Police seek tattooed man in Ann Arbor slayings case

YPSILANTI (UPI) -- A police net spread across the nation Monday for a tattooed young man with an alias to question him about the slayings of 11 young women in Michigan and California.

The investigation also reached across the border into Canada where Michigan police examined the murders of two other young women.

Police launched a nationwide manhunt for Andrew Manuel, 25, alias Richard Diaz, by issuing a warrant for his arrest Monday. Manuel, described as tall and burly, is a known acquaintance of John Norman Collins, the 22-year-old Eastern Michigan University (EMU) student charged with the slaying of the seventh young woman killed near this academic pocket of Michigan in the past two years.

Manuel and Collins are believed to have taken Collins' car and towed a trailer rented by Manuel to California in June and returned without the trailer in July. Four young women, three in the Salinas area and one near Claremont--were slain in California between June 23 and July 15. Salinas is about 100 miles south of San Francisco. Claremont is east of Los Angeles.

In Michigan, the sixth victim of a sadistic sex killer was murdered June 9. The seventh, Karen Sue Beineman, an 18year-old freshman at EMU in Ypsilanti. disappeared and was murdered July 23, and her sexually abused body, strangled and beaten beyond recognition, was found in a wooded ravine on the outskirts of

ABM debate by Senators nearing close

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Sen. George S. McGovern, D-S.C., said Monday the Safeguard missile defense system (ABM) could prove a political disaster for President Nixon.

McGovern said the issue might be as politically disastrous for Nixon as was the war in Vietnam for former President Lyndon B. Johnson.

As the Senate's month-long Safeguard debate neared a Wednesday showdown, Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., said the outcome is "still a

But Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen, R-Ill., said he believes Nixon's position will be upheld when the Senate votes Wednesday on an amendment to bar for the next year deployment of ABM facilities.

Sen. J.W. Fulbright, D-Ark., accusing the military of "playing fast and loose in politics," said the key issue in the Safeguard controversy is congressional control of defense spending. "I am reminded of a Damon Runyon character, a gangster from Detroit, who forced his friends at gunpoint to shoot craps with blank dice, pointing out that he remembered where the spots formerly were," Fulbright said. "Only Congress is in a position to put spots on the Pentagon's dice." said Fulbright, chairman of the Senate Foreign neighboring Ann Arbor, home of the University of Michigan, three days later.

The husky, square-jawed Collins has been charged with Miss Beineman's death. Police believe the 96-pound Grand Rapids girl was slain in the basement of the home of Collins' vacationing uncle--State Police Cpl. David Leik of the Ypsilanti post.

"My personal belief is that Collins did not act alone," Washtenaw County Sheriff Douglas Harvey said. "We hope there will be additional arrests very soon. The pieces in the puzzle seem to be fitting together."

The warrant against Manuel charged him with larceny by conversion for failing to return the 17-foot cargo trailer rented from an Ypsilanti firm. California police said they had located the trailer within the city limits of Salinas about a week ago, but waited for Michigan authorities to arrive before saying whether anything had been

Michigan authorities said they were "interested" enough in Manuel to seek his extradition if he is found in another state.*

The warrant described him as standing 6feet-l, weighing 235 pounds, dark complexioned with dark hair and brown eyes. On the left forearm is a tatto oresembling an

Manuel was last seen in the Ypsilanti area July 24. Mrs. Phyllis Runyon, 18, who lives in the apartment house where Manuel and his wife. Sue, lived, said she last saw him about one week ago. Separated from his wife. Manuel apparently visited her for brief periods. It was also disclosed that both Collins and Manuel worked for a time at the same plant, Motor Wheel Corp., in Ypsilanti. Manuel, an arc welder, worked the 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. shift and Collins, a part-time employe worked the 11 p.m. to 3 p.m. shift. Collins quit his job in June. Manuel left in May.

Two Michigan state police detectives flew to California to see if there was any link with the Salinas, and possibly Claremont, slavings and those in Michi-

Other Michigan detectives looked into two similar slavings in Ontario, whose border is some 30 miles from Ypsilanti. Though they refused to divulge any details of the slavings, police said they were investigating a tip to look at a cabin near Windsor, Ont., owned by Leik.

briefed congressional leaders Monday on his round-the-world trip and one of them quoted him as telling them more U.S. troops may be ordered out of Vietnam ths month.

Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen, R-Ill., said Nixon expressed "the evident belief that we'll probably have a further troop replacement and it could come probably before the end of this month..

Later, however, White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said, "No decision had been made on further troop replacements..." and an announcement will be made on the subject in the latter part of August.

Twenty-two members of Congress from both parties, along with Vice President tSpiro T. Agnew, attended the two-hour 40-minute session.

"He emphasized that there was a new shift" in Asian policy calling for increased self-reliance in Asian defense, Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., said.

Mansfield added he agrees with the basic premise of the policy announced by Nixon at Guam on July 25 as he began his Asian journey that took him to Thailand, Vietnam, India, Pakistan and then on to Romania and Britain.

Mansfield said general application of the policy, which the senator called the Guam Doctrine, will have to await an end of the Vietnam fighting.

Drafters see more changes in tax reform

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Drafters of the tax-reform bill say more changes are on the way-especially involving inheritances --even though the changes they already have written are probably the most sweeping ever.

The House Ways and Means Committee, in its report on the 168-page bill. said it is going back over the field of estate and gift taxes and expects to send more legislation to the House by next year.

Additional income tax problems also are due for more analysis and study the report said.

The question whether capital gains should continue to be tax-free when passed on by inheritance is believed high on the committee's continuing list.

The report does not promise further tax relief--but it does note that its revenue calculations do not take into account the normal increase in revenues from growth of the economy--a figure that could run about $10 billion a year in succeeding years.

it will be the doctrine which will guide our actions in the future," Mansfield said. The Nixon policy, he added, precludes U.S. intervention in cases of internal subversion in Asia.

On troop replacements, Dirksen said the word replacement means that South Vietnamese troops will be taking over from Americans.

Since Nixon ordered a pullout last June 8, 6,000 have left South Vietnam and the remainder of the first 25,000 are scheduled to be withdrawn by the end of this month. This will leave 515,000

U.S. troops in South Vietnam. Dirksen said the White House session would be involved in a new cut back. There had been speculation that it again will involve 25,000 men.

Dirksen said no specific information was disclosed but an indication that information "from private sources might be brought to bear" on the Paris peace

Ziegler said the President gave the congressional leaders the impressions he holds from each country visited. Generally, he said, Nixon emphasized that the United States intends to remain a power in the Pacific but believes the course in Asia should be made by Asians.

Ziegler said Nixon made these points:

-- The United States intends to keep its commitments in Asia but not expand

-- The military situation in Vietnam has been substantially improved. -- The Unied States objective is to end the war in such a way not to lead to further aggression. -- The President was gratified by the warm Romanian response and believes the trip worthwhile. -- The United States could not give strategic materials to countries supplying equipment to North Vietnam. -- The United States will not supply ground troops to Thailand and this position was accepted by Thai leaders.

THROUGH DEC. 31

House OKs compromise for limited surtax extension

WASHINGTON PAP)--The House sent President Nixon Monday an extension of the income tax surcharge through Dec. 31-easing, but not ending, his concern over his anti-inflation program.

The House voted, 237 to 170, for a compromise measure the Senate finally agreed on after a long wrangle. It continues the 10 per cent surtax for the rest of this year The vote sends the measure to the White House for certain, prompt signa-

But still dangling is the rest of Nixon's surtax request-extension at 5 per cent from Jan. 1 through June 30, 1970. This is wrapped into the mammoth tax reform bill the House is expected to pass Thursday, but which faces a protracted struggle in the Senate. There. the surtax will be only one of many targets for amendments. The vote Monday showed many Democrats still strongly opposed to the surtaxeven for only six months and even though one of the opponents' demands has been met by completion of a reform measure more sweeping than had been

On June 30, the House narrowly passed, 210 to 205, a bill combining a year's extension of the surtax and a few reform items. At that time, 56 Democrats and 154 Republicans voted for the bill; 179 Democrats and 26 Republicans against.

That bill died in the Senate.

While the shorter extension approved Monday picked up some Democratic support, the division in that party still was heavily adverse. For the bill were 85 Democrats and 152 Republicans; against 144 Democrats and 26 Republicans.

The surtax actually expired at midnight June 30, but payroll withholding at the surtax rate through last Thursday was extended by stopgap legislation. Then, with compromise in sight, employers were urged to continue on the same basis until Congress could wrap up the legislation.

