AUSSC gives recognition to faculty petition for Adams

By BARBARA PARNES
State News Staff Writer

The All-University Search and Selection Committee (AUSSC) has acknowledged receipt of the over 900 signature faculty petition supporting Acting President Adams.

Dale Hathaway, chairman of AUSSC, said that while acknowledging the petition, the Search and Selection Committee has no plans to meet with representatives of the faculty committee for Adams, headed by John P. Henderson, professor of economics.

"We have earlier taken the position that we don't meet with advocates of any candidate," Hathaway said.

He said the Search and Selection Committee is "meeting virtually every day" in its attempt to find a permanent president for the University.

But Hathaway refused to name a date on which the University community can faculty, students and others will be considered," he said.

Stevens said he was "impressed" by the widespread support of deans, department heads and distinguished faculty award winners in the Henderson committee petitions.

"It's a good cross-section of support from the faculty. There's no question that he has wide student support. And many of the most distinguished citizens in Michigan have come out in support of Adams," Stevens said.

"And from my own point of view, I have always rated him among the best available for the office."

Both Stevens and Hathaway said they believe the next president will be chosen in accordance with the procedures set down in the Taylor Report.

"I have faith that the guidelines will be followed," Hathaway said.

"It is my view that he will be chosen according to those procedures. It will be best for the University if he is," Stevens said.

expect to know the name of its permanent president.

"I think Jean Dixon might be in a better position to say that," he said.

AUSSC began considering additional candidates for the position following the unanimous passage of a resolution Sept. 10 by the trustees asking the Search and Selection Committee to come up with more names in addition to the four names submitted to the trustees Aug. 14.

At their last meeting with AUSSC Sept. 18, the trustees recommended Adams, former Gov. G. Mennen Williams, Jack Breslin, University secretary, and Durward Varner, chancellor of Oakland University for consideration.

Hathaway said AUSSC is considering these names, and others. He said the committee may start interviewing new candidates for the position.

MSU board of trustees' chairman Don Stevens, D-Okemos, said Monday that no date has been set for the next meeting of the trustees with AUSSC.

"We haven't had any word from the Search and Selection Committee," Stevens said. "The ball is in their hands and they'll have to toss it back to us."

Stevens said if AUSSC does not contact him about an earlier meeting, the trustees may suggest a meeting on Oct. 16 or 17 at the time of the regular monthly board meeting.

Stevens said he believes the Search and Selection Committee will consider the recent petitions and statements of support for Adams in naming additional candidates.

"I think the Search and Selection Committee is giving great study to all the candidates and I think the opinions of Representative Jim Brown, R-Okemos, has joined the ground swell of persons urging the MSU Board of Trustees to select Acting President Adams as full-time president of the University.

Although he said MSU, as an autonomous institution, must not be subjected to legislative interference, Brown noted that the University is in his legislative district and for this reason he was eager that the selection be made quickly.

Brown sent a letter to MSU Board of Trustees chairman Don Stevens, saying "If you seek a logical president, look about you."

He praised Adams as "being extremely well-qualified to head the MSU administration. Dr. Adams has proven on various occasions as Acting President of Michigan State University that he can handle the job."

"He has the respect of student and faculty and an awareness of the obligation a great university has to the people," Brown continued. "He has the practical know-how of finance and human relations."

He is more acceptable than anyone on the selection list, Brown said, even though he admitted he has not agreed with Adams in every case.

The Okemos legislator has criticized Adams for his handling of a student confrontation.

But, it would take "someone from out-of-state at least two years to become acclimated to one university, and we don't have that much time," Brown warned.

"If MSU is to continue to be effective, it must have a leader who is aware of the area and the problems involved — now, Dr. Adams is MSU-oriented and, as such, the most acceptable candidate."

CIA concern for secrecy saved Berets

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) feared testimony at the Green Beret murder trials would have "blown the cover" of secrecy on some of its key agents and destroyed their usefulness.

The CIA refused to say anything about its action, but congressional sources said this was why the CIA barred its people from appearing as witnesses before Army courts that were to have tried six Special Forces officers on charges of murdering an alleged Vietnamese double agent.

Secretary of the Army Stanley R. Resor cited this CIA refusal Monday when he dismissed all charges against the Green Berets. Resor said the defendants could not receive a fair trial under those circumstances.

Capitol Hill sources familiar with the CIA's thinking said the overriding consideration was protection of its agents in the field.

"There are seasoned intelligence officers out there with 20 years or more of experience," said one source.

"The government has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to train them."

"Their careers and their usefulness would have been pretty well shot if they had been required to appear in court and answer lawyers' questions about their background and their activities."

Although Resor had decreed open trial sessions, he had made it possible for the courts to close their proceedings to public view when sensitive security matters arose.

However, these sources said the CIA had little faith that the identity of the agents and their testimony would be kept secret, even under such safeguards.

According to this view, it would be impossible to have a truly secret session with the presence of civilian defense attorneys. The sources suggested the CIA felt some of those attorneys might talk publicly later about what transpired behind closed doors.

"It's impossible to keep anything really secret if there are more than two people in a room," a source said.

The role of the CIA in the alleged execution of the Vietnamese man is cloudy. Some defense lawyers have contended the CIA ordered the man's execution, but CIA sources have denied this, saying the agency had no command authority.

According to the CIA version, its agent suggested to the Green Berets that the suspected double agent be turned over to the South Vietnamese.

Congress unenthusiastic about draft lottery proposal

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird got a cool reception Tuesday when he tried to persuade Congress that a draft lottery is the fairest way to let young men know their callup prospects.

Rep. F. Edward Hebert, D-La., chairman of a special house subcommittee hearing President Nixon's proposal, said the difference between the lottery and a plan the President could establish without congressional approval is "tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee."

The lottery plan would still leave most young men guessing as to just when they might be called, Hebert said.

And he said removal of the present congressional ban against a lottery—which is all Nixon asks—would give the President "a blank check" to abandon the lottery proposal and establish any system he likes. "It would be a wide open game," Hebert said.

Laird said the lottery would be the fairest and simplest way to reduce the present seven-year draft-risk period to one year. He said its need is particularly urgent in view of administration hopes to significantly cut draft calls in the months ahead.

Reduced draft calls as a result of scaling down Vietnam troop levels and seeking more volunteer soldiers would raise the probable callup age and thus extend the period of draft uncertainty.

Under the Nixon plan, the 365 days of the coming year would be scrambled and drawn. Men whose 19th birthdays fall on the first dates drawn would be the first called, starting the following January. Birth dates drawn last would likely escape the draft entirely.

But committee members including Hebert and Rep. Samuel S. Stratton, D-N.Y., said a man who drew a middle number, like 260, could only guess when he might be called or what his chances were of escaping the draft.

Rep. Alexander Pirnie, R-N.Y., pressed the long-standing argument that removal of draft uncertainty might reduce the motivation to enlist or join ROTC, National Guard and reserve units.

Asst. Secretary of Defense Roger T. Kelley said the lottery system's impact on the volunteer programs would work both ways.

A man who drew a high number might be less motivated to enlist, he said, but a man who drew a low number—and thus high draft susceptibility—would be even more inclined to enlist or join one of the volunteer programs.

Hebert indicated a preference for the "moving age group" system Nixon has said he will establish by executive order if Congress does not permit the lottery system.

6,000 American troops to leave Thailand bases

SIAGON (AP)—The withdrawal of American troops from the Southeast Asia cauldron gained momentum Tuesday with the disclosure of plans to pull 6,000 soldiers and airmen out of Thailand and the departure of 1,000 more Marines from South Vietnam.

Announcement of the impending U.S. troop reduction in Thailand came in a joint communique from United States and Thai leaders in Bangkok. It was much larger than had been expected. Earlier reports said 1,500 of the 49,000 American military personnel would be withdrawn through negotiations initiated by the Thai government.

President Nixon has ordered 60,000 American troops withdrawn from South Vietnam by Dec. 15. More than 25,000 already have left.

