Lindsay back to top choice in New York mayoralty race

NEW YORK (AP)—Mayor John V. Lindsay, bucking both the Republican and Democratic establishments, has zoomed back since his defeat in the June GOP primary to the top of the polls for next Tuesday's election.

The latest Daily News poll shows Lindsay with 45 per cent of the vote, Democrat Mario A. Proaccino with 29, Republican-Conservative John Marchi with 22, and 4 per cent undecided.

Lindsay acknowledged that his chances have improved, but told a news conference Tuesday he had "a fingertip feel that it is a close race."

A victory, especially with a thumping majority, would restore to the 47-year-old Lindsay the national political luster he enjoyed before Marchi defeated him for the GOP nomination.

Lindsay, running as a Liberal and Independent, told a recent news conference that if he is re-elected he will not campaign for Republican candidates or help raise money for the party.

"I've been an enrolled Republican all my life and I have no plans to change that status," he said, but added: "I can't afford the business of partisanship, the old line two-party system."

He said he planned to hold his Liberal - Republican - Democratic - Independent coalition together and fight in Washington and Albany for more money for the cities.

In his first four years as mayor, Lindsay has consistently called for diversion of large sums from war and defense spending to aid the cities.

With President Nixon and Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller endorsing Marchi, Lindsay has moved farther and farther to the left of the national and state GOP.

At the campaign's outset, it seemed clear that Lindsay had strong support among the minorities and strong opposition among white blue-collar and middle-class voters. This made the city's traditionally liberal Jewish voters a key group, as political analysts here see it. And his antiwar stand is seen as a major help to him among that group. He declared Moratorium Day a day of mourning in the city and appeared at rallies where he received tumultuous receptions.

His standing in the Jewish community had been impaired by what some regarded as Lindsay's acquiescence in black demands for local control of school during last year's school strike.

The Daily News poll, which has never been wrong in a mayoral election since its inception in 1928, showed Lindsay with 80 per cent of the black and Puerto Rican vote and slightly over half of the Jewish vote, which is about one-third of the total. (please turn to page 15)

Milliken clarifies position on Moratorium activities

By NORM SAARI
Managing Editor

Gov. Milliken clarified his position on the Moratorium Day activities and reiterated the necessity he sees for education reform Monday night.

The governor was the feature speaker at the 71st Annual Zach Chandler Banquet, sponsored by the Republican Club of Ingham County. Nearly 400 party loyalists attended.

Milliken previously issued a statement approving the day's activities as a symbol of the public desire for peace but disapproving any action that would undermine President Nixon's efforts to obtain peace.

"I don't think it is at all inconsistent to give this qualified approval of the demonstrations while at the same time opposing the increasing tendency to abandon the normal channels of political activity," Milliken said.

He said Moratorium Day was a "very dramatic and historic event." But his speech expressed concern over the possibility of street violence.

"The success of Moratorium Day, in terms of the number of people who participated, raises a very real danger," he said. "And the danger is that more and more people will be persuaded that mass demonstrations, street rallies and marches are the best way—and only way—to move the government to action."

Milliken termed the impatience people are showing by marching in the streets a "sad development."

"Every four years many Americans denounce the presidential nominees of the two major parties," the governor said. "But in between those national conventions, these same millions of Americans ignore the appeals from leaders of both parties to become active in the political process—to help make the parties stronger to work toward the nomination of candidates they really want to see elected."

Nixon asks Congress to hurry up legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon urged Congress to speed up work Tuesday on appropriation bills to relieve a situation that he said "is fast becoming intolerable."

In a letter to Senate and House leaders, Nixon noted that only two of the 15 regular annual money bills have been passed, and he said further delay may make it impossible for him to submit the new federal budget in January, as required by law.

The President said work on the fiscal 1971 budget already has started, but "unless the congressional pace is sharply accelerated, it is clear that many appropriation bills will not pass in time for federal agencies to assemble the voluminous details necessary to meet the budget deadlines."

"I write in this vein neither to criticize the Congress for this delay nor to exonerate the executive branch for delay," he said.

But he spoke of "an impending crisis in the handling of the nation's financial affairs," and added:

"The nation clearly has a right to question a government which cannot conduct its financial affairs in an efficient manner. I urgently request your cooperation, therefore, in securing swift action by the Congress on the pending 1970 appropriation bills. Otherwise, we will be frustrated in our efforts to move ahead efficiently on the 1971 budget."

In the absence of their regular appropriations, most federal departments and agencies have been operating since July 1, when the 1970 fiscal year began, on month-to-month authorizations passed by Congress.

The latest authorization expires Friday. Nixon said that if he is unable to submit the 1971 budget in January he will have to ask Congress for special legislation delaying the deadline.

Rep. Gerald R. Ford of Michigan, House Republican leader, said the record of this Congress on passing appropriation bills is perhaps the worst in history. When questioned by reporters, however, he declined to hold the Democratic leadership totally responsible.

Ford talked with newsmen after Nixon's weekly meeting with Republican leaders of Congress. He said the House and Senate should meet five and preferably six days a week until the logjam on appropriation bills is broken. He said he also favors longer daily sessions.

EFFORT AT RELEVANCE

IFC decides to abolish traditional Greek Week

By CYNTHIA NEAL
State News Staff Writer

The student relevancy movement has doomed another rah-rah MSU tradition: Greek Week.

IFC president Ted Dziak said that his group decided to abolish Greek Week as it now stands because the present structure of the week's activities separated the Greeks from the campus more than bringing them closer, as it was supposed to do.

Dziak said that they still favor setting aside one week in which Greeks can sponsor activities on campus and in their living units from which the entire academic community may benefit. These activities could include a series of speakers on a timely issue and hopefully a jazz or folk concert, Dziak said.

He said that what would be abolished would be the "trite" functions such as the torch run and the point system which has previously determined participation awards.

The Greeks will take that week to focus their attention on the University, he explained, instead of themselves as has been the case in the past.

"We're trying to take Greeks out of their separate world and bring them back into the University," he said.

Greek Feast may be replaced by something of a Greek fast in which the living units would donate the money for one meal to a charitable cause.

Other campuses, such as Ohio State University, have also omitted Greek Week. On the whole, Greek sentiment toward the special week is not very strong because it takes a lot of work for small rewards. Dziak feels that a complete revamping, bringing Greeks closer to the University, could be quite advantageous.

Even stronger sentiments have been voiced against Greek Week by critics of the system. Various sectors of the student body have come out with periodic attacks which focused last spring on Greek Week as a blatant example of the system's hypocrisy.

Any fraternity or sorority member interested in working on a schedule of Greek sponsored all University activities for one week of spring term may apply any afternoon within the next two weeks in Room 317, Student Services Bldg., Dziak said.

Academic Council assigns Massey Report to committee

The Academic Council referred the much-disputed Massey Report on student participation in academic government to committee on Tuesday.

The committee will report its findings to the Academic Council in two months. Committee members will be chosen from the council.

Members of the newly formed committee will be appointed by the chairman of the Academic Council and Acting President Adams, in conjunction with the steering committee.

Academic Council member Arthur Adams moved that the newly formed committee be asked to do what can be done to form the Academic Council the best way for the wise implementation of student representation.

Members of the council were concerned that the students in the University not interpret this action of referral to committee as a "filibustering" measure.

During special sessions held over the past three weeks, the council passed the (please turn to page 15)

Safety primary concern at 'U' nuclear reactor

By MARION NOWAK
State News Staff Writer

Safety is the primary concern at MSU's new Triga I nuclear reactor.

"The overall emphasis of any nuclear facility is safety first, that cliché that so often is the building block for the nuclear industry," Bruce W. Wilkinson, assoc. professor of chemical engineering said.

Triga I, in operation since last March, contains a great number of automatic safety devices. Many are required by the Federal Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) in nuclear facilities.

These devices, Wilkinson explained, respond to changes in the radiation level in two ways. Several of the instruments react to dangerous increases in reactor activity by automatically shutting off the reactor. "The operator can't stop this shut-down," Wilkinson said.

Automatic shut-downs occur when the reactor fuel temperature gets too high (in excess of 500 degrees Centigrade), when the power of the reactor reaches 275,000 watts (regular peak is 250,000 watts), when the reactor gains power too rapidly and when the control rods that start up the reactor are pulled out too far, or too fast.

The other method of safety control is effected through a series of measuring instruments and alarms.

There are three machines that act in this capacity. One, a device shaped like a brown can located directly over the reactor, measures the radiation level there at all times. Another measures the amount of radioactive dust in the laboratory air while a third measures radioactive gas.

If any of the measurements indicate an amount of radiation in excess of the legal safety requirements, they trigger an alarm both in the lab and at the public safety desk in the police quonsets.

Many other safety restraints exist in the care and feeding of the Triga I reactor.

MSU maintains a Reactor Safety Committee, composed of four faculty members and the University's radiation safety officer who is a member of the campus police.

The committee advises the (please turn to page 15)

Heart of energy

The core of Triga, MSU's newly activated nuclear reactor, is housed in a 25-foot deep tank surrounded by 6 1/2 feet of steel. When activated from a control booth, it lights up brilliantly despite 20 feet of shielding water over the core. It will be used for research and training in nuclear engineering, biology, medicine and criminology.

Decision due on school site for osteopathy

The State Board of Education will decide today which of Michigan's three medical colleges will be the site for the new osteopathic school. MSU seems to be a front runner for the assignment.

According to board member Leroy G. Augenstein, chairman of the Biophysics Dept., MSU has presented a plan for incorporation of the school. The other two possible sites—the University of Michigan and Wayne State University—have not.

Action on this issue will have to take place at the current board meeting, since the Michigan legislature has set a Nov. 3 deadline for designation of the site.

"Once we make the assignment the University will have until the first of the year to accept or reject it," Augenstein said. "The trustees have the final say."

The MSU Board of Trustees has indicated that it would accept the school under certain conditions. Most important is the refusal to take funds away from the medical school to support a school of osteopathy.

"The danger of inadequate funds could lead to competition between the schools. This is a real problem and not to be dismissed," Augenstein said.

Prof says Pakistan has growth problem

By DELORES MAJOR
State News Staff Writer

An MSU professor who recently concluded a two-year study in Pakistan said that country's social and political growth have not kept up with its economic gains.

Ralph H. Smuckler, dean of international program, told members of the Faculty Club Tuesday that social and political growth is "not in balance with the new foundations of that country."

He said the country has grown steadily with the help of American institutions such as the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation and American colleges such as MSU, Yale, Harvard and the University of Chicago.

He said that new problems were opened for the country in the areas of distribution and production affecting the new plans for agricultural and industrial development.

"This task requires a new type of expertise development in general for the new problems," Smuckler said.

He talked at length about Pakistan's revolution earlier this year and the snowballing effect that produced it.

Smuckler explained that the revolutions grew from mild protest of a few university students and evolved into nationwide involvement.

"The picture was one of disruption of normal activities and wide international protest," he said.

"The political process broke down abruptly, suggesting that the balance of economics, politics and sociology was out of line."

"There were inadequacies in the political system to absorb and handle the difficulties as they arose," Smuckler said.

In a question and answer period that followed his address, Smuckler said that the family planning program in Pakistan is considered a model by the rest of the world.

"The national program there is given top government support, with the conventional contraceptives distribution rating in the millions each month."

He added, however, that the effects of the program would not be apparent for 30 to 40 years and that a big problem is to keep the people from becoming impatient.

