AUSSC members, trustees challenge White's evaluation

By MARILYN PATTERSON State News Staff Writer

Two trustees and two members of the All-University Search and Selection Committee (AUSSC) rebuked Tuesday a statement by Trustee Clair White, D-Bay City, that AUSSC has been a failure.

A third trustee said he agreed with White.

In a statement made Monday, White said the committee had been dominated by four power groups, that it had outmaneuvered and outvoted student representatives and that it had "done a hatchet job" on Acting President Adams by eliminating him from consideration for the presidency. "I attended every meeting of the committee," Dozier Thornton, black faculty representative to the committee, said, and I was not aware of these (power struggles). The statement was incorrect from the point of view of what I saw happen in the committee, although it may not be incorrect from Trustee White's pont of view.

Walt Chappell, AUSSC graduate student representative, said any power struggles within the committee were of a more conservative versus liberal strain than among the four interests White cited. White said the powers were the Alumni Assn., the Colleges of Agriculture and Education and the Dept. of

As a student representative, Chappell said he had "strong concerns about students being treated on double

'But when attempts at this were made, we let them (the other members of the committee) know. We worked out our problems.

Adams "definitely was considered as a candidate for the presidency and may still be," he said. The possibility still exists that the trustees may choose him. Trustee Blanche Martin, D-East Lansing, said the committee has made an honest attempt to get the man best

'It's hard for me to tell if the students have been outmaneuvered not having sat in on the committee's deliberations.

Don Stevens, D-Okemos and chairman of the board of trustees, said he does not 'share any of his (White's) views.' He declined further comment

Warren Huff, D-Plymouth, said he does agree that there is a power struggle within the committee.

The faculty did want to control selection of the president and, if possible, name him," Huff said. "I agree also gious academician who would emphasize graduate programs and de-emphasize un dergraduate programs. The faculty has fairly well controlled the committee. The committee has, he said, been very critical of Adams and, "I don't know how to characterize it any other way (than a 'hatchet job.')

The committee has not fulfilled its charge, as outlined in the Taylor Report, in that it "did not determine the kind of man we are looking for.

"They're looking for a chief academic officer. I'm looking for a president.'

The four candidates on the recommended list are "all qualified academicians, but I don't know if they are qualified to be president," he said.

Czech crowds protest soviet invasion symbols

PRAGUE (AP)--Armored units swept into Wenceslas Square Tuesday and helped riot police with clubs and tear gas to clear the National Museum and St. Wenceslas Statue, symbols of protest against Soviet occupation.

Police used tear gas after charging with clubs into the crowds. The square finally was cleared of all but police.

About 12 armored personnel carriers and police water cannon rolled into the historic square as city police swung their truncheons to clear a crowd away from the statue and museum.

Shouts of "Gestapo" were heard in the crowd as it retreated down the broad square after the show of military

The armored units appeared after an army helicopter had circled downtown Prague, watching the rush-hour crowd gather on both sides of the square to stare sullenly at the statue and museum.

About 20 armed policemen and soldiers were in the area of the statue and museum, enforcing a ban against crowds at the statue, in the center of the street. Uniformed members of the People's Militia, the Communist Party's private army, mingled among the crowds.

Addressing the party workers in Prague. Husak said the Czechoslovak people were unprepared and shocked by the entry of Soviet and other Warsaw Pact troops because they "had been operated on by right-wing propaganda" and because then-party chief Alexander Dubcek and his associates had withheld information on that they would like to have a prestidealings with Moscow.

Michigan Daily rebuked for published candidate list

By LINDA GORTMAKER

Sunday Editor A list of three men that the Michigan Daily reported Saturday to be candidates for MSU's presidency is erroneous, according to two trustees and two members of the search and selection committee. The story from the University of Michigan (U-M) newspaper stated that "sources" said the three candidates were Paul Miller, former MSU provost; James Miller, president of Western Michigan University; and G. Mennen Williams, former governor of Michigan.