The 6,000 American servicemen are to be out of Thailand by next July, but the first units will leave within a few weeks. Other troops will follow "as expeditiously as possible, consistent with operation requirements related to the Vietnam conflict," the Thai-U.S. communique said.

The withdrawals will leave U.S. military strength at 484,000 in South Vietnam and 43,000 in Thailand.

The Thai government, sensitive to congressional criticism in the United States that American troops might be drawn into Thailand's border clashes with guerrillas, asked for talks on a cut in the force.

Although there are some American military advisers working with Thai units, the bulk of the U.S. troops are at six Air Force bases where bombing runs are staged against North Vietnamese infiltration routes through Laos. Informed sources say about 126 sorties—flights by single planes—are mounted out of Thailand daily.

Of the 49,000 U.S. troops in Thailand, 36,000 are Air Force, 12,000 are Army support troops and 1,000 are military advisers. There was no information on what troops would be included in those to be withdrawn.

Milliken to air school reform

By LARRY LEE
State News Staff Writer

The Governor's Commission on Educational Reform has recommended aid to non-public schools, a uniform statewide property tax and abolishment of the State Board of Education, it was learned Tuesday.

Gov. Milliken will sketch the report for Michigan citizens tonight on statewide television.

The commission calls for two Constitutional amendments to implement its proposals. A spokesman for the governor said if approved by the legislature, it could put Michigan in the forefront in elementary and secondary education.

"No other state has moved or proposed to move this far," he said.

The commission recommended a constitutional amendment to establish the state property tax. If established, the tax would replace the local property taxes, but the assessment and collection would still take place on the local levels.

The money would be sent to Lansing where it would be redistributed to local districts. The average operating millage in the state is now 24 mills and 75 per cent of the pupils attend districts assessing at more than 20 mills. If the state-wide property tax were initiated, the average tax rate would drop, but it is not known by how much.

The spokesman said that most legislators recognize the advantage of taxing on a statewide millage rate, rather than locally. He added the governor is reasonably confident that the proposal will get on to the ballot.

However, the deductions allowed from the property tax would cause the state income tax to go up.

The commission also suggested aid to non-public schools, not to exceed 2 per cent of the total public school budget, which at the present rate is $36 million. They also recommended paying lay teachers in non-public schools 75 per cent of their salaries by the 1972-73 school year.

IN EDUCATION

Ryan backs reform

House Speaker William Ryan, D-Detroit, said Tuesday that while he agrees with the basic thrust of the report of the Governor's Commission on Educational Reform, he thinks that it "needs development."

"It states areas of action, but it is very general," he said. He also warned that some things "are not achievable" and would not come about as the commission hoped.

He cited the statewide property tax, which he said needs "more direction," as one of those things.

Some legislators will criticize it for being "too centralized," he added, and combined with the miscellaneous parts of give and take, it is going to be hard to try to sell the program to many of the legislators.

"Republicans and some Democrats are going to kick up quite a storm," he said. Many of the Republican members are from districts where school millages are below the state average.

"But also, one from a district levying 33 mills said he objects because after figuring the increase in income tax, citizens would be paying more," Ryan said.

At the same time, the legislator was concerned that local policy could be superseded by the newly-created regional boards.

The Faculty Club was given a few inside tips on the prospects of the football season when Duffy Daugherty appeared as their guest speaker. Duffy said that this year's team has great potential and spirit, with his job attempting to build that spirit throughout the entire week for Saturday's game.

Duffy previews '69 season

By DELORES MAJOR
State News Staff Writer

MSU football coach, Duffy Daugherty, shared football stories and previewed the 1969 football season with members of the MSU Faculty Club at a luncheon Tuesday.

The coach said that although this year's team is a good one, he isn't ready to rank it with the teams MSU had a few years back.

"But I won't admit that they don't have the potential," he said.

"They have the spirit, the desire, exuberance and enthusiasm for a great team. I have great hopes for them," Daugherty said.

Daugherty made some observations on next Saturday's game when MSU faces Notre Dame.

Unlike some past seasons, he said, this year both teams were rated about the same, adding that "both teams have potential."

Daugherty stressed the point that the most important part of a football team is the mental attitude of the players.

"You've got to prepare the players mentally and physically all week long," the coach said, "all year long."

"Football games are between two teams, and the team who wants to win usually does," Daugherty said.

He said that the MSU Stadium's new turf provided better traction than natural turf.

He said that the benefits of the new turf would be more evident "when we play a game in bad weather."

"The players are able to run faster on this, and that makes for a better game," he said.

The coach added that the teams adapt quickly to the new turf, and said the only drawback is that the artificial turf retains heat.

"On warm fall days it can really be bad, because it's usually 15 degrees warmer on the field," he said.

Faculty for Adams eye AUSSC list

The faculty committee supporting Acting President Adams is petitioning to have Adams' name added to the list of All-University Search and Selection Committee (AUSSC) candidates, John P. Henderson, chairman of the committee said.

Some confusion has resulted from reports that the petitions urged an immediate naming of Adams as permanent president, thereby passing over the work of AUSSC.

Henderson, a professor of economics, stressed that those signing the petition were rather, upholding the AUSSC procedures. Signers are requesting that AUSSC add Adams to its list of candidates.

Adams' administrative ability has emerged throughout his tenure as acting president, Henderson said.

"When Adams entered that Administration Bldg., everyone was against him," he said. "With minor exception, the deans were against him, too."

In the beginning, Adams ran a one-man show, Henderson said. During the Placement Bureau confrontation, for instance, Adams handled demonstrators by himself, without the help of the Dean of Students Office.

But this summer, the University's involvement in the Sharma affair was handled almost entirely by Milton Meulder, vice president for research and development, he said.

The strike before the beginning of fall term was handled primarily by (Jack) Breslin (University secretary) and (Roger) Wilkinson, (acting vice president for business and finance, Henderson said. Adams stayed in the background but has united his administrative team behind him.

West German's tiny Free Democratic party decided Tuesday to give Willy Brandt's Social Democratic party first crack at forming a new coalition government.

But the mini-opposition group, main loser in Sunday's Bundestag election, kept the door open for a possible alliance with Chancellor Kurt George Kiesinger's Christian Democrats, still the country's strongest party.

The liberal Free Democrat leader, Walter Scheel, told newsmen that the party leadership, with a few exceptions, voted "to negotiate first with the Social Democratic party."

Scotland Yard conceded defeat Tuesday in its bid to get black policemen for an integrated force, because immigrants won't serve.

"There is nothing we can do if colored applicants do not come forward," said Chief Supt. Kenneth Lee, who heads the yard's community relations branch.

"It would seem that colored boys are afraid that if they join the police they will be shunned by their fellows."

President Nixon, who got less than half the votes cast in the 1968 election, lent his support Tuesday to legislation providing for election of the president by a direct popular vote.

He endorsed the proposed constitutional amendment passed earlier this month by the House and urged the Senate to adopt it.

Acting Majority Leader Edward M. Kennedy and Minority Leader Hugh Scott expressed hope that the measure can pass the Senate this year by the required two-thirds margin.

To become the 26th Amendment to the Constitution, the election reform must be ratified by the legislatures of 38 states, a formidable obstacle to its becoming law in time for the 1972 general election.

After 17 years on the launching pad, pay television entered the final countdown Tuesday for a December launching—unless Congress decides to call the whole thing off.

The U.S. Court of Appeals, in a crucial decision, upheld the authority of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to permit television broadcasts that can be received in the home only upon payment of a fee.

The FCC rules are already in effect and the commission has said it would start authorizing pay-TV operations 60 days after a court decision, unless Congress intervenes.

As approved by the FCC, a pay-TV station would broadcast a scrambled signal that could be converted into a picture on a home received only with the aid of a decoder, for a fee.

AFL-CIO leaders said Tuesday in Atlantic City that President Nixon's "blunderbuss" policies of tight money and high interest have failed to halt inflation and threaten to plunge the nation's economy into a recession.

"The government's restrictive policies, tight money and unprecedented high interest rates contribute to rising living costs, hit residential construction and threaten rising unemployment and recession," they said.