The senior Republican member of the committee, Rep. John W. Burens, R-Wis., noted completion of committee action on the reform bill and said there is now "no excuse to hold the surtax as hostage.

Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., the Ways and Means chairman, read assurances from Secretary of the Treasury David M. Kennedy that the administration supports the reform measure--though it will try to modify some provisions in the Senate. But one of the Republicans who voted no. Rep. H. R. Gross of Iowa, complained that "instead of fiscal responsibility, there is fiscal quackery. Gross contined, "Until there is evidence that the proceeds of the surtax will not simply be shipped to Washington for spending and piling up deficits, I cannot and will not vote to extend the surtax.'

The tax extender legislation approved Monday actually was a rider which the Senate tacked on to a relatively minor House-passed bill--since the Senate traditionally does not originate tax measure. The bill is to speed up collection of taxes which support the state-federal unemployment insurance system.

Congress plans to work out an exensive revamping of this system later.

EDITORIALS Outmoded sheriffs need re-examination

The performance of the Washtenaw County Sheriff's Dept. in the search for the Ypsilanti strangler underscores the need for a re-examination of the institution of sheriff in general. Does the sheriff--and the county for that matterserve an indispensable purpose in this day and age, or has it become antiquated?

The sheriff system has its roots in feudal England where the primary local official was the shire-reeve. It was his duty to see that the people of the shire, fulfilled their obligations to the king under feudal law. The first English colonist to the new world brought with them this idea of the sheriff-county arrangement.

Through much of the pre-urban history of this country, the county system performed a valuable service. To a not highly mobile population in a sparcely settled land, it provided about the only efficent means of law-enforcement and governmental administration.

It is only in recent times that problems have arisen. A person's neighborhood is no longer restricted to the farm up the road. The growth of urban centers with large populations has caused the worth of the county to recede proportionate-

Single counties as a rule do not have the necessary funds to support an adequate police force. Lack of equipment and trained personnel was one of the primary handicaps of the Washtenaw County Sheriff's of the sheriff, is likewise counterproductive. The sheriff is elected not for his knowledge of police techniques, but because he is the political leader in the county.

Overlap of jurisdictions is another problem that has arisen recently. An extreme example is the MSU campus where an individual may have the option to be arrested by the FBI, the State Police, the Sheriff's Dept., the Township police, the East Lansing police or the campus Dept. of Public

One promising solution to the sheriff-county question is the idea of setting up regional agencies. Under this plan a number of counties or a metropolitan area would be consolidated into a single law-enforcement region. This would mean the creation of super-counties which, many believe, could handle the demands of today's highly mobile society. One example of a highly viable super-county is that offered by the Toronto, Ont., Metro scheme.

The election of the regional head of the police would allow the retention of a certain degree of local and popular control. Some sort of qualifying exam would insure that only individuals competent in police procedure would be elected to the office.

Local control and effectiveness would be retained under the regional plan and, at the same time, efficiency would be increased. Further, overlap of jurisdictions, which is often a problem under the present system would, under the regional plan, be reduced, if not removed entirely.

Black history exhibit: racism by omission

To the Editor:

Nearly three weeks ago, a group of some 100 inner-city kids visited the MSU Museum expressly to view a special exhibit entitled "Our Black Settlers in Michigan." Like most facets of University life, the exhibit epitomized the proverbial gesture called tokenism.

The exhibit consisted of a small showcase with a map of Michigan surrounded by seven small black figurines, each labled: minister, crusader, fur trader,

In the bottom of the case were found --unlabeled--a wooden shovel, a Bible, a hunting trap and a soldier's hat.

Of the two captions, neither mentioned, by name, any black settlers born in Michigan. Mention was made of Sojourner Truth--pioneer of the underground railroad and buried in Battle Creek. Although many of her courageous expeditions were led through Michigan, Sojourner Truth was born and raised in New

A look at the Museum as a whole reinforces the prevailing attitude held toward black people by those in charge of the museum.

The gallery containing a pictoral history of the wars in which the United States has engaged in, has not one picture of a black man, nor one word concerning the black man's efforts in any of the wars.

As a point in history and for the unaware, the black man has fought in every war that the United States has undertaken.

The gallery on Africa deals with witchcraft and African masks! What of the ancient highly civilized societies of Africa which were further advanced than any white society at the time? Of that, there is nothing.

