Two sets of officers stand as SDS convention ends

CHICAGO (AP)--The Students for a Democratic Society ended a chaotic five-day convention Monday with two different groups of officers -- each of them claiming to be "the real SDS."

A so-called regular faction, which included most of the former officers, elected Mark Rudd, 22, of New York City, as national secretary to succeed Michael Klonsky. Rudd was one of the leaders of the Columbia University takeover last year.

Meanwhile, the rival pro-Peking Progressive Labor party named John Pennington of Boston, a Harvard alumnus, as its national secretary.

The convention began Wednesday in the Coliseum on the city's South Side, but Klonsky led his regular faction out of the hall Saturday to a West Side church for a rump convention session.

The two factions had split over whether the SDS should shift its emphasis from the campus to labor.

The "regular" seek a broader base than college campuses for their revolutionary movement, while the Progressive Labor group expelled the Progressive Labor group from the organization, claiming the split would tighten up its traditionally loose-knit organization.

Before walking out of the Coliseum, the Klonsky group expelled the Progressive Labor group from the organization, claiming the split would tighten up its traditionally loose-knit organization.

After the "regulars" left, the PL factions stayed and went about electing its own slate. Besides electing Pennington a national secretary, the group selected Patricia Forman of San Francisco State as interorganization secretary, and Alan Spector of the New England region SDS as education secretary.

At the church, the "regulars" selected in addition to Rudd, Jeffrey Jones, also of San Francisco State, as interorganization secretary to replace Bernardine Dohrn, and William Ayers of Michigan as education secretary.

The split left the regular faction in control, at least for the present, of the SDS national headquarters in Chicago, including the organization's membership files, printing equipment and SDS cash.

Burger seated on court; Warren era now history

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Warren Earl Burger took the oath Monday as the 15th chief justice of the United States, and the Warren court passed into history.

The new chief justice, his hand resting on an opened Bible held by Earl Warren, swore to defend the Constitution and to administer equal justice to the poor and the rich.

With that the 1968-69 term of the Supreme Court and Warren's 52 years in public life came to an end. When the court reconvenes in October, Burger will sit where Warren has for 16 years, applying probably a more restricted reading of the Constitution.

President Nixon, in a departure from precedent, came to the court not only to see his choice as chief justice sworn in, as many presidents have before, but to address the court as no president has ever done.

Dressed in a dark blue cutaway, Nixon spoke from the lawyer's lectern and extolled Warren as "a symbol of fairness, integrity and dignity."

The President, a lawyer, said Warren had presided during the years of greatest change in American history, judging always with "a humanity that is all-encompassing."

"The nation is grateful for that humanity," the President said.

He spoke seriously, using no notes and pausing at times to collect his thoughts. And he drew laughter from the packed courtroom with the observation:

"There is only one ordeal more challenging than a presidential press conference and that is to argue before the Supreme Court--something he has done twice.

Warren cleared his throat again and again as he thanked the President and stated, "we serve only the public interest as we see it, guided only by the Constitution and our own conscience."

Burger, who had been seated at the clerk's desk, then came forward to take the oath from Warren. Justices stood to their left and right and reached out to offer congratulations and a smiling handshake.

The President, the two judges and their wives then walked to the front of the court building and stood at the top

Life Sciences bldg. to launch birth of 'U' medical complex

By BARB PARNES State News Staff Writer

Ground was broken Monday for the new $11 million Life Sciences Bldg., the first in a planned medical complex for MSU.

The building, scheduled for completion in 1971, was conceived in 1964 to house the two-year medical program, then in the planning stage. The first class in the two-year program was admitted in 1966.

Life Sciences will house the department of medicine, pharmacology and human development, the Office of Medical Education Research and Development, the School of Nursing and the administrative offices of the College of Human Medicine and Veterinary Medicine.

