'U' trustees willing to consider possible osteopathic affiliation

By MARILYN PATTERSON State News Staff Writer

The board of trustees is "not unwilling" to affiliate a proposed osteopathic college with MSU, if the State Board of Education chooses to do so, Warren Huff, D-Plymouth, said Thursday

'We (the trustees) had a meeting with the board of the osteopathic college in May," he said, "to discuss how it would be done. We indicated to them at that time that we would not be unwilling to find out how to do this.

Huff said that the board of the osteopathic college also had meetings with the regents of the University of Michigan and Wayne State University to discuss affiliations with their schools.

The affiliation will be assigned by the State Board of Education, he said. There is now a bill before the Michigan State Senate to authorize the state board to affiliate the osteopathic school with Wayne. Should this not be approved by the legislature, however, MSU and U-M would also be considered for affiliations.

The affiliation would be a plus in the legislature for MSU," Huff said. "I don't know what affect it would have on campus. Of course, we wouldn't put the osteopathic school on campus if we thought it would be detrimental.

There would be many problems with the affiliation that we don't know how to solve yet," he said. "They would be complicated--but not impossible.

He listed some of the complications as: --Deciding how the programs should be divided. At what point should students of the two programs stop taking classes together and begin taking courses in their separate fields?

NASA splash-down procedure questioned

By DAVID BOSSETT State Ndws Staff Writer

Two MSU biophysicists are urging the Na tional Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) and other key government officials to reconsider the decision made recently to open the hatch of the Apollo 11 space capsule before it is placed in a decontamination chamber aboard ship.

In a letter sent to President Nixon Tuesday. Leroy Augenstein, chairman of the Dept. of Biophysics, and Barnett Rosenberg, professor of biophysics, expressed concern over the possibility of contaminated particles from the Moon being brought back to Earth inside the capsule and released in the sea.

We urge you to take immediate action with NASA to insure that they re-examine the astronaut landing procedures for Apollo ll to prevent contamination from the moon," Augenstein and Rosenberg wrote. The opening of the capsule hatch prior to isolating it in the decontamination chamber opens the possibility for the release of moon contaminants from inside the cap-

This letter was a reply to the space agency's decision to remove the astronauts from the capsule before entry into the decontamination chamber. The agency's original plans were to hoist the capsule with the astronauts still inside into the chamber, and keep them confined for a period of 21

We are not saying that adequate measures of decontamination will not be taken once the capsule is within the decontamination chamber," Augenstein said. "Rather, we feel that an amount of unnecessary risk is involved in opening the hatch while

"The chances of there being primitive organisms on the moon's surface are extremely small because of its hostile physical environment," the letter continued. "However, we cannot conclude that this possibility is zero, because of increasing evidence that there is water beneath the surface of the moon.

This latter statement refers to the fact that recent lunar explorations have discovered the existence of numerous "rills" on the moon's surface. These "rills," or ridges, suggest that periodical eruptions of water occur on the moon.

Augenstein continued to say that while the surface of the moon does not appear to be inhabitable by any form of life as we know it, the existence of subterranean water could be conducive to the growth

--Freedom of movement between the two programs. If the osteopaths have a technology scientifically valid, students from the MD school should be allowed to take courses to understand it, Huff said.

-- The fair allocation of resources between the two schools. "We don't want continuous bickering between the two schools because one received more money than the other," he said.

-- The establishment of standards of admission which would be fair to both schools and, at the same time, provide students for both schools. -- The flexibility of personnel. Should osteopaths be allowed to teach courses in the medical school, and vice versa?

"Fundamentally these two professions should get together," Huff said. "It's hard (please turn to page 11)

The chairman of the House Committee on Colleges and Universities said Thursday he did not expect a bill establishing decency standards for college publications would ever reach the floor of the State Rep. Vincent J. Petitpren, D-Westland, said he opposed Senate Bill 1025 as "another attempt to disturb the autonomy of the University.

Petitpren said the universities should settle the issue for themselves, without legislative interference.

The bill, which compels the governing boards of state universities to establish the decency standards, passed the Senate on June II by a vote of 25-8.

Petitpren said his committee, which would have to report the bill out by midnight Saturday, to keep it alive, might not meet again during this legislative session.

