Respect nations, Nixon pleads

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — President Nixon, "honored to be the first American President to visit Yugoslavia," appealed to all nations Wednesday night to respect the rights of others.

"Long ago Yugoslavia chose the path of nonalignment, and for more than two decades Yugoslavia and Marshal Tito personally have played major roles in the nonaligned movement throughout the world," the President said. "We in the United States respect that position."

"But the great question today is not whether a nation is aligned or nonaligned, but whether it respects the rights of others to choose their own paths — and Yugoslavia, by its example, has given heart to those who would choose their own paths."

Nixon spoke at a state dinner given by President Tito, who is a Communist but who for 22 years has refused to recognize Moscow as the fountainhead of all Communist wisdom.

In toasting his visitor, Tito criticized the big powers for intervention in the Middle East and Indochina — and, by implication, the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968.

Arriving from Italy, President Nixon received a friendly and orderly welcome from the people of Belgrade. Compared with his visit last year to Romania, however, the welcome seemed smaller and less vibrant.

One reason may have been that Yugoslavia was just coming out of a day of mourning for the late Gamal Abdel Nasser, the Egyptian president whom Tito regarded warmly.

At the state dinner the two presidents heartily toasted each other's country, then got down to world problems.

Tito said Nasser's death "in the present political situation in the Middle East makes it incumbent on our side to exert maximum efforts to arrive at a peaceful and just political solution for which President Nasser strove consistently and with dedication to his end."

Administration attempts to block lottery loopholes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Still plugging holes in its draft lottery system, the administration has knocked down the chance of escaping induction by becoming 1-A late in the year.

The Selective Service System announced Wednesday a three-month extension of draft liability for any 1-A man whose draft board has reached his lottery number but who has not been drafted by the end of the year.

The aim is to prevent the unfairness of drafting one man according to the lottery of last December and then passing up another man with a lower lottery number just because he became available along with a crowd of other low-numbered men after the manpower needs were filled.

That is the kind of situation created by the mid-year graduation of hundreds of thousands of college students, many holding lower numbers than those already called.

The time it takes to process such men into 1-A status leaves them unavailable for a draft call until late in the year, and the Pentagon has been unwilling to wait that long for recruits.

"Fairness requires that these men be effectively exposed to a draft obligation," said draft director Curtis W. Tarr.

The move leaves unsolved, however, a related fairness problem — that of the men already drafted to meet Pentagon needs because the latecomers were not available sooner.

The carryover men will tend to benefit the new manpower pool facing next year's draft, while this year's pool sends extra men in their place.

The carryovers will, in fact, be drafted for 1971 calls even before the regular 1971 manpower pool is touched. Their draft priority will be second only to that of volunteers during next January, February and March.

Selective Service officials said they have no estimate of how many men will be carried over with this three-month extended liability, but Tarr said "relatively small numbers" would be affected.

The move also leaves unsolved the problem of when one man is drafted under extended liability while another man in exactly similar circumstances escapes extended liability — and military service.

FRIDAY DEADLINE

Vote drive nears end

Voter registration for the Nov. 3 general election will end Friday with less than 1,000 new voters on the books.

"We'll have to get pretty busy to reach 1,000, including the ones we registered on campus," Beverly Colizzi, East Lansing city clerk said.

Mrs. Colizzi said 372 students registered at a registration table set up at fall class registration manned by members of the League of Women Voters who were temporarily deputized. She said an accurate tabulation of new voters will not be possible until a week and a half after the books close Friday.

At a meeting Sept. 17 the East Lansing City Council approved the proposal to instigate an affidavit in registering voters. The affidavit is a sworn statement signed by the potential voter attesting to his age, citizenship and residence as being East Lansing. The affidavit was implemented by the city clerk Sept. 18.

Grossfeld quits post at ASMSU board meet

By JOHN JUEL
State News Staff Writer

Cabinet President Bob Grossfeld, under fire from the student board for allegedly violating the Associated Students of MSU (ASMSU) Operations Code, resigned at Tuesday night's board meeting.

The board moved immediately to accept Grossfeld's resignation.

The board also selected a representative to Academic Council to present a proposal that would allow students time to campaign for fall elections.

Grossfeld's move climaxed a three-hour session, most of it spent exchanging accusations. While the charges against Grossfeld centered around the code, the real showdown was over Grossfeld taking action without first getting board approval.

Grossfeld admitted breaking the letter of the code on certain occasions when there was no other way of getting something done, but denied ever breaking the intent of the code.

"The important thing is to do what we can for the students, and if that means stepping on some bureaucratic detail in the code, then I'll step on it," Grossfeld said. "I'm not a Machiavelli, but on the other hand I can't ignore things that have to be done. Most of the things the cabinet's done have been in spite of the board rather than because of it."

The charges were nit-picking, Grossfeld continued, because the board had ignored the Operations Code on many occasions.

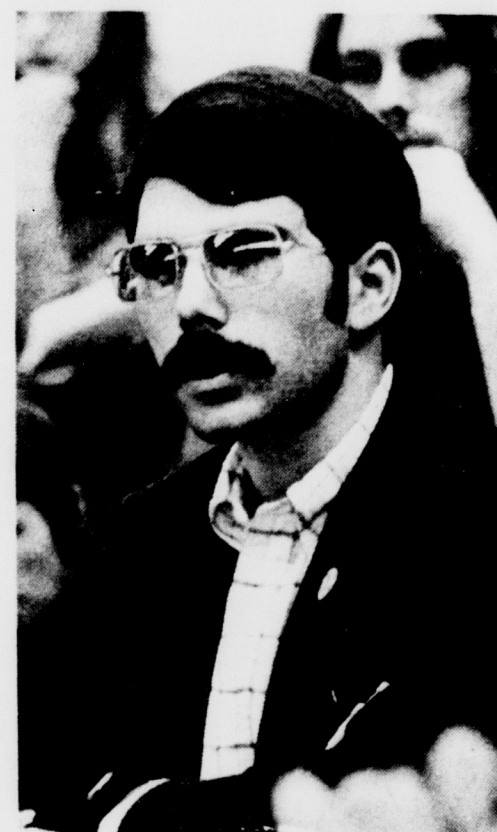

The accusations against Grossfeld included:

Transferring $200 from the information services account to the legislative relations bureau account without the board's approval.

