Fuel system trouble threatens Apollo 12

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Trouble in a fuel system on the Apollo 12 spaceship Wednesday threatened to delay the blast off of man's second moon landing mission past Friday's scheduled launch time.

"Project officials are investigating to determine the extent of the difficulty and possible effect on Apollo 12's launch operations," the space agency reported.

The problem, possibly a leak, was discovered in loading one of two small liquid hydrogen tanks used to provide gases for electrical power in the spacecraft. Technicians unloaded the hydrogen before crawling inside the spaceship for visual inspection.

Details of the malfunction and a decision on whether the rocket lifts off Friday would come later, officials said.

Unless the problem could be corrected in time for the 11:22 a.m. EST Friday launch, the Apollo 12 mission would be delayed until Sunday at the earliest. The next acceptable launch date after that is Dec. 14.

A Sunday launch would change the moon landing site to 360 miles west of the original target and prevent the Apollo 12 astronauts from inspecting an unmanned Surveyor spacecraft.

One of the goals of the Apollo 12 mission is to perfect procedures for a pinpoint landing. If they are launched Friday, they hope to touch down within a few hundred feet of the Surveyor.

Astronauts Charles Conrad Jr., Alan L. Bean and Richard F. Gordon Jr. took the afternoon off after going through more of their practice work in spacecraft simulators when the malfunction occurred.

The problem was the first hitch in launch preparations that had gone extremely well since the countdown began last Friday, aiming at a 10-day lunar mission in which Conrad and Bean are to spend more than 31 hours on the moon, exploring the Ocean of Storms.

The space agency said there was "an apparent failure in the vacuum holding characteristics" of a hydrogen tank, one of two in the service module. Each tank carries 28 pounds of the hydrogen which provides gases for operating the spacecraft's fuel cells.

New tabloid talks of peace

"A Newspaper for Peace," an 8-page tabloid being published by the Lansing Coalition to End the War Now, will be distributed today in the Lansing area as this month's moratorium demonstration.

Mike Honey, Coalition coordinator, called for 300 volunteers to help distribute 50,000 copies of the paper in door-to-door canvassing today.

Anyone interested in helping distribute the papers should see members of the coalition in 295 Bessey Hall, office wing.

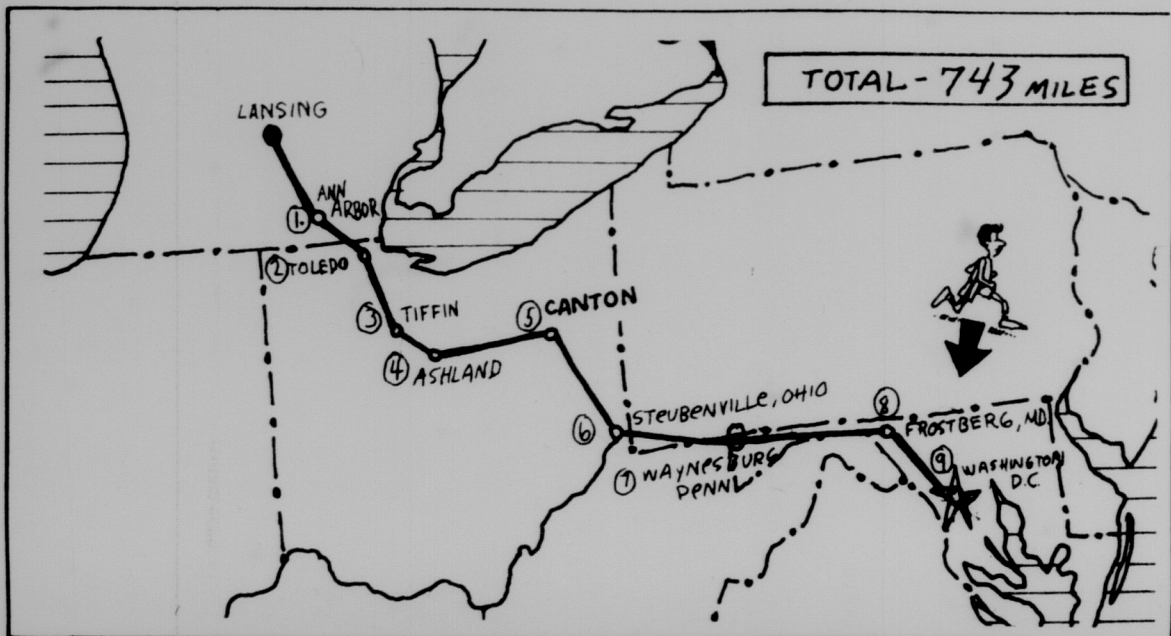

"We need 300 people to distribute the paper," Honey said Wednesday. "We're asking college students, high school students and anyone else interested to help us distribute the copies."

Volunteers are needed for any amount of time between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m., and will be assigned in teams to cover the city.

"Rather than having a mass demonstration like last month, we're trying to use this paper as the means of getting our message across," Honey said.

The paper, put together by Honey and members of the coalition, will consist of articles on how the Vietnam war affects the daily lives of Lansing area residents in taxes, resource allocation and the affect it has on national priorities as seen on the local level.

It will also include an analysis of Nixon's position on the war and an article on why America is in Vietnam.

WITH U.N. FLAG

Peace runners to arrive in Washington today

Peace runners will arrive in Washington, D.C., this afternoon, completing the seven-day, 743-mile Run for Peace.

Representatives from Frostburg College in Maryland received the United Nations flag Wednesday afternoon and began running the final 125 miles to the Capitol.

A delegation of MSU students will present the flag to Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., at 6 tonight in the closed courtyard of the Capitol.

Jeff Cole, executive administrator for the Senior Class Council, received word Tuesday from presidential aide Don Blair that President Nixon would be available to accept the flag from peace runners in Washington.

Cole said he rejected the offer because Blair's notification indicated that Nixon was trying to interpret the non-violent protest as activity of the "silent majority."

"To give the flag to President Nixon would be tantamount to being bought off," Cole explained. "It would be a form of prostituting the values we're trying to present in this effort."

In addition, Cole said, Hart had already been notified.

"Sen. Hart was picked for solid reasons," Cole said. "Hart is a real lover of truth and an ideal senator, and I don't feel there is much difference in rank between him and Nixon."

Cole explained that when he contacted Tim Crosby, head resident assistant at Frostburg College, Crosby announced that despite poor weather conditions, Frostburg runners would carry the flag to the Capitol.

"I can't believe the magnetic power of this flag," Cole stated, adding that a U.N. flag was selected as the symbol most impervious to criticism.

"It is far from symbolizing perfect unity," Cole continued, "but carrying that flag is our way of manifesting concern for the government's particularistic policy as regards non-Western peoples."

The MSU student delegation will meet the runners outside of the Capitol and accompany them the remaining miles.

located in the 17-county belt in the northern part of the lower peninsula where new oil and gas reserves were discovered recently.

Thus far, four oil and gas wells have been brought in in the new area and enthusiastic oilmen are calling it the "new north slope" in reference to the vast Alaskan oil lands which were leased recently for $900 million.

The 83,000 acres up for lease represent only a small portion of the land in the area where the new reserves were located, however, while the Alaskan lands were all still state-controlled when the oil was found. Thus, the take for the state from Thursday's sale will be nowhere near to being comparable with the Alaskan sale.

The nearly 83,000 acres have been divided into 751 parcels of land, none of which is bigger than 160 acres (one quarter of a square mile).