In the meeting, Lodge accused the Hanoi and Viet Cong representative of distorting the meaning of U.S. words and actions, particularly on the decision to withdraw 25,000 U.S. troops from South Vietnam. # Brewery shutdown over; beer rationing sees end

By BARB PARNESS State News Staff Writer

When you're out of Schlitz, you're out

This commercial slogan came close to harsh reality this week when the nation's largest breweries, including the makers of Schlitz, Budweiser, Pabst, Blatz and Miller's beers shut down for four weeks.

Fortunately for local and national beer distributors, the four-week-old strike of the Teamsters Union against the breweries for higher wages ended Thursday, just as supplies of these premium beers were

Joe Oade, spokesman for the Dells, said prior to the announcement of the strike settlement that if the strike continued for another two or three weeks, the Dells would have a serious problem. "If the strike had kept up and we had gotten some warm weather," Oade said, "we would definitely have had a beer shortage in this area and in the whole

Oade said that the Milwaukee breweries provide more than half the beer for the entire United States.

J.D. MacMillan, president and treasurer of M and M Distributors, Inc., of Lansing, expressed serious concern about the effects of the strike on his business.

'We're practically out of business," he said. "We don't have any beer in stock.

"If things get too bad, we'll put the lock on the door and wait the strike out." he continued, unaware that the strike was nearing settlement.

Some of M and M's employes were already receiving unemployment insurance and working at part-time jobs at the time of the settlement.

Every Lansing firm contacted reported that it was completely out of Budweiser beer. Alderman's Grocery Store in Mason reported that it still had six cases of Budweiser left. Beebe's Westside Grocery Store also in Mason had two cases left. Both Mason stores are supplied by Jackson distributors.

Distributors are unsure when stocks will be replenished.

Tom's Party Store reported that although it was out of Budweiser, it was able to compensate by increasing the supplies of other beers. Budweiser is the largest selling brand in the store.

: Cecile Lammona, manager of Service Beer and Wine Sales, Inc., speculated prior to the settlement of the strike that after July 1 "Carlings, Strohs and Drew-Tyls would probably be the only three left on the market." Lammona said that the contract for Hamm's beer comes up for renewal on July 1.

Al Fortino, distributor of Stroh's beer in Lansing, has benefited from the Milwaukee breweries' strike. He estimated that his sales have increased by about 5 per cent since the strike began.

Grand mother's and the Coral Gables reported that the strike had not affected them too much. Alex Vanis, owner of the Gables, said that the situation was not "too bad" as long as they had other

A postponement of justice

In a well publicized statement, the Nixon Administration vesterday proposed a nationwide ban on voter literacy tests and on state residency requirements for presidential elections.

In a not so publicized statement, the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) announced vesterday that possible changes in school desegregation guidelines "under discussion."

While Secretary of Welfare Robert H. Finch was on vacation last week, officials "were said to feel that enforcing the deadlines (for school de-segregation) was unrealistic and would be unfair since there was not enough enforcement personnel to make sure all districts complied.

The announcement really shouldn't come as too much of a surprise in light of the actions Nixon's administration has taken -- or in more instances hasn't taken -- toward blacks in the last five months.

The softening up of school desegregation policy would lengthen HEW's long standing deadlines of September 1969 and September 1970 for the desegregation of southern

To what it will be lengthened is unclear at this time. but undoubtedly the date will either be distant, or else southern schools will be told to desegregate "as soon as practical.

Which could be quite a while, considering what is "practical" for southern schools districts.

If the desegregation deadlines are delayed, there is no way to describe the situation other than "reprehensible" and "very regressive," to use the words of Sen. Fred Harris, the Democratic National Chair-

It is a little more than coincidental, and very nearly ironic. that Nixon's two statements were announced nearly simultaneously. By playing up the ban on voter literacy tests, which is still merely a "proposal," Nixon may have hoped to sidestep opposition to his expected lackadaisical school desegregation stand.

Nixon could be paying his debts to all those southern politicians who helped get him elected. There is an element of Strom Thurmond, seasoned with an overdose of traditional southern conservatism, in the Nixon announcement

Two days after Nixon took office on January 22, we stated our expectations and fears concerning him:

"The President says that 'we are approaching the limits of what government alone can do. We must now enlist the legion of the concerned and the committed. Is it unfair to wonder, however, silently, if this represents an 'out' for the new administration on such vital issues as civil rights. fair housing and school inte-

"We wonder if this is a bone thrown to appease those political powers who would turn their backs on the high costs involved in achieving freedom from poverty for all Americans. We shall hold Mr. Nixon solidly to his promise 'to give life to what is the law."