"No, that is not the list," said Dozier Thornton, vice chairman of the search and selection committee. Sue Gebelein, undergraduate representative on the committee agreed with him.

"They were all wrong," Don Stevens, chairman of the board of trustees, said. "I think they just pulled those names out of the air. The Daily was not cor-

Stevens speculated that either the reporter who wrote the tory (Pat Mahonev) took someone's word that he was an authentic source, or else guessed.

Warren Huff, D-Plymouth, agreed that that was not the list, but called the candidates on the Daily's list "pretty good names that make a plausible list.

Marcy Abramson, co-editor of the Daily this summer, said Mahoney assimilated information from an Associated Press story that came over the wire Friday. He also talked to someone on the search and selection committee, she said.

Mahonev could not be reached for comment Tuesday, but Chris Steele, Daily co-editor, said, "I have no reason to mistrust what he said. One member of the search and selection committee who asked to remain three candidates were on the final list. Miss Abramson said that originally Acting President Adams was on the Daily's list, but since the State News reported Friday that Adams was not on the list, his name was dropped.

AP SURVEY

South's school districts eye integration increase

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP)--About onethird of the black pupils in the 11 Southern states will attend classes with white pupils in the school year that begins in September, an Associated Press

Five years ago the figure was 1.2 per cent. In the 1968-1969 school term it was 20 per cent

"I think we'll see the greatest leap yet this year." said a federal official. But whether it will be a great leap or a short limp will depend on how local school officials carry out their plans or the orders of the federal courts.

This fall had been set as a deadline for abolishing dual school systems.

But the deadline, like others before it, died--victim of slow strangulation by stubborn resistance in many districts and finished off by a top-level Nixon Administration decision against "rigid" deadlines and a shift to the judiciary

This present system--one step forward, one step backward and then a shift from side to side--will not integrate our schools," said black leader Marvin Davies of St. Petersburg, Fla.

A state-by-state look at integration:

ALABAMA--The three-judge federal panel has ordered extensive changes. complete desegregation by the 1970-71 school term in 23 systems. Modification of the freedom-of-choice plans was ordered, including a black-white faculty ratio based on population. An estimated 17 to 20 per cent of black pupils in Alabama would attend integrated schools, compared with about 7.4 last year.

ARKANSAS--Of 215 districts with white and black pupils, 105 were considered unitary systems with 29 more filing approved plans for integration this fall, 20 more for 1970-71, and an estimated 50 per cent integration this fall. There were 21 districts involved in the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW noncompliance actions, including 11 funds terminations. Districts under court FLORIDA--Some increase expected in integration, rising to 30 per cent or more. Five counties "fully desegregated," three ineligible for federal aid. 16 under court order.

GEORGIA--Lawsuit filed against state officials by Justice Dept. Seventy-one of 192 districts involved in HEW noncompliance processes, 36 of which have lost federal aid. Complying systems will boost integration from 10.6 to 18.5, exclusive of court order districts, according to HEW.

Life's a stream of tears for migrants' children

By TRINKA CLINE Executive Editor

Amy's tears begin between 7 and 9 each morning as she waits for the school

Her tears are also shed throughout her day at a school that's little more than a babysitting facility. Amy's tears and cries "I want my mommy" continue between 4 and 6 p.m., after she returns home and before her mother returns home from work. She wanders through the rows of small, inadequately lighted and ventilated "houses" of thin walls. She doesn't see much of her mother after 6 p.m. either. Mother has to wash up, fix dinner, clean up and then it's bedtime, and up again to return to the pickle fields. Life is a stream of tears for this worker. Her parents are among the 80,000 seasonal farm workers who journey-mostly from Texas, some from Floridato Michigan each summer to help harvest this state's $152 million fruit and vegetable crop.

Systematically excluded by laws covering wages and benefits for the average American worker, virtually unaware of what rights they do have, backed by inadequately funded agencies to defend those rights, the Mexican-American, black or Puerto Rican migrant is caught in the stagnant cycle of poverty.