BATTLEFIELD MEETING?

Viet Cong to return three U.S. soldiers

SAIGON (AP) — American military authorities said Tuesday the U.S. Command will respond affirmatively to any Viet Cong offer for a battlefield meeting to turn over three American prisoners of war.

"No question about it," a spokesman said. He noted that in a similar case last winter, the Americans had agreed to go "anywhere, anytime" for the return of prisoners and said the offer still stands.

His statement coincided with a South Vietnamese announcement that 24 Viet Cong prisoners would be released Wednesday. The government emphasized, however, that the release was not in response to the Viet Cong's plan to free three U.S. soldiers.

The clandestine Viet Cong radio said Sunday night the three would be given their freedom to show the "lenient and humanitarian" policies of the Viet Cong, but specified neither time nor place of release. The South Vietnamese government also said its planned release was for "humanitarian" reasons.

The three GIs, all 22 years old and members of the American Division based at Chu Lai, 50 miles south of Da Nang, were identified as Spec. 4 Willie A. Watkins, Sumter, S.C.; Pfc. James H. Strickland Jr., Dunn, N.C.; and Pfc. Coy R. Tinsley, Cleveland, Tenn.

The Viet Cong broadcast said they had "proved progressive" during their captivity and showed "repentance of the crimes they had committed against the Vietnamese people."

A hint that the Viet Cong might seek a battlefield meeting to hand over the trio was seen in their insistence that the U.S. Command "must be responsible for its ex-servicemen and must insure safety for them."

Similar demands were made last December when the Viet Cong announced they would release three other American captives. Through radio broadcasts, a Christmas meeting was arranged in a rice paddy 50 miles northwest of Saigon. Negotiators for both sides showed up and Viet Cong photographers snapped pictures with longrange lenses from a woodline, but the prisoners were not turned over. Some Americans believed the Viet Cong were trying to milk maximum propaganda out of the turnover.

A second meeting took place New Year's Day and the three American soldiers — Spec. 4 James W. Brigham, Ocala, Fla.; Spec. 4 Thomas N. Jones, Lynnville, Ind.; and Pfc. Donald G. Smith, Akron, Pa. — were freed. Brigham, suffering from a head wound, died a few weeks later in a U.S. Army hospital. Doctors blamed his death on improper medical treatment during captivity.

Since making its initial announcement Sunday, the Viet Cong radio has provided no further details on the release of the second three — Watkins, Strickland and Tinsley.

"We don't know what they're planning," said one U.S. officer. The South Vietnamese government said it would release the 24 Viet Cong prisoners Wednesday at four sites — Da Nang in the north, Can Tho in the Mekong Delta, Bien Hoa near Saigon and in Saigon itself.

Only one prisoner will be released in the capital, spokesmen said. A 20-year-old woman, captured in Saigon shortly after the Tet offensive in February 1968, will be freed in a ceremony at City Hall.

Pa. papers acquired by Knight

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) — Sale of the Philadelphia Inquirer and the Philadelphia Daily News to Knight Newspapers, Inc., was announced Tuesday in Cleveland.

A joint statement by Walter H. Annenberg, president of Triangle Publications, and John S. Knight, editorial chairman and senior officer of Knight Newspapers, said the transaction was valued at about $55 million in cash and notes.

Transfer of ownership was approved by the board of directors of both companies and is scheduled for final closing on Dec. 31. Triangle Publications will continue to operate the newspapers until then.

The Inquirer and Daily News, both now a division of Triangle, are to become a wholly owned subsidiary of Knight Newspapers.

Annenberg, in a prepared statement, said he decided to sell the two papers "to accomplish an orderly transfer into the right hands of the newspapers that have long been under my direction."

"With the passing of my own son, there is no likely possibility of family transference, and hence my desire to insure a future ownership in which I have confidence."

Acquisition of the two papers will move Knight Newspapers from fifth to third largest in the United States in terms of circulation.

Committee slashes foreign aid requests

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House Foreign Affairs Committee tentatively agreed Tuesday on initial cuts of about $465 million in the administration's proposed $2.6-billion foreign aid bill.

The committee, on two close votes, did approve two-year authorizations for the development loan program and the Alliance for Progress program. However, these were subject to possible reversal on Wednesday.

The panel's biggest slash of $200 million came under the development loan program. The administration had sought $675.5 million for the fiscal year that began July 1. The tentative recommendation is $475.5 million.

Bishop to wait until January to introduce Oakland issue

By BARBARA PARNES
State News Staff Writer

Rep. Donald E. Bishop, R-Rochester, said Tuesday he may not introduce legislation to grant Oakland University autonomy until the January session of the state legislature.

Bishop, whose district includes Oakland, announced last week he would introduce the legislation to remove Oakland from control by the MSU Board of Trustees.

A resolution to grant Oakland's independence was introduced by Oakland's Chancellor Durwood P. Varner at the Oct. 17 trustees' meeting.

The resolution passed by the Oakland University Senate, said in part:

"... (we) respectfully request that the board of trustees take the appropriate and necessary action to authorize Oakland University to become an independent member of the system of state colleges and universities serving the citizens of Michigan, effective at the earliest possible date, and hopefully not later than Jan. 1, 1970."

The trustees unanimously voted to make the Oakland question a "special order of business" for the Dec. 19 trustees' meeting. A special five-man committee, including Varner, was set up to study the autonomy issue.

"I think they (the trustees) better take a positive stand before any bill takes effect," Bishop said.

Bishop said he doesn't expect any trouble in getting the bill through the legislature. He said this is the first time the question of autonomy for Oakland will be discussed in the legislature.

German Chancellor Willy Brandt said Tuesday that talks with the Soviet Union and Poland and plans to seek more independence from the United States are two main signposts of his new government's foreign policy.

Outlining his objectives for the next four years, Brandt also promised to help clear obstacles to Britain's entry into the Common Market.

Violence, demonstrations and strikes shook Italy Tuesday on the anniversary of the rise of Italian fascism. The government pledged to "defend democracy" by combating subversion from both the left and right.

The disturbances, in commemoration of the rise of Benito Mussolini in 1922, left scores wounded and paralyzed Italy's largest cities all day.

A State Dept. spokesman said Tuesday the United States has no defense agreement with Laos that is written, stated or otherwise understood.

The comment, by press officer Robert J. McCloskey, came after Prince Souvanna Phouma, the neutralist prime minister of Laos, recently said a "tacit agreement" on aid exists between the two countries.

The prince said the agreement dated back to 1964, two years after the United States and three communist nations signed a Geneva agreement guaranteeing not to supply arms to that nation.

President Nixon returned Tuesday to a familiar role as the Republican party's campaigner-in-chief.

Nixon, who rebuilt his role as GOP leader by allying with party notables across the country, went to work for Linwood Holton, Republican nominee for governor of Virginia.

The President will also make appearances in New Jersey for gubernatorial candidate Rep. William T. Cahill.

A Philadelphia contractor, McCloskey & Co., filed an antitrust suit Tuesday in U. S. District Court charging 12 leading oil companies with conspiring to fix prices on tank truck quantities of gasoline.

The companies accused of price fixing since 1955 are American Oil Co., Atlantic-Richfield Co., California Oil Co., Cities Service Oil Co., Gulf Oil Co., Humble Oil and Refining Co., Mobile Oil Co., Sinclair Oil and Refining Co., Sun Oil Co., Texaco Inc. and Tidewater Oil Co.

The United Auto Workers Union (UAW) Tuesday urged federal legislation to outlaw polluting America's urban and rural areas by discarded containers, junk cars and appliances and other debris across the countryside.

Olga M. Madar, director of the UAW Conservation Dept., made the proposal before a Senate subcommittee on air and water pollution, holding hearings in Detroit. "The profit-making industries must be made responsible for providing either the safe recycling or final disposal of their products after the consumer discards them," she said.

Michigan officials, apparently deciding history should stay dry and the Straits of Mackinac should stay free of pollution, aren't going to let jazz drummer Al Carter dump his car off the Mackinac Bridge after all.

Chicagoan Carter, whose car was the first in line when the spectacular span opened Nov. 1, 1957, wanted to mark the anniversary next Friday by driving the station wagon he drove into history into the straits for burial.

Michigan officials said that couldn't be done, but happily arranged for a state wrecker to drop the 12-year-old wagon over the side and into 290 feet of water.

But today, Prentiss M. Brown, chairman of the Mackinac Bridge Authority, scotched the whole idea.

He said, in a formal statement, that "plans are underway to preserve the vehicle for posterity" and hinted Carter's car might wind up in a museum.

Picket line violence erupts at G.E. plants

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Minor picket line violence broke out in five cities Tuesday on the second day of the nationwide strike against General Electric Co. (GE), the nation's fourth largest company. The strike is affecting at least 125,000 production employees.

At the company's large Schenectady, N.Y. plant police wielding clubs beat back three white-collar workers who sought to cross picket lines. Police said they feared mass violence would erupt if they did not stop the attempted crossing.

There were minor picket line flareups also in Bloomington, Ind., Lynn and Pittsfield, Mass., and in Collingdale, Pa. But picketing of company plants in some 30 states generally was peaceful.

At a GE stockholders' informational meeting in Minneapolis, Herman L. Weiss, a company executive officer, said he had heard indirectly that 13 striking unions were prepared to stay out until Christmas. The strike is being spearheaded by GE's two largest unions, the AFL-CIO International Union of Electrical Workers and the Independent Union of Electrical Workers.

About 3,000 pickets confronted half that many salaried personnel across a 100-foot-wide street in Schenectady, where GE has its largest plant. Eggs were hurled at the pickets.

GE reported all of its 280 plants in 33 states were open, but production was at a halt in an undetermined number of them. At least 25 plants were not struck — either because they were manned by nonunion workmen or had union contracts that ran beyond the Sunday midnight expiration date of most.

The company claimed about 125,000 of its 310,000 employees were on strike. The unions, which represent 147,000 GE production employees said at least 132,000 were out.

The unions demanded from GE a 90 cents-an-hour increase in a 30-month contract — 35 cents the first year, 30 cents the second and 25 cents in the final six months, plus up to 50 cents additional for special skills.

At the Minneapolis meeting, Fred J. Borch, chairman and chief executive officer of GE said: "The offer we have on the table today is very definitely inflationary to push it up another substantial notch, as the union officials are demanding, would clearly be inflationary."

Even the company's present offer, Borch added, will mean a boost in GE prices, varying from product to product.

Red Czechs OK invasion doctrine

PRAGUE (AP)

Czechoslovakia's Communist leaders gave unconditional approval Tuesday to the Moscow doctrine saying the Soviet Union has a right to invade other Communist countries. The approval came on the 51st anniversary of Czechoslovakia's independence.

A joint Soviet-Czechoslovak declaration was published after an eight-day visit to Moscow by the Czechoslovak Communist party and government leaders who took over after Soviet intervention and occupation crushed a reform movement.

The declaration also disclosed new consent by the Prague government to an indefinite stay by Soviet occupation troops which have been on the scene since August, 1968. The publication of the agreement ended what faint hope there might have been in Prague that the Russians might agree to at least a partial withdrawal of their forces.

The statement announced plans for a large-scale program of Soviet aid to Czechoslovakia's shaky economy. This is to include a commodity credit of unspecified volume and assistance in the purchase on foreign markets of goods urgently needed in this country. Presumably such goods will be bought in the West.