"These policies of general restraint are dangerously wrong," said a report by the 29-man policy-making executive council of the 13.6-million-member labor federation.

A small group of dissidents at Detroit Northern High School, unable to stir up a massive student protest even with the help of a fire alarm, marched, instead, on the board of education headquarters Tuesday.

There they presented a host of demands—ranging from barring all police from the inner city campus to replacing all pictures of whites at the school with portraits of black leaders such as Malcolm X, H. Rap Brown and Stokely Carmichael.

School administrators promised to "look at" the demands, but no time was set for another meeting.

A power failure hit two of Detroit's biggest office buildings Tuesday morning, but the only persons seriously affected were secretaries who had no juice for their electric typewriters.

Lights blinked out about 7:30 a.m. at the General Motors Corp., World Headquarters and across the street at the 28-story Fisher Bldg.

The Detroit Edison Co., supplier of electricity to both office complexes, said the two failures were a freak coincidence. The trouble at the Fisher Bldg. was caused by a power company cable failure, Edison said, but the fault at GM lay in internal equipment.

Actions of AUSSC concern originators

By BARBARA FARNES
State News Staff Writer

The effectiveness of the All-University Search and Selection Committee (AUSSC) will depend on the man chosen to fill MSU's presidency, one member of the committee which designed the search and selection process said Tuesday.

Harold L. Sadoff, professor of microbiology and public health and member of the Ad Hoc Committee for Selecting the Chief Academic Officers of the University, (the Taylor committee), said people will "tend to forget processes but remember individuals."

"In the final analysis," he said, "the success or failure of this committee (AUSSC) is going to depend on the man they select and how effective he is."

Sadoff, as a writer of the Taylor Report, which created AUSSC, said he never expected the search and selection process to proceed the way it has.

"As far as I'm concerned, I never foresaw that there would be this kind of political shenanigans involved," he said. "I never anticipated this kind of political football game."

"I thought there were built into the Taylor Report certain safeguards against this political football, but obviously it was an

Donald J. Montgomery, chairman of the Dept. of Metallurgy, Mechanics and Materials Science and a member of the Taylor Committee, described AUSSC as "a necessary experiment."

Montgomery, also a member of AUSSC, said he thought from the beginning the Search and Selection Committee would have "more trouble than we're having now."

"We had near unanimity on the original list of candidates," he said. "I didn't think we'd even have that."

"I thought it would take a year, and it still might," he added.

Montgomery said some criticism of the Search and Selection Committee's operations may be valid.

"My personal feeling is that in our attempt to protect the candidates and ourselves from outside pressure, we perhaps may have been unduly careful in trying to preserve the confidentiality of all information," he said.

In response to reports that some trustees may abandon the procedures outlined in the Taylor Report, Montgomery said he is hopeful the trustees will continue to follow the guidelines set down. "The board has the constitutional right not to follow the procedures outlined in the Taylor Report," he said. "I hope, however, in the long range interest of the University, they will follow them."

"This will increase the effectiveness of the University functioning by sharing some of their (the trustees') power with the rest of the academic community," Montgomery added.

Richard L. Featherstone, chairman of the Dept. of Administration and Higher Education and member of the Taylor Committee, said he had hoped AUSSC would be done by September.

Democracy, Featherstone said, is the major problem holding up the selection process.

"When people try to use all of the competencies of all of the people available, it takes a lot longer than with just a few people," he said.

"But I would not want it with just a few people," he added.

Charles C. Killingsworth, professor of labor and industrial relations and a member of the Taylor Committee, said any attempt by the trustees to work outside the selection guidelines would be "unfortunate."

"This whole process was worked out with great care with the Taylor Committee and the trustees. We were given to understand that the board of trustees accepted the letter and spirit of the report," he said.

U-M back to normal after strike try fizzles

The University of Michigan (U-M) returned to normal Tuesday after a strike protesting the U-M administration's policy regarding a proposed bookstore failed Monday.

See related story, page 7

After having their numbers reduced from 500 to less than 100, the picketers gathered in Regents Plaza Monday night to discuss future action.

The leaders of the strike said that the purpose of Monday night's meeting was to "give the board of regents a chance" to change their minds about how the bookstore should be run.

U-M officials replied that it was "highly unlikely" that the regents would hold an emergency session. The regents are next scheduled to meet Oct. 16-17.

The bookstore issue mushroomed into a major student-police confrontation last Thursday night when 108 demonstrators were arrested in the Literature, Science and Arts Bldg. after a 14-hour sit-in.

Angered by the arrests and the refusal of the regents to negotiate their demands, strike leaders urged a boycott of classes on Monday, in which less than 10 per cent of U-M's 37,000 students participated.

The most important of the students' demands was complete student-faculty control of the bookstore, rather than university control with a student-faculty advisory committee, as approved by the regents.

A lesson from England

Presided over by the winged figure of Eros, god of love, hundreds of students from all over the world gather everyday in the heart of London to sit and philosophize while watching the teeming city life go by.

The attraction of this Piccadilly Circus haven is part of the attraction all of England has for young people today and the reason it is becoming a world hangout for students.

Why England and not America?

In a sense, England stands for much of what students are demanding in the United States today—such things as caring for one's fellow man, individual prerogative and non-violence. Almost invariably an American visiting England finds the contrast with his own country obvious and embarrassing.

Where the average American will let the rat race get the best of him, the British remain good-tempered and polite. And an Englishman is willing to give his help in circumstances where an American probably would not take the time.

For instance, a shopkeeper who sees a tourist confused with pounds and shillings will often take time out to explain the British monetary system. If it's a question of how to get to Westminster Abbey from Trafalgar Square, a stranger is never lost long—he might even find himself escorted!

Even during rush hour in the subway, the British never shove or get impatient.

In a crowd one day there was a little boy in a hurry to get on the train.

"Don't push, dear," his mother said.

"But we'll miss the train!" the lad protested.

"No we won't," the mother replied, "and if we do, there will be another one along."

Would it happen in a New York subway?

When a small dog dashed in front of an English lorry and was unavoidably hit, the driver got out, wrapped the dog up while a concerned crowd offered suggestions, and then took the animal to be cared for. Would an American driver even stop?

Violence is never romanticized by the British and consequently one can walk almost anywhere, day or night, without fear in England. Policemen carry no guns.

In addition to the gentleness of English civilization, there exists a respect among men and the belief that the business of life should never transcend human values. Tranquility is more important than corporation profits. With a small protest, and a few letters to a newspaper, citizens have stopped objectionable government and big business plans. In England, one can still win a fight with city hall. This is especially attractive to Americans, who feel the whole country could stand on its head in protest and still find ABM's in their backyards.

In many ways England is more liberal than the United States. Abortion is legal. Fashion more free. Art more experimental and tolerance more prevalent. Still, England remains rational on issues big and small, while America gives way to near hysteria over race, poverty and war.

While America's problems may be more severe, she has not yet been forced to try to adjust gracefully to dwindling world power. England has succeeded in this difficult task, while forced to live among memories of a much grander past. And now she has become a leader in new ways—fashion, theatre and movies, the arts—and has captured the admiration of the youth of the world of the world.

America could stand to take some lessons from her mother country.

Dare we stop saying it?

Bring the war home. Give peace a chance. Support our boys in Vietnam—get them out.

Sure, we've heard it all before. A thousand times, from every imaginable character in every conceivable situation. From long-haired hippies to ivy leaved professors. From white haired grandmothers to bubblegum chewing teeny boppers.

We've even heard it from our government occasionally—usually whenever it has proven to be politically expedient, 'cause that's the way the game's played. Keep your eye on the election you come up for next year.

But mainly we've heard about the war from students. It was students, you remember, who first questioned the futility and ugliness of war in Vietnam.

So we've heard it all and said it all and what's the use, because it really hasn't made much difference, has it? The war has become an institution, and Huntley-Brinkley's casualty reports every Thursday night have become as much a part of routine as the commercials.