And in the words of the Michigan Civil Rights Commission (CMRC), "They hoe, prune and pick. Most of all they pick . . . strawberries, cherries peaches, melons, pickles, apples, tomatoes and other fruits and vegetables. They will continue to pick until they can find other opportunities for employment or until mechanical harvesters replace them. The latter is likely to come faster than the former. And that is the problem."

Noting the components of that problem-the conditions of living and working these people face--the MCRC makes the numerous recommendations all too clearly needed and all too clearly avoided by those with vested interests.

It is difficult to convince a grower to invest a significant amount in the ugly, poorly lighted, poorly ventilated, terribly small sheet-metal or plywood structures that migrants must call "home" during their summer in Michigan.

Growers Lose Money In a few years, the growers will have no need for migrants; it's a waste of money to most of them. The cards are stacked against needed legislation, especially in this great state. A biting story in the Detroit Free Press

Monday, part of a series on the migrant problem, disclosed that Sen. Charles Zollar, R-Benton Harbor, comes from a district with growers employing a higher number of migrants than any other county--Zollar is also a grower.

And Zollar is chairman of the powerful Senate Appropriations Committee. And his committee has kept an eye out for legislation damaging to growers and has killed it, by failing to report it out of committee.

Migrants--approximately 65 per cent Mexican--American and 12 to 20 per cent black and Puerto Rican-and their plight are virtually invisible to the average American as he selects his fruits and vegetables from the shelves of his store. In the case of Amy's parents and the other 1,500 migrant families now working in the tri-county area of Ionia, Montcalm and Gratiot, the product is pickles. They may work directly for companies, or for small growers who sub-contract with the larger farmers.

Problems Unknown

Even the majority of people living in areas now heavy with migrant labor know little of the workers' problems. Most people today complain about high food prices. The MCRC notes, however, that a smaller percentage of the American dollar goes to food than did in 1947.

or than does in any other country. Migrants, then, are living testimony that those comparatively low prices have come at least partially at the expense of human lives. Someone else has gone hungry, without minimal medical care. without running water, without a bathroom only a few steps away. Not everyone is blind to the situation, but their numbers are few, their resources small. Those agencies whose job it is to stop the exploitation and waste of human breath are understaffed and underequipped. The Health Dept. labor canp unit cannot physically inspect all camps across the state with a staff of only 16, some of them only seasonal. Violations go unchecked.

Bad Health, Pay

The labor camp unit can hire local health personnel to do the inspections. Also, violations are only normal misdemeanors and thus handled in the local courts. Both provisions for "local" help invite cronyism. Many growers are merely touched with petty fines of $10-20. If you've lived next door to "Mac" for 20 years, it's easy to overlook a few glaring deficiencies in that report

Migrants are indeed legally paid below the minimum wage law; questioned by the MCRC, the Dept. of Labor acknowledged that those workers on the piece-rate scale can be paid less. Even the most diligent worker ("diligent" is the official basis of the piece-rate) can fall below the minimum in early or late harvest when the crops are sparse.

Hurricane Debbie attacked

ROOSEVELT ROADS. Puerto Rico (AP)--An attempt to tame Hurricane Debbie has been termed a success from an operational standpoint, but there were no signs that the hurricane had been weakened.

Dr. Cecil R. Gentry, touched down late Monday night and pronounced his mission a "huge operational success."

Debbie, whose winds are still blowing at 100 miles an hour, probably will be attacked again Wednesday.

The season's fourth storm showed no obvious effect from to limit the island to those Monday's massive barrage of silver iodide crystals fired into her eye wall. Nor did she give any signs of following her vicious sister, Camille, to U.S. shores, as she howled along a northwest tract 600 miles east-northeast of San Juan and 750 miles southeast of Bermuda.

> Gentry said the mission was successful operationally in that all planes and men performed without incident and a record amount of data was collected.

will be needed before any conclusions can be made. He emphasized that taming the hurricane was only one goal. The all-day hurricane seeding and reconnaissance mission was a joint effort of the U.S. Commerce Dept. and the Navy

Soviet naval strength in the Mediterranean was at a record high Tuesday and U.S. officials were puzzled over the reason for the buildup.