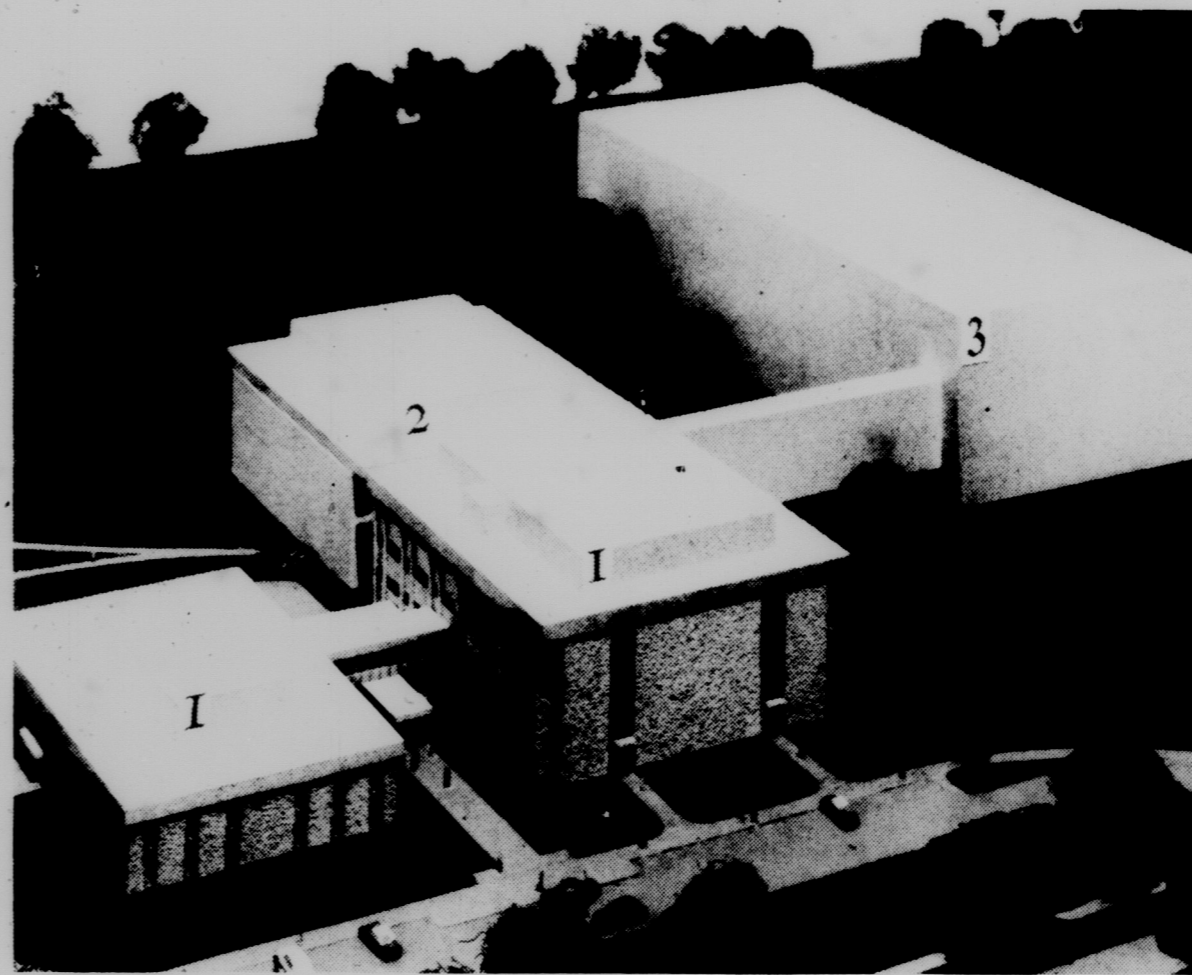

The building will be located on the east side of Bogue Street, which is to be extended south of the Veterinary Clinic.

"The new building will give us the first major facilities for developing a medical program," Dr. Scott N. Swisher, chairman of the Dept. of Medicine, said. "It is the only way we can even begin to form a department."

The building will allow MSU to expand its present enrollment per class in the two-year medical program from 30 to 64 students. The nursing program will expand from 50 to 90 students per year. And the pharmacology dept. will be increased to provide a graduate program in toxicology.

Dr. Swisher emphasized that the new building will allow the College of Human Medicine to further develop the concept of self-learning laboratories in which medical students can work independently in areas related to their course material.

Life goes on

Construction will begin soon on MSU's $11 million Life Science Bldg., which will consist of two wings, numbered 1 on the diagram. The building will enable the University to expand the entering class of its present two-year medical school, and will also allow for the addition of a second unit for housing clinical departments and a third unit as a teaching hospital and outpatient clinic.

Dr. Hillard Jason, director of the Office of Medical Education Research and Development (OMERD), said that Life Sciences will only provide one-quarter of the necessary space for the development of a complete medical program.

"At least," Dr. Jason said, "it (the building) is going to place us (OMERD) in very close connection with students and faculty who are now scattered all over campus."

The Office of Medical Education and Research Development was created to assist faculty members in the design and evaluation of their educational activities.

The new building and the expansion in the medical program will require an increase in staff for all the departments involved.