But do we dare stop saying it?

On Oct. 15, we have a chance to say it all again, and undoubtedly hear much the same things we've been rapping about for a number of years—maybe with a new twist, maybe from a new source, but in the end still the same message; we must get out.

But above all, the moratorium will be a chance for us to transcend the institutionalized complacency with which we all too often view the war. Oct. 15 is an opportunity to force the stark realities involved into our consciousness.

On "business as usual" Wednesday we shall have a chance to get involved, a chance to weed from our minds the continual hassle of hourlies and 8 a.m. lectures, which certainly resumetomorrow regardless of what we do today. They can wait a day, but the urgency of the war must for one day take precedence over routine "business as usual."

Above all, don't use the one day suspension of normal activity as an excuse to catch up on the sleep you lost the weekend before. Use it to tell your fellow man what you've only listened to for too long. Use it to feed your head.

On Oct. 15, take a break for peace. Sure, you've heard it all before, but this time why don't you try doing the rapping?

Making our collective voice heard

Criticism has been mounting recently against what some have termed "pressure tactics" in the form of petitions by students and faculty on the issue of MSU president.

Certain people, notably a few professors, view the petition drives currently being conducted as hampering the Search and Selection Committee's ability to select names for submission to the trustees.

As Dena C. Cederquist, chairman, Dept. of Foods and Nutrition, said in a letter to The State News yesterday, "Pressures are being applied to the board (of trustees) by labor groups, political parties, faculty and student groups . . . a faculty petition is as inappropriate a pressure tactic as is a political party petition."

While it would certainly be unfortunate if a president were chosen out of pressure, pressure, nonetheless, has already been applied to the board from every group which has, or thinks it has, a vested interest in the University.

Pressure from labor groups, political groups and Daughters of the American Revolution should be viewed by the trustees as immaterial when the time comes to choose a president.

This is not the case, however, with the wishes of students and faculty. It is, after all, these groups who shall most be affected by the trustees' decision.

Nor do we see student and faculty petitions as coercion or pressure placed upon the trustees. It must be remembered that it is the Search and Selection Committee who is being petitioned to consider various prospective candidates, not the board. We see this as being completely within the framework of the Taylor Report. Search and selection is, above all, a sounding board for student and faculty opinion. We are merely attempting to insure that our collective voices are heard by the committee. The petition drives are a communication between students and faculty and the Committee, not a usurpation of the committee's power.

The petition drives began because we have not been insured that the trustees will choose to name one of the Search and Selection Committee's recommended candidates. Indeed, since the original list of four was turned back to the committee by the board, we have very little insurance they will follow the committee's recommendations.

We are doing nothing more than insuring that our voices are heard. We can ill-afford to sit idle while the most important decision this University faces is reached without regard to student or faculty sentiment.

THE DOCTOR'S BAG

Letters may be addressed to Dr. Werner at 309 Linton Hall. Names need not be included for publication, but only if a personal reply is requested.

You describe the phenomena of deja vu. This specialized form of memory function is seen in a variety of conditions, but is mainly a common occurrence in the normal person. It is particularly common in younger people who daydream a lot.

Often, it is merely indicative of being in a situation that has some unrecognized stimuli that calls to mind a previous situation which is not consciously recalled in its entirety. The previous situation may not be recalled because of conflicts associated with it. It can represent a means of not dealing with a current problem and when this reaches its extreme form, it is usually evidence of unrealistic thinking suggestive of the need for psychiatric consultation. Deja vu is a close relative of deja entendu which describes the same phenomena related to having heard things before. I would choose to have either of these compared to jaimais vu, which refers to being in a situation that you've been in before and not remembering it.

Everybody's a dealer-man

Just about everybody I know is some kind of dealer—and every one has his own private angle.

One fellow had the Guitar Deal down to a small science. Just about sundown of every day he would station himself in front of the Union on the steps with his guitar in hand. And after about a half hour's aimless plucking, he would invariably be surrounded by a crowd of teeny-bops and proto-groups. And soon thereafter, one of the group would always condescend to accompany him to his place so that he could show her a few interesting chord progressions.

Another cat had the Dope Deal, variation one through nine, down cold. Every so often after a relative period of celibacy, he would come running into the Union looking all wild-eyed and spaced out. Then he would slowly scrutinize the available material and, having chosen a target, he would stumble up and say: "Hey baby, wanna go smoke some dope?" And I was continually astounded at how well it worked—at least until he got busted.

And then there's the Cerebral Deal, which is really tough to pull off but insidious in action. I really can't tell too much about it because I never could get it all down, but it has something to do with quoting great philosophers and going about with a cool scowl on one's face.

There are numerous more examples that I can think of, but I don't think that it's necessary to relate them all.

Anyway, I got to thinking about all this stuff—I mean, why is every ever-loving being on this planet going around trying to make some kind of time? I think its got something to do with the very nature of the human condition.

It's like we are all composed of the same life-force—we are all truly kindred spirits and we know it. We want to have a touching of souls, a mingling of energies to reassure ourselves that we are not alone, but we are trapped in a cage of bone and tissue. We need the knowledge that there are others which are really us so that we may thereby define ourselves in the universe. We must have the Selves of other people to use as mirrors in which to recognize ourselves.

And we aren't beings of pure energy capable of this ultimate intermingling, so we try to do the best we can with our home-trap of flesh. We're all the time dealing in the vain hope that we may therein attain some sort of ego-recognition and know that we are not alone. In sum, we really are caught up in the primordial existential hassle of self and other.

And the dealer-man will never resolve this conflict because, like Alice, the faster he runs forward, the further back he will get. The dealer's sights have been altered by the very act of entering onto the treadmill of the deal, and the quest rather than the goal becomes the driving force.

As is typical of most critics, I can tell you what is wrong, but I have no clear idea of what to do about it. The only thing that I can think of is that the answer may have something to do with prayer, or something like that.

MD rockathon members

earn big congratulations

Muscular dystrophy is a fell disease that affects people of all ages, but especially the young. It is far from a graceful way to go, for slowly, but surely, the voluntary muscles deteriorate until the sufferer is not much better than a vegetable. Little is known about this disease—even its cause is in dispute.

Much more research and, therefore, funds are needed if it is ever to be added to the list of afflictions past.

It is our opinion that the rockathon of phil Grant and Harold Prentice for Muscular Dystrophy was one of the nobler events that has taken place on this campus in quite some time. Though they were forced to cut their vigil short, and they fell far short of their goal of raising $10,000, we feel that their efforts were a success. The singular fact that they tried, and came up with $1,400, is a victory in itself.

On the one hand, it is a sad commentary on our apathetic campus of 40,000 students that such a comparatively small amount was raised—especially in view of all the high-sounding promises that a number of organizations made and then copped-out on. On the other hand, however, it is heartening to know that at least two members of the mindless masses have more important things to think of than their own petty little hassles.

Only if they want to get stoned. The epileptic on anti-convulsant medication does not experience more frequent seizures with marijuana. It is possible that pot actually possesses some anti-convulsant features. In the prevailing atmosphere of mass hysteria surrounding marijuana, it is rarely mentioned that this is a drug with many unique qualities deserving of systematic evaluation.

Can you explain why people sometimes encounter strange situations which seem familiar to them? Sometimes when I visit a new place, the setting, dialogue and colors will match to produce a sensation of familiarity that I know shouldn't exist. Yet the feeling in such situations is that I've lived the scene before.

OUR READERS' MIND

Door burn equals burn job

To The Editor:

I recently graduated from MSU, and, during the summer, received a bill for $15 from Thomas B. Schwab, Manager of North Wonders Hall, where I lived for three years. It was for my half of a $30 bill for a "burn on outside of room door." I assume that some University regulation currently permits a resident to be billed for the outside of his door, but I also feel that the regulation is ridiculous.

Neither my roommate nor myself, nor anybody in our suite, smokes, and even if we did, it would be hard for us to accidentally burn the outside of our door. Furthermore, it is very unlikely that we would be so stupid as to wantonly burn our own door and, finally, it is unreasonable for the University to assign us the impossible task of guarding the outside of our door 24-hours-a-day, 7-days-a-week, against any drunk who comes by with a cigarette in his hand.