A U.S. spokesman said 63 to 65 Soviet ships had been counted in the Mediterranean, outnumbering the more powerful U.S. Sixth Fleet.

The same officials said the increased Soviet presence posed an atuomatic threat, but they added they are not overly concerned.

Hundreds of American reinforcements poured into a battle near Da Nang Tuesday to relieve two U.S. infantry companies badly battered in the biggest ground fighting in northern South Vietnam since the enemy launched its fall offensive last week.

At least 15 Americans were killed and 50 wounded when the infantry ran into an estimated 1,200 North Vietnamese troops.

President Judge Bernard C. Brominski said a motion on behalf of the parents, who are opposed to an autopsy, had been filed by attorneys for the Kopechnes.

A federal judge in Chattanooga, Tenn., ordered the government Tuesday to furnish the transcript of a bugged conversation between a top witness at Teamster's Union President James R. Hoffa's jury tampering trial and another Teamsters official convicted with Hoffa.

The transcript is to be used as evidence in a Supreme Court ordered hearing into Hoffa's conviction in 1964.

W. Averell Harriman, former chief U.S. negitiator in the Paris Peace talks, say the Soviet Union helped "in smoothing the road" for the talks and wants the war ended.

Harriman also criticized the Nixon Administration for failing to take advantage of the recent lull in the fighting in South Vietnam.

Voters in Sand City, Calif., flocked to the town's single polling place Tuesday as both sides predicted victory in a hippie-inspired recall election to oust business-minded city leaders.

Senate schedule upset

WASHINGTON (AP) -- One offshoot of Clement F. Haynsworth's nomination to be a Supreme Court justice is to upset the timetable for Senate action on a constitutional amendment to overhaul the presidential election system.

Immediately after President Nixon announced Haynsworth's nomination Monday, Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, set Sept. 9 for a hearing on it.

This is the same date the committee previously had set to vote on the nominations of three judges for the 9th U.S. Circult Court

1. Take up a bill to provide a limited antitrust exemption for joint newspaper publishing agreements, and go on immediately to:

2. Consider proposed constitutional amendments to abolish or revise the electoral college system.

Perpetuating poverty with Charley Zollars

We have neglected a people. Because of their toil and perspiration, this state does a multi-million dollar business in fruits and vegetables every year, but we have forgotten those whose efforts have made it possible.

A people have suffered because of politics and weak laws which have done little for the pickers, and much for the growers

Because of the politicking of men like Sen. Charley Zollar, we have played havoc with the human needs of migrant workers. Wages become "piecework", a means of extracting more labor for less money. Toilets become a luxury, housing a corrugated steel room, and all while Charley Zollar takes $2.000 vacations to Mackinac Island on state funds.

Charley is chairman of the powerful Senate Appropriations Committee. Three measures which would have aided migrants died in his committee this year.

Charley is a senator from Berrien, Cass and part of St. Joseph counties--all big farming areas. Charley is also a grower. Charley farms strawberries and nursery stocks and his camp is no better, no worse than others in the area.

Last year Charley defended the expenditure of $3,000 to $5,000 to refurnish a lounge for senators. The new lounge, measuring 12 by 25 feet, is larger than the cabins Charley provides for his workers.

But he also killed a bill to appropriate $80,000 to establish two overnight rest camps for migrants in southwestern Michigan.

Another bill Charley killed asked for state payment of non-resident hospital expenses under the Medicaid act if the workers home states refused to reimburse the State of Michigan.

When the U.S. Supreme Court struck down the one-year residency requirement for welfare recipients. Charley trumpeted that "It is a tragedy, indeed, that the federal government continues to shove things like this down the throats of taxpayers when they're trying to get out from under their oppressive burdens."