In effect, the declaration pledged Czechoslovakia not only to honor the so-called Brezhnev Doctrine, but to join in to crush any future movement which may emerge, within the bloc, running counter to Soviet conceptions of how a Communist nation must develop. The doctrine originally was laid down by Soviet Party Chief Leonid I. Brezhnev more than a year ago.

"Every Communist party," said the joint statement, "is responsible to the people of its country for its actions and bears international responsibility toward the countries of the Socialist Communist community."

A Soviet news agency report said the statement emphasized the view that outside forces of "imperialism" were trying to disrupt the Communist system and that thus "a class understanding of sovereignty includes the right of every Socialist state and every Communist party, to determine forms and methods of Socialist construction as well as the direct duty to defend the power of the working class and the entire working people."

New U.S.-Soviet talks: taken with grain of salt

The Helsinki talks in strategic arms limitation begin Nov. 17 in the neutral nation of Finland.

The excitement in Washington was expected. Since January 1967, overtures by the United States had been made to the Soviets regarding preliminary Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (SALT). A few months later the two nations agreed to eventually hold discussions, but no definite date was set. Along came the invasion of Czechoslovakia in August 1968, and with it a further delay in the talks.

The Nixon victory in November 1968 promised a meeting of the superpowers only after a review of the U.S. defense operations and expenditures could be completed. With the slim passage of the ABM and the review by the administration, preliminary discussions were once again advocated by Washington to Moscow. This time a definite date was announced.

What concrete benefits can the American people and the rest of the world reap from these talks? First, the talks will be believed when they occur. Not too long ago talks were set up between the United States and China in Poland. There were no talks. The same can happen in this case. The Soviet Union has already warned the United States not to stick its nose into the strife in Lebanon. Any interdiction by the United States in Lebanon or, for that matter, any unilateral move by the United States in Southeast Asia could postpone the arms talks indefinitely.

If the talks do take place, there is a good chance that some type of limitation in strategic arms will result. Thus far, the preliminary discussions will center on offensive and defensive weapons. Intercontinental ballistic missiles, the new multiple independently targetable re-entry vehicles (MIRVs), Polaris submarines, nuclear equipped bomber planes and both sides' antiballistic missile systems will all be the topics for consideration.

A corollary to the discussions is Sen. Edward Brooke's, R-Mass., recommendation for a moratorium on testing of MIRVs, which he feels should be enacted immediately. Forty-one other senators co-sponsored the proposal, which many feel should be the first order of business once the talks begin.

Finally, even if certain limitation is achieved, the mass of humanity on this planet will not be reassured that we live without fear of nuclear incineration. It would take many years and many meetings between the superpowers before significant reduction in nuclear arms could take place.

At present, token reductions seem likely if the talks get off the ground. But the United States is fighting a war in Southeast Asia and battling domestic unrest at home. The Soviet Union is intimately involved in the Middle East and having problems with China. SALT does not take preference over these "crises."

A more equitable fee assessment plan

Rumor has it that a student dropping a course is prone to an excessive loss of money. Not only is the loss excessive, but unnecessary as well.

The rumor is actually a long-standing policy of MSU regarding fee refunds for students who change their course schedules. Before this quarter only part-time students were affected by the policy. MSU students who dropped from 18 to 15 credits would not be assessed any fee.

At present, all this has changed. If, during the first two weeks of class, one or more credits is added the student is obligated to pay $13 or $31 per credit. If the student reduces his credit load by one or more credits (and is a resident of Michigan), the refund will total $6.50 per credit dropped (up until the mid-point of the term).

The out-of-state student is placed in a separate class. If, during the first two weeks of class, the student reduces his total credits by one, he will receive the difference between out and in-state tuition ($18) plus half the in-state tuition fee for the one credit dropped ($6.50). After the first two weeks, but by the mid-point of the quarter, half the out-of-state tuition will be returned ($15.00).

Under the old fee-tuition system in which part-time students carried 10 and fewer credits, no processing fee for drops and adds was assessed to full-time students. Now, however, $6.50 is assessed the Michigan resident and at least that much to the out-of-state student. Why is there a necessity to assess the processing fee under the new tuition plan and not under the old?

In addition, it would logically seem more difficult and time-consuming to process a drop and then an add rather than just a drop. Yet, the assessed fee remains the same even with an add following a drop.

It is obvious that the assessment plan is deliberately ambiguous (to such an extent that students who feel the system unjust, simply give-up fighting rather than be self-tormented), and providing the University with monies it does not deserve.

We therefore recommend that the University policy now on the books for so long be overhauled. In its place a plan should be implemented in which there is no loss of money except a processing for courses dropped or added during the first two weeks of class. After the first two weeks, but by including the mid-point of the term, half the tuition originally paid per credit be returned.

This plan is proposed in the awareness that the present processing charge during the first two weeks is a sham—one which the University labels as okay now but which was non-existent (at least for full-time students) previous to the institution of the new tuition system this fall term.

Black student angered by insults

To The Editor:

Allow me to comment on the article in Friday's paper in which Sen. Bowman made several asinine remarks about the Holden incident. And then he proceeded to insult the entire black student body. Because I am a black student, I am deeply angered and disgusted.

Bowman begins by saying that he is furious about the breakdown in communications between black and white students on campus. This statement proves that Bowman doesn't know a damn thing about campus life. If he did, he would realize that there has never been very much communication between blacks and whites. That is why it is necessary to have a BLF.

Bowman's "anger" is as lopsided as his thinking. Because he has finally come to and noticed a lack of communication, he lashes out at black students. He seems to be implying that the task of promoting and maintaining communication rests in the hands of the 1,500 black students. But let me say, there will never be any kind of communication until the 43,000 white students decide to help work toward making it a reality.

The highlight of the article was Bowman's statement that he doesn't feel white parents should have to sit home worrying about their "children" being abused. Bull shit! Anyone thinking straight could see that 1,500 blacks are outnumbered pitifully by some 43,000 white students. And baby, that is a lot of students for each black to abuse -- something like 28-30 apiece. We all ought to flunk out trying to abuse our quota before winter term.

Seriously though, let me ask Bowman one question: Why do legislators only see fit to pass strict laws when they feel that the rights of whites are being abused, when for years blacks have suffered all kinds of insults and abuse and only token unenforced legislation was passed for us.

Racism works two ways

To The Editor:

I was somewhat disturbed over Mr. Dick Baker's comments in Friday's State News, October 17. The claim that Alpha Phi Alpha is being racist in withdrawing from Inter-Fraternity Council will seem absurd if one has a few pertinent facts.

Alpha Phi Alpha was founded in the early 1900's in what was then an extremely racist society. Coincidentally, it was founded at Cornell University. Throughout its history, the men of Alpha have distinguished themselves in spite of the barriers set up because of their color. With this awareness of the asinine standard of color determining a man's worth, Alpha Phi Alpha never wrote into its constitution that only black men could be admitted to membership. Most of the members of IFC did have clauses forbidding the initiation of anyone who was not a white Anglo-Saxon Protestant, and only recently have the national organizations removed these shameful and disgusting criteria. There have been whites initiated into the Gamma

The withdrawal from IFC should not be so alarming because Alpha's presence was not official anyway. The national organization has never been a member of the national IFC and to my knowledge has never been invited to join. Alpha is part member of the Pan-Hellenic Council, Inc. (not to be confused with the Pan-Hellenic Council the sister organization of IFC) which was founded in 1930 to band all of the black Greeks into a single national body. Of course, we would have been happy to join IFC at that time, but for apparent reasons we could not. Hence, Gamma Tau's affiliation with IFC had the blessing of the national office, but not their official approval.

With these facts, Mr. Baker, who is really the racist?

POINT OF VIEW

New ways in Latin America

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following "Point of View" was written by Salvador Herrera, Monterey, Mexico graduate student, concerning the upcoming elections in Latin and South America.

Let us look at Latin America, where the scene is one of sadness and anguish. Official repression against the people who are fighting for authentic liberty is always supported by military dictatorships and national oligarchies. This has forced the people into a type of freedom which they never enjoyed.

Two elections are slated for 1970. One is in Mexico, where one political party has dominated the political scene for some 40 years, with slogans of a revolution which was never realized.

The other is in Chile, which is governed by Eduardo Frei, Christian Democrat; one of the greatest fiascos of all times. It is in this South American country that optimism is high for the elections of a literary figure of international fame: Neftali Reyes Basuoloto, better known as Pablo Neruda.

This gentleman has devoted 50 years of his life to literature. At the age of 65, he is now the Communist party candidate for the presidency in Chile.

Neruda, who adapted the name in honor of the great Czechoslovakian writer Jan Neruda, is one of the most active militants in the Chilean Communist party. After receiving his advance degree in French from the pedagogic Institute of the University of Chile in 1920, Neruda went into journalism.

It was during this time that he published his first works in prose, and it was translated into several languages. His best known and the one which undoubtedly rocketed him to literary fame is his book entitled, "Crepusculario." He was also a diplomat and statesman, having served in the capacity of Chilean Consul in many countries. In 1944, he was elected to the Chilean senate, but lost his seat in 1946 when the Chilean Communist party was outlawed.

In 1965, Neruda received the honorary title of Doctor Honoris Causa from Oxford University in England, and he is now a candidate for the Nobel Prize in Literature. The election of Neruda could give rise to a lot of political repercussions in Latin America. The Cuban Revolution is in its tenth year and it stands as a significant triumph of the efforts and well-being of the Cuban people.

monotonous noise is pretty effective (any beauty shop usually has one or two customers falling asleep)."

I am planning on marriage this coming summer and am wondering if I can get some type of sperm count of potency check to see if I am capable of having children. If so, would my family doctor be able to give me the check, how would it be done and how expensive should it be?

Barring an unusual injury, a very severe testicular inflammation resulting from mumps in adulthood or a severe and untreated case of gonorrhea, a man who has had normal sexual development is very rarely sterile. Many men harbor the fear that they will not be able to successfully father a child. Such fears are generally unfounded. A sperm count in and of itself might neither confirm nor alleviate your concern.

Technically, the test is a simple one. A masturbated sample of semen is immediately examined for number, form and activity of the sperm cells. In suspected cases of sterility, a number of chemical tests are also performed on the semen. The cost should not be prohibitive, but masturbating in the doctor's office might be.

How long does it take for the effects of the birth control pills to wear off? If I became pregnant in August, having my last menstrual period in July, when would the baby be due?

The effects of birth control pills can occasionally wear off if as few as three or four pills are missed in a row during a month of taking them. Not infrequently, the effects of the pill will wear off within a month of stopping them. Sometimes, several months go by before ovulation returns to normal. There is an increased incidence of multiple births when the pills are stopped. It is usually recommended that a woman have several menstrual cycles off the pill before she attempts to become pregnant.

Assuming you have reasonably normal menstrual periods and your last period began in mid July, you would have become pregnant around Aug. 1. You should deliver nine months later or about May 1. Relatively few women deliver when they're expected to, especially first babies, which always seem to be late. If your periods are irregular, it becomes more difficult to predict. And then there was the woman with a history of unusually irregular periods who went into the hospital complaining of indigestion!

I have a lot of trouble with leucorrhea and I was wondering if you could tell me what causes this and how to get rid of it.

Leucorrhea (vaginal discharge) can be caused by a number of things, including infections, chemical irritants and sexual tension. The irritants take diverse forms, ranging from contraceptive preparations to strong douches used to get rid of leucorrhea. A visit to your friendly physician is indicated, as specific treatment to get rid of the leucorrhea depends on its cause.