Even after my roommate and I both explained this to our beloved manager, Mr. Schwab, we were still stuck with a bill, which is entirely preposterous. It seems to be the case here, that because he can bill us, he will bill us, without any regard to fairness or reason. The whole idea of billing us for something we did not do and could not prevent is revolting, not to mention that it is probably illegal.

In his reply to my letter, Mr. Schwab comes across with this brilliant and utterly devastating argument:

(I quote from his letter to me) "You (Frank) have also mentioned that 'certain persons on the floor were in the habit, so to speak, of lighting toilet paper in the halls, burning ceilings and deliberately burning doors with matches or candles.' You seem to know who these 'certain people' are and this, then, becomes your responsibility."

This is the logic one would expect from a baby, or a moron, or even a baby moron, not from a manager of a $6,000,000 hall at MSU. Just because I could come in some Saturday night and see burnt toilet paper on the floor, or wax drippings below a burn on a door, does not mean I know who is responsible. The evidence is there for all to see, and there was no need to report it to the R.A., since he could see it as well as I could.

The very premise of the University billing us for something we could not control is, in itself, bad, but when the hall manager, knowing fully enough that we were unjustly charged, refuses to revoke the bill, that is tantamount to larceny.

I do not really expect to be rightfully reimbursed, but I just want others to know how a lowly student can be abused by the petty bureaucrats whose philosophy is: "If there is a rule that says I can, I will, and let the students be damned!"

To The Editor:

I would like to commend the administration for their highly effective efforts to institutionalize halving and extend its benefits to all out-of-state students. If an in-state student registers for a four-credit class and drops it during the first two weeks following registration, he must still pay half of in-state tuition for the class, or $26. An out-of-state student in a similar situation pays half of out-of-state tuition, or $62 for this class he does not take. The board of trustees is certainly worthy of our admiration for finding this new source of revenue for Michigan State, Inc. It is only just, of course, that an out-of-state student should pay more than an in-state student for services not rendered.

I thought it particularly enjoyable to observe the brilliant stratagem employed by the administration in not even describing this new gambit in the official publication "Summary of Student Fees and Other Expenses, MSU, 1969-70", thus catching even more people with their computer cards down.

Quite seriously, MSU is an excellent school despite its administrative misadventures. It has attracted many instructors and advisors who are not only outstanding in their fields, but humanistic and concerned, as well. Perhaps a charge for a class dropped after registration is justified; but in order to be consistent, I suggest that the administration should either make the above mentioned penalty for a student mistake equal for in-state and out-of-state students, or begin charging out-of-state students 20 cents for MSU cokes.

Hip wit or nitwit?

Dear Barney White:

I found your recent State News column quite stupid. Briefly, you make the error of confusing all the results of organizational activity with the results of some organizational activity. Organization does not necessarily have bad consequences, technology is not necessarily bad, and the bow and arrow are not necessarily weapons.

While retirement in Florida may be your idea of a good thing, I'm scared. Unless good people do get themselves together, we are going to continue to get our "pure" but unorganized asses kicked all over the country.

Finally, please don't waste so much of your's and the reader's precious time by being a hip wit. Even the dull people stopped talking like that several years ago.

Pressure petitions

To The Editor:

It appears to be time for someone to register dismay with the deplorable activities of some members of our academic community engaged in the numerous petition drives regarding the selection of a president. The faculty of this University agreed upon a procedure for nominating presidential candidates to the board of trustees. And this approved procedure did not include petitions designed primarily for publicity in the news media.

Certainly all of the persons being supported by circulating petitions cannot become president. These unwarranted petitions could prove to be embarrassing to the petitioners as well as the persons being supported, and eventually hamper the welfare of the University.

All students, faculty and alumni have had ample opportunity to suggest names and make recommendations through established channels. Any attempt by certain interest groups to circumvent the established operating procedures loudly proclaims complete lack of confidence in their duly elected representatives on the All-University Search and Selection Committee.

I am hopeful that the Search and Selection Committee will completely disregard all petitions and pressure tactics. But, if the committee elects to glance at the petition, I hope the committee members will determine how many of the petitioners responded earlier when our elected committee representatives were pleading for suggestions and involvement of the faculty, students and alumni in the serious business of selecting the president.

Charges dropped, Green Berets head home

BIEN HOA, Vietnam (AP)—With the traditional V-for-victory sign, seven of the eight Green Berets arrested in the alleged slaying of a Vietnamese spy headed home Tuesday after the Army dropped all charges against them.

The eighth member of the group in the secrecy-cloaked case remained behind because he had not completed processing, military spokesmen said.

Led by Col. Robert B. Rheault, commander of all Green Berets in Vietnam until the case broke, the departing Special Forces officers were put aboard a charter plane carrying 212 other homebound servicemen to Travis Air Force Base in California.

The eight Green Berets are due to go on leave while the Army decides their new assignments.

"I'd just as soon have completed my tour," the 43-year-old Rheault, dressed in jungle fatigues and a green beret, said on departure.

Capt. Robert F. Marasco, 27, of Bloomfield, N.J. who had been named by the Army as the alleged trigger man in the case, said: "It's great to be going."

The widow of the allegedly slain Vietnamese agent said: "The soul of my husband will follow those who killed him. The Americans are worse than the Viet Cong! I'm going to blow up the Americans. They are more cruel and savage than the Communists."

Chuyen was reportedly slain June 20 near the Special Forces headquarters at Nha Trang and his body was weighted in chains, wrapped in a sack and dumped into the South China Sea, never to be found. Attorneys for the Green Berets had said the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) approved the slaying after Chuyen was discovered to be working for North Vietnamese and Americans at the same time. The CIA denied any such involvement.

Army Secretary Stanley R. Resor announced Monday that Rheault and five other Green Berets specifically charged with murder and conspiracy could not be court-martialed, because the CIA refused to furnish witnesses.

Though the charges against the men were dropped, controversy still swirled around the case.

Among many unanswered questions was why the Army had pressed so vigorously to have the men tried and what, if any, role Gen. Creighton W. Abrams Jr., commander of all U.S. forces in Vietnam, played in the decision.

Rheault told newsmen Tuesday that the case involved a "penetration agent"—a spy who had infiltrated the American intelligence network. Asked if the spy was Chuyen, he replied: "I believe so."

Customs agents praise drug check

SAN YSIDRO, Calif. (AP)—Operation Intercept, the Nixon Administration's crackdown on narcotics traffic from Mexico, is drawing protests from both sides of the border—but not from the men who implement it.

"For my money, the whole operation is a great idea," says customs agent Samuel May, who inspects pedestrians and vehicles at this major California checkpoint between San Diego, Calif., and Tijuana, Mexico.

"If it cuts the supply of dope to the smalltime dealers who push it to the school kids, that's reason enough."

The 35 customs agents regularly assigned here are getting help from 30 borrowed from stations around the country. They're all getting a workout. A few have been temporarily overcome by fumes from engines of lined-up cars. Some have suffered backstrain from lifting hundreds of hoods and trunk lids.

Operation Intercept, aimed primarily at drying up the flow of marijuana and, thus, making it too expensive for young people, has been criticized by businessmen on both sides of the border. Protests have been heard in Congress.

And Mexican President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz has termed it a "bureaucratic mistake" that has "raised a wall of suspicion between our two peoples."

Ryan in disagreement with page's statement

By LARRY LEE
State News Staff Writer

A statement by a Michigan House of Representatives page that he was a "legally hired slave" is not grounds for discharge, House Speaker William Ryan said Tuesday.

He was responding to a call by Jim Brown, R-Okemos, that Philip Cornell be dismissed because of that statement he made in an interview with a State News reporter in August.

But the regular session is over, so the pages are no longer working. Ryan said he does not yet know who will work for the special session to begin Monday.

However, Ryan said, "I disagree with the page's statement and it is not correct.