Meanwhile, the burdens of migrants include a pay system that withholds money from employes unless the worker stays as long as the grower wants him to work: wages so low that children must work along side their parents, a little girl who toils all day in the hot sun for 50 cents an hour; a lack of even the most basic human needs such as toilets, so that often workers must urinate in the fields in the presence of other laborers.

And all while Charley objects to bills as simple as the one requiring each camp to provide "central refrigeration" so workers could at least eat fresh food

The list of legislation Charley has blocked drags on and on, a procession of efforts to perpetuate the profits of growers while denying the needs of workers. Charley wouldn't even buy a measure that required a first aid facility in each camp.

Charley Zollar is an example of a senator who will be insured re-election because he has catered to the whims and washes of a powerful special interest group in his district.

After all, migrants won't be around long enough to vote for senators. Besides, they're only people, and they're not Charley's people. Charley's people are the growers, like himself, who will perpetuate the subhuman conditions of migrant laborers so long as Charley Zollars wield political power.

Why the draft should go

EDITOR'S NOTE: This article is the second of a two-part series by John Swomley Jr., reprinted from The Nation.

Some political leaders have claimed that foreign policy changes must come first, including big-power agreements for disarmament only then, they say, will nations be secure enough to end the draft. Such a position assumes that nations want disarmament, or that foreign policy is changed independently of the military capabilities of nations. Military power is one of the most decisive factors influencing foreign policy It is the ability of the United States to garrison other nations and invade, with or without invitation, nations such as Vietnam and the Dominican Republic that makes possible the dominance known as the Pax Americana. Such actions can be undertaken with or without the draft. But the draft, even in stand-by form, gives the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the President a blank check on the nation's manpower to escalate any overseas action into a major war without Congressional approval. It thus helps determine foreign policy.

If we assume, first, that nations will ever negotiate disarmament and, second, that the draft is essential to real military strength, then a vigorous campaign to repeal the draft would be an important way of telling those in power to begin serious negotiation toward an international abolition of conscription. Any way one looks at it. foreign policy and military policy are intertwined: both must be changed. Support of the foreign policy goals of the militaryindustrial complex necessarily implies whatever means are essential for such support, such as access to unlimited manpower via the draft. Likewise, support of the means, including a blank check on manpower, nuclear weapons, etc., is support of the goals of those who can use these means.

Leaders who are disinclined to talk disarmament say the United States needs the draft until such time as we work out binding treaty arrangements with China and the Soviet Union, since these nations are the chief source of potential military threat. Even if the United States were to draft its every man. woman and child we would be outnumbered by the Chinese millions: no military man suggests the draft as a way to subdue either China or Russia. Nuclear weapons, missiles, submarines, contol of air, seas, etc., are much more in the minds of military strategists than land warfare against more densely populated nations with larger land areas. The proposal that we need the draft until we work out agreements with China and Russia is an excuse, not a reason, We have made little or no effort to explore the overtures of these nations toward nonaggression pacts or other treaties decreasing tensions.

Sometimes racists and sometimes liberals, for differing reasons, claim that a volunteer army would probably in time be all black, since black youth is denied access to other jobs with decent pay and turns in increasing numbers to the Army. This argument is based on the fact that the black reenlistment rate is currently higher than the white. But white initial enlistment is higher than black even at existing pay rates. If higher pay for recruits were authorized, the Army would attract ample numbers of young white men as well as those from other racial groups.

Still another argument against ending the draft is the idea that a volunteer army is better trained, shows higher morale and a greater eagerness to fight, and is, therefore, a greater threat to world peace. The level of training is determined by length of enlistment. If a man is drafted for two years and re-enlists, is he more of a threat to world peace than he was when a draftee? If so, this is an argument not for the draft but against re-enlistment, and for requiring the armed forces to discharge everyone before they can develop a vested interest in war. No advocate of the draft seriously suggests ending all voluntary re-enlistment or enlistment. In fact, the Air Force and Navy are built with volunteers and the Army relies chiefly on re-enlistments.