A spokesman in the Dept. of Natural Resources said Wednesday the total take from the sale is "impossible to figure in advance." He said there was sufficient interest in the sale, however, that it is expected to run into Friday and that 200 companies and individuals are expected to be represented at the sale.

When the discovery of the new reserves was revealed in October, the chief of the Geological Survey Division of the Dept. of Natural Resources, Gerald Eddy, said he expected the rights to sell for a "considerably higher" sum than any previous sale in Michigan.

Eddy said 560,000 acres were leased at a sale in August 1968, for an average of $2 per acre before the oil was discovered and that the price of the new acreage should go well above that.

Under procedures set up by the Dept. of Natural Resources, the bidding starts at $1 per package and the eventual bid "depends on the competition."

Money from the rights goes into the state general fund unless the land involved has been purchased by the state with funds in the fish and game fund. If that is the case, the money goes back into the fish and game fund.

The state also receives one-eighth of the money brought in by oil and gas produced on its land.

Administration prepares for march on Washington

Riot trained troops move into position at nation's Capitol

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government began moving about 9,000 riot trained regular troops Wednesday into the Washington area as a "purely precautionary measure" in advance of this week's antiwar demonstrations.

In the meantime the Vietnam protesters have won the right to march down Pennsylvania Avenue—a street the government had insisted was off limits—but will avoid the White House, once a prime target of their demonstrations.

The Pentagon announced that paratroopers of the Army's 82nd Airborne Division arrived from Ft. Bragg, N.C. a regiment of the 2nd Marine Division from Camp Lejeune, N.C. were scheduled to arrive Wednesday evening.

About 4,000 paratroopers and Marines will be in position at federal military installations, with the remaining units pulling in today from bases in Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina.

Jerry Friedheim, deputy asst. secretary of defense for public affairs, emphasized that "this is a precautionary action only," adding:

"No final decision has been made to utilize federal personnel and . . . these personnel will remain on federal installations unless the Dept. of Justice, coordinating with local civilian officials, requests assistance."

The lead elements of the 82nd Airborne's 4th Brigade moved into place on the eve of a three-day period of demonstrations expected to climax Saturday with as many as 200,000 antiwar demonstrators marching through the capital.

A Pentagon spokesman said the other units would be in position by Thursday morning.

He said the troops will enter the city only if called to assist the 3,800-man local police force and the 2,000 National Guardsmen due for duty over the weekend.

Rustem

Rustem voted new chairman of ASMSU

Former ASMSU member-at-large Bill Rustem assumed the chairmanship of the Student Board at 1 a.m. Wednesday on the sixth ballot.

The regular session of the board opened with presentations by declared candidates, which did not include Rustem. The four other candidates were Allen Mintzer, Chuck Mostov, Mike Shore and Harry Chancey, all members-at-large.

The board reached an irreconcilable deadlock on the fifth ballot with eight abstaining votes. Shore had dropped out and none of the others could get the nine votes needed for election.

A caucus composed of the heads of the major governing groups plus member-at-large Gary Klinsky sought another candidate because they felt that none of the declared candidates could unify the board.

Klinsky said that they feared a permanent split would result from the election of any of the three and that the board would consequently become unable to carry out the plans already initiated.

Klinsky said that no one in the caucus wanted to run for the office. They were, however, looking for a person who could unify the board's efforts without alienating any of the board members.

The caucus put direct pressure on Rustem, urging him to declare his candidacy in hopes of bringing the board together enough to complete its projects in the 13 weeks remaining in this session.

As soon as Rustem placed his name in the race, Allen Mintzer withdrew in support of the former.

"Probably the major question is why I wouldn't run in the first place and why I decided to run now," Rustem began his presentation.

"The main reason that I decided not to run is that accepting the chair now for the

Nixon stays home to view peace rally; public tours halted

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon definitely plans to be in the White House Saturday when antiwar demonstrators climax three days of activities in the capital.

This was announced Wednesday by press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler.

Ziegler also disclosed that public tours of the executive mansion will be suspended on Saturday. He said that, because of the great numbers expected here for the demonstration, "there would be no way to effectively conduct the public tours."

This week's demonstrations are a sequel to a one-day candlelight march and Washington Monument Moratorium Day rally Oct. 15. And organizers say it is the predecessor to another, longer demonstration in mid-December if U.S. Vietnam policy does not change.

The first scheduled affair for Thursday is a three-hour "Peace in the Park" affair at Farragut Square two blocks from the White House, where demonstration supporters will hand out literature and hold discussions on the war.

Shortly after sundown, participants begin what is planned as a 40-hour "March Against Death" from the Arlington National Cemetery end of Memorial Bridge across the Potomac.

Each person, moving single-file is to pass the Lincoln Memorial carrying the name of a Vietnam casualty, pass the White House, then proceed to the Capitol up Pennsylvania Avenue, where workmen spent the day Wednesday morning removing the flags and star-spangled bunting left over from Veteran's Day Tuesday.

Seminars, speeches, rallies and memorial services take place throughout the three days at various locations, leading to start of the climactic march and rally at 10 a.m. (EST) Saturday.

At that time, the participants will converge from their 25 assembly centers on Capitol Hill for the march to the Mall.

The weather conditions placed a premium on adequate housing for the masses expected. Alice Arshack, who is in charge of getting homes, churches, gymnasiums or college buildings for housing participants, complained she is having a tougher time than she did for either the Poor People's Campaign or the march on the Pentagon.

She said the Justice Dept. apparently has been discouraging churches and public officials from making space available. But Mrs. Arshack described the department's attitude as hopeful after she met Wednesday morning with justice and city officials, the Rev. Channing Phillips and Julian Dugas.

"I think we may see some movement," she said.

Ground fighting across Vietnam tapered off Wednesday, military spokesmen said, but the allies were reported bracing for new enemy attacks in the central highlands. Field reports said several thousand allied reinforcements are being rushed into the area in response to reports that 5,000 North Vietnamese troops have crossed over the Cambodian border and are currently in the south central highlands.

Two dejected teenage hijackers, bound hand and foot, were returning to Santiago, Chile Wednesday aboard a Chilean jetliner whose crew outwitted them. They had been surprised and knocked out by the pilot and co-pilot after the hijacked plane took off from Antofagasta in northern Chile en route to Cuba.

The first deployment money for the Safeguard antimissile system (ABM)—a token $2.5 million for a Command Center (CC)—was included in a $1.45 billion military construction bill approved Wednesday by the House Appropriations Committee. The bill was hustled to the House floor where approval is expected Thursday.

The Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare announced Wednesday that a new multi-agency agreement will be set up aimed at outlawing DDT use in the United States within two years, except for "essential uses" for which there are no suitable alternatives. Secretary Robert Finch called the pesticide a pervasive threat to human life and the environment.

Sen. Spessard L. Holland, D-Fla., announced Wednesday that he will not seek re-election for a fifth term next year. Holland said his decision resulted from recent attacks of angina, a heart condition that he described as painful and a warning.

Apparently because the President is not a very good card player, the White House announced Wednesday that it has erected a shark net in the waters around Nixon's Key Biscayne home to keep him safe. Jerry Warren, asst. White House press secretary, said: "There is a shark preventive, treated net around the President's property in the bay." So, all you gamblers, keep away from Key Biscayne.