"There are 110 legislators and all have different philosophies. A page cannot choose which things he will not do because he disagrees with a particular philosophy at the time."

He referred to a situation where Cornell and another page objected to passing around a resolution praising the Ferris State University president for his actions concerning a student disturbance.

But when told they had to circulate it, both did, Ryan added. "There is no evidence of insubordination."

If Cornell were to be hired again, Ryan said he would want to "sit down and explain the facts of life with him; if you are hired for a job, you must do it."

But he added that Cornell has already worked two years as a page, which is more than most, and doubted if he would apply again.

Confrontation--that almost was

By DAVID BASSETT
State News Staff Writer

The University of Michigan's (U-M) student bookstore, little more than a low-pressure dream since 1929, threatened last week to become the newest hurricane of student protest.

Citing actions by U-M President Robben Fleming, which were termed "not in the best interests of the students and faculty" by a group of approximately 2,000 students, plans were set in motion to organize a strike for the purpose of demanding increased student power.

In a special session late Sunday night, the Student Governing Council (SGC) voted 6 to 1 to support the proposed strike.

News Background

In a statement released after the meeting, SGC said that "the primary purpose of the strike (was) to demonstrate the need for a more democratic University where students and faculty can control areas of primary concern to them."

At 8 a.m. Monday, approximately 500 demonstrators began picketing 13 major classroom buildings. By 3 p.m. less than 100 picketers still remained. A rally held Monday night for the purpose of discussing further strike plans ended in small shouting matches.

While there appeared to be little agreement regarding the strike's success, future implications or even necessity; most parties involved did feel that the most important point was who should run the bookstore.

Fleming and the U-M regents had previously submitted a proposal stating that the bookstore was to be under the auspices of Wilbur Pierpont, vice president for financial affairs.

The Strike Coordinating Committee, headed by Alan Neff, wished that the bookstore be run by a student-faculty appointed manager.

The students seek a student-faculty controlled bookstore operated by a professional manager, an arrangement which we feel will be more responsive to our needs," Neff said.

"The issue here," he continued, "is one of student control, that control to be exercised over a student service."

In a dissenting statement released the same day, Fleming noted that the regents were not in favor of sponsoring a student-faculty bookstore run by a professional manager.

"They (the regents) believe the final decision should be left to a professional manager," Fleming said "and the office of the university's vice president and chief financial officer.

"They fear that any other policy will cause the store to become financially vulnerable, and that there may then be liability on the part of the university," he added.

Fleming also cited the results of a survey conducted throughout student bookstores in the Big Ten and five Michigan schools. At none of the schools, the report stated, does the manager report to the students.

The report also noted that all stores showed a profit for the past five years (except Michigan Tech's), all sell textbooks at list price to students (except Wayne State, which gives a 10% discount) and all are self-supporting.

Neff deferred comment regarding the financial aspects of the report, but did make exception to other parts of it, most notably the idea of discounts.

The regents' bookstore proposal makes no mention of possible discounts," Neff said.

"Under pressure last week," he continued, "Pierpont said that it seems that the store should operate on a non-profit basis, but there is no assurance that when the time comes for a final decision that the decision would be favorable."

"Under the SGC proposal," he added, "the decision on policy would be made by a board of students and faculty, the representatives of the consumers."

William Dinner, a member of the Strike Coordinating Committee and the Ann Arbor International Socialists, also cited the need for students to assume control over that which affects them.

"Since students are the constituency of this institution," Dinner said, "it seems absurd to refuse them power over their own decisions."

Dinner also noted the importance of the bookstore issue in relation to other problems.

"If we do not win the bookstore issue," he said, "it will make it much more difficult for us to succeed in other areas. If we do, however, it will be easier to expand the issue of student power to encompass other areas."

"For example," he continued, "our plans for the future include the success of the Ann Arbor Tenants Union rent strike, removing ROTC from the university, initiating an open admissions policy, building low-cost student-faculty housing, boycotting local food markets and stopping the construction of a new intramural building which will be financed by a $30 student assessment."

"What we are striving for," Dinner added, "is merely control over that constituency of which we are the members."

Board helps Michigan's 200,000 alcoholics

By REBECCA O'GRADY
State News Staff Writer

Alcoholism is now recognized as an illness and many communities are instituting programs which deal with alcoholism rehabilitation.

To help the estimated 200,000 alcoholics in Michigan, the state has set up an alcoholism board to deal with treatment, education and research.

Ralph Daniel, director of the state's treatment programs, said he believes the best way the state can promote treatment programs is to get behind the local programs with financial support and assistance in planning, rather than have one central state program.

Six general hospitals in Michigan have treatment programs at the present time, Daniel said. These six are Sparrow Hospital in Lansing, Hurley Hospital in Flint, St. Luke's Hospital in Saginaw, War Memorial Hospital in Sault Ste.

Marie, Battle Creek Hospital and St. Joseph's Hospital in Mount Clemens.

The state subsidized five of the six alcoholism programs initially, Daniel said.

In the future, more alcoholism treatment programs will be set up in general hospitals. Plans are being made for a program at Clinton Valley Hospital in Macomb County. Also, plans are being developed to establish a treatment program in Muskegon and another in Oakland County to be instituted jointly by William Beaumont Hospital in Royal Oak and Pontiac Osteopathic Hospital.

Detroit is behind the rest of the state with no general hospital with an alcoholism therapy center, Daniel said.

The alcoholism board allows each hospital to develop its own program, Daniel said, though often the board does assist in the planning of the programs. If the alcoholism board did not like a program, they would not finance it, he added.

Every community of 75,000 or more should have treatment resources such as an out-patient program and therapy program, Daniel said.

The alcoholism board helps finance nine information centers in the state, including one in Lansing, to help citizens learn about alcoholism and where to go for help with the problem.

The board also subsidized a treatment training program at Wayne State University, subsidizes a professor at Western

LAST IN A SERIES

Michigan University to teach about alcoholism, buys films for lending libraries, makes abstracts of all literature written about alcoholism in the last 12 years available in the state library and publishes the "Michigan Alcoholism Review" and a supplement.

Daniel said that ideally, state programs should operate through local programs, though admittedly the programs may not seem very dramatic.

In the future, however, the state may have to change its program somewhat to impress the legislature and, therefore, get more of the funds they need, Daniel said. The Alcoholism Board could probably get more money with a central state program that was more dramatic, he said.

State mental hospitals should establish treatment programs for mentally ill alcoholics, Daniel said, but they are too overloaded to handle a program like this adequately.

In the future, the alcoholism board will be moving into the area of alcoholism treatment and traffic safety. The driving record of the state will be improved when alcoholics are given proper treatment, he said.

Some local alcoholism groups are now working with industry. These groups contact employers about employees and try to help them maintain sobriety.

Daniel said that Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) is a resource that should be used by all hospitals, for every county has such a group and every member of AA acts as a therapist. The alcoholism board works as closely with AA, as any public agency can.

AA is a group that is interested in the rehabilitation of chronic alcoholics. It is a group of former alcoholics who band together because they cannot kick alcoholism alone. The therapy process used by AA is a combination of religion, psychology and psychiatry.

The core of AA is spiritual and is designed to bring change through the realization of a spiritual experience and thus motivate a new philosophy for life.

AA is based on the idea that the major cause of alcoholism is a defective personality which is emotionally immature. The secret of the program's success is that one alcoholic will listen to another.

AA members believe 50 per cent of the battle is won when a new member understands why alcohol was attractive to him and that he can never drink again. The other half is won when the alcoholic is able to stick to his new program of living by following AA's 12 steps.

One local center that works closely with AA is the Lansing Alcoholism Information Center.

Earnest Condell, director of the center, said he believes AA is the best organization for recovering sobriety.

Part of the work that the alcoholism center does, Condell said, is to refer alcoholics to AA and their spouses to Alanon, the spouses' division of AA.

SAE Rated First In Fraternities By College Survey

Sigma Alpha Epsilon has been ranked the nation's number one fraternity in the forty-second annual COMPARISON OF NATIONAL COLLEGE FRATERNITIES AND SORORITIES compiled by the College Survey Bureau of Los Angeles, California.