Do not forget the law. Mr. Nixon. That was the main promise of your campaign. Remember. "law and order." Part of that law, Mr. Nixon, is justice and opportunity. It would prove to be more than tragic if you postpone that opportunity any longer.

extreme crisis. The International Education Act signed into law by President Johnson on October 29, 1966, has yet to be funded. Congressional allocations for 1969 with respect to international exchange programs have been slashed by an unprecedented 30 per cent-from $46 million to $31 million. Hardest hit was the Fulbright program, whose funds were reduced approximately 72 per cent. The Bureau of Education and Cultural Affairs, which oversees the exchange programs, has planned an overall geographic cut, and Western Europe, which traditionally has received the most grants, will experience the largest numerical cut. For example, the United States allocated $680,000 in 1968 to fund an exchange faculty program in Great Birtain. In 1969, there will be $136,000 for the Britain program--a cut of 80 per cent. Denmark, which has an appropriation of $380,000 in 1968, will receive only $40,000 for 1969. Other countries in Western Europe are affected in the same manner. By treaty with the countries involved, each agrees to match a part of the American contribution to the exchange program. It is hoped that the local government will match its contribution with the 1968 appropriation, rather than reducing it proportionately to the 1969 level. If not, the Fulbright Commission, which operates the program in 18 European countries, might be inclined to terminate the exchange programs rather than maintain them at a minimal level. In 1969, U.S. graduate students studying abroad and exchange faculty will be the group most seriously affected. These programs will be cut by more than 67 per cent. In addition, the number of foreign students studying in the U.S. will be reduced by approximate-

The overall squeeze on international education programs has been primarily due to the Vietnam war, the war on poverty and the balance of payments problem, as well as a traditional lack of sympathy by Congressmen for international education. Kenneth Holland. President of the Institute of International Education, perceived signs of an impending crisis in educational exchange when he wrote in the 1968 annual re-

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following "point port that "the burden of foreign committack national problems can, in the end, International education is in a state of prove short-sighted if it means the abandonment of our international interests and concerns.

The Federal Government, with the passage of the International Education Act, has already committed itself to international education as a major national policy. When President Johnson proposed the IEA to Congress in February 1966, he said, "Education lies at the heart of every nation's hopes and purposes. It must be at the heart of our international relations." In a subsequent report to Congress in August 1967. Presidiscontent in the scientific communities with respect to appropriations prompted President Nixon to add $10 million to the $480 million ceiling that had been placed on National Science Foundation research spending. Likewise. prominent organizations such as the Institute of International Education, Foreign Policy Assn., and the Experiment in International Living should coordinate their efforts and exert constant pressure on the new Congress to fund the IEA and to restore allocations to the Fulbright program to a decent level. More important, former Fulbright grantees and international centers on college campuses should make an herculean effort to support and preserve these programs. The Councils on World Affairs can play an important role in establishing a "hot line" to Washington by emphasizing the dent Johnson wrote, "The international exchange of students, teachers, scholars and leading specialists is one of the nation's most effective means for dispelling ignorance, prejudice and international suspicion." Congressional delay in funding the IEA has prevented the establishment of a Center for Educational Cooperation in the Department of Health. Education and Welfare, in which international education was to be emphasized as an integral part of our entire educational system. In not funding the IEA, Congress has halted the implementation of new programs in international affairs in the elementary and secondary schools, as well as comprehensive collegiate programs in international study at the undergraduate level. International education at home is essential if American education is to succeed in equipping Americans with the knowledge and guiding ideas they require to make sense of the world in which we live. Addressing the annual meeting of the American Council of Learned Societies, Distinguished Professor Robert F. Byrnes of Indiana University said. "It is senseless in 1968 for great universities, or even small colleges, to have large numbers of faculty members who do not . . . have a significant amount of information concerning at least one foreign culture and who do not take the entire world, its past as well as its future into consideration in research and instruction in their own discipline, whatever it may be.