Using his position to advance political candidates and political parties.

Issuing policy statements without the approval of the board.

Grossfeld said the transfer of $200 was to use money that had been allocated by a previous board to a department that since has been phased out. Information services which the money was originally allocated to, no longer exists in the ASMSU cabinet, he said, but legislative relations is serving the same function. The difference was one of title, not of purpose, he added.

Grossfeld also said that when he was working for a candidate or party it was as Bob Grossfeld, not as ASMSU cabinet president.

Grossfeld said Wednesday he resigned for a variety of reasons, but not because of the "crucifixion" at Tuesday night's board meeting.

"You get to a point where you're doing your best and the people working with you are doing their best, and a bunch of bureaucrats — namely, the student board — say you can't do this, and you can't do that, regardless of whether or not it could help the students — then it's time to call it quits," he said.

"If we're going to go by the code, we'll go all the way," ASMSU Chairman Harold Buckner said Wednesday. "A lot of (Grossfeld's) actions were interfering with my job — evidently a lot of the board members felt the same way."

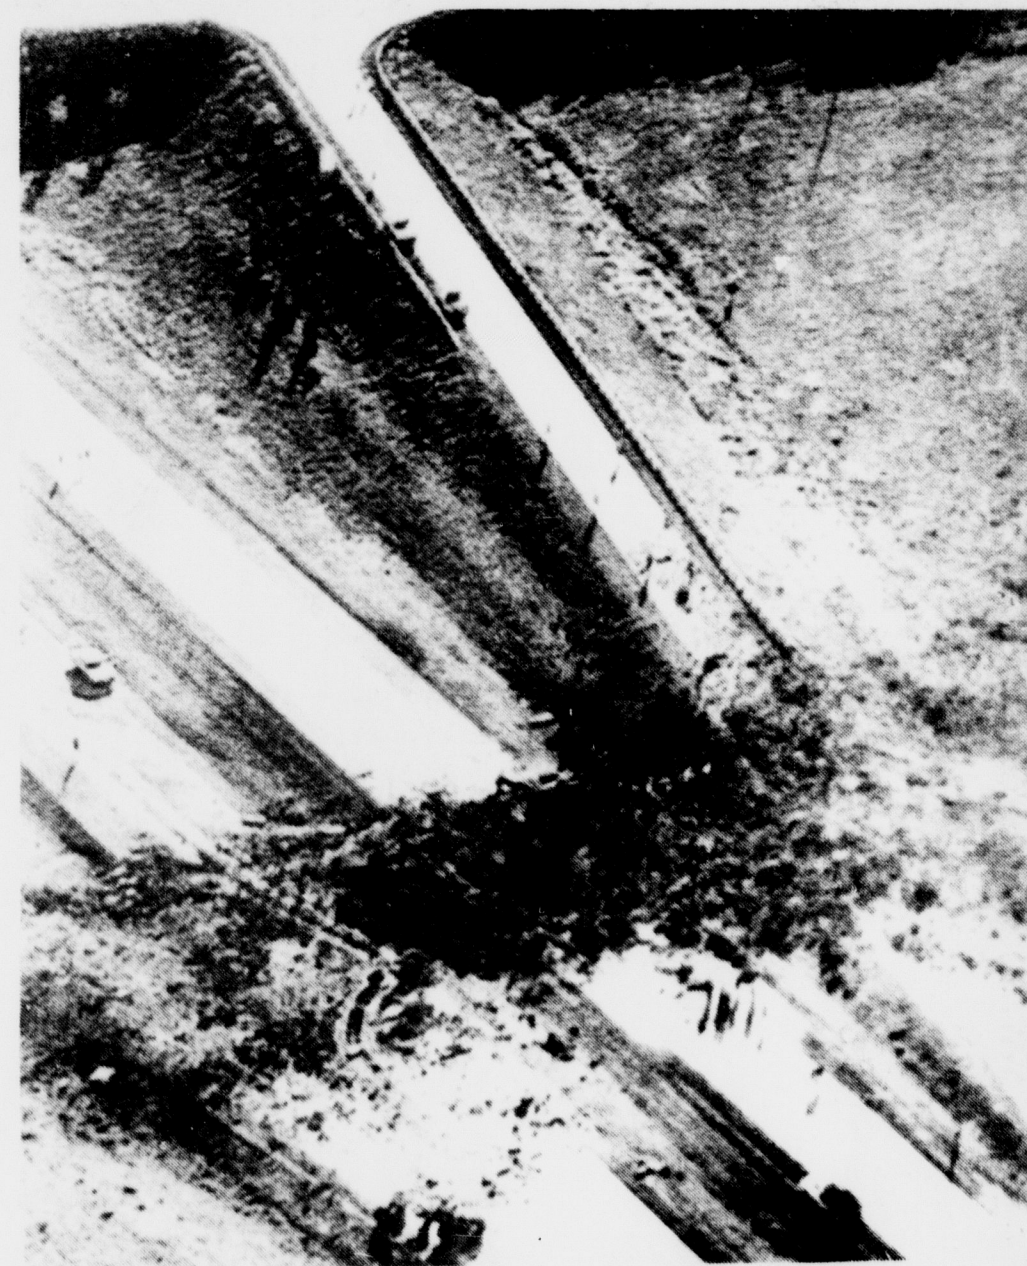

Before resigning, Grossfeld made a proposal to amend the ASMSU constitution, separating the cabinet from the student board. Under the proposal, the cabinet would have autonomy both financially and politically to carry out its programs, while the student board would be restricted to policy matters.

"The cabinet is the arm of ASMSU that actually does something — that can help people," Grossfeld said. "But I'm sick and tired of one arm — the student body — trying to hack off the other."

Grossfeld's proposal was sent to policy committee.

In other board action Tuesday night, Richard S. Kruch of ASMSU's legislative relations bureau was chosen to present a proposal to Academic Council to allow students to participate in campaigning the week before and the week after fall elections without jeopardizing their academic standing. The proposal recommends:

Vast crowds expected at funeral for Nasser

CAIRO (AP) — Egypt is saying goodbye to its leader Thursday on a scale probably unseen since the days of the pharaohs.