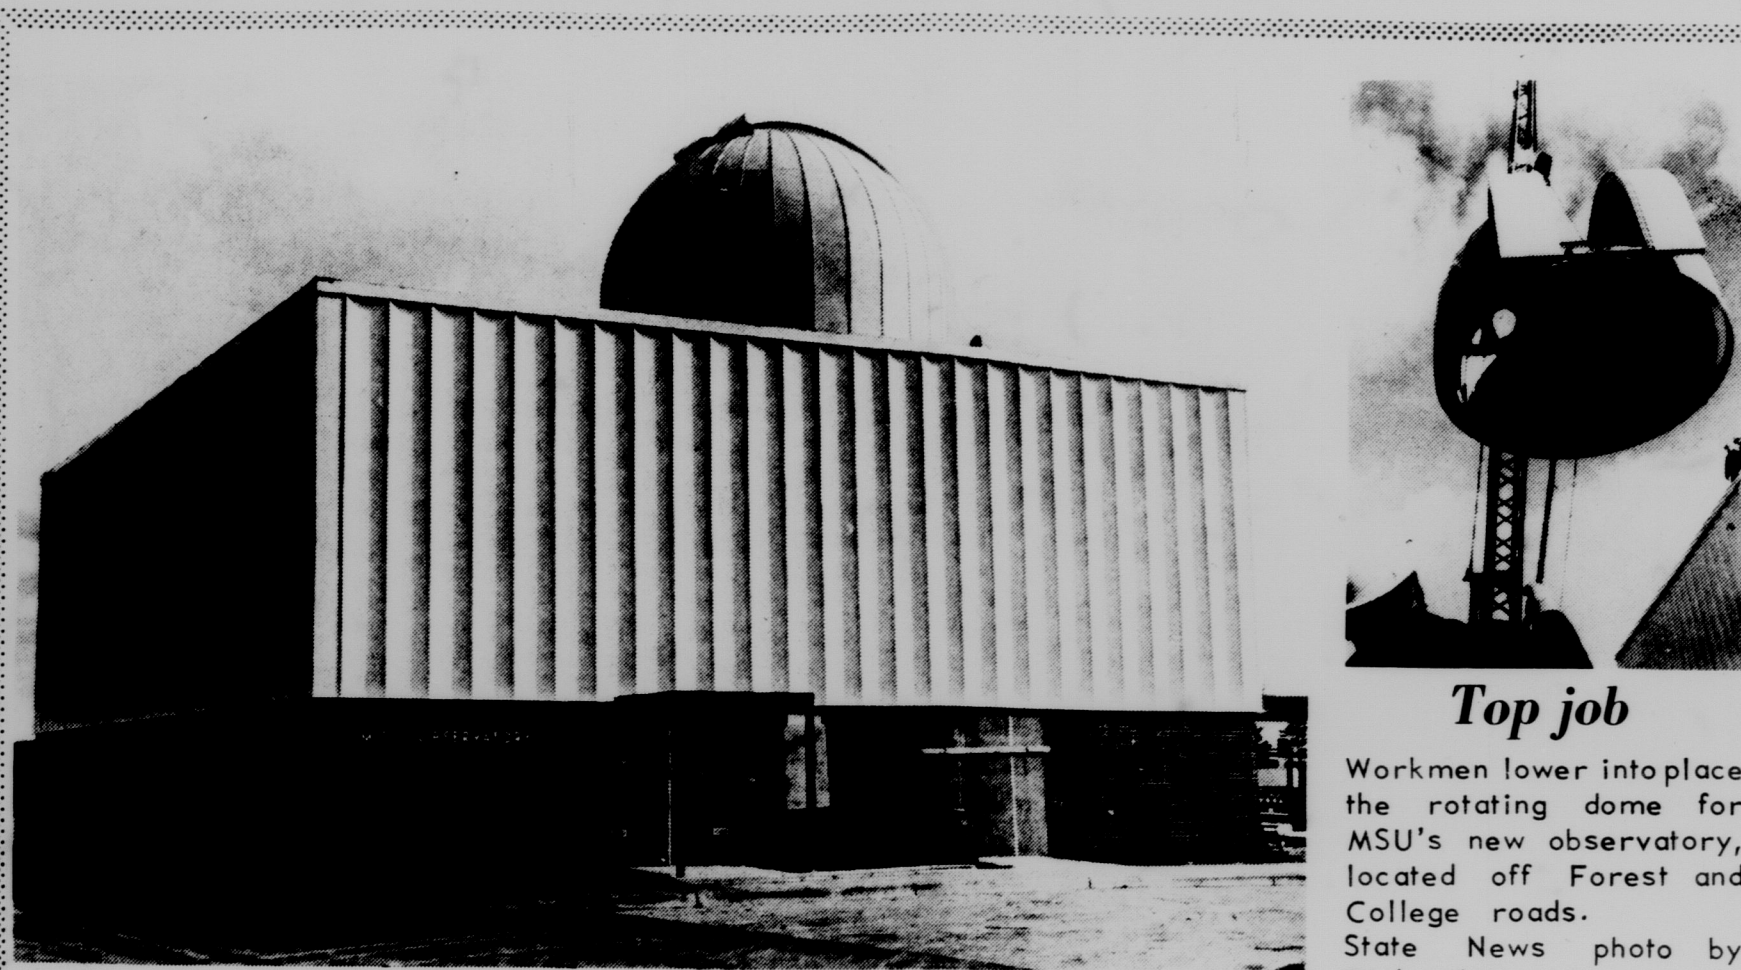

A Wells Fargo armed truck carrying an estimated $1.4 million in receipts from Aqueduct Race Track to a bank, was held up Wednesday by three armed bandits who escaped with the cash. Police said the truck was forced to curb in Brooklyn, where the robbers hand-cuffed the drivers, took nine bags of money, put them in their car and escaped after locking the drivers in the truck.

The battle lines for the contest for Sen. Stephan Young's, D-Ohio, seat are becoming more complex every day. Those who have announced that they will attempt to fill the retiring senator's seat are ex-astronaut John Glenn, Gov. James Rhodes, Rep. Robert A. Taft Jr., and former Rep. John Gilligan, who ran as the Democratic nominee for the Senate in 1968.

Police arrest 20 in narcotics raids

By JEFF SHELTER
State News Staff Writer
Twenty persons, including two MSU students, were arraigned on narcotics charges Tuesday and Wednesday in Lansing and East Lansing municipal courts, following a series of arrests that began Monday.

Scott G. Newhart, Catasagaua, Penn. junior, and James D. Root, Niles junior, were charged with sale of marijuana. They demanded preliminary examination which was set for Dec. 10 in East Lansing Municipal Court. Bond was set at $10,000 each.

Arrests began Monday afternoon following three months of investigation by Lansing, East Lansing and University police and the Ingham County Sheriff's office, according to Sergeant Robert W. Brown of the East Lansing Police Dept.

The arrests were made at several points throughout the Lansing-East Lansing area, Brown said, and drugs were confiscated at each scene.

Large quantities of marijuana, 300 to 400 doses of LSD, several packages of hashish, heroin and opium were uncovered, Brown said.

"Most of these cases were unrelated," reported University Police Detective Roy Swerdferger. "We have no reason to believe that there is one big ring involved. The arrests were made together so that we wouldn't blow our cover. Once you start making arrests, you have to work fast."

Following the three-month investigation, 22 warrants were prepared Monday for charges including sale of marijuana, possession of marijuana and sale and possession of heroin, according to Swerdferger.

MILLIKEN'S EDUCATION PACKAGE

Dr. Augenstein pro-reform

By SHARON TEMPLETON
State News Staff Writer

Leroy Augenstein, the late professor of biophysics at MSU and member of the State Board of Education, endorsed Gov. Milliken's educational reform package in a letter to Michigan legislators the day before his death.