Congressmen have been overwhelmed by the Vietnam issue, but they have been insensitive to the needs of supporting international education. If Americans had an understanding of Vietnamese history, its people and culture, we might not have intervened in their internal affairs. At least we might have been more cautious in formulating our Vietnam policy. But how many Vietnam specialists do we have in the academic community?

We have not yet, as a nation, devoted ourselves to international studies, and so we have not yet caught up with our responsibilities as a world leader. It is not through less communication, but through more, that we can insure either the strength and integrity of American education or the strength and integrity of American foreign policy.

A proposal to remedy the de-emphasis in international education is to establish an effective lobby in Washington, comparable to the American Medical Assn. and the National Rifle Assn. Private organizations which are involved in international education have traditionally acted as independent units and have been primarily concerned with their own particular programs instead of unifying their efforts. Recently, a deep groundswell of significance of international education in their respective communities. A full page ad in the New York Times headlining the funding crisis in international education and sponsored by the Institute of International Education. Foreign Policy Assn., former Fulbright grantees, local Councils of World Affairs and other sundry organizations might bring beneficial results. One method of funding international education programs would be to make greater use of the foreign currencies that have accumulated under the Food for Freedom programs. What is required is new legislation appropriating those surplus foreign currencies for use by the State Dept. to expand the exchange programs in Europe and Africa, as well as Asia.

If international education is to survive. it desperately needs a spokesman in Washington. If we are to meet today's demands for quality education, support and encouragement are necessary from the Federal Government. The Federal Government should re-think its responsibilities and obligations to international education. In addressing Congress, President Johnson stated. "we can not ignore international education . . . our national interest warrants it, the work of peace

Responding to a resolution by former U.S. Ambassador Arthur Goldberg, the United Nations proclaimed the year 1976 as "International Education Year." Gold berg stated that "such an observance 1970 could mobilize energies and inspir world-wide initiatives that would give this subject the priority it deserves." A milestone in this direction would be for Congress to fund the International Education Act, which it enacted in 1966, and to restore to the Fulbright program the 7 per cent slash in funds. It is now a funda mental and overwhelming fact of contemporary life that an education with out an international dimension is an inadequate education for Americans in this

During the presidential campaign Nixon developed a rather elaborate program to cope with the problems of the ghettos. He termed his principal program Black Capitalism. and offered it as a new approach to an old problem. Nixon, at least during the campaign, felt that the government should offer tax incentives to large privately owned companies to enable them to train and hire many jobless blacks. Nixon also proposed that black-owned and black-run businesses be set up in the ghettos and that the Small Business Administration be expanded in order to help accomplish this task. In addition. Nixon recommended the creation of a National Computer Job Bank, which would match up men seeking jobs with employers in need of employees.

In the area of education. the president suggested the establishment of a national Student-Teacher Corps. which would bring high school and college students into the ghettos as assistant teachers and tutors. He also recrecruit returning black veterans from Vietnam to study to become teachers.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following "point of view" was written by C.P. Larrowe, professor of economics and Chairman of the University Committee for Sharma. Unfortunately. Thursday's State News story about the public meeting in defense of Professor Sharma did not mention the most significant item that came out of the meeting. That was the resolution under which, if the grant is not reinstated by Wednesday, July 2, we will send a review of the Sharma affair to the 50 countries to which Fulbright recipients are planning to go. and to all Indian

The reason for the resolution is this: in our opinion, all the efforts of the administration to negotiate the reinstatement of the grant, all the protests by departments and individuals, have had no effect upon HEW (Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare). It is, of course, greatly to the credit of the MSU community that many have raised their voices in protest, and that actions have been taken that might, hopefully, have led to a reinstatement of the grant. Unfortunately, as of now there is no evidence that any of these efforts will be suc-

If. however, HEW has the wit to see the international incident our action might cause, the grant will be reinstated and the whole shabby affair can be forgotten. This is just an average day in the life of Fred Stabley, MSU Sports Information Director, proprietor of press boxes and All-American publicist.

In July, at the College Sports Information Directors of America convention in Chicago, Stabley will be formally inducted as a charter member of the CoSIDA Hall of Fame.

His selection comes as a surprise to no one. Fred is nationally recognized as one of the best in the field.