The College Survey Bureau, founded in 1912 at the University of Missouri, conducts an annual nationwide survey on the "importance, prominence, and power" of fraternities on each college campus. The results of the survey are then published each spring.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon rated "number one" for 30 of the 42 years the survey has been conducted, received a "quality rating" of 84.8%.

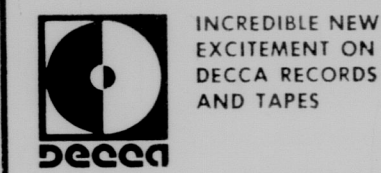

The COMPARISON OF NATIONAL COLLEGE AND SORORITIES also computes a "Total National Strength" scale based on the size of the national fraternity times the quality ratings. In this category SAE received a total of 1230 points.

Army accused of hushing up gambling fraud

WASHINGTON (AP) — A senate witness accused the Army Tuesday of muzzling a probe into the rigging of slot machines at U.S. servicemen's clubs because of fear the facts might implicate its top non-commissioned officers (NCO) and embarrass a former chief of staff.

Irvin A. Beard, a former Army criminal investigator, testified under oath his inquiries led him to believe former Sgt. Maj. William O. Wooldridge was a leader of a clique of sergeants he said skimmed up to $350,000 a year from slot machine profits at clubs of the 24th Infantry Division at Augsburg, Germany.

Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff, D-Conn., said he would send copies of Beard's testimony to Gen. Harold Johnson, former Army chief of staff, and invite him to testify.

Ribicoff is presiding at hearings of a Senate investigations subcommittee which for eight months has probed allegations that some sergeants who managed the more than 2,000 Army recreation clubs around the world conspired to loot them.

Johnson was chief of staff in 1966 when Wooldridge was elevated from his position as division sergeant major at Augsburg and brought to Washington to be the Army's top enlisted man.

David Thomas, attorney for Wooldridge and two other sergeants, told reporters after the hearing he may advise his clients to invoke the 5th Amendment "if they are asked questions which may tend to incriminate them." He characterized Beard's testimony as "opinion, speculation, conjecture, and very definitely unfair."

Beard testified Army investigators found many slot machines had been equipped with a jumper, a device used to prevent them from paying jackpots.

Beard said the Army required the gambling devices to return a profit from 60 to 70 per cent. He said his check over a four-year period showed an average profit of only 52 per cent.

"My statistical analysis convinced me that the custodians, managers and other personnel connected with the club system of the 24th Division were stealing between $300,000 and $350,000 annually from the slot machines in the Augsburg-Munich area alone, and that the theft had been going on for an extended time," Beard said.

Beard added that evidence sufficient to bring criminal convictions had been lacking.

But he said he became convinced the sergeants "were engaged in a criminal conspiracy which involved systematic larceny of nonappropriated funds, property and services for their own benefit and enrichment."

He labeled Wooldridge "a leader in the criminal organization."

And he said the results of his investigation were swept under an official rug by an order which closed the case with a single, locally filed police report. He said normal procedure would have required a full report to officials in the United States.

He said the decision to stop the investigation was made at a meeting of military police officers in Frankfurt in May 1967.

History class experiment set for Shaw

The men of Shaw Hall are taking part in a University experiment. A series of classes on Historians' Views of Problems in American Foreign Policy is being offered on a pass-fail basis.

The classes, instituted at the request of Jim Emery, East Shaw Hall sophomore, and other Shaw Hall students, are being offered through the College of Arts and Letters.

The class is one hour of credit. Shaw Hall is populated mostly by engineering and science students who do not have time for four- or five-hour regular courses, Paul Varg, dean of the College of Arts and Letters, said. The men of Shaw Hall petitioned the college to make more courses available to them.

A different professor will lecture every Wednesday on a topic related to American foreign policy. The first lecture will be presented by Dean Varg.

Classes on this basis will also be offered winter and spring terms in Shaw Hall. There are no plans for expanding the program to include other living units.

Saul faces 'huge' task against ND Saturday

By MIKE MANLEY
State News Sports Writer

Ron Saul, MSU's right offensive guard, is going to renew an old acquaintance Saturday at Notre Dame but it will most likely go unnoticed by the majority of spectators.

While the paying customers have their eyes riveted on the glamour boys - the backs and ends - Saul will be banging heads with the Irish's mammoth defensive tackle Mike McCoy. It will be the third straight year these two have met helmet to helmet.

McCoy, 6-5, 270 pounds, is called by many the finest defensive lineman in the country. He ranks second on the squad in tackles this year with 25 and has dumped opposing quarterbacks four times already. After practice Tuesday, Saul, who is a mere 6-2, 230, talked about McCoy and the problems he will face on Saturday.

"He's a big strong kid but he is not real quick," he said. "What I will have to do is hit him below his center of gravity, around the thighs, and keep working him."

"The main thing is just to B.Y.A. until the whistle blows," Saul said as he unraveled the tape around his hands.

"This is the third year I've been over McCoy and I feel I've come out of the games better than he has. As far as preparation, the physical part is done. It's mental from here on out. About Thursday I'll have to really start concentrating on him."

Saul says that McCoy relies mainly on strength to harass the quarterback and plug up the running plays.

"If he makes up his mind to go right or left or straight ahead, he's gonna go that way. He doesn't try to finesse you. The only way to stop him is to beat him. You stick him and then work, work, work," he said.

McCoy spearheads a defense that has allowed opponents only 2.4 yards a try on the ground. The longest gain from scrimmage in the first two games against the Irish defense has been only 12 yards.

The Spartans, on the other hand, have had to rely mainly on the ground game to move the football so it should be an interesting confrontation.

Saul and his offensive line mates Don Baird, Dave Van Elst, Craig Wycinsky and Tom Beard will have to work overtime Saturday to open up holes for the Spartan backs.

After Tuesday's practice, half of which was held on the old grass practice field and half behind locked gates at the Stadium, Duffy Daugherty talked about the workout:

"We had a real spirited workout today with lots of enthusiasm. Tomorrow we will get a little more technical. I hope the spirit holds up until Saturday."

Spartan submarine

MSU offensive guard Ron Saul takes the low road to take out the Washington Huskie lineman during the Washington-MSU game. Saul will have the job of keeping Mike McCoy, Notre Dame's huge defensive tackle, out of the Spartan backfield Saturday.

Athletes wanted: newest varsity sport

By DAVE WEST
State News Sports Writer

The oldest, truly American sport has finally come to MSU on a full scale. Lacrosse is the newest varsity sport on the MSU campus, and if Coach Truf Kauffman has anything to say about it, it is here to stay.

Kauffman has scheduled a lacrosse clinic for all men who are interested in a good contact sport, and possibly a varsity letter to go along with the action. The clinic will be held at 7:30 tonight in the dirt arena of the Men's I.M.

"I'm looking for the men who were good athletes in high school, the kind of guy who wasn't quite big enough to play college football," Kauffman said.

"The key to the game is speed, agility and a desire for lots of contact," Kauffman said. "My biggest worry about this clinic is that we will be getting a lot of competition from the fraternities having rush this week. I certainly hope that anyone interested in playing lacrosse will be able to work in an hour and a half with us on Wednesday evening," he said.

The clinic planned is simple and to the point . . . to create interest in varsity lacrosse.

There will be a display of equipment and demonstrations of technique from the men returning from last year's squad, along with a short film of one of the games.

The highlight of the evening will be when the lacrosse teams don their equipment once more for a half field intra-squad scrimmage.

"Our biggest need this year will be to develop some new attackmen," Kauffman said. "The loss of Larry Berger and Ron Winter has left us a little short in that position."

"Another thing we need to develop this year is more depth in our midfield, those boys have to do a lot of running," Kauffman said.

"At many schools, lacrosse, as a spring sport, draws more fans than baseball does," Kauffman said.

"And now that we have our varsity status, I think we can make a real home for the sport here at MSU."