The letter, which was forwarded to legislators by his secretary, commends both the commission and the governor for facing head-on the really crucial problems of education.

"While I and many others have advocated piecemeal changes, the governor has taken the bull by the horns and proposed total reform," Dr. Augenstein said.

He maintained, however, his position that the local school districts must retain their authority and strengthen their ability to run their own programs.

He opposed the fully state-run system, he said, for two reasons. "First, the needs vary so much around the state that only the local groups are properly aware of their unique demands. Second," he added, "if the local district goes, 2,000, not 2,000,000 students get hurt."

As a balance to the power of the state-run system, the governor proposed regional boards which would back up the local boards in doing a more effective job.

"I am not convinced that the governor's proposed regional boards are designed to provide needed help for local school districts and a buffer against over-powering state control at the same time," Dr. Augenstein explained.

He suggested in the letter than school districts be consolidated geographically with an upper limit of 20,000 to 30,000 students in a local district to encourage parent involvement and interest.

"The only absolutely sure way of retaining local control would be to give the state tax dollars back with essentially no strings attached," Dr. Augenstein said, "or keep control of the tax levels at the local community."

Another alternative, he added, would be to keep regional boards directly responsible to the local units as the governor has proposed.

"While I sponsored the resolution in the State Board of Education to regroup and strengthen the intermediate administrative echelon, I think the governor's procedure for selecting the regional board members is superior to mine," he said.

Dr. Augenstein accepted two solutions to the restructuring of the State Board of Education, either the governor's proposed direct gubernatorial appointment of the superintendent, or a board elected on the spring ballot as Dr. Augenstein earlier proposed.

"I do not think a non-partisan or appointive board would be able to deal as effectively with you legislators as those who have gone through the same elective process as you," he wrote.

Referring to the proposed state support for students attending non-public schools, Dr. Augenstein said he feared the program is inconsistent with Supreme Court decisions.

He concluded that educational reform is an urgent issue which must be acted upon as quickly as possible.

"If the legislative session drags on for much more than another two or three weeks, then probably nothing will happen and we will miss a golden opportunity," he said.

Agnewian illogic vs. forces of change

Spiro Agnew, the most popular household word since "dinner!", has done it once again.

The Vice President, in a speech before the National Municipal League, linked the "silent majority" with the "nonshouting concerned, the nonradical responsible, the noncomplacent, constructive activists of the under-30 generation." Speaking of the young "fervent minority," Agnew stated that they "incline emotions rather than stimulate solutions."

The Vice President, along with President Nixon, has misread the mood of not only the young involved with the moratorium, but the old who are sick of war. Agnew has skillfully attempted to associate violent intentions with the leaders and prospective participants of the monthly planned marches and protests against the Vietnam war. He has deliberately polarized the young by trying to set rigid distinctions - i.e., the young "strident minority" and the young "silent majority."

Agnew further exacerbates the turmoil by alluding to the minority "who allocate unto themselves voice, virtue and power out of proportion to their numbers and even more out of proportion to their abilities."

Perhaps Mr. Agnew is too scholarly to realize that most of the young who are involved in this expanded peace movement are dedicated individuals who do not particularly feel that a show of violence serves to improve the chance for a swift settlement of the Vietnam conflict. And Mr. Agnew commits a grave injustice when he refuses to distinguish among the factions of SDS, the New Mobilization Committee, the Vietnam Moratorium Committee and other groups - all of which believe in varying amounts of violence and peaceful dissent to achieve their aims.

It is humiliating to be treated in this manner by the Vice President of the United States. Thereafter, it becomes intolerable when the nation's President praises the insidious words and actions of a man who insists on bringing all who desire peace into bitter and possibly injurious altercations.

The praise for Spiro Agnew increases from some circles in the political arena. At the same time, senators such as George McGovern and Charles Goodell have declared their intention of speaking out at the Washington rally on Saturday. McGovern has attacked Agnew for what he stated was "provocative, inflammatory statements that tend to polarize public opinion."

Agnewian logic fails when it tries to assert that the way to solve problems is to allow the young "silent majority" to speak out while shutting-up the vocal "minority." The Civil Rights movement in the south is a good example of how a vocal and active "minority" of the young can affect constructive change.

While violence at the homefront is not the answer for the violence committed by the United States in Southeast Asia, it should be remembered that the American Revolution was violent, as has been the history of labor in this country. The list could be expanded to support the theory that improvements in life and lingering eras of peace have only been established by assertive, if not violent, behavior.

There will be no answer to Vice President Agnew's charges directed at the "fervent minority." The reason is that he refuses to speak coherently and rationally to the group he denounces. Agnew is merely interested in reinforcing the viewpoints of those - young and old - who already agree with his opinions and then using this supposed new found support to subtly harass and provoke demonstrators.

Perhaps continually reacting to Agnew's stupidity is similar to beating a dead horse. But protesting the never-ending atrocities of war falls under the same category - and the protests and the voices of dissent will continue to increase in intensity until the war ends.

To be or not to be that effete corps of snobs?

More is at stake on Nov. 15 than ending the war-much more.

Saturday is going to be the big one, and we will make or break ourselves by our actions. The eyes of the nation and the world will be upon us seeking an answer to a fundamental question: are the young responsible enough to be worth listening to?

It is essential that we keep our cool. Profanity and rocks and bottles will bring about nothing save a confirmation that we are, indeed, an "effete corps of impudent snobs." If we become violent then we will have blown our revolution and caused a return to darker times.

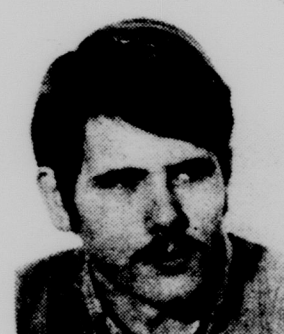

Remember, the Nixon Administration is waiting for us to lead into their strength. The populace of this nation is at this moment hovering on a razor's edge of indecision-whether they fall to the repressive right or the legitimate left will depend upon how we act in the streets of our nation's Capitol.

The American Legion did not burn anything on Veterans' Day, but if we do on Moratorium Day whose side do you think John Q. Public will find more appealing?

Beyond student and youth credibility, the entire precept of legitimate protest hangs in abeyance. The flames of repression, fanned by the Nixon Administration, will singe, if not char, the chances of meaningful dissent for years to come if there is but one violent confrontation.

The entire purpose of the moratorium is that we wish to be movers rather than pawns in the game of politics-if we blow our cool in D.C., then we will have made ourselves part and parcel to our own undoing. The administration is expecting us to hand them our heads on a platter-let's keep ourselves together and fake them out.

Death of the death penalty

The electric chair at Tucker Prison Farm now lies buried somewhere in a closet, serving no purpose but to gather dust. It had not been used since 1962, so when a new warden took over, he assigned several death row inmates to store it. No one except for the inmates is quite sure where the chair is today.

But a case pending before the Supreme Court may force prison authorities to refurbish the chair-providing it can be found, and providing authorities can find someone who still remembers how to operate it.

But if the court decides in favor of the defendant, the prison warden could donate the chair to a museum, an antique from America's more barbarous days.

On April 5, 1962, William Lee Maxwell was sentenced to death in the electric chair by Judge P.E. Dobbs of Garland County Court, Ark. Five times an execution date was set, and five times a stay of execution was granted.