Officials said they expected a million Egyptians to take part in the funeral of Gamal Abdel Nasser.

On the eve of the final farewell, vast crowds of Egyptians, many still screaming their grief, marched arm-in-arm in downtown Cairo.

World leaders converging for the state funeral filed past Nasser's body, lying in state in Kubbeh Palace, the presidential residence.

Foremost among them was Premier Alexi

N. Kosygin of the Soviet Union who came Tuesday.

Others arriving were: Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, President Makarios of Cyprus, Premier Jacques Chablane Delmas of France, Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home of Britain, U.S. Secretary of Health Education and Welfare Elliott Richardson, the chiefs of state of most Arab countries and high level delegations from nearly all nations.

The world leaders will march behind Nasser's flag-draped coffin for the first mile Monsoon storms are beginning to lash the critical northern sector of South Vietnam and could force the allies to abandon one or more of their forward bases. Already, the northeast monsoon has cut heavily into American bombing strikes and reconnaissance flights. And it could bring a large-scale enemy offensive.

If the North Vietnamese follow their performance of the past, they will use the tropical rains as cover for a drive toward South Vietnam's populous coast lowlands, some military sources report.

There was no solid indication of an oncoming assault but, as one U.S. commander noted, "It is always a possibility."

In Saigon, Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam, was reported "resting comfortably" Wednesday night after he collapsed while attending a military ceremony earlier in the day.

It was the third time this year the four-star commander has been hospitalized.

U.S. ambassador Charles W. Yost declared Wednesday that revival of the Arab-Israeli peace talks requires strengthening of confidence in the Suez Canal zone standstill agreement.

Egyptian Ambassador Mohammed H. El-Zayatt immediately interpreted the statement as U.S. support of Israel's position in quitting the talks on the grounds that Egypt violated the agreement by advancing Soviet-supplied ground-to-air missile sites.

The exchange occurred in speeches in the U.N. General Assembly in advance of another private meeting of the U.N. Big Four chief delegates — their first since the civil war in Jordan and the death of President Gamal Abdel Nasser.

National News

The Nixon administration accepted Wednesday a multi-million dollar program for putting the unemployed into Federally supported public-service jobs as part of a major overhaul of the government's manpower-training system.

After an all-night negotiating session with members of the House Education and Labor Committee, the administration accepted the job provision as the price for getting a comprehensive manpower bill it wants.

With the stumbling block over public-service employment removed, the bill was approved by the committee 25 to 3.

Wholesale prices turned back up in September, taking some of the bloom from the Nixon administration's apparent view that it is winning the battle against inflation.

Food and fuels were the major factors in the rise of four-tenths of one per cent in the government's Wholesale Price Index for September reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics Wednesday. The rise wiped out a four-tenths drop in wholesale prices in August, the first decline in nearly three years.

The bureau's price report coincided with other government reports warning of possible widespread fuel shortages that could further boost prices, and a 2 per cent rise in prices paid to farmers for raw products.

Most of the wholesale price changes in both August and September were due to food prices which are frequently subject to month-to-month fluctuations. The corn blight caused sharp price hikes for corn and other grains, the report said.

Edward Everett Horton, whose sly, wry grin, outrageous double take and anxious mannerisms made him a master of drawing room comedy for 60 years, died Tuesday. He was 84.

Brooklyn-born Horton made his debut as a chorus boy, starred in countless plays and made more than 100 movies. Death came at his home on Edward Everett Horton Lane in Encino, California, a suburb of Los Angeles.

The cause of death was not announced but the family requested that, in lieu of flowers, memorial contributions be made to the American Cancer Society.

Michigan News

Progress on settling local issues — termed the key to ending the 16-day-old strike by the United Auto Workers against General Motors — continued at a sluggish pace Wednesday and hopes of a quick end to the walkout dimmed even further.

With bargaining on the national agreement being held in abeyance while all efforts were placed on the local-level agreements, there was little progress to report.

General Motors and the United Auto Workers had 38,358 local issues unsettled when the strike began at midnight Sept. 14. As of Wednesday afternoon, there were still 29,376 unresolved, down only 773 from the day before.

Pornography law repeal urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Contending U.S. adult censorship laws are ineffective, unwarranted, often wrongfully enforced and unsupported by most Americans, a sharply divided Presidential Commission on Pornography recommended Wednesday that they be repealed.

It recommended state laws against public display of obscene pictures or their sale to children, but no similar ban on written matter. And it asked mass sex education so Americans can frankly and openly deal with sexual matters on an informed basis.

"The commission believes that there is no warrant for continued governmental interference," said the commission's 12-member majority, "with the full freedom of adults to read, obtain or view whatever material they wish."

The commission was named in 1967 by President Lyndon B.

Johnson at the direction of Congress.

The White House has been at pains to note the commission was not appointed by President Nixon and has, in effect, disavowed its findings in advance. This indicates that few, if any, of its recommendations will be submitted as administration-sponsored legislation.

The 18-member commission's majority, led by Chairman William B. Lockhart, said "the spirit and letter of our Constitution" prohibit governmental interference unless there is a clear threat of harm — and extensive investigation has produced no evidence either that smut is a significant cause of sex crimes or deviancy or that it corrupts the nation's moral climate.

But three dissenting commissioners accused the majority of recommending moral anarchy and slanting its report in favor of the pornography business.

The dissenters, including Nixon's only appointee, Charles H. Keating Jr., said the purpose of anti-obscenity laws is to protect the public, not individual morality and never was based on what they called the impossible task of proving specific harmful effects.

"The commission's majority report," they asserted, "is a Magna Carta for the pornographer."

The majority recommended repeal of some 114 federal and state laws against importing, showing or selling pornography to adults.

JUSTICE DEPT. VISIT

By DIANE PETRYK
State News Staff Writer

It was by purely random choice that MSU was chosen to host representatives of the Justice Dept. if students here choose to invite them, Charles Gentry, assistant to Atty. Gen. John Mitchell, said Wednesday.

"We wanted to get a representative cross-section of colleges of all sizes and in all geographic locations," Gentry said.

MSU is one of 51 campuses throughout the nation to which the Justice Dept. has offered to send a team to discuss the department's policies, practices and intentions.