Color not important

To The Editor:

The sooner the academic community becomes color-oblivious, the better. Why don't you lead in that regard by disregarding all references to color that you possibly can? Did we ever ask a professor going to Nigeria "What do you think the white community will think of that?"

Police flex political muscles in city elections

WASHINGTON (AP) — Policemen, swept along by the clamor for law and order, are moving into big-city politics.

The trend toward police involvement in politics is widely evident, particularly in major municipal elections this year.

Policemen already have helped a detective to become mayor of Minneapolis. They are hoping to help elect a sheriff as mayor of Detroit Nov. 4.

Two incumbent mayors, John V. Lindsay in New York and Carl B. Stokes in Cleveland, must contend with police opposition in their bids for re-election. Lindsay is a liberal and Stokes a black.

"Police political power is both considerable and growing," writes sociologist Jerome H. Skolnick, "and its impact is being felt throughout the political system."

"I couldn't afford as mayor to be at war with my police department," said Arthur Naftalin, who retired as Minneapolis mayor this year and was succeeded by Detective Charles Stenvig.

That was one reason why Naftalin said he never pushed for a civilian review board as a buffer between a predominantly white police force and the black community.

In Cleveland, where police political involvement is curtailed by law, the Fraternal Order of Police chapter took out an advertisement on the weekend before the September primary to challenge the law-and-order record of Stokes.

Stokes won the primary but the opposition of the city's white policemen could prove the difference if the general election Nov. 4 is close.

Frank Schaefer, Cleveland FOP president said bluntly: "I think a police department can make or break any mayor and I think the Cleveland police department is going to break Mayor Stokes."

In New York, the ill effects of Lindsay's repeated clashes with the Policemen's Benevolent Association (PBA) is one reason why Sanford Garelik, former chief police inspector, is on the Lindsay ticket as a candidate for council president.

In Detroit, Sheriff Roman Gribbs has the backing of the Detroit Police Officers Association (DPOA) in his bid to defeat black candidate Richard Austin in the mayoralty election.

Leaders of the Detroit association helped form a statewide organization they say has already spread to 38 Michigan cities.

The Michigan organization is planning a rating system that would judge state legislators on the basis of votes on police-related bills. It would also "evaluate" candidates for governor.

"People are beginning to look for police advice," said Carl Parsell, president of the Detroit group. "They are more ready to accept our opinion."

"We're trying to keep Detroit from going to hell in a basket like New York where everyone moved out," said Eljay Bowron, head of the politically involved Detroit Detectives Association.

In Philadelphia few doubt that Police Commissioner Frank Rizzo could be elected mayor next year should he want the job.

Rizzo says he doesn't, but only smiles at the suggestion that whoever wants the job had better promise in advance that Rizzo will be his commissioner.

The emergence of police as a self-conscious political force has lent momentum to two separate drives to forge national police unions.

The center of one budding union is Boston where Richard G. MacEachern learned the ways of power by building the Boston Police Patrolmen's Association into a national model of police militancy.

Sociologist Skolnick said, "The really dangerous aspect of all this is that the police take a quite distinct political position. That position," he continued, "is toward the politics, if not the person, of George C. Wallace."

SUBCOMMITTEE REVEALS

Firm tied to Mafia

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Pennsylvania manufacturing firm linked to the Mafia by a senate subcommittee has won millions of dollars in defense contracts from the Pentagon.

Medico Industries Inc. of Pittston, Pa., currently is working on a $4 million contract to produce parts for rocket warheads used extensively in Vietnam.

Since 1966, the firm has received about $12 million in Army, Navy and Air Force contracts. Pentagon records indicate it has performed well on all its defense work.

Medico Industries' present contracts do not involve classified material. However, a Pentagon spokesman said the firm and its principal officers had a security clearance from Jan. 28, 1968, to June 20, 1968. It was terminated at the company's request — a request which Pentagon sources said came after security officials asked for additional information about its officers.

The company's name has cropped up in the organized crime investigations of a Senate subcommittee headed by Sen. John L. McClellan, D-Ark.

In 1964, McClellan's subcommittee listed Medico Electric Motor Co., later to become known as Medico Industries, as a principal hangout of Russell A. Bufalino, whom it described as "one of the most ruthless and powerful leaders of the Mafia in the United States."

William Medico, former president and now general manager of Medico Industries, was listed in the same report as among the "criminal associates" of Bufalino.

James A. Osticco, the firm's traffic manager, was present in 1957 when New York state police broke up the Appalachian Conference — a meeting of top Mafia figures from throughout the United States. The participants also included Bufalino and Vito Genovese, once described as "king of the rackets."

Bufalino and Osticco were later convicted in federal court of conspiracy to obstruct justice after they refused to tell authorities what went on at the conference. But the convictions were overturned when an appeals court ruled that the government had failed to prove that a crime had been committed.

Investigators say Bufalino and Medico have been friends since Bufalino moved to Pittston from Buffalo, N.Y. in 1938.

A confidential report in the files of state and federal law enforcement officials refers to a company listed in the Senate report as being owned by Bufalino and says: "One of the silent partners in this enterprise is said to be William Medico ... who is believed to have money invested in a number of places where the subject Bufalino acts as front man."

In a telephone interview, Medico said he has no business interests with Bufalino. He said he has known Bufalino all his life.

The firm's record of getting government contracts goes back to the 1950s. It has produced such items as maintenance platforms for the Air Force and Navy, rebuilt generators for the Signal Corps and rebuilt machine tools and hydraulic wing jacks for the Army, Navy and Air Force. It also has had contracts from the cities of New York and Detroit.

House speaker speaks

William Ryan, speaker of the Michigan House of Representatives, outlines his views on Parochialism to a Great Issues class in Berkey Hall.

Ryan offers parochialism plan

By LARRY LEE
State News Staff Writer

House Speaker William A. Ryan called Gov. Milliken's parochialism formula "unworkable" Tuesday and said his own plan is a much fairer approach.

The Detroit Democrat, engaging in the discussion as part of the Great Issues series, said he proposed a state allotment to each pupil in non-public schools to be $700 less than is spent on pupils in public schools.

The governor's plan would put a ceiling of 2 per cent of the public school allotment to be given to non-public schools.

Ryan said the question of giving any aid at all to the non-public schools is a matter of permitting personal liberty.

"We don't have to provide full parity, but we must give enough of a percentage (of aid to non-public schools) to provide a free choice," he said.

In relating the issue to the "morality of politics" and government's obligation to provide for man's needs and wishes Ryan said, "We must help people to do what they choose to do rather than penalize them."

Ryan said if state money is used in non-public schools, accountability must be established to insure the public that it is getting what it is paying for.

Ryan was questioned why freedom of choice is necessary in education when in other areas such as smallpox vaccinations and water chlorination, liberties are denied in the interest of the public good.

The legislator restated an earlier remark that if liberty is denied the burden of proof lies with the person who would remove that freedom.

In the case of parochialism, he said, it has not been proven that freedom of choice is against the public good, even though he admitted the quality of education in the non-public school would very likely be somewhat inferior to public school education - another reason to aid those institutions, Ryan added.

Research valid for teaching only in proper perspective

By MARIA SAMARIN
State News Staff Writer

Several departmental chairmen at MSU agree that one of the major problems of the Ph.D. program is to prepare the prospective candidate to become a good teacher as well as a good researcher.

"Too long we have equated research with teaching by saying that if a person can do research, he can teach," Richard E. Sullivan, chairman of the History Dept., said.

According to a recent study, 85 per cent of those receiving a Ph.D. degree teach in college and do no further scholarly work or research.

"We're concerned about it," Lawrence O'Kelly, chairman of the Psychology Dept., said. "We require that every student have at least two quarters of teaching experience as a graduate assistant. We also have a teaching seminar."

This concern in regard to the preparation of Ph.D.s has coincided at MSU with the expansion of the Ph.D. program. The number of Ph.D. degrees granted by this University has more than doubled in the past five years—from 77 in 1964 to 151 this past spring.

Charles Thornton, chairman of the Zoology Dept., agreed that Ph.D. candidates should be given experience in teaching. "But the problem is how best to do it," he added.

Last May a conference was held at MSU by the Commission on Undergraduate Education in the Biological Sciences (UEBS) in which Thornton participated.

A report by one of the participating groups stated that one of the problems was that a new Ph.D. was "ill-prepared." "The users are not satisfied," the report went on. "There are critics of this at two-year colleges through the several strata to and including the larger universities."

Sullivan said that the basic problem the academic world faces is that it must start with the proposition that teaching itself is an art.

More attention should be focused on the intellectual problems of teaching such as the organization and presentation of material to be taught, he explained.

There are two alternatives, one of which is the involvement of apprentices in the teaching process by demonstrated teachers, he said.

The other-of which Sullivan said he was fearful-was the acceptance of the proposition that "anyone can teach."

He noted that the reward system should be shifted, but this was difficult because it was easier to use scholarly publication than teaching ability as the criteria for measurement.

At the same time, there was unanimity among all the professors interviewed as to validity of research in its proper perspective.

"One of the important functions of our Ph.D. program is to develop critical ability," Thornton explained. "Even if a man will not publish after getting a Ph.D., he will still carry with him the ability to evaluate the work being done in his field." Sullivan explained that a man cannot teach effectively without knowledge and a period of solid, concentrated study and research behind him.

PLACEMENT BUREAU INNOVATES

Computers help senior find job

by KATHY MORAN
State News Staff Writer

The computers are after us again! First there was registration with all those nice little IBM cards to sort out and sift through and drop on the floor.

Then there was that computerized dating where you filled out a form and found your ideal mate-only he was 4 feet tall, 43 years old and all he could talk about was his ingrown toenails.

Well, this may mark the end of traumatic experiences with computers. The Placement Bureau has them working for us with no guaranteed results, but the prospects are promising.

The plan is to match graduating seniors with prospective employers for interviews.

"With the volume of students and employers, we have been experimenting with a computer program designated to improve pre-interview communications," John Shingleton, placement director, said.

"We want to provide a system that would help students find jobs that would, first, make use of their talents and qualifications, and, second, find a job that is gratifying and satisfying to the students," Shingleton said.

With these goals in mind, the Placement Bureau has been experimenting with computer systems, but has found that the cost of such a program would be "prohibitive" with the present placement budget, according to Shingleton.

While they were examining the expense, a company from New Jersey, Placement Publications, Inc., asked the Placement Bureau to participate in their experimental program with three other universities.

The program is voluntary and at no cost to MSU or the students. It was initiated this fall when seniors were given information regarding the program at registration.

The seniors fill out the form and return it to the Placement Bureau which forwards it to New Jersey.

Employers, who are interested in participating in the program, fill out forms which define their job openings. They pay a fee to participate in the program.

Shingleton said that about 600 students have already filled out and returned their forms.

He said he expects the first results by the end of November.

Harvey blames unrest on outside agitators

The majority of protesters involved in campus disorders are not students, Douglas J. Harvey, Washtenaw County sheriff, told the Capital City Republican Caucus Club Monday night.

Many of them are from outside the university and are connected with such groups as Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) and the Black Panthers, he said.

There are informants in these groups working with the police for prevention of serious disorders, he explained.

Harvey said that complete lists and pictures of all persons involved in demonstrations in Washtenaw County are compiled at the time of arrests.

"Disrespect for law and order is prevalent in the United States and it is time to stop patting heads and show the violators that we won't tolerate any more," Harvey said.