Hot Springs Arkansas had, in 1961, what most white residents thought to be ideal race relations. Famous for their mineral baths, people from all over the country came seeking health remedies. Everyone used the baths-everyone except Hot Springs' 16 per cent black population. In Hot Springs Arkansas back in 1961, racial tranquility was assured, for as any white resident would tell you, "niggers knew their place."

All that was shattered, however, when William Lee Maxwell, a 22-year-old Hot Springs resident, and member of the 16 per cent not allowed in the mineral baths except through the back door as a porter, was brought to trial for the rape of a 35-year-old white woman.

The jury convicted Maxwell without a plea for mercy. The sentence was mandatory-death.

But now if Maxwell goes to the electric chair, 500 death row inmates from all over the country will follow in his tracks. Maxwell's case is being brought before the Supreme Court on grounds that could, in effect, mean the death of the death penalty.

Maxwell's appeal involves two issues: the single jury system in which one jury decides guilt or innocence and also passes sentence, and the "standardless jury", one which is not instructed on degrees of culpability. Nearly everyone awaiting execution in the United States was sentenced under one of the two kinds of juries, so in effect, on Maxwell's fate depends the fate of 500 other men.

Maxwell is bewildered by all this, for there was little to prepare him for the prominent role he now plays. Speaking to a New York Times reporter, he said if he ever gets out of prison he'd, "like to get more education. I'd like to do something constructive in race relations. You know, years back I just wanted to get out of this country. I really hated it. . . Now I think things have changed, that there's a chance to do something here."

Asked how he felt about the hundreds of lives that depend on him, Maxwell replied, "If all that's happened to me all these years is the cause of 500 guys having a chance at life, a chance to go on living, then maybe it was worth something, at least."

Whether or not Maxwell is guilty is now a mere academic matter. The woman who professes to have been raped changed her story, first stating that Maxwell was not her assailant, and later claiming that indeed he was, but the shock of the traumatic experience, coupled with the darkness of the night, are as plausible explanations for her change of mind as the possibility that she was lying.

The question now, however, also involves more than the technicalities on which Maxwell's case is being appealed, for the supreme court, by asking for a hearing on the justifiability of a standardless jury and a sentence-executioner jury has implied it seeks to rule on far broader grounds than the constitutionality of death for rape.

A writ of certiorari, a plea for the high court to hear the case, was issued on behalf of Maxwell. The court agreed, not, however on grounds of racial discrimination in the sentence of death for rape, but rather the entire issue of the death penalty.

Prosecutor David B. Whittington stated in his summation of the case that Maxwell committed "brutal rape" and that "the brutality, the force, the determination shown by the defendant can bear only one punishment, the punishment of death. Shortly after Maxwell's execution date had been set and passed with Maxwell still sitting on death row on appeals, Whittington asked that the sentence be lowered to life. No apparatus, at present, however, is available for such a lowering of sentence. It the jury returns a verdict of guilty on a rape charge, the sentence in Arkansas is mandatory-death.

Whittington's change of heart may have been generated by matters other than his concern for Maxwell personally. Shortly after the Maxwell trial, Whittington's own son was convicted of raping his girlfriend, and although the youth was declared temporarily insane and given 21 years instead of the chair, the trauma of a personal confrontation with the death penalty could have initiated Whittington's change of heart.

Even the victim in the case asked that Maxwell not be executed if he were kept in prison until "such a time as he can no longer be a menace to society."

According to the New York Times magazine there are four grounds on which capital punishment can be attacked. First, grounds that it is "cruel and inhuman punishment." But the supreme court has shied away from hearing appeals on this basis.

Second, blanket dismissal of jurors who declare they do not believe in the death penalty from a trial which can levy the death sentence has been upheld as unconstitutional by the supreme court. But in practice, the discrimination still exists.

The third and fourth grounds include the standardless jury and the single jury for both guilt and sentence.

The standardless jury is one in which jurors are not informed of the degree of sentence which they can adjudge to a defendant. That is, they are not informed of the relationship between what another man received who was convicted of the same crime and the man whose fate the jury is deciding. Thus, they have no basis to determine whether a man's sentence is just in relation to that given others.

In most states still using capital punishment, a single jury determines guilt or innocence, and without benefit of further evidence imposes a sentence. When the single jury is not used, the sentencing judge or jury generally receives information on the man's background before sentencing, including previous convictions and his rehabilitation record. The sentence thus has some idea of rehabilitation possibilities before deciding on the

Colonizing the moon, starving the children

To the Editor:

Colonizing the moon, great pioneer . . . People hungry . . . starving. Welfare program dissolved . . . Yet what is so great about some moon-men or whatever the HELL is going up there where there is NOTHING!!!

This nation is the launching pad of more BULL-SHIPS than SPACE-SHIPS. One can not convince me that the benefits of welfare feeding a child whose role as a person may fulfill one day a very successful part in this country . . . yet money on top of money is 'being wasted launching rockets. . .

I question how President Nixon can smile and speak of "a great day in American History" and there is chaos in this nation over welfare programs etc.

One need not be an expert of the space program to know of the deadly necessity of urban renewal, jobs and welfare.

In my eyesight this country can never be prosperous until it has made up its long overdue homework . . . How can one take a jump at the moon when America has not been equalized. It is sad to think of that hypocritical "wave the flag" bull will be projected today! The cost of it all!! The Launching!! The time!! The man-power!! The brain-power!!

All of these factors of importance can not out-weigh the primary welfare of a human being . . .

If this nation can afford a phone call to the moon why not welfare???

SDS isn't a joke

To the Editor:

The editors ask "where are the masses of oppressed G.E. workers whose cause is being championed?" And 147,000 of them are on the picket lines fighting for a decent living wage. The fact is that real wages began falling in 1965, reversing a 32-year trend. It is because of the falling real wages that workers demand wage increases. Their demand are the expression of the crisis that is hitting working people the hardest thru the rise in taxes, the rise in prices and the worsening conditions in schools and the cities. If working people are "waxed fat and powerful" then how do the editors explain the increase in the number of wildcat strikes? Why don't you ask the students whose fathers are on strike if their families enjoy missing their paychecks for weeks? Large numbers of students at MSU (including those in SDS) are financing their education because their parents can not afford to.

SDS is not just championing a cause but consciously chose to ally with G.E. workers because it is in our interest as future teachers, social workers, accountants, technicians, etc. to fight the system. Just as the MSU administration helps G.E. bosses by allowing them to recruit during the strike, the administration shafts its own workers as well. The strike this fall indicates that MSU employees are feeling the pinch and are willing to fight. The conditions are not getting better since the settlement. An example is the increased work loads and unsafe working conditions in many places on campus as well as the fact that the unskilled workers have not received or heard of the 7 cent increase the University was supposed to negotiate in "good faith." SDS is building an alliance with workers to make qualitative changes in this society.

Adams sheds crocodile tears over the war in Vietnam supposedly because he is concerned about the American people, yet he actively works against the people by allowing G.E. to recruit during a strike. While Adams is shaking hands with liberal senators, SDS is building alliances with the only people that have the need and the power to end that war-workers and students.

Letter Policy

The State News welcomes all letters. They should be typed and signed with the home town, student, faculty or staff standing, and local phone number included. No unsigned letter will be accepted for publication, and no letter will be printed without a signature except in extreme circumstances. All letters must be less than 300 words long for publication without editing.

TRB from Washington

A unanimous surprise

Sometimes you feel that there's more in Washington than you can cover-even without Vietnam, moonshots and Spiro Agnew.

Here you are, for instance, in an alcove of the tremendous Supreme Court chamber with magnificent rose marble columns and eight black-robed justices behind their bench.