Dr. Jason said that his office has been gradually increasing and will continue to do so in anticipation of the building's completion.

Theodore M. Brody, chairman of the department of pharmacology, said that it will not be too difficult to attract new staff members to MSU.

"With our new facilities we'll have a jump on other departments in the country," he said.

The funds for the Life Sciences Bldg. come from the state, the National Institute of Health and the Kellogg Foundation.

The building will be part of the proposed medical complex which is to include a second life sciences building, a teaching hospital and outpatient clinic combined with new student health services. The construction of other buildings in the complex depends on whether finances from the state are allocated to MSU for the full four-year medical degree program.

ASMSU seeks boycott against MSU bookstore

The ASMSU Board approved a plan Sunday night to distribute leaflets to orientation freshmen asking them not to buy their textbooks at the MSU Bookstore.

They will be asked to put off their purchases until fall term or to buy their books at one of the privately owned bookstores off campus.

The action is part of the ASMSU attempt to force book prices down. Gary Klinsky, general member-at-large, said:

"We don't feel that the MSU Bookstore, owned by the University, should make a profit off of students' purchases," Klinsky said. "If we can force their prices down by boycotting them, other bookstores in East Lansing would most likely lower their prices, too."

Board activities will be restricted summer term since a number of board members are not in East Lansing.

Tom Samet, board chairman, is in Europe. Taking his place as acting chairman until fall term is Chuck Mostov, vice chairman. Mostov will have approximately half of the regular board members at his disposal.

"Most of our work this summer will be research and planning for fall activities," Mostov said Sunday.

Mostov plans to hold short board meetings during the summer.

Student survey 'pictures' desired president

By LINDA GORTMAKER Executive Reporter

If a sampling of students could select MSU's next president, he would probably be an expert mediator in human relations problems and a professional academician.

ASMSU's Presidential Selection Board (PSB) distributed a 60-item questionnaire to 1,900 students spring term, and answers, including the above generalization, have produced reams of computer results.

Straight percentages, without considering any variable factors, show that 2.8 per cent of the students sampled think the next president should be most proficient in fund raising; 22.9 per cent think he should be best in public relations; 8.8 in allocating budgetary needs; and 54.1 in mediating human relations problems.

Totally involved

"The answers to this question reiterate what I believe the next president has to be--he must be totally involved in the University and be concerned about everything," Sue Gebelein, undergraduate representative to the search and selection committee, said.

Almost 55 per cent of the white students answering the questionnaire said the next president should be best in mediating human relations problems, and 2.41 per cent wanted a good fund raiser.

Of the Mongoloid students, 23.81 per cent wanted a fund raiser, and 38.10 per cent indicated he should be an expert mediator in human relations problems.

Almost 12 per cent of the black students wanted a fund raiser, 45.71 per cent wanted a good human relations mediator and 11.43 per cent wanted a good budgeter, with the highest percentage of all races for this category.

These results show that the black students are more aware of what the president has to do," Miss Gebelein said, noting the wider distribution of percentages in the results for black students.

Fund raiser

"As much as we hate to admit it," she said, "the president must be concerned with such things as budget and fund raising. The blacks seem to be more conscious of this."

Students were also asked to indicate what should be the area of educational emphasis for the next president. Miss Gebelein interpreted this question to mean what academic area he is from, not what his degree or formal background included.

All three races had the highest percentages in the field of education, compared to the other choices of business, science, humanities and other.

Over 38 per cent of whites indicated education; 31.38 for Mongoloids; and 51.43 for blacks.

"All groups are saying he should be a professional academician," Miss Gebelein said. "And that is what I got from the forums all along--that the students wanted someone from the academic world."

Business-minded

Business and humanities competed for the next highest number of responses. More than 15 per cent of white students indicated business; 18.18 per cent of the Mongoloids; and 11.43 of blacks.

Blacks and whites both had 17.1 per cent for humanities; and Mongoloid students had 13.64 per cent.

PSB also tabulated results from the questionnaires according to parents' approximate income.

Whether students' parents earned less than $6,000 a year or more than $25,000 a year, the results were basically the same--a majority of students of each group wanted the president to be most proficient in handling human relations problems.

"These results could show that the kids are living in a very idealistic world," Miss Gebelein said. "But then, maybe they're right."

"These results could be recommending a set-up where the president is in charge of people and other people are in charge of money."

Family income

Evaluating in what areas the next president should have the most experience, students from families with incomes more than $18,000 gave a more well-rounded response.