But the Justice Dept.'s team won't come if they aren't welcome, the attorney general's assistant said.

"We are hoping that both the schools and the department will gain from the exchange of information," Gentry said, "but the good discussions would bring would not be worth any disruptions or violence that might occur to protest the Justice Dept. on a campus."

"There won't be any blacklist of schools that refuse us," he added.

If the discussions are successful, Gentry said the country will benefit by having convinced the students that the Justice Dept. is concerned with the problems of students.

Former ASMSU Cabinet President Bob Grossfeld Tuesday called the proposed visit a propaganda move.

President Wharton was out of town Wednesday and unavailable for comment. A spokesman for his office said the letter from the Justice Department has been read to Wharton.

Elliott Ballard, asst. to the president, said the administration hopes to know by the first part of next week if students are interested enough to accept the invitation.

"They're (the Justice Dept.)

not asking us to invite them nor are they inviting themselves," Ballard said. "It's up to student government and other groups."

Gentry said Atty. Gen. Mitchell will be on some of the teams that will visit the campuses, but his appearances will be based on his other schedule and not determined by a desire to visit any particular school.

The visits, in October and November, will be at the convenience of the universities as far as is possible, Gentry said.

Expedition group to protest 'U' rejection of 3 students

Students involved in the Detroit Geographical Expedition and Institute (DGEI), an extension program which enables students from Detroit's inner-city to take University courses, will protest the refusal of the University to admit three students from the program at a noon rally, Oct. 12, at the Administration Bldg.

Gwen Warren and Robert Ward, two of 17 Detroit sophomores who came to MSU through DGEI, said the group will present a list of ten demands to the administration.

The students claim the University refused to admit the three students, who have successfully completed about 40 credits, because they lack high school diplomas. DGEI supporters will also charge harassment of students and faculty involved in the project.

"One of the central features of DGEI," Ward said, "is that control of the program remains with the people of the inner-city. The program is now at a critical stage and we must convince the University of the absolute necessity of new approaches to urban problems, particularly the concept of urban control of institutions serving the city." "One of the principles of the Expedition is that there is such a thing as a black genius," Miss Warren said. "It's just that when black students drop out of the terrible schools in Detroit they say he's 'just a dumb nigger'. But when you kids drop out of school in the suburbs, it's because you 'can't stand the boredom'."

Blast kills truckdriver; four suspects questioned

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — A truck carrying 21 tons of dynamite blew up on an interstate highway west of Springfield early Wednesday after reportedly being hit by gunfire from a passing car. The truck driver was killed.

The blast shattered some windows as far as 12 miles away and was originally believed by some residents of the area to be an earthquake. It left a 30-foot-deep, 50-foot-wide crater across a four-lane highway interchange.

Through the day state and federal authorities questioned six persons in the case. But no charges were filed immediately.

The operator of the truck, Tri-State Motors, Inc., of nearby Joplin, Mo., has been doing business in spite of a strike of its drivers since mid-September.

Soon after the explosion there was a report a witness saw a shot fired at the truck from a car and obtained a description and license number.

Later the Missouri Highway

Patrol said two persons were taken into custody.

The patrol identified four of those questioned as Gerald Bowden, 27 of Joplin and his 27-year-old wife Kim; Bobby L. Schuler, 29, of Joplin, and Leonore Kimmel, 31 of Carl Junction, Mo.

A Tri-state spokesman said in Joplin that men with those names had been drivers for the firm but had not worked since the strike began, and that the FBI had picked up the company records on the two men.

Four jurors chosen in trespassing trial

Four of the six jurors that will hear the case of persons arrested for loitering and trespassing in the Union last spring were selected Wednesday in East Lansing Municipal Court.

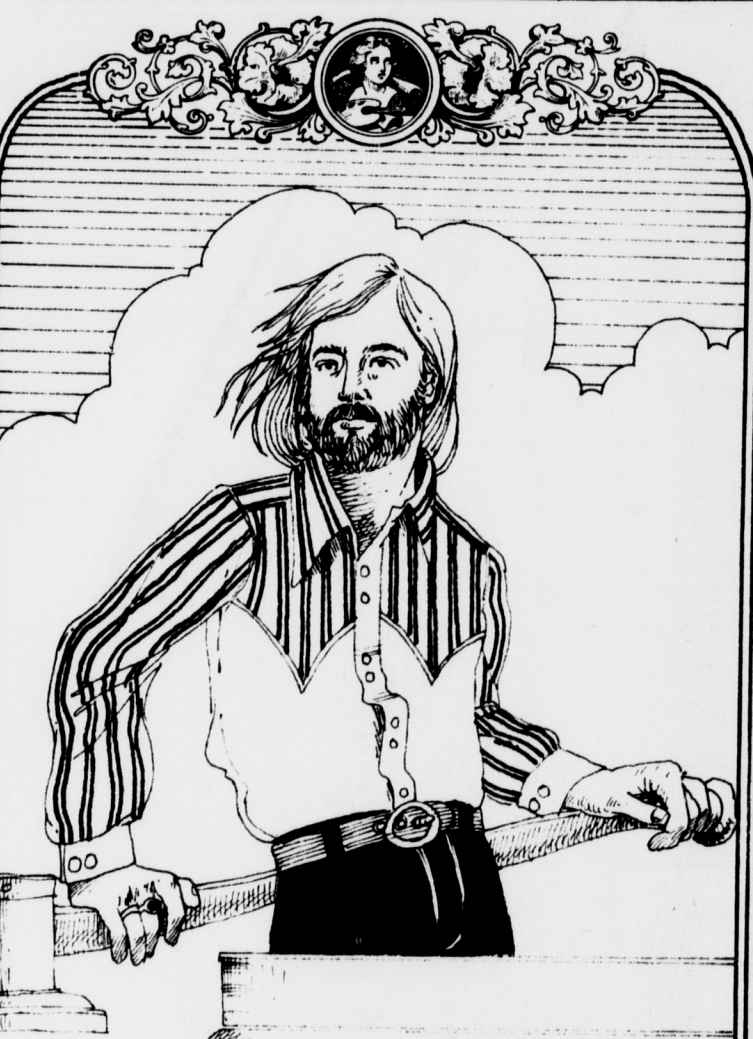

According to a Legal Defense Funds spokesman, the four were selected from a group of 18 potential jurors. The remaining two jurors will have to be called from another list, he said.