It is quiet here, but there is passion-a vibration, a resonance-in the voices of the rival counsel arguing whether 30 recalcitrant Mississippi school districts must immediately abolish all-black schools. Simple enough it sounds.

Fifteen years ago, this court ordered American schools desegregated with all "deliberate speed" and they are still segregated, many of them. Has the time come to eliminate "deliberate?"

Here is another symbol. Chief Justice Burger sits there, massive, impressive, asking quiet questions; in his first great test, is he going to break with the President who named him? There has been near unanimity in this august court in the past on school cases.

Here is another symbol, an extraordinary one: sitting with white-haired segregationist lobbyist Satterfield and Mississippi's Atty. Gen. Summer, is a third lawyer-Jerris Leonard, chief of the Justice Dept.'s Civil Rights Division. He is asking for delay, too, and has a mutiny back home among his staff lawyers. It is an astounding partnership; the first time in 15 years an administration has joined the white segregationist south.

Opposing them is Jack Greenberg, NAACP lawyer for the black plaintiffs. No doubt about the feeling in his voice. No doubt, either, where wispy, 83-year old Justice Black stands; when Leonard pleads not to be "precipitous," Black snorts. "Would anything be precipitous after all these years?"

So now it is Wednesday, six days later. It is 5:56 p.m. The bell rings on the AP ticker. It has been printing a minor story about food stamps. "Bust this" it says suddenly. Then BULLETIN-"The Supreme Court ordered tonight the immediate desegregation of Mississippi public schools." Yes, UNANIMOUS! Somebody comes running down the hall. "Wait till Spiro hears about this," he cries.

Board members rap ASMSU's irrelevance

By DENISE FORTNER
State News Staff Writer
Is ASMSU relevant to the students of MSU?

One anonymous coed is dubious of the powers of student government.

"Assmo (ASMSU) isn't really a student government; it has no real power to govern. One RA has more power than all ASMSU," she said.

"Actually I think ASMSU is They don't do a damn thing for me except float my money down the river, literally. Anyone could have seen that last year's Water Carnival was going to be a flop judging by past attendance records - except the people in ASMSU. I just wonder if they have found something else to waste our money on," Bill Porteous, Reed City senior, said.

Linda C. Stout, Toledo Ohio freshman, was amazed to find out what the initials ASMSU stood for.

"I really don't know what it is. You mean I pay 50 cents a year for it? Does everyone pay?" she said incredulously.

Members of the ASMSU realize that the above comments are exemplary of the attitude of many MSU students towards student government.

Mike Shore, ASMSU sophomore member-at-large, said student government "doesn't relate to students."

"The average student could care less about the programs and policies that the Student Board feels are so important. It boils down to the fact that the student problems are in the area of economics rather than academics. The students would rather have the student board concern itself with ways to save them money. That's where it has failed."

Harry Chancey, ASMSU senior member-at-large, mentioned the New Community as an example of an organization that is effectively serving the student's needs and filling the voids in ASMSU.

One of the differences between the New Community and ASMSU is in motivation. Many members of ASMSU are motivated by the plaque they will get at the end of the year, while people working with the New Community are motivated by a sincere desire to meet needs of other students, he said.

"ASMSU can't continue to shove issues down people's throats without asking them first. The New Community is getting people involved in the decision-making process. Now student policy making is in the hands of 13 people."

"If anything at all, instead of making content decisions for the rest of the students, we should begin to address ourselves to how students can make their own decisions."

"We should aim at those problems concerning dorm policy, social activity in general and academics. Another deficiency in ASMSU is that it has sold out to the administration," Chancey said.

I would like to see the New Community and ASMSU working together rather than two separate organizations, he said.

Trevor Hall, general member-at-large, said the "enthusiasm that prevades ASMSU is phoney and now we are in a process of critically evaluating the entire student structure as it relates to students."

IFC vice president, Steve Douse, said it is a "matter of redirecting priorities."

"There's a sense of frustration to the students on the street that ASMSU isn't relevant to him."

"To be a vital student government is difficult. If you sit down and start to think of just what is wrong with student government, you can have a million and one reasons. One reason, however, is the way that the University is set up. It's a part of the old order. It's a top down power structure in which learning per se is not a prime objective."

"ASMSU, by its bureaucratic nature, is wrapped up in the things that are less than vital."

"Eventually I think that ASMSU will absorb some of the functions of New Community."

"No one thinks that ASMSU is relating to students, but the question is, how do you change. We don't want this to be a power struggle between ASMSU and the New Community," he said.

Doug Moreton, who has helped initiate many of the New Community programs, said it is time for an evaluation of ASMSU.

"It's cool for ASMSU to do things like bring the Association to campus, but its like giving ice cream cones to poor kids. There are things that are more important. An example is housing, and specifically, the dorms. There are things that could make the dorms more decent. But no one is doing anything about it."

"The dorms could have arts and crafts rooms where students could do independent study and teach others. A music room on the same principle could be initiated. Dorm living could include a "rap room" where tea groups could meet; people could just sit on the rug and rap."

"Even Clark Kerr past president of Berkeley when recently on campus asked why we didn't let the students control the dorm."

"Another area that ASMSU could probe into is education reform. Nothing effective has been done about grades which are constricting and have been shown to have no correlation with success in business. Students now have to study things that have no interest, are boring, mundane and have no relevance. The whole idea of authoritarian teaching is inhibiting. You only learn what you want to learn," he said.

Moreton said that his proposed structure of the ASMSU includes the New Community being integrated into student government as its project office.

The New Community is now working on projects which Moreton hopes can be eventually part of ASMSU. The present

New Community programs include the Crisis Center, The Man and Nature Bookstore and The Albatross Coffeehouse.

"I would like to see ASMSU become a student union bargaining force. Now students on decision making committees are merely an administrative way of purging guilt and saying that students were represented."

Other proposals Moreton presented to make the ASMSU purposeful to students include a student welfare office, consumer union, consumer protection service, student labor union, grad assistant union, student credit union, job placement center for vocations involved in social change, a communication center with a gripe center and an action line and a speakers center.

White: proud of his political role

By BARBARA PARNES
State News Staff Writer

Clair White is a politician and he's proud of it.

He is also a father, a husband, a teacher and an MSU trustee; but before he was any of these things, he was a politician.

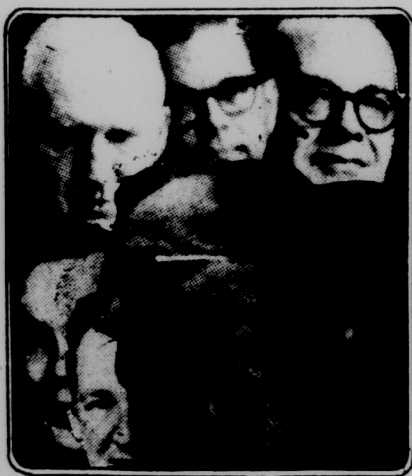

White, 54, a native of Wilshire, Ohio, was elected to the MSU Board of Trustees from Bay City in 1964. But his experience in the political arena dates back to his college days.

As an undergraduate in political science at Central Michigan University, White was elected president of his class. At the same time, he was serving as district chairman for the Young Democrats.

Although he enrolled in the University of Michigan law school three times, he never could raise enough money to pay law school tuition. He had to be content to work toward an advanced degree at U-M in political science, history and education.

White's decision to enter the teaching profession led him to his present position as an economics teacher at Bay City's Central High School. His concern for education also led him back into the political arena.