"The majority of the people want law and order, but we don't hear much from them," he explained. "The small minority groups are making all the noise."

Walk-on Kough shines in new starting role

New Spartan threat, Steve Kough

MSU flanker Steve Kough (33) heads downfield to put a block on an Iowa halfback in last Saturday's game with Iowa, while Bill Triplett has just released a throw to Frank Foreman, not pictured. Apparently the official watching the Spartans' Kermit Smith didn't detect a slight use of the hands to help hold off the Hawk-eye's Bill Beville (88).

State News Sports Writer

For two years, Steve Kough labored in the obscurity befitting a walk-on football player at a major university.

About the only reward he got, aside from assorted bumps and bruises was a clean uniform and a place on the MSU bench during each game.

But all the waiting and hard work paid off for Kough, a junior from Dearborn Edsel Ford who came to East Lansing without a football scholarship. When flanker Gordie Bowdell suffered a ruptured spleen, Duffy Daugherty found himself with no experienced flanker and inserted Steve in the starting lineup against Michigan.

Against the Wolverines Kough performed like he'd been in the lineup all season. He caught Bill Triplett's only completion of the game and made some outstanding blocks.

But last week against Iowa, he came into his own as a pass receiver. Kough grabbed a beautiful 68-yard scoring pass from Triplett and had another 38-yarder called back on the loudly disputed illegal receiver penalty. On both occasions there wasn't a defender within 10 yards of him.

"He has the finest moves of anyone on the squad," Al Dorow, the Spartan's passing game coach said. "He's got everything you want in a wide receiver -- speed, good moves and he's learning to become a good blocker."

It was a long road to the flanker position for Kough. He came to MSU as a quarterback, was moved to defensive back and then all but forgotten.

Last spring he went to Dorow and asked if he could give pass catching a try. The Spartan coach watched Kough run his patterns and liked what he saw.

"From the first day I was impressed by him," Dorow said. "He had outstanding moves right from the start. Steve probably had as good a spring as anyone on the team."

"The biggest thing was to get him into a game. He had to wait his turn. You've got to go with the proven players and just hope you can get the inexperienced players in. Now you couldn't get Steve out of the lineup if you wanted to."

Kough stood in the far end of the Spartan dressing Tuesday and talked about what it was like to be a walk-on at a major football school.

"If I told you what it was really like you couldn't print it," he said. "It took a lot of lucky breaks. I just kept waiting for a chance to show them what I could do."

"The guys who helped me the most were Gordie (Bowdell), Frank (Foreman) and Al Dorow. I used to watch Gordie and Frank at practice every day and then tried to put their moves together."

Even though he was switched to flanker last spring, there was a period when Kough became discouraged and almost gave up football -- something that would have the Spartan coaching staff pounding their collective heads against the wall in frustration right now.

"I was going to quit early in Fall practice," he said. "I didn't think there would be a chance for me to play here. I kept wondering if I should have taken one of the football scholarships I had to Eastern Michigan or Western Michigan. But I guess I always wanted to see if I could make it in the Big Ten."

Success has come quickly for Kough after those two long years of riding the bench. One week he's watching the action from the bench with the rest of the reserves and the next week he's in the starting lineup.

Talking to him, you get the impression he's still a little overwhelmed by it all. When he speaks, a shy, almost embarrassed grin comes to his face and he shakes his head, almost in disbelief.

"I'm more nervous now than I am before a game," he said.

When asked how it felt to score his first collegiate touchdown, he just shook his head.

"It just didn't seem like it should be me out there. I think any receiver on the team could have done it if they had the chance."

'Action program' for Detroit sports stadium set in motion

Milliken without pledging any state money, nonetheless said the state would "cooperate in every appropriate way" in developing a downtown sports facility. He said it would lead to a "revitalization of the downtown area."

Cavanagh, at a joint news conference with the governor, said he felt "more certain than ever" that the new stadium would be built downtown, now that it had Milliken's support.

Cavanagh, who leaves office in January, said he envisioned construction beginning a year from now with the stadium ready for operation by 1973.

The two men said Tom Adams, a Detroit advertising executive, had been tapped to head an approximately 20-member stadium working group that will be asked to report on development plans within 60 days.

Represented in the group will be the city, the state, Wayne County, the Detroit Chamber of Commerce and "other interested parties," Milliken said.

The possibility of a new sports stadium to replace aging Tiger Stadium has been in the talking stage for years, accompanied by a hot controversy over whether one should be built in the downtown area, out toward the city limits or even in a suburb.

Milliken made clear he would like to see the new stadium built in Detroit and that he "personally favors" a downtown site. Cavanagh has been boosting a site alongside the Detroit River just west of the Civic Center area.

Opinions of the management of the Detroit Lions and Detroit Tigers will also be considered, Cavanagh said. "But I think it's inevitable that the stadium will be built and that the Lions and Tigers will have to play there," he said.

The mayor also said it "isn't important at this point" whether the new stadium should have an all-weather dome. He also admitted there were problems ahead in making the new facility pay for itself.

Bucks-Illini had top crowd last weekend

NEW YORK (UPI)—The 86,576 fans who watched top-ranked Ohio State play Illinois last weekend headed the top 10 college football crowds.

Saturday's top 10 turnout of 649,550 brought the season's total for the best crowds to 3,821,594—44,394 ahead of last year's pace that ended up setting the all-time season high.

Of the top 10 crowds Saturday, the home team won nine times. Visiting UCLA tied Stanford in the only exception.

The Big Ten Conference had four games among the top eight.

An intangible called courage

What can you do when a friend is lying in the road after being hit by a car? What can you do when that same friend will not run again this year, and running is his life?

What can you say to Kim Hartman, who was injured Thursday night at Mount Hope and Harrison roads when returning to Jenison from practice? It's tough to find words.

It's not easy to say, with a sense of heartiness you somehow don't feel, something like "tough break" or "you can't win 'em all" or "you're really quite lucky."

Actually, those words are damn near impossible to say. There is nothing, absolutely nothing, that can be said to a guy who won't run any kind of meet again this year.

You can say nothing, but instead he tells you. The one to be consoled is instead consoling others. He is accepting his fate, and as corny or old-hat as it may sound, he has learned to do this because he is a champion, and this is the kind of guts and gumption and desire that true champions are made of.

Not once, when Kim Hartman was lying in the road, did he cry out or indicate that he was in great pain. Not once in that terribly long ambulance ride to Olin did he say he was hurting. Instead, he told me not to worry, that he'd be alright.

To me that's guts. Of course, that should be nothing new. I've seen Kim Hartman displaying determination and guts and desire from the first day I met him. That's something that can never change in anyone.

Running is his life, and being without it for however short or long a time has got to throw him into some sort of emptiness. But he won't show it.

Nor will Tom Silvia, a skinny sophomore from Connecticut who was thrown onto the car at the same time Kim was thrown away from it. He held himself together at the accident scene, and though shaken pretty well, went through treatment at Olin without complaint. Not until Friday morning when the swelling in his knee became so huge and the pain so sharp would he return to the health center.

This desire, determination or whatever you want to call it, has been part of the MSU cross country scene all year.

Kim and Tom will be missed. No question about it. But maybe Ken Leonowicz, Chuck Starkey, Dave Dieters, Warren Krueger, Ralph Zoppa, Randy Kilpatrick and Pete Reiff will gain a little something because two of their own can't be out there running with them.

Maybe it will make them a little bit better, knowing that two guys who want so much to be in the action are forced to yell from the sidelines.

Maybe it will give them some people to win for. And most assuredly it will give them two guys to think about, and certainly to admire, for their greatest possession.

Called courage.

Purdue's Phipps tops total offense leaders

NEW YORK (UPI)—John Reeves, the flashy Florida quarterback, could become college football's most proficient scoring passer if he continues his current touchdown trend.

Reaves who threw five touchdown passes last Saturday against Vanderbilt, boosted his season output to 20 TD aerials while moving into third place among the nation's major college passers.

Weekly statistics compiled by the National Collegiate Sports Services showed Reeves with 118 completions in 203 attempts putting him behind Gordon Slade of Davidson who has 126 completions in 188 attempts and pace setter Chuck Hixson of Southern Methodist, with 131 completions in 217 attempts.

Ed Marinaro of Cornell, limited to only 30 yards in his team's loss to Yale, held the rushing leadership. The Burly Marinaro, who suffered a hip injury in the game against Yale, has carried 156 times for 873 yards. Next is Clarence Davis of Southern California with 826 yards in 169 plays.

Mike Phipps of Purdue retained the total offense lead. The classy Boilermaker signal caller has accounted for 1,814 yards in six games. Reeves is next with 1,732 yards, followed by Charlie Richards of Richmond with 1,637. Bob Jacobs of Wyoming overtook Ken Sanders of Tulane in the punting department. Jacobs has booted 42 punts for an average of 45 yards per kick.

Booters may lose team captain

By PAM BOYCE
State News Sports Writer

The MSU soccer team may have lost the services of one of its top players Monday, while two other standouts sat out practice Monday due to injuries.

Team Captain Ernie Tuchscherer reinjured the knee which kept him out last season during a routine practice drill Monday afternoon, and services of the Chicago senior are doubtful for the squad's remaining games. Tuchscherer is presently leading the team in scoring with 10 goals and five assists.

The injury was sustained after he made a quick turn during a drill and stepped in a hole. His knee, which was operated on last year and kept him on the bench most of the 1968 season, evidently gave out. Tuchscherer will not play in Friday's last regular season game with Ohio, and may be sitting on the sidelines if the booters participate in NCAA play.

Tuchscherer, an All-Midwest and All-American pick during his first year on the varsity squad, was voted the outstanding college forward as a sophomore. Following season play in 1967 he played on the U.S. Pan American and Olympic squads.

The team's injury list continues to mount as Trevor Harris and Alex Skotarek were out of practice Monday due to recurring injuries. Harris has been playing all season on a weak ankle, and in Saturday's game with St. Louis it was obvious that the injury was hampering his play. Harris won first-team All-American honors the last two years, as outside left his sophomore year and as center forward last year. Last season he won the honors despite the fact that he sustained his ankle injury in the Akron game, keeping him out of most of the NCAA play.

Skotarek, who left the St. Louis game in the fourth quarter, has been hampered by leg injuries and his right thigh was heavily bandaged for the game. One of the team's hardest runners, Skotarek has been starting at the inside left position.

Coach Gene Kenney expects both Skotarek and Harris to be back at full strength this week, but says he plans on making "drastic" changes in the forward line for the booters' away game with Ohio University Friday.

This week's National Collegiate Soccer Ratings and the total number of points awarded to the top 10 teams are:

Team	Points
1. St. Louis (7-0)	304
2. San Francisco (10-0)	290
3. Harvard (7-0)	262
4. Pennsylvania (7-0)	257
5. San Jose State (6-1)	229
6. MSU (6-1-1)	223

HARTMAN IMPROVING

Starkey set to return to 'S' harriers' lineup

By DON KOPRIVA
State News Sports Writer

Good news came in bunches for the Spartans early this week after last Thursday's accident involving top runner Kim Hartman stunned Jim Gibbard and his cross country runners.

But Gibbard had reason to be encouraged.

Junior Chuck Starkey, who missed two meets last week because of a minor hand operation, returned to the workout Monday and pleased Gibbard with some fast two miles, even though the Columbus, Ohio, junior had missed six days of practice.