The spokesman, who refused to identify himself, said the prosecution, headed by Thomas Rasmussen, Ingham County asst.

prosecutor, called for two mistrials during the course of jury selection. According to the spokesman, Rasmussen told presiding Judge William K. Harmon that defense attorneys asked questions of perspective jurors that were designed to indicate prejudice. Both motions were denied.

In other developments, Milton B. Dickerson, vice-president for student affairs, was subpoenaed by defense representatives this morning in his office in Student Services Bldg. Dickerson was to appear in Court today at 9:30 a.m.

Subpoenaed earlier were Jack W. Ostrander, asst. manager of the Union Building, President Clifton R. Wharton, Jr., and Edwin Reuling, asst. director to the Dean of Students.

Dems stress liberalization

By DIANE PETRYK
State News Staff Writer

Trustee Don Stevens, D-Okemos, and Patricia Carrigan, Democratic candidate for the MSU Board of Trustees, said Tuesday night that any liberalizing at MSU would come to an immediate halt if their Republican opponents are elected in November.

Speaking before a group of about 30 faculty members, students and area residents, including Zoltan Ferency, former Democratic candidate for governor, Stevens said the Democratic trustees have consistently supported the recommendations of students and faculty. He said most liberalizing policies have been passed by the board with a 5-3 party line vote.

"I don't think the University community in the future can continue to have rules and regulations different from the general public," Stevens said.

He said he feels students involved in politics are being well-received and have "knocked off" a number of conservative candidates for public office in various states.

Mrs. Carrigan also said she favored student involvement in politics. She said she thinks the recess offered by some universities for students to work during this campaign is appropriate, and she said she approves giving academic credit for programs concerned with working in campaigns.

Mrs. Carrigan told the group that she deplores the Nixon administration's "narrow and simplistic" response to the complicated and sensitive problem of student unrest.

She said she agrees with the President's Commission of Campus Unrest's warning, "A nation that has lost the allegiance of part of its youth is a nation that has lost part of its future." She said the solution to this problem is not, as President Nixon has done, to dismiss the war and domestic problems and blame campus administrators for not being severe enough.

"I believe we at MSU cannot wait for national leadership to provide the answers for us," she said.

"If we are to address constructively the problem of campus unrest," she added, "we must be willing to recognize and deal with multiple causes and their subtle interwavings. We must be willing to listen objectively to things we may not find it pleasant to hear. We must be as ready to accept blame as we are to ascribe it to others."

Both Mrs. Carrigan and Stevens came out in favor of student representation on the board of trustees.

Former President Walter Adams introduced Stevens as a man of "great personal courage" and Mrs. Carrigan as a woman with "articulate and sensitive understanding of the issues."

Stevens reported that he was the only trustee to vote against prohibiting a Communist speaker on campus in 1963.

"If you can't allow free speech on a university campus, where then can you allow it?" he asked.

Stevens was also the first to suggest changing ROTC from compulsory to voluntary. Now, he said he would vote to eliminate ROTC or to further liberalize it, if this was recommended by students and faculty.

"But I don't believe the trustees should initiate this," he added.

Mrs. Carrigan, a member of President Wharton's Commission on Admissions, said she hopes to help make higher education more available to minority and disadvantaged students.

Candidates praise young campaigners

Democratic nominees for the board of trustees issued a joint statement Tuesday saying that "constructive student participation in election campaigns has far offset the violence engineered by a tiny few."

Board Chairman Don Stevens and Ann Arbor educator Patricia Carrigan cited examples of successful campaigns and pointed out that "quiet, nonviolent involvement this past summer has accomplished more than all the spring violence combined."

"Students are taking long looks at our institutions and finding shortcomings," they said, "but a violent few take advantage of this concern and attempt to destroy rather than reform."

"Around the country students are flexing political muscles and finding it more worthwhile than throwing rocks or bombs."

"Last month in East Lansing, for example, students objected to voter registration policies and took their grievances to the City Council — not to the streets. Backed by an attorney general's report, they were instrumental in local registration reform that can be used as a model for every other University town in the state."

"Unfortunately, this type of student activity draws little attention, and Michigan voters are more aware of student violence than student votes."

"Violence like the recent bombing at the University of Wisconsin does little but undermine legitimate attempts to reform. It is gratifying to observe that senseless violence has received practically no student endorsement. Indeed, students seem acutely aware that bombs are thrown by professional revolutionaries who incidentally may or may not be students."

"Frequently nonstudent groups fail to make this distinction. At MSU, for example, 75 students marauding through buildings at night hardly represent nearly 40,000 other students who may have been studying, working for tuition money or campaigning for a favorite candidate."

"The latter group — the nonviolent majority — make the permanent contributions to society. And the violent minority subtract from that contribution."

Palestinian girl freed in return for hostages

LONDON (AP) — Britain released Leila Khaled from jail and flew the Palestinian girl guerrilla out of the country Wednesday night — the price for getting hijack hostages home safe from Arab captivity.

Earlier Wednesday, the last six American male hostages held by Palestinian guerrillas in Jordan left Athens for home.

The release of the six cleared the way for Switzerland, West Germany and Britain to free seven Arab commandos, as demanded by the Palestine guerrillas.

The Comet headed for West Germany, perhaps to pick up the three Arabs held there.

The plane will also stop in Switzerland to pick up the three guerrillas released by the Swiss.

Board rejects racism charges

By STEVE WATERBURY
State News Staff Writer

MSU's Anti-Discrimination Judicial Board rendered its first decision Tuesday in dismissing a complaint filed by Pauline A. Hess, former MSU cheerleading coach.

Miss Hess charged racism as well as discrimination and harassment against Celeste M. Moy, Detroit junior, and a cheerleader; Don E. Coleman, asst. director in the Dean of Students office; and William H. Powers, Detroit junior, and former chairman of the investigative task force of the Black Liberation Front.

The board moved for dismissal of the charges "for lack of probable cause to credit the allegations."