Second in a series

"Education is just beginning to be recognized in America and is the profession of the future," White said.

"But," he added, "I was a politician before I was a teacher."

As a teacher, White was amazed at both the challenge he found in education and the fact that "I couldn't make a living in it."

So he decided to become a university trustee.

"Inasmuch as I was a politician before a teacher, by instinct, and inasmuch as I could see the decisions that would affect education were being made in the political arena, I decided I had best get into the political arena at some effective level," he said.

At the spring convention of the Democratic party, White was asked to run for a seat on the Wayne State University (WSU) Board of Governors. He was elected from a field of 57 other contenders.

White served out his three-year term and retired from politics once again due to family illness and the pressing financial obligation of supporting sons C. Roger and Peter through school at MSU.

However, having put his own house in order, White was called upon again to serve the public. Contacted by the Democratic party in the summer of 1964, White told the party he would run for the governing board of WSU or MSU.

"I felt that these two institutions were more concerned with educational opportunities compatible with my own philosophy," White said.

He noted that WSU provides most of the teachers for the Wayne County area and MSU provides the balance of teachers around the state.

"I felt my profession needed a spokesman in the arena of higher education," White said. "I felt MSU or WSU would be the place where I would prefer to serve in this capacity."

White's vision of his role as a trustee is consistent with his conception of himself as a politician. He is first and foremost the servant of the electorate.

"I see my job clearly. I see my role as a spokesman for the people of Michigan who established this institution because they needed it and are willing to part with large amounts of their money each year to continue its existence," he said.

"I consider my role as a trustee as a bridge between the institution and the people of the state," he continued.

In keeping with his political image, White refused to say whether he would seek another term when his eight-year term expires in 1972.

"When you're in the political arena," he said, "it's not a mark of the prudent man to predict what you're going to do."

"You arrived in the political arena because of the spark of particular issues and if these issues are still there, then you seek political office."

White was — and is still very much involved in the issues facing the MSU board. He and colleague Warren Huff, D-Plymouth, have led the fight against closed trustees meetings. White was and still is critical of the means employed to name Clifton R. Wharton Jr. as MSU's new president.

But he did not view the presidential selection as the "crucial issue" facing the trustees this fall.

"In a sense," he said, "I don't believe the president of an institution is as important in the same sense as he used to be. Personally I think it's a team effort."

"The fundamental issue facing the board is the selection of a new team because we have been threadbare administratively under the proprietary regime of our former president."

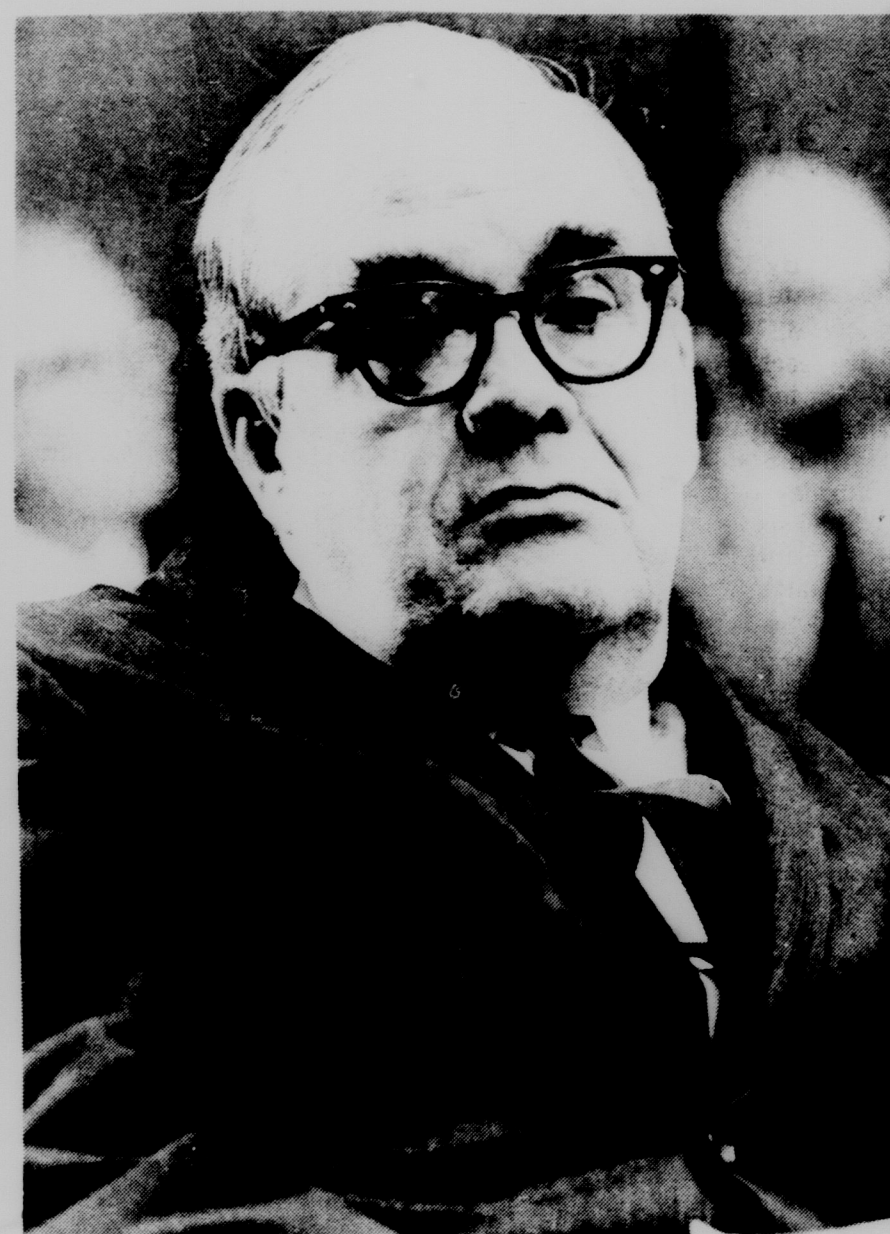

White said MSU may, in gathering this new team, have to develop a different approach to administration.

"MSU has the greatest opportunity in its history to be the center of restructuring this new age we're faced with," he said.

White believes that he is serving education and the State of Michigan as a trustee. He is proud that he is doing this as a politician.

"I'm not a University officer. I'm a politician," he said. "Politics is not a dirty business. It is the only way that you can adequately express what the assorted publics want."

"You know, all great statesmen were politicians first, or they never would have gotten the chance to be statesmen."

Politics of education

Clair White, MSU trustee, regards the title of politician with pride. He says that as a member of the MSU Board of Trustees, his first responsibility is to his constituents.

13 weeks places too many limitations on time and fresh ideas. This is due to the preconceptions of the board as to what direction it should take.

"The reason that I have now decided to run is that my earlier consideration was perhaps inaccurate. From the reactions of others and my own impressions I've decided that there is a lot that can be done in 13 weeks," Rustem explained.

Having assumed the chair for the remainder of this session does not mean that he will be prohibited from running for that office next year. Rustem may run for member-at-large then declare his candidacy, or may run for the office on the qualification that he has been a voting member of the board for one year.

He commented on Samet's term in the chair as having led the board down a path that is diverging. He said that they must decide whether they will take the path to real involvement with the student body or the one leading to the eventual down-fall of the board.

"I do not want to see the board die, with all the important policy decisions coming up," he said. This was in reference to the split which could have sabotaged board action for the rest of the session.

Rustem stated in his presentation that he feels that the job of chairman is to lead the board in the direction which it deems necessary. He would like to work toward relieving the board of the responsibility of making social regulations.