After talking to the curator of the Museum and pointing out the obvious shortcomings of the black settlers exhibit. I was assured that a change would be made. Now three weeks later. I went to see the

The change consisted of: one picture of Sojourner Truth, one document on slavery from South Carolina--remember this is supposed to be on Michigan--and one picture of the first black settlers in Kalamazoo County.

All else was the same.

Not only is that an insult to the black community, but it also reflects a lack of professional ethic and professional creativity on the part of those historians, anthropologists, artists and anyone else responsible for the exhibit.

The exhibit was neither interesting nor informative, and if the curator and anyone else responsible for this damning indictment of the black settlers in Michigan feels that they were making strides in enlightening the populace and hence in a small sense alleviating prejudice. they need to reconsider their efforts and take their exhibit and their ignorance up the the second floor where the rest of the prehistoric and antiquated artifacts re-

My point is this: The Museum is not responsible to me, the black community as a whole or the white community. Its responsibility lies to history--a true and unbiased representation of history--neither diluted to the point of obscurity, nor omitted to the point of racism by omission. At present the MSU Museum has both.

Half-term voted out

To the Editor

An editorial in the issue of 29 July asks, "Whatever became of the second half-term?" The simple answer is that the Academic Council voted it out as a temporary action pending the establishment of an eight-week term. I argued with vigor and at some length against terminating the second session.

However, I got virtually no support either from faculty or student represent-

My contention was that it was impossible to get enough teachers willing to sacrifice their vacation and teach a full 10 weeks. On the other hand, some departments. English for one, who have offered courses in the second five-week session have always been able to staff

It therefore seemed to me that having two five week sessions is a far more efficient way of meeting student and faculty needs than putting all the eggs in the one 10-week basket Unfortunately, nobody agreed with me. Some student group willing to undertake the labor could perform a valuable service by finding out just what are the needs for full term work. Some questions such a group might look into are: is one session, eight or 10 weeks, superior to two fives? How many of the staff are willing to teach a five-week session, an eight week session, a 10 week session? Can the longer session, eight or 10 weeks, be staffed with teachers of equal competence and experience with those offering the courses in the regular sessions?

WALTER ADAMS From the desk of the president

It appears that Giacomo Leopardi has become a candidate for M.S.U. President (State News, July 23, p. 3). What is your assessment of his strengths Giacomo Leopardi has long served--and with distinction--on the unofficial faculty of Michigan State University. Indeed, he has headed our program in Etruscan languages which has received little attention locally, but in some regions of Italy enjoys the highest repute and approbation.

Professor Leopardi is currently abroad--as he so frequently is--doing research on a Lopresti Foundation grant. (Incidentally, no U.S. taxpayer or private dollar funds are involved in his support, and he is located far from the sensitive Alto Adige area in the north which some Austrians want to repatriate from the Italian government.)

While it is against my principles to deprecate a rank-and-file professor (or break a colleague's rice bowl), I must confess that Dr. Leopardi has simply not spent enough time on this campus to be able to deal effectively with the multifarious constituencies of the presidential office--i.e., restless students, contentious faculty, harassed administrators, cantakerous trustees, inquisitive legislators, and a muckraking State News. Leopardi's greatest contribution will continue to be research and scholarship rather than top-level administration.

Old rules inhibit search for college presidents

Reprinted from the Chicago Tribune Magazine By Carl W. Larsen

At this moment, some 300 mature and respected institutions of higher learningpublic and private, church-related and nonsectarian, big and small-are looking for new presidents. And at the same time 200 junior college systems are also also seeking chief executives, most of them at princely salaries.

But despite the urgent need to fill the vacancy and the sometimes fanatic craving of the man to get the job, some strange rules inhibit the recruitment of college presidents.

By tradition, the search must be shrouded in secrecy. If anyone turns down the job, this fact must be concealed lest the position lose its attraction for the next cadidate on the trustees' list. No one posts any "help wanted" signs on the American campus--except for buildings and grounds personnel. Such advertising would be considered gauche, and so, too, would be the man or woman brash enough to apply for a job as college president.

You are asked to serve, never hired. You seldom resign; you "take a new and challenging opportunity.'