Senator asks resignation of Iowa athletic director

DES MOINES, Iowa (UPI)—An Iowa state senator said Tuesday University of Iowa Athletic Director Forest Evashevski should resign because his criticism of Football Coach Ray Nagel and the Hawkeye squad was undermining the school's athletic program.

"I strongly feel . . . that the athletic director has no business being any kind of a critic or second guesser," Sen. William Reichardt, D-Des Moines, said.

The remarks which Reichardt objected to have been made during Evashevski's commentaries for a Des Moines radio station. The athletic director does "color" reports during Iowa games and also participates in a Sunday night television program.

Evashevski said Reichardt was retaliating because he had refused to support the Des Moines senator for governor.

"I've got a longer contract than Bill Reichardt has," Evashevski said.

Reichardt contended Evashevski's comments on the radio and TV shows were upsetting to Nagel, although Nagel "has done a tremendous job under the circumstances."

"There are many people, and I'm one of them, who feel he (Evashevski) should resign," Reichardt said.

In amplifying his remarks about Reichardt's request for his political endorsement, Evashevski said:

"Bill asked me if I would support him for governor. I told him that if a ding-a-ling like him were elected, I would move out of the state."

Vietnam moratorium planned to bring peace

By PAT LEWIS

News Background

Moratorium means end, dead stop, declaring something is finished. That is how anti-war groups in East Lansing and within the University feel about the war in Vietnam. They just want to have it end. To give an example of what they mean, they intend to boycott classes and even businesses Oct. 15, and spend the day protesting.

Dissenters are asking students to stay away from class to protest the war Oct. 15, as part of a national movement to put aside "business as usual" in opposition -- unified opposition -- to what they feel is a grave national travesty.

Several universities have already cancelled classes for Oct. 15, or given official recognition to the protest. Groups of working people, such as the UAW, also intend to observe this day. Two similar movements are planned for November, and three in December. Before Oct. 15, petitions and leaflets will be distributed, and a rally will be held Oct. 7.

I have never seen such different kinds of people so matter-of-factly dedicated and unified as I did at the press conference for the Vietnam moratorium this week. Many people there spontaneously got interested in the moratorium and found out about each other by accident.

The East Lansing Coalition to End the War Now had its first meeting two weeks ago in the Edgewood Church. The Student and Faculty to End the War Now had its first meetings Sept. 28 in the Albatross and in Case Hall.

"If we hadn't started to organize when and where we did, it would have happened anyway. The attitude of the people at the press conference was one of spontaneity, urgency and warmth," a member of the East Lansing group said.

They seemed to have a lot conviction and compassion, not "ideological" but with a compatible mixture of feeling and reason. An East Lansing Coalition representative, Gunther Pfaff, said that the main importance of the organizations was "people getting together." Nearly everyone that spoke at the moratorium press conference stressed personal situations and feelings. The student representative said, "We are the ones who end up dying in this war." The faculty member stressed the fear that students and others feel when they begin to think about the future.

There was a tiny, authoritative lady sitting next to me and talking and moving around a lot. Out of curiosity, I thought I had better ask her what she did. She didn't like the question, and told me they tried to stay away from official titles and be "just people."

The whole attitude of the moratorium movement seemed to be "facing up to fear" -- fear of other human beings, fear of the future, fear of ourselves. Titles and posturing and officialness are a form of fear, and a form of self-hatred. A fear of thinking you are not as good as you are, and as you feel, and as you see things.

These people seemed to be very much for themselves, for talking in their voices and for knowing that their own feelings, beliefs and ways of seeing things were important. They seemed to reach areas of certainty in me that ideology and debate and politics can't. They launched the discussion from the belief that there are things most people know are bad, like violence, fear, lying, forcing others against their will, putting on a front.

There are things most people know are good, like gentleness, accepting other people and yourself, honesty, dignity, respecting your own feelings and convictions, enough not to bluff or apologize. It made me feel more alive just to talk to them.

Does constructive social action hit home? If so, take a closer look at meaningful volunteer experiences offered through your Office of Volunteer Programs. Students, faculty and staff are invited to join the MSU Volunteer Action Effort which includes those opportunities listed below and others. Contact: MSU Volunteer Bureau, 26 Student Services Bldg., 353-4402.

LANSG SCHOOL DISTRICT: Volunteers needed to work with and supervise pre-school youngsters while their mothers attend classes on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday for two hours.

WEST SIDE ACTION CENTER: Big Brother and Big Sisters needed to work with 6-15-year-old youngsters in a one to one relationship. Black volunteers are specifically needed.

Augenstein questions Hart about marijuana statement

Leroy Augenstein, MSU professor of biophysics, Tuesday accused Sen. Philip Hart of doing a great disservice to young people by his uniform and potentially misleading statements Sunday about the dangers of marijuana.

In a statement on television and before a church youth rally in Jackson, Hart called for a study by the U.S. surgeon general "to settle once and for all the question of whether marijuana is a truly dangerous drug or a relatively harmless substitute for a cocktail."

Augenstein, a consultant to the drug section of the National Institute of Mental Health for the past few years, criticized the senator's statements as misleading to youth.

"Hart doesn't know what he's talking about," Augenstein said, "when he implies that the effects of cigarettes and marijuana may be the same, or at least can be studied in the same way."

"While additional studies of the effect of marijuana on brain and muscular activity, vision, breathing, etc., could be of value, they won't answer the critical question -- does smoking marijuana lead to addiction on harder drugs as now seems to be suggested?" he continued.

He criticized the senator's suggestion for a study into the effects of smoking marijuana on the basis that "it would involve so much human manipulation that experiments should never be done."

Guards turn back welfare marchers

MADISON, Wis. (AP)—Helmeted police backed up by National Guardsmen with fixed bayonets Tuesday repeatedly turned back welfare demonstrators who marched on the Wisconsin Capitol for the second straight day.

The rebuff brought a switch in tactics by the protesters led by the Rev. James E. Groppi, militant civil rights activist from Milwaukee.

A brief sitdown produced a monumental noon hour traffic jam on the highways circling the capitol in the heart of Madison's business district. Then they halted their march for a prayer meeting at the feet of police and guardsmen who started straight ahead in stony silence.

Demonstrators vowed to keep marching around the building until the legislature restores welfare appropriations slashed from the state budget proposed by Gov. Warren P. Knowles.

But their chances of a replay of Monday's one-hour takeover of the Assembly chambers, thwarting a joint session of the legislature, seemed to have been dimmed by the show of civil and military force.

Moreover, Circuit Judge William C. Sachtjen signed a temporary injunction obtained by Atty. Gen. Robert Warren barring Groppi and his followers from disrupting government activities in the capitol.

During a third confrontation at the Capitol doors, Groppi was served with copies of the temporary restraining order.

The priest glanced quickly at the order and announced to the crowd he would consult with his attorney at the church he has been using as his headquarters two blocks from the capitol.

"We don't know what's in here," Groppi said. "We will decide whether or not it shall be obeyed."

The two houses of the Legislature met today as guardsmen ringed the Capitol. Members called for emergency steps to prevent a recurrence of Monday's occupancy of the Assembly chamber.

The governor sent a message to the lawmakers saying he hoped the demonstrations would not affect their deliberations on his proposed $33 million welfare and urban aid package.

China offers Moscow talks to ease tensions

TOKYO (AP) -- Communist high-ranking Soviet leader that "the Chinese side seemed to be positive toward solving frontier problems and other questions."

The delicacy of the China-Soviet feud situation was demonstrated, at the same time, by ceremonies in Communist North Vietnam marking the Peking anniversary. There, the new leadership succeeding, Ho Chi Minh carefully balanced its tributes so as to straddle the issues between Moscow and Peking and give offense to neither.

The border disputes between China and the USSR have brought a spate of shooting incidents in recent times, the most serious of them this year. A willingness to talk on Peking's part might suggest some sort of realignment in the Chinese leadership.

The editorial coincided with the report of a Japanese trade union representative in Moscow, who said he was told by a