He would also like to strengthen the Student Academic Council (SAC) in its participation in determining academic policy. He sees a necessity for the board to become involved in projects, shifting its focus away from the regular Tuesday night meetings.

Samet turned the gavel over to Rustem, feeling that "the members of the board have reached some sound conclusions." He was glad to be relieved of his duty and optimistic that the board will progress under the new leadership.

Following the elections, the board passed two motions introduced by Chancey endorsing the work of two committees working on birth control issues.

One of the committees is pressing for distribution of contraceptives at Olin Health Center. The other is preparing a booklet on birth control, sexuality and abortion.

Six Spartan seniors in final home appearance

By MIKE MANLEY
State News Sports Writer

Six MSU football players who have each earned three varsity letters in their career will make a final appearance before the Spartan Stadium home folks this Saturday against Minnesota.

The six — Frank Foreman, Rich Saul, Ron Saul, Don Law, Ken Little and Don Baird — are the only seniors on the Spartan squad who have logged enough playing time to letter in each season. Although the composite three-year record during their span is a rather soggy 11-17, Head Coach Duffy Daugherty will have some big holes to fill when they hang up the cleats.

Here is a short profile on the accomplishments of each.

FRANK FOREMAN, 6-foot-1, 200-pound split end from Louisville, Ky., is the Spartan's offensive captain this season. He leads the team in pass receiving with 19 catches for 463 yards and three touchdowns, including a 76-yarder against Ohio State.

A speedy receiver with good hands, Foreman rates as an outstanding pro prospect after graduation. Last season he grabbed 29 passes for 456 yards and three scores; as a sophomore he hauled in 10 for 136 yards. Foreman, with 58 receptions to date, needs only eight more to move into third place on the all-time Spartan receiving list, ahead of Bob Carey.

RICH SAUL, 6-foot-3, 221-pound linebacker and end, from Butler, Pa., calls the defensive signals for MSU as the defensive captain. Daugherty has rated Saul in the "super" class. Although playing only five games last year, due to a knee injury, Saul received many All-America votes. He has bounced back from the injury this season and has totaled 52 tackles at defensive end.

Saul, who has built a reputation as a rugged, aggressive football player, has moved to defensive end from linebacker and leads the Spartan defenders in dumping the opposing quarterback — he has done it 11 times this year for losses of 81 yards.

RON SAUL, 6-foot-2, 230-pound offensive guard, is the twin brother of Rich and seems to be the prime MSU All-America candidate. He's already being considered for one major team.

"He's probably the finest offensive lineman in the country," Daugherty said. Saul has spent his entire career opening holes for the MSU runners and providing pass protection for the quarterbacks. He has been a bruising blocker on wide-running plays.

KEN LITTLE, 6-foot-3, 215-pounds from Youngstown, Ohio, has been a valuable performer for the Spartans, playing end, tackle and linebacker in his career.

During his four years in East Lansing, Little has had surgery on both knees but has always bounced back into the lineup. This season he has made 21 solo tackles.

DON BAIRD, 5-foot-9, 209-pound guard from Tecumseh, has been a two-year starter for the Spartans on what Daugherty calls the "best offensive line I've had at State." Baird was a walk-on candidate as a freshman. He is one of the top scholar-athletes on the team, making the Big Ten All-Academic team last year posting "B" grades in engineering. Baird played 297 minutes last year and has started every game this year.

DON LAW, 6-foot-0, 225-pound linebacker from Brownsville, Pa., has been a regular at the position for three years. This season he leads the Spartans in total tackles with 101 and Daugherty rates him as one of the top linebackers he has coached at MSU.

East I.M. proposal gains more support

By DAN BANTA

Prospects for an East Complex multipurpose sports facility gained momentum this week with the unanimous approval of ASMSU added to its list of supporters.

The original resolution, which received primary endorsement from MHA and WIC two weeks ago, suggests a sports complex that would include matted rooms for wrestling, indoor facilities for swimming, basketball and paddleball, as well as outdoor facilities for tennis.

Biggie for OSU in Rose Bowl?

Ohio State may still go to the Rose Bowl—according to Football News.

In a front page story in this week's News, MSU Athletic Director Biggie Munn stated that he will propose to the Big Ten athletic directors in their meeting next Wednesday in Chicago that the non-repeat rule be waived.

Munn was unavailable for comment.

Frank Beeman, intramural director, described expanded plans for the proposed co-educational structure to a meeting of east campus athletic chairmen Tuesday night.

Further projections involve the possibility of additional features including a stage, bowling lanes, arts and crafts center, darkroom, film library and large multipurpose rooms for classes and meetings.

Beeman mentioned the potential use of Tartan turf, similar to the playing surface in Spartan Stadium, for surrounding softball, football and soccer fields.

"The present I.M. buildings are simply inadequate to fulfill the needs of our college population," Beeman said. "Conflicts such as registration in the Men's I.M. Bldg., which close the facilities for a week every

Spartans' Dieters eyes No. 1 spot in conference

By DON KOPRIVA
State News Sports Writer

It's a long way from one year to the next, but for sophomore cross country runner Dave Dieters, the time between the fall of 1968 and the present went by rather quickly.

Dieters, a member of the last group of freshmen who were top spot will continue to be his Saturday in the Big Ten meet at Bloomington.

"I think I've come a long way from last year," Dieters said, "but I'm not really pleased with how I've done so far."

Gibbard, however, said that Dieters has improved greatly from a rather disappointing, injury-racked freshman campaign.

"He has looked very well so far, but he'll really have to do the job to be up there in the Big Ten," Gibbard said.

"He could be a contender for the Big Ten individual title if he shows a lot of dedication and disciplines himself."

Dieters edges away from talk of a Big Ten title, reminding that he is only a sophomore and that the Big Ten has a lot of fine runners.

But with two wins under his belt since Oct. 22, he admitted that he has more confidence and said he knows he can be in the top runners in the league.

"I worked less this summer than before," Dieters said, "but I ran every day and I know I'm in better shape now than a year ago."

Dave Dieters

unable to compete on a varsity basis, is clearly relishing his position on MSU's varsity team.

And that position happens to be No. 1 at the present. Hopefully for Dieters and Spartan Coach Jim Gibbard, that Since this is his first season of varsity competition, it might be assumed that the Arlington Heights, Ill., sophomore might be slightly nervous heading into the Big Ten meet as one of his team's top runners.

I.M. proposal

fall term are other problems which demand attention."
Available land for the proposed project lies between Bogue Street and Wilson Road.
The building would probably be constructed near the present touch football fields across from Akers Hall, according to Beeman.

Although several other University projects are awaiting financial consideration, their appropriations come from a separate academic fund. Without competition from such sources, initiators hope the sports complex will be given highest priority that it might be completed by fall term 1971.

"Such a project could provide a more meaningful college experience to students on east campus," Beeman said. "There are social benefits as well as physical aspects."

Kathy Misze, Muskegon
original discussions in the Holmes Hall Legislature and promoted the issue among the east complex athletic committees.

Jack Breslin, MSU secretary and executive vice president, wrote a letter to MHA president, Doug Laycock, suggesting formation of a committee to study details and answer questions. The committee would include Breslin; Milton B.
Dickerson, vice president of student affairs; Clarence "Biggie" Munn, director of intercollegiate athletics; and Miss Misze.

Petitions supporting the resolution received 1,500 signatures from residents of Akers and Holmes in the past two weeks. Petitioning continues throughout east campus.