Hartman is recovering satisfactorily, according to sources at Olin Health Center, and even though he will be lost to the team for the rest of cross country and all of track, the Southfield junior remains confident that he will return eventually. He is now on crutches after knee surgery for torn ligaments last Saturday, and is expected to be released from Olin within a few days.

Indiana, who the Spartans handled 21-38 in the opening meet, blitzed Friday's MSU foe, Notre Dame, to a 15-50 tune last weekend, placing eight runners in front of the first ND man.

Gibbard was pleased with the Spartans' 15 point victory over Eastern, Western and Central Michigan in their own invitational last Saturday. "Even though Dave Campbell from Eastern won, our guys ran well and I was pleased with the 22 second split between our first and fifth men.

"We'll be aiming to try to run closer to Campbell next week (Nov. 7) when we meet Eastern here in a dual meet," Gibbard said.

The Spartans are now 3-1 in dual meets, with Big Ten championship favorite Minnesota holding the only win over MSU. That came Oct. 18 by a 28-29 score.

Notre Dame, which generally has sent out strong teams in cross country, slumped last year to 10th in the Central Collegiate meet and 16th in the big IC4A clash in New York.

The Irish are down again this year, and the Spartans, who drubbed them 15-49 in 1968 at MSU, do not anticipate many problems with them.

Gibbard expects his team to run well at South Bend, especially since the Irish five-mile course apparently is somewhat short of five miles, and times are always extremely fast.

After the Notre Dame dual the Spartans have only one meet left, that against Eastern, before heading to Bloomington and the Nov. 15 Big Ten meet.

After the league affair MSU will meet some heavier competition, such as Villanova, three-time national titlist, in the IC4A and the NCAA meets.

Lawsuits being prepared for suspended U-W gridders

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (UPI)—Lawsuits seeking the reinstatement of 14 black athletes to the Wyoming University football team and seeking $1 million in damages were being prepared for filing in Federal Court in Cheyenne Tuesday.

William Waterman of Pontiac, Mich., a law professor at Oakland University and an adviser to the Michigan NAACP Chapter said he would file the suits in U.S. District Court.

Wyoming Coach Lloyd Eaton dismissed the 14 black athletes, six of them starters, Oct. 17 when they came to his office wearing black armbands.

Waterman said the issue in the suits "has become larger than Eaton or myself or the University of Wyoming football team or even the special interest groups on both sides. The state of Wyoming is putting a great deal at stake right now."

He said Wyoming can't have black athletes and "be unmindful of their rights and dignity."

"Everyone of these 14 black men and their families and friends will carry a message wherever they go, and this message will be highly unfavorable for the University of Wyoming," he said.

The athletes wore the armbands in protest of racial policies of the Mormon Church, which operates Brigham Young University.

Last week Eaton announced the rules against athletes participating in demonstrations would be rescinded but the athletes would remain suspended this season.

Need $100?

UCLA's Head Football Coach Tommy Prothro has offered $100 to anyone who can arrive at the same defensive statistics that Stanford officials did at the Bruin's game against the Indians Saturday.

Prothro offered the money at the regular Monday meeting of the Southern California Football Writers, where the Bruin coach sharply criticized pass interference calls against his team and the supposed "official" defensive statistics of the 20-20 tie. The coach feels that too many tackles were credited to the Indians' linebackers and not enough given to his star linebacker, Mike Ballou.

He said he can understand the desire of Stanford to strengthen the All-America bids of its linebackers, Pat Preston and John Parish, but defied anyone checking films of the game to come up with the same number of tackles for the Indians' pair and as few for his player.

The coach held up a $100 bill and said it could belong to anyone who could see that many tackles.

MSU's Frank off to bigger world

By SHARMAN STEWART
State News Staff Writer

MSU has lost its private cartoonist to the nation's college campuses. Phil Frank, humor spokesman for MSU, has formed a syndicate.

The Collegiate Syndicate, the child of Frank and Bob Harris, both 1965 MSU grads, is allowing interested colleges to take a lighter look at themselves. The medium of perception is a cartoon series entitled "Frankly Speaking."

The editorial cartoons, originally appearing in 1961 in the State News, depict the quirks of college students as they are involved in everyday life and the fast-moving world. Originally concerned with the problems of MSU students, the syndicate is forced to generalize the cartoon topics, according to Frank.

Formed during the summer, the syndicate with headquarters in Nebraska, is supplying cartoons to 13 college newspapers. Frank intends eventually to reach daily papers, hopefully the Detroit News or Free Press.

In a four-year career, Frank has drawn over 3,000 cartoons, published five books and has been the cartoonist for past presidential hopeful Pat Paulson.

Frank has suspended work for national magazines to concentrate on teaching and the syndicate. A legend of campus, he is currently art director in residence with the MSU Advertising Dept. and is presenting copy and layout classes with an artist's technique.

John Shingleton, placement bureau director, and Frank have done a book on job placement and college students for the New York Life Insurance Company.

"Frankly Speaking," a compilation of Frank's cartoons, sold 6,000 copies locally.

Restoration of antique cars is Frank's second occupation.

"I've been driving antique cars since 1959," he said. Frank is currently touring campus in a Model "A" Ford Victoria. A Model "A" race car owned by Frank is used primarily in automotive shows.

Ink and pen in hand, Frank started his career in high school by making sweatshirts, sweaters and beach jackets socially relevant through cartoons.

"Frankly" expanding

Phil Frank, cartoonist of "Frankly Speaking" in the State News, is expanding the scope of his work. Frank has formed a syndicate to distribute his humor to 13 other campuses across the nation. His satirical drawings will no longer aim at the polluted Red Cedar and Olin, but at college life in general. State News photo by Tom A. Leone

'CURSE OF THE DEMON'

Film mixes terror with artiness

By MAJA
State News Reviewer

Back in the late 1950's the monster film was in its last dying gasps as a major money maker for Hollywood studios, and was rapidly giving way to the "more sophisticated" horror film of today. "Curse of the Demon" was made in this period, and is one of the few horror films that combines the artiness of the contemporary cinema and the old terrorist activities of Hollywood.

The plot of "Curse of the Demon" is another episode into the continuing story of devil worship and witchcraft in modern England. There is a good doctor and a bad doctor, a medium and a seance, the bad doctor's mother and the good doctor's girlfriend. There is also a Victorian mansion, a number of thunderstorms, full moons, black cats, Druid ruins, Druid runes and no lack of incantations and monsters arising therefrom.

But all you excursionists into the realms of darkness, take heart—"Curse of the Demon" is one of the best horror films I've ever seen. Its story may be rehearsed, but at least nicely so. And it has fine points that can't be overlooked, mainly because most of them lie in the photography. From the opening oblique shots of Stonehenge onward, the pictographic qualities of the film medium are used to their best advantage. The forest scenes are nicely done, with lighting behind the trees to capture the ghastly, ghostly mood of the film. Director Jacques Tourneur uses full sets reminiscent of Orson Welles, detailed and complete with ceilings (virtually all films are shot with ceilingless sets). And for his sets he has chosen decor appropriate to the action then in progress: French provincial is for good guys, and Tudor English with Gothic influences is the home of evil-personified, no less, by the decidedly demoniac and bearded Dr. Karskall (Niall MacGinnis) who plays his cloak and dagger part with the expertise of another Vincent Price—only more so. Dr. Holden is typically the All-American crew-cut innocence and skepticism, holding the firm belief that "all doctors should come from Missouri."

Played by Dana Andrews, he comes with the French Provincial. Peggy Cummins is Miss Baby-face Blonde of 1957, but does a fairly good job of fidgeting, as her script requires her to. Tourneur relies on subtleties

"THE BASOOTIES"

Adapted musical 'La Strada' termed 'adequate at best'

To transform a great movie into a successful musical play is indeed an arduous task. Few have been done successfully and unfortunately "La Strada" isn't one of them.

The musical is adapted from Federico Fellini's brilliant "La Strada" (Best Foreign Film of 1956) in which Giulietta Masina, Anthony Quinn and Richard Basehart gave superb performances as Gelsomina, Zampano and Il Matto respectively. The musical play version is perfectly dreadful (the Fool) compared with the film. Considered as an independent vehicle, it is adequate at best.

"La Strada" (the Road) takes place in Italy and is concerned with the life of Zampano, a traveling performer who along with Gelsomina a half-witted girl whom he bought for 10,000 lira roam the countryside left much to be desired. Out of 17 songs only two, "With a Man" and "Everything Needs Something" had any merit. Hardly a good percentage. The sets by Ming Cho Lee were extremely well done and the costumes of the main characters were highly satisfactory and appropriate. Alan Schneider's direction, however, does not even approach the genius of Fellini. The musical is tolerable as long as it sticks relatively close to the film, when it does not, as was the case in the later half of the second act, the musical plunges into the depths of mediocrity. The first half of the second act was excellent and I hoped that the musical was finally going to prove its worth, but in the second half the audience was instantly transported from Italy playing in the street and in circus.

The first act of the musical was terribly slow-moving. Some scenes could well have been eliminated. Although the musical lacked the hauntingly beautiful theme of the film, Lionel Bart's music was praiseworthy although his lyrics to Broadway, complete with its lavishness which was incoherent with the mood of the play.

Bernadette Peters as Gelsomina was hardly as endearing, or as poignant as she could have been. This is the director's fault. Her voice, nevertheless, was entirely pleasing when it wasn't being drowned out by the orchestra. Vincent Beck as Zampano was convincing most of the time but his performance, despite his rich, full voice, was not outstanding.

"La Strada" which needs much work before it hits New York will play nightly (except Sunday) at 8:30 p.m. in the Fisher Theatre in Detroit until Nov. 29. Matinees are Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Tickets range from $9 to $33.

Africans perform dances

An unusual evening of folk dancing will be presented at 8:15 p.m. Nov. 4, when the African Dance Co. of Ghana appears in the Auditorium.

The dance company, now on its second U.S. tour, is a Series "A" attraction in MSU's Lecture-Concert Series. The company of 45 dancers, singers, drummers and flutists, under director Albert Mawere-Opoku, will perform dances of the various tribes of Ghana.

The company boasts a wide range of percussion accompaniment and an unusual flute ensemble.

Tickets are available at the MSU Ticket Office or at the door.

Biweekly talks on women held at Rather Hall

Topics of interest to women will be presented every Monday and Tuesday evenings in Rather Hall, as their program, "Feminine Point of View" gets underway.

Twice each week various speakers will discuss relevant aspects of a woman's life. Beauty experts, members of the MSU faculty, vocational counselors and outstanding women in America are scheduled to take part.

"A woman's role is so diversified that perhaps these presentations will be of benefit and interest to residents of a woman's hall," Lois Brown, Sycamore, Ill., sophomore and Rather's president, said.

Prague Symphony shows artistry of Czechs

An inspired Lecture-Concert Series audience nearly filled the Auditorium Monday evening to greet the Prague Symphony. The Symphony, conducted by Vaclav Smetacek, is on the first American tour in its 35-year history.

The majesty and artistry of the Prague Symphony are almost unequalled.

The all-Czech program began with Karel Boleslav Jirak's "Symphonic Scherzo," a work new to me. The composer is the former Chief of Music Broadcasting for Prague Radio. He now teaches at the University of Chicago.

By VALERIE RESTIVO
State News Reviewer

Jirak's "Scherzo," originally written for symphonic band, is a conglomeration of syncopated rhythms and pictorial lyricism. Dvorak's B Minor Cello Concerto made the evening an event. The mellow virtuosity of cellists Josef Chucro uncovered the soul and substance of the Dvorak work.