For various reasons-a better job somewhere else, retirement, sickness, even incompetence-the contagion of turnover infects college presidents with same virulence and regularity that it mows down baseball man-Everyone identified with a university wants a pennant winner just as much as the sports fans do. Each new college president comes to his envied job in an aura of expectations and promises. But he soon discovers a host of frustrations lurking behind his modern desk in an office which previously had projected only an image of Gothic tranquility.

He first confronts a diverse and often discontented faculty. Behind them in disorderly array stand the sophomoric students demanding a piece of the action, nostalgic alumni opposed to change, and conservative and powerful trustees. He becomes embroiled in the feuding of town vs. gown, in tight budgets and in Washington's changing attitude toward the support of this program or that.

Finally, the new president is welcomed and scrutinized by the "old team" of second-echelon staff members. These may be dedicated and loyal, but they have a reputation for 'mediocrity' because the faculty have denigrated their status on campus. They are the people who can make the campus bureaucracy move, provided they get leadership from the trustees, the senior administrators, the loval alumni, and those few faculty members who remain dedicated to the institution. Often the president views such senior aids as threats, when, in fact, they can become his strong right arm.

The college presidency can offer a profitable and prestigious job, to the right man at the right time. It conveys instant community status and even an oblique entry into the Establishment, but not always. Salaries are good ($30,000 to $65,000) and the prerequisites often both impressive and abundant (free house, free travel, free meals, free parties, free club memberships, free tuition at any school for his children, and plenty of free

Truly, the American college presidency presents a challenge worthy of the renaissance man might soon grow bored with the parade of mundane problems -- whether to turn the footbal field into an alumni parking lot, who gets the profits from the vending machines in the student dormitories, who pays for the annual faculty wives' tea. Rarely will be found time to tackle such substantial questions as curriculum planning, building bigger libraries, raising faculty salaries, improving financial aid for students, and encouraging bright young assistant professors to publish rather than

No formal job description has ever defined the college presidency. The candidate, of course, must possess the accepted academic credentials (that union card of academe, the Ph.D., is usually required). His wife must be attractive, discreet, and willing to entertain graciously, day in and day out, people she has never seen before and may never see again.

It has been suggested that universities might be improved if only there existed a college for college presidents. A few schools of education have set up courses in educational adminis-. tration, but their alumni seldom if ever get to captain a Harvard, a Yale, a Chicago, or a Berkeley. So the nation's colleges and universities are generally directed by men and women engaged in on-the-job trining. This tradition, if regrettable, is probably unavoidable.

"Shop at Sears for Your Next College President" is the title of a satirical article in the March, 1967, issue of "College and University Business." Written by Robert C. Townsend, former president of Avis Rent-a-Car, it proposes that colleges seek their presidents among the managers of the 10 nearest and biggest Sears stores. "Chances are that they would be good at the job," Townsend said. He continues: "The poor management and poor leadership of colleges can be blamed on a faulty process for selecting presidents." Trustees normally pick them. "When you work in a committee," Allan Sherman once wrote, "you wind up with what's left after everybody's fears have been subtracted." Conventionally, trustees say to themselves, "We want a man who is a brilliant leader, a gifted fundraiser, and, of course, a Ph.D.'

Presently they discover they can't find these qualities in one man, so they settle for the Ph.D.

It has been calculated that the active life span of the college president averages about eight years. Some stay longer; others bow out even before they have given their first commencement address. Sociologist William Sewell resigned after only 10 months as chancellor of the University of Wisconsin at Madison to resume the quiet life of a professor. During his brief tenure, Sewell had been confronted with an anti-napalm riot, a

In recent months, trustees, faculty, and levan, and Stanford universities; the Universities of Hawaii, Kentucky, Maine, and Oregon; and Bowdoin. Briarcliff, Denison, Goddard, and

Mary Baldwin colleges

Each of them will find he has bitte off a sinewy mouthful. The college presidency is not a 9-to-5 job. Typically the day starts over breakfast with a faculty committee studying book store operations. An hour later, at the office, the president wades through a pile of letters from alumni, faculty, parents, students, and others, each of whom he must answer. And because a university is made up of intelligent critics who like to write, memoranda flood in from various academic departments. Lunch, at the faculty club or in the city, may be concerned with the problems of urban

The afternoon begins with a bright young physicist who might be wooed from Harvard or Cal Tech if he feels he is truly wanted. ## Finance post open in administration

Not every MSU administrative vacancy is filled amid fanfare and full press cov-

While the Quest for MSU's president continues and speculations flow thick and fast about what sort of man he will be, the office of vice president for business and finance--just as functional but not quite as colorful--is also due to be filled.