"They want the next president to have a smattering of knowledge in education, humanities and business," Miss Gebelein said. "All three are important here."

In the other income groups, students still indicated a strong desire to have a president with a background in education, but not as well-rounded as the other groups.

In terms of class standing, all levels of students had a majority of students wanting a mediator in human relations problems. Graduate students indicated they wanted a president with a well-rounded background, while the other classes placed great emphasis on educational experience.

Results from the questionnaires are and will be used at future search and selection committee meetings and when the committee meets with the board of trustees.

Huff declares Stevens' sally not warranted

By MARILYN PATTERSON State News Staff Writer

Trustee Warren Huff, D-Plymouth, said Monday that charges leveled against him Sunday by board of trustees chairman Don Stevens, D-Okemos, are "not true."

Stevens said Sunday that Huff had "severely criticized" Acting President Adams after Huff requested that an item be changed from the public agenda to the agenda for the secret trustee meeting Friday.

At the public meeting Friday, Huff announced that he would no longer attend secret meetings of the trustees because "the public has a right to know not just the decisions, but also the pros and cons of the decisions."

Huff said Monday that he "cannot identify any such item" that he requested be moved off the public agenda. In his statement Sunday, Stevens declined to name the item to which he referred.

Clair White, D-Bay City, who joined Huff in boycotting the secret meetings Friday, said he did not recall Huff's having made such a request at Thursday's secret meeting.

"Stevens didn't have much to do over the weekend so he made up this piece of mythology," White said.

He said he regards this as "flyspecking" until Stevens names the item to which he refers.

"This is a funny way for a chairman to act," White said.

Stevens said Monday that he would stand on his Sunday statement.

"What I said yesterday is absolutely true," he said. He declined again to name the item which Huff allegedly wanted changed from the public to the private agenda.

Huff said that he had asked that one item, the discussion of residence hall rates, be moved from the agenda of the secret meeting to the agenda of the public meeting.

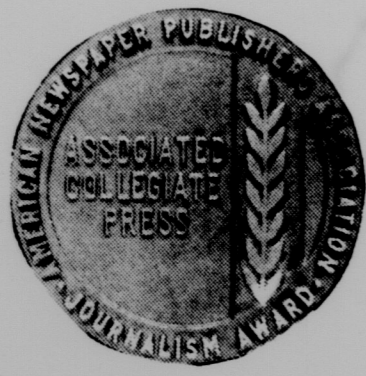

"Everybody is interested in this," he said. "I'm sure the students, the public and the press would accept it better if they heard a discussion of the issue rather than just the final decision."

Huff said that he had not "severely criticized" Adams.

Adams said Monday that it is one of his "rules for personal survival" never to perceive comments, suggestions or criticisms as personal attacks.

"I will not become engaged in any name calling," Huff said of Stevens' statement.

"The issues before the board are not of personalities, but of the conduct of the board with respect to the University," he said. "I am willing to discuss the issues on their merits."

Removing the veil of secrecy

Originally the Search and Selection Committee's reasoning behind its secrecy was that this was necessary to avoid embarrassing nominees for president. A legitimate concern, certainly. Anyone who knew he had been nominated for President might withdraw to avoid the embarrassment of losing the nomination.

Yet this original purpose has been extended so that now the secrecy controls all portions of the committee's work.

Last week, the committee released its statement of "desired aims of the University," a document that it spent a great deal of time and effort developing. A document of this nature could be invaluable to anyone concerned with the future of this University, particularly in light of the crossroad we now face in selecting a new president.

But the document was released only to the trustees, not to the public or the press. Dale Hathaway, chairman of the committee, stated they "have not had the time to do an adequate job at this kind of task and the committee does not feel that our document represents in the kind of thorough going examination of the total needs of the University, that ought to be represented in any document sion."

Hathaway would have us believe that the committee scribbled a few notes on some yellow dog along with some doodlings and graffiti and stuffed them in his back pocket until he presented them to the trustees. Yet the search and selection committee spent two meetings a week, four hours a meeting, working on this document for a month. It seems unlikely that the final product could be as shabby and incomplete as Hathaway indicated.

Indeed, even if the document is incomplete, this is all the more reason to insist that the public be given the opportunity to scrutinize it, and hence broaden the perspective of the article by possibly implementing the suggestions of the wider university community. A document of this nature should be of broad enough scope that presenting it to the public for criticism would improve, not prove detrimental to, the finished product.