Miss Hess alleged that Miss Moy, Coleman and Powers "uttered false information, published and uttered false accusations and charged her with racist and discriminatory practices, respectively."

The complaint was extensively investigated by a committee which consisted of a student, a faculty member and an employe representative on the board and by Mrs. Mary Sharp, executive secretary of the judicial board. Mrs. Sharp is also a member of the East Lansing City Council.

The committee recommended dismissal of the claim and also reported they were "unable to find demonstrable proof of overt acts of racial discrimination by Miss Hess."

Miss Hess was charged with "racist and discriminatory practices against black cheerleaders" on Feb. 3, 1970 by the BLF investigative task force.

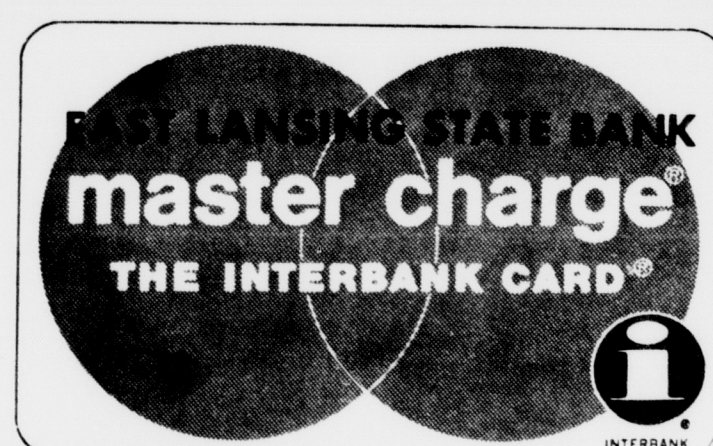

The committee said misunderstanding and a lack of communication existed during the situation due "to differences in cultural or racial background."

The committee recommendation was accepted unanimously by the board, according to Clifford J. Pollard, associate professor of botany and plant pathology and chairman of the Anti-Discrimination Judicial Board.

The judicial board was established by the MSU Board of Trustees February 28, 1970 and given jurisdiction over cases "involving alleged violations of the University policy against discrimination."

The board is composed of three undergraduate students selected by Associate Students of MSU, one graduate student selected by the Council of Graduate Students, three faculty members selected by the Faculty Committee on Committees, one member selected by the Administrative and Professional Association, one member selected by the Association of Clerical and Technical Workers and one member selected by AFSCME Union local 1585.

Day-care center needs pre-enrollment increase

MSU trustees have tentatively approved funds to establish a day-care center for the children of students in married housing. The center, to be run by the Institute for Family and Child Research, is to begin its operation Jan. 2, 1971 — if enough children pre-enroll.

The future of the day-care center is uncertain at this date because pre-enrollment figures are only one-fifth the minimum needed for the project's fiscal success. The University has promised $15,000 in aid if 50 children can be pre-enrolled. If the quota is not filled by Oct. 5, the last day for pre-enrollment, the $15,000 appropriation will be withdrawn and consequently the day-care center will fade from reality.

It is still possible for the day-care center to succeed. There are between 400 and 600 children in married housing. The privilege of using the day-care center would cost $25 a week. In addition, some scholarship and county welfare aid is available for undergraduates.

MSU has needed a well-organized day-care center to meet the needs of married students for a long time. Although the primary facility will be for the care of children two and one-half to five years of age, an evening adult program would provide discussions on child development and recreational opportunities. If the dual program is allowed to get off the ground, the institute can apply for federal aid after six months.

Married housing residents interested in keeping alive the fledgling day-care center may call 355-2949 or 355-3146.

Anti-crime bills nudge Democrats to the right

A quick perusal of recent congressional output indicates that the only thing rising faster than the crime rate is the amount of anti-crime legislation. What is not so immediately clear is whether the new laws are aimed at squelching the criminal on the street or the Democratic party on the Hill.

The latter claim — that the Republicans are legislatively trying to frame their opposition — is depressingly easy to substantiate. In the words of Rep. Emanuel Celler, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, the Organized Crime Control Bill was, for example, "repressive, unconstitutional and irrelevant to the problem of crime in the street." And it is important to remember here that right-leaning Celler is hardly of liberal stripe.

The plan is clear: the Republicans are intent upon ramming anything vaguely labeled "anti-crime" through the congress and happily lampooning hesitant Democrats along the way. This ploy is meeting success: the current political mood in the nation is definitely running toward the old Biblical, fundamentalist philosophy of retribution as opposed to solution.

Finally with the speed of a rushing glacier and the finesse of a Governor's wife running for the Senate, the Democrats have started to respond in kind. It is a matter of survival, they reason.

Unfortunately this tack does not really work. Doves look most ungainly in Hawks clothing — and Agnew is not the least reluctant in handing out his "come lately awards." Part of the problem is that the embattled Democrats, in attempting to step rightward, are utilizing the shotgun approach rather than the more selectivist Hubert Humphrey sidestep.

The peril is eminent: The Democrats may be damned no matter how they move. Their present position could easily net them the epithet of "soft," but a rightward swing could damage their credibility and drive the uncommitted middle voter further Republican.

In sum, the fate of election 1970 still rests, not with what the Democrats accomplish, but what the administration can muffle in the next month.

Students go off-campus to avoid immoral dorms

Richard Ernst, Republican candidate for the MSU Board of Trustees, cannot be criticized for taking a stand on the issues. It is indeed heartening to hear that the GOP standard-bearer is also concerned with the $2 million that MSU dorms will lose this year.

Ernst argues that students are moving off-campus "because of concern about loss of privacy, creation of conditions not in keeping with personal moral codes and the existence of a climate not conducive to good studies and research."

Freedom in life-style is more properly associated with off-campus living. Students move off-campus to get away from hall restrictions, not to move into a more restricted atmosphere. In addition, off-campus living can be cheaper than the $361 a term now charged for residence halls.

Dem. Convention: another view

To the Editor:

In the spirit of pluralistic reporting and non-stereotyped analysis so amply demonstrated by Michael Clinansmith in his Sept. 24th account of the August Democratic Convention in this state, it might be useful to make public the proceedings of a subsequent party caucus related to me by one of Mr. Clinansmith's fellow East Lansing Democrats.