Finally, it is claimed that the injustice and inequity of the draft can be corrected by modifying rather than repealing the law. Against this is the argument that a lottery or any other chance approach is not more equitable than human decision. The lottery, whatever its impersonal values, has two serious defects. First, it assumes that inequality of treatment is the primary defect of the draft and that the national or world interest is served best by disregarding a man's abilities, education and potential when forcing him to enter the Army. The second weakness in present lottery proposals is the camouflage it provides for a traditional army demand. The Army has always wanted boys in their teen age years, when they are most malleable and least able to resist complete regimentation. Liberals in Congress are now offering teen agers to the Army under the guise of an "equitable" lottery instead of via the more naked military formula of the younger the better.

Actually, the draft can never be equitable because some will be drafted and others not: of those who are drafted some are sent to battle and others remain in safer areas. Some are killed in battle: others not. The fundamental injustice is that a man who is compelled to enter the Army feels a loss of freedom. The American system of freedom, insofar as it operates in employment, is one of persuading or inducing persons to engage in work rather than in compelling them to do so. It is a cardinal point in our religious faith as well as our democratic philosophy that ultimate values reside in the individual human being. The idea that the individual must be subjected to the state, or that compulsory "service" is preferable to a voluntary society. contributes to the alienation of young people. The power to reach into every family, to take a boy from his home and subject him to complete military discipline for months or years is the most serious limitation America places

In the final analysis, the issue is freedom, rather than equality under compulsion.

By ARNOLD WERNER, M.D.

To take advantage of the relatively infrequent price reductions on milk in area super markets, my wife and I buy milk in batches of 20 to 40 half gallons when these sales do occur. This, of course, necessitates freezing some of the milk for up to two weeks before it gets used. We use fortified skim, and once thawed, it doesn't have any bad taste. Neither does drinking it seem to have any ill effect on us. Is there any harm in continuing this practice? Does freezing milk change or eliminate the vitamin D or calcium content?

You have struck upon a perfectly safe way to knocking down your grocery bill. There is no bacteriological danger from drinking such milk. I assume that you freeze the milk in the original carton which remains unopened. Needless to say, this should not be tried with bottles of mlik, as the bottles would burst. There is no alteration in calcium content and the vitamin D is probably unharmed. There is the likelihood that this technique would not work as well with whole milk. The reduced fat content in the skimmed milk results in a much smaller degree of separation of the milk components. The major problem in freezing milk has been the separation of milk protein (casein) which is then rather difficult to redissolve on thawing. Apparently you have not had this trouble.

Milk producers have been experimenting with freezing whole milk. If this becomes commercially feasible, then milk could be transported long distances by rail to areas where milk production is low.

Another effective money saver is the use of non-fat dry milk. If the taste is acceptable to you, you will find that it costs less than half the price of the fortified skimmed milk. A note of caution: under most circumstances, skimmed milk should not be used in formulas for infants. Growing babies need whole milk.

I am 20 years old and single. My boy-friend and I have been having sexual relations for a year now (weekends only, since he goes to another school). I love him very much, but am very concerned about being frigid. I have never had an orgasm from intercourse alone. I have had orgasms as a result of clitoral masturbation. My boyfriend never touches my clitoris. I have tried to have a climax with him, but I feel no different. Is there something wrong with me? Am I undersexed?

There is most likely nothing wrong with you, nor are you under-sexed. Faulty sexual technique is a much greater possibility than frigidity. Sexual technique, like much complex behavior, is learned. This fact is conveniently denied and the majority of women in this country derive meager gratification from sexual relations. Along with their partners, they carry the legacy of inhibition which prevents them from asking questions as simple as yours. You and your boyfriend can benefit from an excellent and inexpensive book on the subject: 1 Doctor Speaks on Sexual Expression in Marriage, by Donald W. Hastings, M.D., Bantam Books, 1967. The other day I felt a soft, dull thud a short distance above my left temple. Now when I touch that place, a tightening, tingling sensation spreads out along the scalp several inches. What was the probable cause? (A snapped nerve or blood vessel, maybe?) Is there any cause for concern?