The Search and Selection Committee has continually pressed for increased student dialogue on the future president and goals of the University. Yet at a time when dialogue could so effectively be incorporated into the committee's work, they choose to cloak themselves in a veil of secrecy. No justification can be found for this action except that the committee does not choose to have its work subjected to public scrutiny.

This secrecy seems largely to be the desired course of Hathaway personally. When asked last week whether the committee had narrowed the possible list of nominees down to the final 20, Hathaway hemmed and hawed, and implied that it had not. Yet when it was discovered that the committee had indeed narrowed the list down, Hathaway admitted it had, but stated that the list was inconclusive. This type of beating around the bush is seriously detrimental to the integrity of the entire committee.

The committee is greatly concerned, perhaps overly so, about its relationship with the trustees. Hence its members do not wish to antagonize them by publicizing anything that they think the trustees might not choose to have made public. But we are already familiar with the trustees' method of conducting business in closed meetings without public knowledge, and we have seen the consequences of this action.

One can only conclude that the committee is attempting to control the information that filters to the public, in an effort to present a solidified, harmonious public relations image. It is evident, however, that such an attempt is clearly antithetical to the committee's responsibility for stimulating community dialog.

Were the situation to continue along this vein any longer, the community might well be justified in holding the entire credibility of the Search and Selection Committee in doubt.

TRINKA CLINE

'Miranda' 's meaning

Say "Miranda" (or "Escobedo" or "Gault") to a police officer and see what happens.

He may stare at you blankly because he has never heard the term before (the average officer under a typical sheriff's department). Or you may notice a small amount of foam beginning to form at the corners of his mouth. He HAS heard of it.

To the citizen, Miranda means democracy, insured through procedure. The "red tape" involved has been made necessary by "bad cops." Cops may scream that "no one respects the law any more," but it was cops themselves who have all too often blatantly ignored the do-nots written into the Bill of Rights, making such "handcuffing" rules necessary.

You see, according to Supreme Court cases such as Miranda and Escobedo, police officers can no longer ignore human rights. Suspects cannot be arrested and detained without "reasonable cause" and now, once detained, cannot be coerced into confessions. Pigs can no longer starve and isolate suspects (a very recent Supreme Court case dealt with just that in a Michigan police force--and Michigan is supposedly among the three most enlightened states in the area of law enforcement).

Individuals have a right to be told at the time of arrest that they have a constitutional right to silence, that anything they say might be used against them and that they have a right to counsel. It cannot be assumed that a citizen knows of his right to silence and counsel and therefore that if he doesn't request counsel, he has waived that right. HE MUST BE TOLD.

To the U.S. Supreme Court, it doesn't matter so much whether the confession acquired through the third degree and outright brutality is valid or not. In effect, the Court has demanded through these restrictions that the officers become good investigators--that the guilty be proven guilty by facts--that the right to silence can and will be honored, simultaneous to good police work (good detective work... not good gymnastics work) and justice.

Cops and citizens alike are often enraged when Court decisions free known criminals on such minor technicalities as involved in the recent Michigan case; the man was held for two days without food, water or sleep and he had a few bruises resulting from police interrogation.

But the Earl Warren Court has operated under a philosophy of preferring to let a few criminals go free (most do anyway, since most crimes are never even reported in the first place), than to allow innocent people to be harassed and both the built-in innocent deprived unjustly of human liberties spelled out in the Amendments to the Constitution.

"Law and order" mentality people scream that such a foolish ideal leads to "coddling" criminals and that the Court is not allowing our "trained law enforcement people" (in the words of Washtenaw County Sheriff Harvey--appropriately described by the Detroit Free Press as a "dumb cop") to operate efficiently. But there's a difference between efficiency and

"... Dick Nixon ...!"

"... Ronnie Reagan ...!"

Warren: stormy defender of politically oppressed

An era will come to an end today when Earl Warren steps down from the Supreme Court, after serving as Chief Justice for 16 years. His tenure has been stormy and almost always controversial, but future historians will probably regard his term of office as one of the most important in the history of this country.

Warren was appointed in 1954 by President Eisenhower, and he could not have come in at a much more crucial time in the nation's history. Almost as soon as he assumed the position of Chief Justice he was faced with the Brown vs. The Board of Education decision. On this particular decision, the foundation for all civil rights legislation in the last several years, the Warren Court ruled segregation illegal in the nation's schools. This hall-mark decision led to a wide spread condemnation of the court, particularly in the South.

The Warren Court has consistently upheld the rights of the individual, notably those arrested by the police incurring nation-wide animosity as a result.