Maestro Smetacek was at his finest, phrasing the piece as Dvorak himself must have wanted it. The woodwinds' vibrant sound was particularly appealing, and the French horn section distinguished itself.

The Prague Symphony achieves an unusually well-balanced sound; the musicians seem tuned to the same frequency. Maestro Smetacek conducts as if he were teaching a conductor's class. His spare movements indicate a conscious avoidance of wasted motion.

The concerto's slow movement was exquisite. The orchestra and the cello flowed from and into each other in a near-perfect blending of tone and mood.

The third movement was strong and sweet. Many in the audience stood in tribute to the power and the beauty of music and musicians.

The Dvorak "Symphony No. 5 in E minor, opus 95 (from 'The New World') formed the second half of the program. The Prague symphony brought new life to a much-abused work.

Maestro Smetacek sharpened the contrasts which are available in the first movement, but are too-often ignored in conventional interpretations. The tympanist excelled, and the bass section was notably rich, reaching beyond the drab background usually expected of it.

As I had during the cello concerto, I again felt that this was the interpretation Dvorak would have selected.

Toward the end of the movement, the concertmaster became so spirited that his bow sprang from his hand. He fortunately caught it before reaching another measure or another catastrophe. The evening might be known as The Concert of the Flying Bow!

By the time the old, faithful "Going Home" theme arrived it was no longer trite, but a vital and moving experience. The oboe solo was lovely, and I enjoyed the theme for the first time in years. The woodwinds sang like clear water.

The third movement was more like conventional renditions than either of the first two movements. The orchestra began weakly, after a cellist slid awkwardly into the last dramatic notes of the second movement.

Monday evening was probably the first time in my life that I did not yawn through the long last movement of the "New World." I have often (in my imagination) chided the composer for not knowing where to end his work. Although I preferred the Prague Symphony's rendition of the first movement to the others, I found the fourth movement more varied than usual.

The Symphony "found" themes that are often left behind for those the audience knows best. The ending was brisk but perhaps a bit less dramatic than it might have been, in contrast to the many "false endings."

In response to their warm reception, the musicians offered the Overture to Smetana's "The Bartered Bride," as an encore. The music's humor and its folk quality were a good finish.

I hope we in the United States will hear the Prague Symphony again. It would be interesting to listen to more of their repertoire.

TO PERFORM AT MSU

Royal choral group one of world's best

By MAJA
State News Reviewer

Just as Italy is the home of the opera and Germany the place of origin for chamber music, so is England the home of the choral work. London, particularly, since it has long been the seat of the English monarchy, has had a fine series of choruses, usually supported by the ruler and providing entertainment for him.

Far from becoming defunct in modern times, the chorus has grown in England, and perhaps the greatest of them all is the Royal Choral Society, which will be performing at MSU on Thursday night. Tickets are available at the Union and at the door for $3, $4 and $5. Student tickets are on sale for $1 and a student ID.

The Royal Choral Society is making this tour of America under the patronage of Queen Elizabeth II, an honor which few English companies are given. Its 90-member chorus includes four soloists: Sally Le Sage (soprano), Marjorie Biggar (contralto), Alexander Oliver (tenor) and Rodney Macann (bass). In addition, the group is accompanied by the Royal Choral Society Players with Wyn Morris as conductor. The players themselves are not little known in England, where they exist as a separate entity, a chamber music group.

Thursday night's program includes the music of Franz Josef Haydn, Sir Arthur Bliss and George Frederick Handel. Haydn's "Mass in D minor" (also known as the Nelson Mass) will open the performance. Written during Haydn's service as court composer to the Count of Esterhazy, it commemorates Lord Nelson's triumph over Napoleon and was later performed for him when the illustrious gentleman visited the Esterhazys in eastern Austria. Disapproved of in Haydn's own times because of its "undue loudness," it has since come to be regarded as superior even to his "Creation" and "Seasons" masses.

The "Pastoral" of Sir Arthur Bliss is a musical interpretation of selected poetry dealing with the Golden Age of Greece. Scenes of rustic life, legends of the gods and Grecian symbols of love, found in the poems of Ben Jonson, Robert Nichols and Theocritus, form the basis of this work, liberally supplemented by strings, drums, flutes and a single piccolo.

The "Coronation Anthem" of George Frederick Handel was composed in 1727 for the coronation of King George II. Elegant in design, his music finds its audience appeal in the simple aesthetics of tonal patterns. Listening to it, one is astonished to hear that such a magnificent piece could have been completed on short notice, as indeed it was.

This program is more than just a bunch of people singing together. It is a presentation by one of the most famous choral groups in the world and should be recognized as such.

Trustees OK research grants

Gifts and grants totaling $3,179,379 were accepted Friday (Oct. 17) by MSU's Board of Trustees.

This figure includes $3,053,727 for MSU, with $1,163,478 of that amount designated for scholarship purposes. The remaining $125,652 is for Oakland University, MSU's affiliate.

Methods of persuading bureaucratic institutions to adopt new and better procedures will be field tested by George W. Fairweather, professor of psychology, using a grant of $192,598 from the National Institute of Mental Health.

Fairweather's work, now in its third year, will be conducted in some 255 mental health hospitals across the nation. He is recommending that these hospitals adopt a new program based on research of community life, as an alternative to institutional care for the mentally ill.

Two other grants, related to mentally ill or disabled persons, will be administered by Gregory A. Miller, professor of rehabilitation counseling in the College of Education.

The grants, totaling $270,742, from the Rehabilitation Service Administration of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, will support training of vocational counselors. Now in its 15th year, the program provides financial aid to 83 graduate students preparing for work with disabled persons ranging from the mentally retarded to those with criminal records.

International study and research by MSU faculty members and graduate students will continue with a grant of $200,000 from the Ford Foundation to Ralph H. Smuckler, dean of International Programs.

Donald J. Bowersox, professor of marketing, will direct a one-year grant of $89,000 from Johnson and Johnson Domestic Operation Co. to build a dynamic computer model of management operations involved in physical distribution planning.

A new approach to training elementary school teachers at MSU will receive attention from W. Robert Houston, professor of elementary and special education who received a grant of $167,300 from the U.S. Office of Education.

The National Science Foundation has awarded $190,000 to the MSU Kellogg Biological Station at Gull Lake to conduct a research program that will provide an integrated study of freshwater habitats while training students as scientists in ecosystem analysis.

One facet of the two-year analysis of ponds, lakes and streams will involve cycling dissolved organic matter and studying its relation to availability of essential nutrients.

An operational grant of $70,154 from the Michigan Association for Regional Medical Programs was accepted for the College of Human Medicine. The funds, to be administered by Dr. Robert M. Daugherty, associate professor of physiology, will help support the Hypertension Clinic at Sparrow Hospital.

CITY MANAGER COMMENTS:

Towing often carried too far

By JEFF SHELTER
State News Staff Writer

A bad experience being shared by a growing number of students is to leave an apartment party and grope through a cold, muddy parking lot only to find that their cars have been towed away.

As if this inconvenience were not enough, once they locate their cars at some out-of-the-way service station, they are faced with a towing fee that must be paid to get back their cars.

This is a common occurrence at several apartment houses in the East Lansing area.

During the weekend of the MSU-Michigan football game, the East Lansing Police Dept. received several reports of cars being towed from East Lansing apartments.

Trouble erupted at one apartment house and according to East Lansing Police Corporal Robert Foster, patrol cars had to be sent on five separate occasions to "keep the peace" between tow truck drivers and car owners.

"In this case," Foster said, "these tow truck drivers were causing more of a problem than they were solving. As soon as they'd pull out one car, another would pull in. These guys were out there for the money."

The problem also raised the ire of East Lansing Asst. City Manager William Costick, who promised to investigate the matter.

"It seems that these guys could use a little more common sense, especially on a weekend like this," Costick said. While agreeing that violators should be towed he said that "a little more discretion should be used at peak times like this."

Foster added his concern that the situation would be repeated on homecoming weekend, and hoped some action could be taken before that time.

After contacting the managers of several local apartment houses it was learned that almost all of them restrict parking to tenants. In most cases one parking space is allotted to each apartment, and some type of sticker is issued to identify authorized vehicles. Only two apartment houses provide visitor parking.

Two systems are generally used to dispose of unauthorized cars. After receiving a complaint from a tenant, the manager will summon a towing agency to come and remove the car. Usually an attempt is made to contact the car owner before the vehicle is removed.

The other method is used by apartment managers who have contracts with specific agencies. These towers may "patrol" the area at will and remove any cars that do not display a permit.

The fees charged by the towing agencies range from $15 to $30. Holmes' Phillips 66 Station charges a flat rate of $15. According to the manager of the station they operate only on call.

Ray's Standard Service also charges a $15 fee and does not patrol apartment lots.

Another station that acts as a tower for the apartments, Mt. Hope Pure, would not disclose its fee, but said that "it depends on what's involved."

According to the manager of University Standard Service, the general fee for towing a motorist in distress averages from $6 to $7, or approximately $1 a mile.

Most apartment managers claim that they have no room for visitor parking, and while some tolerate unauthorized parking to a minimal degree, most say they must remove unauthorized cars "to protect the rights of the tenants."

One apartment manager defended the parking restriction by saying, "Nowhere in East Lansing can a person park his car free. What makes people think they can park on our private property for nothing?"

He also pointed out that nearly all apartment houses display signs warning would-be violators of the parking rule.

CBS shoots film on MSU campus

By PAULA BRAY
State News Staff Writer

A recruiter. A college student. How does one involve the other? In a 30-minute documentary next spring, CBS television will show what it's like to be a company recruiter involved with the college generation. MSU and the University of Michigan are the settings for the story tentatively titled "Recruiter."

Recently the college recruiter has been in the news because of demonstrations and the amount of interviewing done on campuses. In its documentary, CBS plans to show recruiters at various schools and their experiences in relating with students and their career objectives.

"We are trying to tell every aspect of this man's job of recruiting," Judy Hole, CBS coordinator for the documentary, said. "They have a great influence on the kids."

CBS employed Albert and David Maysles from New York to make the movies on campus. The Maysles are producers of people-oriented films.

Recently they made a feature-length film titled "Salesman," soon to start the theatre circuit. It is an in-depth study of four Bible salesmen and their experiences of selling their product in peoples' homes.

Because of the Maysles brothers' orientation to people, the focus of "Recruiter" will be on human interest.

CBS spent Oct. 14-15 on campus working with two companies and their recruiters, Mike Hubbard from Bethlehem Steel Co. and Charles O'Meara from Kimberly-Clark.

While here, they filmed actual interviews of students with recruiters. The students didn't know they were to be filmed prior to arriving at the Placement Bureau.

CBS plans to follow a couple of these students to a plant visit. The recruiters also visited Phi Delta Theta fraternity house to film an informal discussion with students.

"We didn't arrange anything that doesn't normally happen," Miss Hole said. "Recruiters sometimes go to fraternity houses or meetings of business fraternities or lecture to faculty members."

The film tries to get down to the personal feelings of such an encounter," Robert Schneider, asst. director of technical business at the Placement Bureau, said. "They are trying to get the feeling of dialogue on how student needs can be met through business and industry."

Emphasis is placed on social issues raised by students and how the company can face them, Schneider said.