MSU Board of Trustees Chairman Don Stevens said the office will not be filled until the new president is chosen.

"It clearly states in the bylaws that the board chooses the vice president for business and finance on the recommendation of the president." he said.

Acting President Adams had requested that the new president offer a recommendation for the vice presidential post rather than making one himself, Stevens

There will be no student-faculty committee involved in the selection process.

--how does he view the administrative structure?

--what style would he use in running --does he see the University as a live participant in the real world, or should the University remain aloof? -- How does he think universities should be handling the present youth generation? -- What is his personality like?

-- Does he have "charisma"? -- Is he dynamic?

After a group of committee members interviews a candidate, they report orally to the rest of the committee.

"Then they write these comments down and present a jointly-agreed-upon report of the interview," Hathaway said.

Hathaway said some of the candidates that looked good to the committee on paper--in terms of biographical data--really disappointed the committee when they were interviewed.

"It's inevitable," Hathaway commented. AUSSC still has candidates to interview. "Some of these are awfully good, but we don't know yet if we will be able to interview them," Hathaway said.

"I don't view it as probable that someone would go on the final list that we hadn't talked to personally," he added.

Do any of the candidates express concern about any weaknesses with MSU?

"Every person we've interviewed so far has had a terrific respect for MSU." Hathaway said. "They regard MSU as one of the greatest challenges in higher educa-

The new Mercedes-Benz 220 Diesel: "So economical it doesn't even use gasoline!"

Some machines just won't quit. Mercedes-Benz pioneered the Diesel-powered passenger car in 1936. In the 32 years since, Mercedes-Benz has built over half-a-million

The latest version of this incredibly durable motor car is the new 220 Diesel. It's not priced as low as ordinary economy cars, yet

Diesels, and 87% are still running.

it could save you more money in the long run than the flimsiest little economy car you could buy. It sips inexpensive Diesel fuel at a miserly rate that could cut your fuel bills in half! Its rugged Diesel powerplant has no spark plugs, no points, no condenser, no distributor, not even a carburetor to repair or replace.

Its life expectancy may be measured in hundreds of thousands of miles. One owner in Stockholm recently started his second million

The 220 Diesel's all-new engine is so quiet that your passengers may be surprised to learn they've been riding in a Diesel, yet it has more than enough power to cruise at 80 (where the law allows).

Happily, the 220 Diesel does not subscribe to the "sardine can" school of economy car design. There is room for 5 adults and their luggage. And that handsome body is made up of over 90 heavy-gauge steel panels and an all-steel chassis frame welded together at 10,000 points to squelch squeaks and rattles

Critics have said the 220 Diesel is "overengineered." A welcome excess, says Mercedes-Benz. Why don't you see for yourself? The new 220 Diesel is on display in our showroom now. Come in for a demonstration drive

It is said that a new breed of college presidents is rising, young and active, with a concern for corporate affairs and with interests that reach far beyond the campus. Whether the conservative faculty members, the anti-business students, and the alumni will accept them remains to be seen. The power of the college president is becoming diluted if ever, indeed, was solid. Sidney Hook, chairman of the Dept. of Philosophy at New York University, recently observed:

It also gave him his share accident of timing.'

WASHINGTON (AP)--Government critic and consumer advocate Ralph Nader asserted Monday the Interior Dept. is suppressing a report on harmful environmental effects of underground mining, "so as not to discomfort or expose the coal industry to public criticism.'

The principal official involved in holding back the report," Nader said, "is Mr. Hollis Dole, asst. secretary for Nader made the allegations and quoted what he said were excerpts from the report in a letter to Undersecretary Russell E. Train. He urged Train to "prevail upon your department" to release the report.

Dole's deputy, Gene P. Morrell, said Dole had not seen the letter but that his response to the allegations as described to him was that he "didn't know what Nader was talking about." Train could not be reached immediately.

Nader's letter said the department had prepared a 240page report entitled "Environmental Effects of Underground Mining and of Mineral Processing," meeting an April 1 deadline set by former President Lyndon B. Johnson, but has not released it.