One of the principal criticisms of the Warren Court has been that it has taken on a legislative role which most of the court's critics label as dangerous. In its most recent decision, the Warren Court ruled the House of Representatives acted unconstitutionally in 1967 when it excluded Harlem Democrat Adam Clayton Powell. Here again Warren critics felt that the Supreme Court had over stepped its bounds, and that it was ruling on matters over which it had no real jurisdiction.

But now Warren is out and Burger, a man vastly different politically, is in. The conservatives will expect a lot from him in the way of repealing some of the Warren Court's more controversial decisions. Hopefully he will not, but Burger cannot be properly judged on what he has done in the past, and he must be given a chance to act before any assessment of him can be made.

If any one word can be given to characterize the Warren Court, it would have to be "justice." It has upheld the rights of the politically oppressed, even when such stands were unpopular.

At no time has it betrayed those rights of the "little man" guaranteed in the Constitution. It has responded admirably to social needs rather than to social demands.

One can hope that its precedent will be continued by the Burger Court.

Anti-war office sacked

To the Editor:

The War Resisters League is a pacifist organization which has been promoting the cause of peace through literature, rallies, educational programs and action groups for the past 46 years. Albert Einstein said, in 1953, "The WRL is important because by union, it relieves courageous and resolute individuals of the paralyzing feeling of isolation and loneliness..." in their belief that war is a crime against humanity.

On the night of May 9, 1969, the headquarters of WRL were raided and vandalized. The premises were left in a shambles. The addressing and mimeographing machines were smashed. Most damaging of all, the entire membership file and all the mailing stencils were stolen.

The raid bears the marks of actions which rightist groups have taken elsewhere. The police have made only cursory inspection. The press, though informed, ignored the incident (except for the N.Y. Times).

I urge those in the University community who have contributed in the past, and any others who wish to help the work of WRL, to send their names and the most liberal contribution they can to the national headquarters, WRL, 339 Lafayette Street, New York, N.Y. 10012.

effectiveness and between "law and order" and democracy and justice under law with order and peace and human dignity for all.

Perhaps only those who have suffered at the hands of pigs without Miranda (or in spite of it) can ever fully appreciate the meaning behind it all.

Many, many people--the new Chief Justice Burger included--would just as soon dump such decisions as Miranda. Strangely enough, the same people would do so in the name of democracy. As Earl Warren himself once exclaimed, it is highly possible that the Bill of Rights, if put up for a vote in this country at this time, would probably be abandoned. And, frightening as it is, the voters, in their bliss and ignorance, would actually believe they were "saving" democracy through the act.

That SHOULD be a scary, thought-provoking thing to ponder.

It appears that those subscribing to Warrenism are not in a majority. Warrenism, that dreaded disease that once swept the highest court of the land, led to a desegregation order for Southern schools, promised poor people that they could travel from state to state without being dropped off the welfare rolls, protected the worker-consumer from garnishment of wages without a hearing, hit hard on civil rights problems at various levels, boosted voting equality and--gulp--said that a citizen cannot be punished for the books he reads or the movies he watches in his home, regardless of the degree of obscenity involved.

The Warren era has been one of controversy and enlightenment. Democracy took a few new breaths of life-giving air during that time. With sadness, one must notice that the enlightenment has remained too much confined to a high level and has not filtered down through the dreaded "System."

I desperately wish I could say that our people, our lawmakers and our police officers were more enlightened than they are and that they would push to rigidly maintain the high ideals behind Miranda at state and local levels.

But we are a nation caught in an ugly swing to the right in fear and frustration. And such noble doctrines of democracy are hard for most to grasp at this time.

'They have not stopped my pursuit of knowledge'

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is a statement by Dharendra Sharma, associate professor of philosophy, regarding the withdrawal of his research grant.

The U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare has withdrawn the Fulbright-Hays Faculty Research grant. The award was made to me after more than 6 months' deliberations on April 29, and was announced to the public on May 28. It was rescinded, however, within 36 hours of criticism raised by certain ill-informed politicians. It is a matter of grave concern to all educators and the people at large whether such politics be permitted to interfere with the academics.

To me it is another example of how the society does not hesitate to use any foul means to intimidate and oppress social critics. Not because the critics preach violence--because they do not--but because they oppose the violence prevalent in our social system. I refuse to mortgage my conscience. I shall continue to oppose the Vietnam war, racism, and violence. And if the opposition to social ills is a crime, I am proud to be guilty of this crime.