"It was clear from the start our liberal-left forces faced a loaded session, as the conservative-dominated property committee refused to provide a cloakroom for our white hats separate from where labor hung its black hats. A floor fight over the issue threatened to disrupt the caucus, had not our leaders deliberated and chosen to accept the indignity as an unfortunate price to be paid by concerned students working within the system."

"With a tenuous detente established, the meeting moved along toward what seemed a climactic show of unity as our liberal-left student group voted overwhelmingly with the others in favor of having labor's political education division foot all bills for the county party's activities. But the presently solid ranks disintegrated rapidly as a last-minute conservative resolution was introduced asking Democrats to make every effort to work for the party's candidates right through to November. Outraged by this blatant scheme to divert time from a much-needed series of conferences on party ideology into mere canvassing and election day operations, our speakers leapt into the aisles to counter the white-wash resolution. However, in a final power play, the controlled caucus adjourned before every liberal-left student had a chance to talk all he wanted."

Elect peace candidates

To the Editor:

We have organized a nation-wide student organization called PEACE VOTES. The purpose of the organization is to raise money on campuses for ten Senatorial candidates who favor a peace-oriented foreign policy: Hart in Michigan, Burdick in North Dakota, Hartke in Indiana, Hoff in Vermont, Duffey in Connecticut, Metzenbaum in Ohio, Tunney in California, Moss in Utah, Stevenson in Illinois, and Williams in New Jersey. PEACE VOTES has been successful in reaching a number of campuses, but so far we have no representatives on our campus.

These peace candidates are badly in need of funds. Nixon and Agnew are raising millions of dollars to buy saturation television and Madison Avenue campaigns for their war-oriented candidates. We must act quickly to counter this flood of conservative dollars. Nixon is buying war votes; we must buy peace votes. Students who would like to help these candidates by distributing material and canvassing on your campus should write us today.

Five dollars or less from a fraction of the 7.2 million students in America can help elect peace Senators. Contributions should be made payable to PEACE VOTES, P.O. Box 2700, Washington, D.C. 20013.

J. PAT ROONEY

Can't radicals be radical?

EDITOR'S NOTE: Beginning today, the State News will periodically publish a column written by J. Pat Rooney, who is currently president of Executive Systems, a management consultant firm. Mr. Rooney is a noted authority on higher education, and he last year organized two national conferences on campus unrest and a national conference on the crisis of high schools. Mr. Rooney's column, though certainly not representative of the business community, will hopefully provide a perspective usually lacking from those within the immediate academic community.

Are even the radicals radical? Or is the unending talk of a better society just a rhetorical ego trip?

Radicals have been telling us how we must change society, making us uptight about how society is dehumanizing. It seems to me that most of the radicals I know are willing to submit to dehumanizing treatment of themselves, and given the opportunity, they appear to treat others with just as much insensitivity as the power structure they complain about.

I recount a couple of my own experiences. I took the family to a rock concert by Steppenwolf. Our seats were $4.50 each. Most of the seats were better and cost more. A crowd of more than 7,000, which all adds up to a very great deal of money for a one-night, one-hour performance.

I have never been more angry in my life, for that giant-size crowd of young people (I was one of the over 30 exception) had to obtain entrance to the stadium, ticket in hand, through only two one-person-at-a-time turnstiles. The result was a giant balloon of people trying to squeeze through a knothole. The other stadium entrances were closed. It costs less to pay attendants at two gates than 10 gates.

It's dehumanizing to push people through the eye of a needle. No adult audience would have stood for such treatment, and no right-headed performers, or promoters, would have treated an adult audience in that fashion. But the "student is a nigger," and even their rock heroes treat them that way. Those who profit from the dehumanizing of people can take the blame.

I created a major scene at the rock concert, ridiculed by many of the students squeezing through the same turnstile. If one in every 20 of the thousands of paying customers had lodged strong protest — not talking about violence — the system could not have taken it. The "system becomes nonfunctional when faced by massive protest. More correctly, the system is forced to respond, and cannot operate effectively, when faced with quantities of protests.

It's dehumanizing to push people through the eye of a needle. No adult audience would have stood for such treatment, and no right-headed performers, or promoters, would have treated an adult audience in that fashion.

As to niggers with dark skin — The other night I had dinner at a pretty far out restaurant, operated by people who at least thought themselves "hip." There was wall-to-wall protest music, and a lot of counterculture hair styles around.

A white female took the food order, opened the wine bottle... and that was the last of her work.

A black female took over. The black girl mothered over us to make sure we had everything we wanted. The white girl did the prestige things, the black girl did the work. Then I asked for the check, which the black girl provided, saying, "You have to pay them" — "them" was the white counterculture types.

LARRY LERNER

On the exploration of the human soul

I saw a commercial on television this summer. It was curious and pathetic. A diligent young man was shown grappling over his present work. The voice explained that the young man suddenly decided to lead a new life. I think he got a new job in computer programming or something like that.

The voice continued to say that he could now enjoy "The Finer Things in Life" and following that pronouncement the viewer could see three scenes: the young man swinging a golf club on his front lawn with his wife standing by smiling; the young man piloting a small, private plane with his wife sitting and smiling; the young man in a yacht with his wife smiling.

Unfortunately, all these "finer things" are external from the young man. (I guess the producers of the commercial are content with the status of the woman as the young man's wife and smiling automaton.) In fact, if we are to accept the theme of the advertisement literally, the young man — or you, if the case may be — need not think, feel or otherwise exhibit human traits of aliveness to experience the fine. Accepting the commercial's content on a figurative basis would merely reinforce conviction, held by most Americans, that with the possession of material goods much of life's blessings are secured.

While it is true that television is a limited medium and within its limits deals with many untruths, the commercial mentions really uncovered the fundamental essence of American life today. This essence, in which material goods are canonized and lives are oriented to impress others with superficial words and actions, has and is being promoted at the expense of inner peace and happiness which so many of us are taught and socialized never to know in our lifetimes.

Perhaps in this word it is not possible to get along without constant or frequent role playing but it does seem reasonable to attempt to limit one's role — playing an often the insincerity and cruelty which concomitantly follow. Fortunately, for some, genuine happiness may reside in such an attempt and, if not, at least the attempt necessary before one can attempt something different or choose to remain stagnant.