Stabley was recently honored at the College World Series games as having produced the best college baseball brochure in the nation this year. He was presented with the John H. MSU coach John Kobs.

Nixon vote proposal raises controversy

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The Nixon Administration proposed Thursday that when the 1965 Voting Rights Act expires it may be replaced with a nationwide ban on literacy tests and state residency requirements for presidential elec-

The proposal brought a prompt accusation from a Negro leader that the administration is trying to pay off a political debt to the South and in doing so is endangering blacks political gains. The 1965 act applies only to seven Southern states.

man for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), said the proposal is "a deadly way of thwarting progress' made by black voters in the up to a campaign pledge made chine. by President Nixon last year in his presidential campaign. He said Nixon, in a bid for Southern support, promised he would oppose any legislation aimed at a single region of the

As outlined by Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, the administration proposal would replace the 1965 voting law with legislation extending some of its provisions to all states.

"I cannot support what amounts to regional legislation," said the attorney general. He said circumstances have changed since the 1965 act was passed and that its continuation "would be unfair and unrealistic.

Chairman Emanuel Celler, D-NY.Y., said the administration bill "bristles difficulties" that would require long consideration by Congress. Meanwhile, he said, the 1965 act would expire and there would be no voting rights law.

Atty. Gen. Mitchell, who had left the hearing before most of the criticism of the bill was voiced, said there is no intention on the part of the administration to weaken the protection now given to blacks in the South.

We merely want to extend the benefits of this type of legislation to other parts of the country," he said.

However, the leading Republican spokesman on civil rights in the House. Rep. William M. McCulloch of Ohio disagreed with the attorney general's assessment of the bill.

This is a weaker voting rights act than the present one,' said McCulloch. He and most other GOP members of the subcommittee said they would continue to support extension of the 1965 act.

Both Celler and McCulloch. however, said after the 1965 act is extended they would be willing to fight for separate legislation dealing with the broader election reforms Mitchell recommended.

Before leaving the hearing with a promise to return for more questioning next Tuesday.

Glass bra fashionable 'living' end

WESTPORT. Conn. (AP) -For ladies who draw the line at the current see-through fashions, designer Roslyn Raum has a translucent next-best: a stained glass bra.

A stained glass bra? right! And why not? The nude look is here. The transparent look is here. And breastplates ranging from simple chain mail to ornate metal designs are here The "Tiffany bra," as Roslyn calls it, is made of stained glass pieces fused together by very

Plasma studied as birth control key

Scientists at the University of Georgia have isolated a substance in human seminal plasma which they think may hold the key to a completely new-and safe--approach to birth control.

This is what the 12-man team is studying.

During the woman's nonfertile time, the substance they have isolated prevents the removal of a surface layer from male sperm cells. During her fertile time, the substance is somehow destroyed in the uterus and the surface layer is removed from the sperm, enabling it to fertilize an egg. If a way can be found to keep the substance--called DF--at work during her fertile time, it would act as a birth control

The most widely used contraceptive pill now works by interrupting the female's reproductive cycle--sometimes with undesirable side effects.

'All our effort is directed toward finding a totally new contraceptive approach," said Dr. William L. Williams, one of the leading researchers on the team, which includes members from Australia, India, England and Holland.

The subject of their investigation is called "decapacitat- od of birth control, the decapaion factor" or DF. Its ex- citation factor would be entireistence in other mammals pre- ly safe. viously had been known to scientists but Williams says their team is the first to prove conclusively that it is present in human seminal fluids. DF, found in fluids that suran enzyme that is necessary for sperm penetration of the

DF--which prevents this removal process--is somehow destroyed during the fertility time. The scientists are looking for a way to block its destruction so that DF itself can stop the union of egg and sperm and unwanted pregnancy can be

Williams said that as a methway," he said.

"We know that we can isoround the sperm cells, inhibits late DF, but after that we must find out exactly what it is and eventually synthesize it. If we can get the substance into the Williams says that prior to oviduct, it will stop fertilizat. •

> The method of application of DF as a contraceptive agent is still in the formulative stage but Williams theorizes it could possibly be injectioned into the female blookstream, or by oral

Williams said it was only 18 years ago that scientists became fully aware that capacitation took place.

"When we started studying capacitation in 1962, there were only two groups in the world working in the field. Now there are 20," he said.