I have no malice for those who secretly and openly engaged in activities leading to the withdrawal of the award. They have but attempted to smear the beauty of Liberty; they have violated the spirit of the first Amendment. But they have harmed me nothing. My training, knowledge, and research are still with me. I will continue my pursuit of knowledge with much more vigour and lasting efforts.

My attention was first drawn to this controversy by an angry young man who over the phone rudely awakened me at the mid-night of June 3. He had but condemnation to offer. Since then, a lot of anger and bitterness has generated in the hearts of men. I am sorry that my person, too, has become the cause of trouble to many individuals known and unknown to me. I have received a tremendous flow of support from so many quarters. I am overwhelmed with the kindness, sympathy and support of my colleagues and peers, and the people of Michigan. It is heartening. My wife joins me in expressing our feeling of gratitude to those who have provided us with an opportunity to test our own commitment, and to those who have extended their support for us. We are really grateful to the people of Michigan.

ACLU intervenes for Sharma

By STEVE WATERBURY
State News Staff Writer

The Lansing branch of the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) has charged that "political tests" were involved in the withdrawal of a Fulbright-Hays Fellowship to Dharendra Sharma, assoc. professor of philosophy.

"It is apparent that political tests were, in this instance, advocated by a state representative and a member of Congress, and that the action taken by the Office of Education was taken in response to the positions taken by these two elected representatives," the ACLU statement said.

The statement referred to State Rep. Phil O. Pittenger, R-Lansing and Congressman Charles E. Chamberlain, R-Mich.

Pittenger originally called for investigation of the proposed grant, and Chamberlain personally visited the Department of Health Education and Welfare to inquire about the fellowship.

MSU was notified of the withdrawal of the grant to Sharma by the Office of Education in a letter dated June 6 which stated the grant was being withdrawn as a consequence of Sharma's lack of permanent status with MSU.

The ACLU maintains the grant was actually withdrawn as a consequence of the political criticism of Sharma.

"Since many faculty members whose connections with American universities were much more tenuous than that of Prof. Sharma have in fact received grants from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare," the ACLU statement reads, "and since the Department normally makes no effort of inquiring into a grantee's tenure status, the reason given by the Office of Education must be regarded as a subterfuge."

The ACLU said that if political tests are applied in the awarding of research grants, the grants could "become rewards for political conformity."

"Such tests are contrary to the principle of academic freedom and to the guarantee of free speech anchored in the First Amendment to the Constitution," the ACLU statement concluded.

Vice President for Research and Development Milton E. Muelder said Monday he is currently awaiting a reply from Washington to a letter he wrote June 19 asking the Office of Education to reconsider the withdrawal of the grant.

Muelder indicated his letter was "a formal request for a reversal" of the decision to withdraw the grant, which reviewed the circumstances of the withdrawal and discussed the concern of the academic community in this matter.

13,000 troops trimmed; Army draft call still up

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Army's over-all strength will be cut by about 13,000 troops under the Nixon administration's initial 25,000-man reduction of U.S. forces in South Vietnam.

The dip is a step in plans to scale down gradually the American military organization worldwide, with further reductions in forces expected in coming months.

The Pentagon reported the Army decline Monday at the same time it announced a higher draft call of 29,500 for August, up 7,200 from the planned July draft.

The Pentagon said the August manpower request is higher than July's "because total replacement needs are higher even after allowing for the reduction" in Vietnam.

International News

The Communist command is believed to have sent 10,000 troops into a ring around the provincial capital of An Loc, 60 miles north of Saigon, and U.S. air and ground power moved Monday to meet the threat of attack. American headquarters reported.

Britain's political parties and diplomatic officials were reported divided Monday on the strategy needed to insure entry into Europe's Common Market.

Prime Minister Harold Wilson's government, nevertheless, pressed ahead with plans to achieve its major international objective, which has the overwhelming support of parliament, the press, and big business.

Pope Paul VI warned Monday of two difficulties facing the Roman Catholic Church: decreasing fidelity to basic church teachings and a "diffused lack of confidence" in the Pope, his aides and bishops.

National News

A DC 4 cargo plane crashed on a busy Miami street Monday as it tried to circle back to Miami International Airport with a flaming engine. All four crew members were killed, along with five on the ground. At least a dozen people were hurt.

The crash occurred near 36th St. and 33rd Ave., two blocks south of the teeming Miami Beach-Airport Expressway.

A Czechoslovak general who defected to the West says the seizure of the spy ship Pueblo was plotted by the Russians.