Lindsay

Procaccino, the 57-year-old city comptroller, won the Democratic primary over four rivals, garnering only one-third of the vote. None of the other Democratic contenders has endorsed him, but two have come out for Lindsay. So have such prominent Democrats as former Supreme Court Justice Arthur Goldberg.

Procaccino's big drop in the polls has come in October, after a series of television and radio debates.

Marchi's recent gains apparently came at the expense of Procaccino, as the two candidates split the conservative, law-and-order vote. Marchi called on Procaccino to withdraw "as a public service."

"I find that thousands of New Yorkers have become disenfranchised with Mr. Procaccino and are considering whether to vote for me or risk another four miserable years with John Lindsay," Marchi said.

If Lindsay wins, he would be the second New York mayor to win without the endorsement of either major party. Vincent R. Impellitteri did it in 1950, and Impellitteri didn't even have the Liberal party behind him. Now a retired judge practicing law, Democrat Impellitteri has endorsed Procaccino.

John Kramer, asst. professor, political science, Aug. 31; Bertram E. Garskof, asst. professor, psychology, Aug. 31; and James W. Gooch, regional director, continuing education, Oct. 24.

The board approved the following retirements (first year of MSU employment in parentheses): Harry H. Kimber, professor and chairman, religion, on terminal leave, July 1, 1970-June 30, 1971, retires July 1, 1971 (1931); Woodrow W. Snyder, professor, dairy, Sept. 16, 1969, (1940); Mrs. Katie Cox, service leader, Brody cafeteria, Sept. 16, 1969 (1954); and John I. Caruso, coordinator, physical plant, Feb. 1, 1970 (1953).

education reform, the governor said party unity will be a crucial concern in passage of his programs.

Already, Sander M. Levin D-Berkley, has introduced two counterproposals to Milliken's original program. The Republican party controls the Michigan senate and the Democrats hold the majority in the House.

"I realize very clearly that the Republican party is a big organization that contains people who believe in a wide variety of things," Milliken said. But our potential lies in our ability to move together toward these goals which we hold in common.

"Now is the time for this party to bury its differences and move in unison toward the most important goal we face-the goal of educational reform."

Nobel winner liked freedom of 'U'

By DIANE PETRYK
State News Staff Writer

In 1926 a somewhat shy Lansing youth enrolled at Michigan State College and emerged, upon graduation, totally committed to a life of research.

In 1969 he received the Nobel Prize for medicine. The first MSU-trained scientist to win that high honor, Alfred Day Hershey, now director of the Genetics Research Unit of the Carnegie Institute in Cold Springs Harbor, N.Y., reminisced about his college days in a State News interview.

Freedom to pursue the things that interested him and freedom to do so at his own speed were things Hershey enjoyed most at MSU.

"I had a fine time in college because I could elect all sorts of courses not connected with my major and had lots of time to read all sorts of books," he said. "Of course, we were allowed to go into the stacks in those days."

Hershey said there was very little involvement of student in public matters then.

"Football was the big thing and swallowing goldfish was really in, but none of my friends or I ever tried it."

As far as education itself goes, "it's pretty much the same," Hershey said, "although mechanically it has changed in order to deal with greater numbers."

After visiting the campus last year, Hershey commented that as he remembered, it was mostly trees and open space. He was surprised by the great changes.

"I had a canoe on the river," he said, "and once in awhile I even had the courage to ask a girl to go with me." He added that the girls on campus were always "gorgeous."

Professors and colleagues described Hershey as a non-conformist. He would often work all night in the laboratory and sleep all day they said. One colleague commended MSU for not stifling his creativity by forcing him to conform.

Hershey does not think the institution has anything to do with conformity, however.

"As I look back on my youth I feel the great impulse to conformity comes from one's self. Young people want to be like one another. I was sort of stupid socially. I didn't know how to be like other people."

Concerning his thoughts for the future when he was in college Hershey said "In those days you just hoped you'd find a job. It wasn't easy."

Hershey's first job, after receiving his Ph.D. in bacteriology here in 1934, was as an accountant for the Work Projects Administration (WPA), in Lansing.

It was the height of the depression when Hershey lived in a rooming house on Abbott Road, one block from Grand River Michigan State College was in tri-semester, and tuition and fees amounted to $90 a year.

"I was so poor I never considered going anywhere else to school," he said.

On Dec. 10 Hershey will accept his share of the $75,000 Nobel Prize for medicine. How does it feel?

"It's wonderful and exciting, but tiring. Of course anyone would be delighted, but it's more fun than even I imagined," he said.

Asked about his wife's reaction Hershey replied, "It's not confidential she kissed me."

Profs dispute school testing in state education hearings

LANSING (UPI) — The plan to test the learning level of Michigan students recommended by Gov. Milliken only skims the top of a very complex problem, professional educators testified here Tuesday.

In a hearing before state Sen. Anthony Stamm's Education Committee professors from MSU aired complaints and dissatisfaction with the Milliken approach.

As part of his education reform program, Milliken first wants to assess what Michigan children are learning and in what areas teaching has not been effective.

One of his bills provides for a statewide test in reading and mathematics for all students in grades one, two, four and seven.

Based on the information received from this comprehensive test, students would be identified who need remedial assistance and the general public would be aware of "the progress of the state system of education as a whole."

Charles A. Blackman, professor of secondary education and curriculum development at MSU, said Milliken's approach embodies two "major dangers."

The tests would focus only upon two subject areas — reading and mathematics — to the exclusion of all others. This could result in an overemphasis on teaching these two subjects in the schools, he said.

A second danger could be in the "misuse" of the test results when "all qualifying factors are not visible or understood," Blackman said.

Mott Institute Director at MSU, Clyde Campbell, said, "I am sure in my own mind that teachers would be teaching for the tests. Other programs will be dropped because of studying for the tests."

"When you cram information to take a test you forget the information later," Campbell said. "Crammed information is not the type that is used in life."

Some publicity of test results could be beneficial, Robert Ebel, another education professor at MSU said. He said it is "inevitable" that the schools will compare examination results.

The present educational system lacks "a bench mark to see our progress," Ebel said.

Last year the legislature authorized a statewide skills test program administered through the Dept. of Education, Philip Kearny, of the department, who is setting up the testing program, told Stamm's committee any examination program should go beyond just reading and mathematics.

Kearny said the department will test reading, English, vocabulary and mathematics statewide the last two weeks of January 1970. The examinations will just be for fourth and seventh grade students.

Milliken's bill "could be an expansion of our program," Kearny said.

The department testing will not rank all the schools in the state in order of their performance but will set up a "profile" of all fourth and seventh grade students, Kearny said. The results will be broken up in terms of geography to show the learning level in different economics areas, he said.

When broken down into sections, the front page has the highest amount of special interest, 28 per cent with the editorial page following close behind with 24 per cent.

Thirty-six per cent of those sampled said they read the entire paper without paying special attention to any particular section.

The remaining 12 per cent was split between "What's Happening," "Sports," "Movie Preview," "Crossword Puzzle," "Peanuts Personal," "Peanuts" and the "Placement Bureau" in that order.

When asked what changes they would like to see 43 per cent of those sampled said they would like more national and international news in the paper. They felt since it was their only news source they should be more informed of what goes on outside the campus. Only 9 per cent said the State News was biased in its views.

A few persons said the paper should be a little larger so it could accommodate a broader news coverage.

One girl said she thought the News should include a comic section and another said the clues to the crossword puzzles were asinine.

But, for the most part, students and faculty seemed pleased with the State News and many commented on its excellence as a school newspaper.

TO HELP STUDENT WIVES

Child care needed at MSU

By HOPE MAJOR

Residents of the MSU married community have voiced a need for a child care center with flexible hours and low fees.

"There is a great need for some kind of day care facilities in Spartan Village, and the ideal would be to have one in each married housing community," Jean Chappell, vice-president of Spartan Wives Club, said.

"Even just a building with toys and equipment put at our disposal would help solve the problems of available child care."

She said that the most "unideal" child care situation is also the one most often used—dropping the children off at another married housing apartment where there is not enough room for play.

"Often student families settle for second best or fifth best child care because there is nothing else they can do," she said.

Alison Taggart, Spartan Wives Club president, also sees a need for a day care center in the married housing community. "It would help mothers have a little extra time to themselves," she said.

Mrs. Taggart said that three-hour day care services are available during the summer at Spartan Village School and Red Cedar School.

"The women love having the summer day care, but fall comes, husbands are back in school and there is no one to babysit," she said.

Spartan Nursery School, which is available only to MSU students' children and some Head Start children has a long waiting list of applicants, said Martha Hill, secretary of the nursery school and the Head Start Evaluation and Research Center.

"Some children have waited one and one half years," Mrs. Hill said. "The wait depends on the time of application."

Spartan Nursery School is operated by the Family and Child Sciences Dept. Ninety-two 3-and-4-year-olds meet in half-day sessions each week. Tuition is $10-15 per term. Mrs. Hill said this fee is about one-third the fees of other East Lansing area nursery schools.

The Pre-School Laboratory of the Family and Child Sciences Dept. enrolls children of students, faculty and of Lansing area families. It accommodates about 65 children in the 3-to-4-year-old group.

"There are many more applications than we can accept," said Robert P. Boger, director of the Family and Child Studies Center.

The Wesley Cooperative Nursery School in the University United Methodist Center has an enrollment of 40 children. Over one-half the children have at least one parent attending MSU, nursery president Liz Doyle said. Nineteen of these families live in married housing.

This school also has a waiting list of applicants and is now accepting applications for next year. Fees are $31 per term for 3-year-olds and $46.50 for 4-year-olds.

Apollo test successful

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — The launch crew today successfully completed a countdown rehearsal for next month's launching of the Apollo 12 moon landing mission.

The lengthy test, which began last Wednesday, was completed with a simulated blastoff of the 36-story-tall Saturn 5 rocket at 11:25 a.m., two and one-half minutes late.

The count had proceeded flawlessly until there were just 10 minutes remaining. At that time, a brief hold was called because of a faulty reading on a sensor that records the level of liquid oxygen in the first stage of the rocket. The problem was quickly corrected and the count resumed.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration reported the countdown test was completed with only minor problems.

The three Navy commanders who will fly the mission, Charles Conrad Jr., Richard F. Gordon Jr. and Alan L. Bean, kept tabs on the test and spent part of today in the command ship simulator here.

They are to spend 32 hours on the moon while Gordon orbits above in the command ship Yankee Clipper. They plan two excursions outside, each lasting three and one-half hours.

The Bug Slayer

No computer stamps out program bugs like RCA's Octoputer. It boosts programming efficiency up to 40%.

Programming is already one-third of computer costs, and going up faster than any other cost in the industry.

A lot of that money is eaten up by bugs — mistakes in programs. With usual methods, programmers don't know of mistakes until long after a program is written. They may have to wait days for a test run.

RCA's Spectra 70 46, the Octoputer, takes a whole new approach based on time sharing.

It substitutes a computer terminal for pencil and paper and talks to the programmer as he writes the program, pointing out mistakes as they are made.

The Octoputer is the only computer available today that has this capability. It's as much as 40% faster. And it works on IBM 360 and other computer programs as well as its own.

Costs go down. Programs get done faster. And you need fewer programmers — who are scarce and getting scarcer. Of course, Octoputer does more than just slay bugs. It's a completely new kind of creature that does time sharing and regular computing together.

The Octoputer concentrates on remote computing because that's where the industry is going. We got there first, because communications is what RCA is famous for. It puts Octoputer a generation ahead of its major competitor. It can put you ahead of yours.