Your question raises many questions. Did the soft dull thud follow any hard sharp thuds in the recent past, such as one caused by a golf ball, a corner of a table, etc.? Another question is: Do you have any other symptoms and, how old are you? If you are over 50, you may have a condition called temporal arteritis. This is an inflammation of the temporal artery which usually gets better slowly but which is accompanied by headaches and a tender spot over the inflamed area as well as general feelings of malaise If you belong to a vounger age group, it's possible your baseball cap shrunk. Snapping nerves are folklore and a burst blood vessel would dramatically make itself known. It would be wise to see your physician for an examination. Treatment may be needed for what ails you.

Of truth, God and infinity

It seems to me that the basic act of living is an attempt to flee from life. No-body can assume the singular identity of being a living entity—they have an overpowering drive to segregate themselves off into little bundles of ritual that mask their inner energy.

The "straight" man hides in a success bag. He plunges mindlessly through college so that he can get a good job, so he can score a lot of bucks, so he can get a fine car and a nice pad, so that he can prove that he is a meaningful being so what? Proof is not necessary—that fact that one is alive ought to be proof of worth enough.

And the "freak" seeks identity and worth by a negation of the "straight" life. And what kind of proof is found in a negation? Only that one is not something not that one is anything. Self-righteously the hipster sits in his room and smokes some rope and thinks how worthy he has become in his renunciation.

He also is running from life. He is proving himself by his hair and his Indian philosophy and his stone raps. And he is proving only that he has shut his mind to the power that pervades the universe. He is out of touch with the true singular reality: the flow of the energy of life through all things. He loves flowers and trees but he can't dig the cops—and they are alive, too.

By far the worse mind-isolating device is religion (in the sectarian sense). The Baptists believe that only they are going to "heaven," the Catholics also, and the Moslem, and so on. Ritualized faith is the ultimate denial of life-it separates us from our gods-from ourselves.

If God-Brahma-Allah is the creator and ruler of the universe, then it follows that He-It is infinite—how could a finite being create an infinite cosmos? In terms of infinity, all things are possible and, therefore, are. The myriad paths of men toward divinity are, therefore, equally valid.

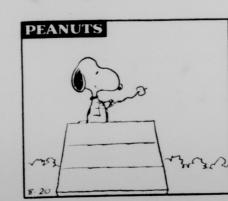

The basic essence of all relgions is the same: life is holy and divine. Thus spoke the Jesus and Mohamet and Siddhartha and Confucius and all the other sages that have arisen in this world. It was the people that came later, the St. Pauls and others, who gave these messages difference. They could not quite comprehend what the Sage said, they reeled at infinity and altered the Word to finite terms. And finitude is an invention of man denying his immortal essence. They removed the message of life from its wellspring: life.

There is only one truth, one reality: life which is infinity which is God. There are no quantitative or qualitative distinctions. There is only one substance and that is life. There are no differences, for when one is everything there can be no second.

This is the elemental truth that we flee from, and I cannot understand why. Is society so demanding that we must deny the divinity in all things? Is infinity so staggering that we must hide in finite boxes? Is life so terrifying that we cannot bear to live?

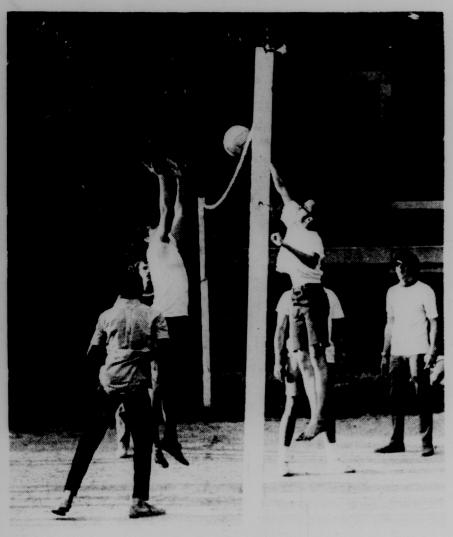

I do not know the answer. Do you?
