men in American history conspicuously eliminated from the supposedly liberal northern educational system. So there is obviously more to the concept of intergration than physical proximity. School buses can "bring students together" to borrow a Nixon phrase, but they are irrelevant to establishing cultural identity and racial pride. The popular phrase "quality education through integration" means more than establishing a physical racial balance in the public schools. It means establishing an educational system which encourages the full integration of the individual human be-

If a black student is fully exposed to his own unique history, not the degrading history of slavery but the noble accomplishments of his ancestors, that student will no longer harbor those feelings of inferiority which the American system has imposed upon him. If the white student is fully exposed to that same black history, he will no longer be able to accept his parents' version of black worth. Such exposure may show the white student who the real "nigger" is.

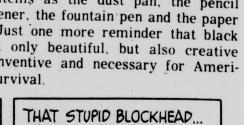

White folks must study black history to set the record straight. Traditional American history is a slanted version of the story of America. For the black student, black history is only a prelude to a more thorough orientation in black studies. Black studies must relate the entire educational process to the black experience. The only way for the black student to break out of the system in America, which has made him a "nigger" for so long, is to find out who he is and where he came from, so that he himself can determine where he is going. A man without identity is like a tree without

The list of black accomplishments is long indeed. Look at the list of black inventors alone. White America tends only to think of George Washington Carver and peanut butter. But there was also Benjamin Banneker, who made the first clock in America, a wooden "striking" clock, and who laid out the blueprint for the nation's capitol. Henry Blair was the first black man to be issued a patent--first for a corn planting machine and later for a cotton planter.

Dr. Daniel Hale Williams performed the first open heart surgery. Dr. Charles Drew developed the techniques for separating and preserving blood--though he died of injuries received in an automobile accident because a southern hospital would not give blood transfusions to blacks. Jan Matzeliger revolutionized the shoe industry with his machine to mass produce shoes. Granville T. Woods revolutionized the railroad industry with his synchronous multiplex railway telegraph. Norbert Rillieux revolutionized the sugarrefining industry in the United States, by inventing a vacuum evaporating pan which reduced the industry's dependence upon gang labor and produced a superior pro-Elijah McCoy revolutionized machines.

The list of black inventions is endless and includes such common household items as the dust pan, the pencil sharpener, the fountain pen and the paper bag. Just one more reminder that black is not only beautiful, but also creative and inventive and necessary for America's survival.

Credibility props 'Minsky's'

A film critic can discuss dramatic construction, acting abilities, cinematic technique and a great many of the grey areas of subjectivity. But when a picture like "The Night They Raided Minsky's" pops up with vast amounts of such intangibles as charm, grace and sensitivity, the real joys of the film become inexpressible.

First of all, "Minsky's" is a comedy, and when a comedy succeeds, one can only say that it deed and let the comedy go at is funny. Picking it apart only turns the comical into the clinical. So please allow me to say

And who do we thank for this film? Most obviously, the cast, who, from Jason Robards down to the last bump-and-grinder, seems to belong to 1929. Secondly, the set decorators and costume designers, who gave us authenticity instead of glamor.

Skillful interweaving But the final praise belongs to William Friedkin who went far beyond the call of duty to make an already clever script into a masterful piece of film. By the skillful interweaving of newsreel footage and storyline, Fried-

MSU will attempt to break a Big Ten jinx this weekend when it seeks its fourth straight conference wrestling title.

Three conference schools, Illinois, Michigan and Purdue, have won three consecutive undisputed wrestling championships in the past, but none have gone on to win a fourth.

The Spartan grapplers will go into the meet Friday and Saturday in the IM Arena as slight favorites to capture their fifth conference crown. A tough Iowa squad, however, could turn the meet into a battle.

Michigan and Northwestern tied Iowa for second last season and are accorded outside chances for the title.

The remainder of the conference schools each have one or two good top competitors but lack the depth to challenge the four leaders, MSU Coach Grady Peninger said.

"I guess with three straight titles that we would have to be called the favorite." Peninger added, "but this should be one of the toughest meets in years.' The lack of a strong performer in every weight class may prove to be Michigan and Northwestern's undoing since Iowa and MSU are characterized by their strong, balanced lineup.

Iowa ended the dual meet season with a 15-2 overall mark 9-1 in the Big Ten while the Spartans were 9-2 overall and 5-0 in the league.

Winning six of nine matches, MSU took an 18-9 decision over Iowa in a dual meet earlier this season at MSU. The Hawkeyes, however, were without top performer Joe Wells who was home nursing an injury.

Iowa also had a much more impressive performance against top-ranked Oklahoma than did the Spartans. While the Spartans were crushed by the Sooners, 24-3, Iowa had a closer 23-6 match. Four of the Hawkeye looses were by a single point and three of them saw the winning points scored in the final 30 seconds of the match.

Lawrence delivered an all-University lecture entitled "Color, Class and Culture: A Minority View-- as part of the term's Sexuality colloquy.

The sociology professor said that plantation life lent itself to a division of labor, and thus a social stratification developed among the black slaves of the antebellum ear. Male field hands were ready cash; if not sold, they ran away. A laboring mother would leave her children with a grandmother.

"Family life among the field slaves was matriarchal, with a grand mother often undertaking the most important role for the sake of continuity," Lawrence said.

While family nurture and stability were provided by females in the lowest slave class, black house servants and artisans were quasi-patriarchal in their family structure.

State News Staff Writer American sexuality is ridden with double standards in need of removal. Clark Vincent told his audience at the most recent session of the Sexuality Col-

Vincent, a sociologist from Wake Forest University, pointed out that many sexual aspects of American society are plagued by duplicity. As an example he dwelled on the attack of public school sex education by the John Birch Society.

Vincent said the Society deplores sex education, but does nothing to stop the flood of erotic words and pictures produced by the mass media.

"If society refuses to withdraw the stimuli," he said, "we have a moral obligation to provide our young people with accurate information.

Vincent also attacked society's double standard on selflove. He saw love of self as "most difficult lifetime task," partly because society teaches it as selfish.

He supported his claim by quoting the New Testament commandment. "Love thy neighbor as thy self." Vincent said it would a "pretty lousy commandment" if one did not have self-esteem.