Gen. Jan Sejna, writing in the current issue of Reader's Digest, said he first heard of the plot in May, 1967. He said the seizure was planned by Moscow to "humiliate" the United States and to obtain classified information for the Soviet Union.

With all this equipment inside, the VW Campmobile still holds more than any conventional station wagon.

The law says two objects can't occupy the same space at the same time. But our designers almost broke it with the Volkswagen Campmobile.

Not only did they get all that camping equipment outside, inside, but while they were at it they put in a station wagon roomier than any conventional empty wagon.

For a weekend in the country you get a full-length double bed, Child's bed, cot and hammock, Dining table, A kitchen with icebox, sink, water system, work tables, cupboard.

But when you want a station wagon, the furniture folds out of the way.

So backseat passengers sit on the head of your bed.

But don't know it. With their feet stretched out under your dining room table. Which isn't there. (If you like, you can even leave the kitchen in the garage!)

Completely furnished, the Campmobile is $351.94. The total delivered price includes Michigan tax, license, and title. The station wagon is free.

Janson in best ball play

The Outing Club will meet tonight at 7 in 116 Natural Science. Summer activities will be discussed.

By JEFF ELLIOTT

The Graduate Advisory Council of the College of Home Economics will hold a seminar for students and faculty in the college this afternoon at 115 Erickson. Mrs. Alice Epple will speak on training community aides to work directly in the homes of lower income families in the area of nutrition. A special invitation is extended to all new graduate students and all students enrolled for only summer term.

MSU's Big Ten golf team concluded its first of the two-day practicing rounds Monday afternoon at the Broadmoor Country Club in Colorado Springs, Colo., with all five golfers shooting in the mid 70's.

After another practice round today, actual team and individual competition will get under way Wednesday. The Spartans will have two of the first starters Wednesday. Two members of the five man team are slated to tee off at 7 a.m. The other three players are scheduled to begin their rounds at 12 noon.

Head Coach Bruce Fossum and his five man squad-Larry Murphy, Lynn Janson, Lee Edmundson, Grahame Cooke and Rick Woulfe-will be attempting to capture the NCAA crown after winning their first Big Ten title five weeks ago. 36 teams are entered in the competition as well as over 250 players. There are actually two titles up for grabs-the individual trophy and the team championship.

The Spartans are the only Michigan school entered in the team competition, but Timo Kilpelainen of Western Michigan and Jeff Reaud of Eastern Michigan are vying in the individual competition. One honor has already been bestowed upon a Spartan golfer. Lynn Janson, the top man on the squad the past year, has been selected to compete for the East squad in a two-man best ball tournament to be held today. Janson will team with Tom Mollan of East Tennessee State and will face Chip Stewart of Texas and Bob Risch of Southern Cal in one of 17 matches between the top golfers from eastern and western parts of the country.

After Thursday's rounds the top 15 teams plus ties and any team that is within 18 shots of the team leader will qualify to play Friday and Saturday for the team title. All other teams will be forced to sit out the two remaining days.

Individuals cuts will also be made Thursday night, with the top 36 players and anyone within 10 shots of the medalist continuing play the last 36 holds the next two days.

Fossum was pleased with the team's performance Monday, indicating it will take a good solid team effort to win the title.

"There are a lot of top teams here so it's hard to say how we stand in accordance with them," Fossum said. "We'll just have to go out and shoot consistent golf each day."

A total of 18 holes will be played every day with the top 72 hole team and individual scores winning titles and trophies Saturday.

Rain postpones Wimbledon start

WIMBLEDON, ENGLAND (UPI) - Rain completely washed out play in the $80,000 Wimbledon Open Tennis Championships Monday, the first time in the memory of club officials' that the entire opening day schedule had to be postponed without a ball being struck.

No one could recall anything as disastrous back to the 1930s, and the only near parallel was 18 years ago when play got under way for half an hour before the rain came down.

Contrary to forecasts of unsettled but playable weather, a persistent drizzling downpour was so discouraging that only a few hundred of the 15,000 center and court one ticketholders even bothered to come out to the famous grounds. There are no rainchecks at Wimbledon. Any chance of play on the 13 outside courts was abandoned early and many players left for their hotels. However, competitors scheduled for center and court one-the best covered of the courts-had to wait till the last moment before they were released.

Among those who passed the slow hours in the players rest room were top seed and odds-on favorite, Rod Laver of Australia, who meets Nicola Pietrangeli of Italy; fifth-seeded Arthur Ashe of Richmond, Va., who meets Marty Riessen of Evanston, Ill. and 12th seeded Pancho Gonzales.