Many philosophers and poets have reflected on the absurdity of, not only role playing or being untrue to one's self, but also the playing of life's game too seriously. In this vein, it may be useful to mention a paradox of mine.

There is an enterprising scholar. And he becomes enthralled with the life and work of Lao-tzu, the eminent sage of Taoism. And he becomes so enthralled that he spends his whole life writing, translating, deciphering reading and becoming mesmerized with the never-ending beauty and simplicity of the sage's words of wisdom. Only the scholar has forgotten that Lao-tzu despised the scholar and felt that humans should refrain from the world of words and shades of meanings and instead experience nature, the warmth of the sun, feelings, a wind, etc.

Today it is extremely difficult to live a handsome life filled with marriage, a home, children, comforts unless one joins the race and accordingly becomes a rat. But the contradiction remains for the scholar or, for that matter, anyone who watches and listens instead of feels and does. And it seems that the answer — if one exists — may lie in seeing through the contradictions, problems, hypocrisies (Alan Watts) and realizing that these supposed absurdities are so meaningless as to not confront us as "problems" for serious contemplation.

The important task is not running away from problems but facing them squarely AND, at the same time, being fully aware that the problem is not "problematic" but always involving enlightenment of the mind and soul.

By facing problems (externals) with the hope of achieving inner awareness, we begin the perilous journey of understanding who and/or what we really are. And through knowing ourselves perhaps we can make some sense out of the agonies of our existence.

refused to honor our reservation. The students insisted that I not take on the hotel management, because they said this would be a great learning experience for me. I finally went along with what was happening because it would have been easier to protest against the passivity of my young colleagues. My student friends supplied themselves with a good story for rap session, but would do nothing to challenge the situation.

Was it better to insist on paying my money to the black waitress, or the acquire only a good story about racism in our society? By confronting the situation, I got both. Submission to unjust and immoral treatment does nothing to change the system.

It is clearly more difficult for young people, lacking the credentials of the system, to take on the system, but it's not by any means impossible — especially when a few act in concert.

One of the rhetorical failures is the use of the term "the system." The term suggests that there is one diabolical monolith creating all of the societal problems — and implies the futility of doing anything about societal disfunctions. The concept of "the system" permits the individual to feel sorry for himself, while letting him feel free to do nothing about the injustices he encounters in real life.

The only position of radical reform that is worth the name is one that confronts societal disfunctions where we encounter them. . . in our own lives. Otherwise, it's only rhetoric.

The radical rock group and the "hip" restaurant management use the appearance of social change to their personal economic benefit.

Then let the radicals act radical.

Pay called real issue in UAW strike

By JEFF SHELER
State News Staff Writer

Few observers of the United Auto Worker's (UAW) strike against General Motors Corp. (GM), now in its third week, view the walkout as anything less than a threat to already suffering state and national economies.

However, many disagree over the causes and the significance of the strike and what it means against the backdrop of other political and social circumstances.

"I question that there is any more to this strike than the issue openly mentioned in bargaining," Jack Stieber, chairman of the School of Labor and Industrial Relations, said.

Stieber cited the union demands for an escalator clause in the new contract and for a $500 a month pension available after 30 years employment, as the real issues involved in the strike.

The escalator clause, which appeared in UAW contracts before 1967, would automatically raise wages, according to rises in the consumer price index, without having to await new contract negotiations.

The "30 - years - and - out" demand has run up against GM's insistence that a worker must be at least 58 years old at the end of the 30 years employment before he can receive the full $500 per month. The union demands that age not be a factor in setting the amount of pension.

Stieber also cited what he called "personal psychological aspects" that may account in part for the breakdown in negotiations and the apparent unwillingness of either side to relent.

"First of all, the UAW has a new president and he is being tested," he said. Leonard Woodcock became the union's president in May, succeeding Walter Reuther who died in an airplane crash.

"Naturally Woodcock doesn't want to come across as not measuring up to the standards of his predecessor," Stieber said.

"But this is not a major factor. Second, there is a new negotiator on the company's side, the new Vice President Earl Bramblett. But again this is not major," he said.

Stieber also pointed out that GM has not been struck nationally in 25 years.

"I think this is probably another factor as to why GM was singled out. GM employs a lot of people, and it is a strong company," he said.

News Background

"The union doesn't want to break any of the auto companies. Obviously they would lose their jobs if a company goes out of business," Stieber said. "GM is strong, and it's highly unlikely that they would be seriously hurt by a national strike, at least not as much as Chrysler.

"But this has both positive and negative effects. The UAW realizes that GM is best able to absorb increases in labor costs, and that a settlement with GM would be applicable to the other auto companies. But at the same time GM can withstand a strike a lot longer than the other companies."

Stieber said the union would have a much more difficult time than GM trying to cope with an extended strike.

"The UAW strike fund is not large enough to last much more than seven weeks. Seven weeks would not be a terribly long strike for GM," he said.

Stieber said the strike could have serious effects on city governments as well as the state. "With budgets as tight as they are, any loss of revenue is critical," he said.

Stieber said that neither side would "come out on top" at the end of the strike. Both would end up making concessions.

"The problem is now that neither side is willing to make concessions that would allow a settlement," he said. "But clearly, there is not going to be a victory by one side or the other."

$26 MILLION NEEDED

Teaching hospital seeks funds

By JOHN BORGER
State News Staff Writer

University officials have until Jan. 15 to raise $26 million to match a $17.3 million federal grant for construction of a teaching hospital, trustee Warren Huff, D - Plymouth, said Wednesday.

Huff is a member of a fund-raising committee which includes representatives of the board of trustees, the University administration and the College of Human Medicine.

Huff said the committee has been working for two or three weeks and has "a lot of ideas," for fund raising, but has not yet produced any solutions for public exposure.

"It's so fluid, there are so many aspects being worked on, that there is just nothing definite to announce at this time," he said.

Roger Wilkinson, vice president for business and finance, said Tuesday the money to match the federal grant would probably come from a combination of three major sources: fund-raising activities, a capital outlay appropriation from the legislature, and operation of the proposed hospital on a self-liquidating basis.

The self-liquidating method was used to finance construction of the residence hall system, the intramural buildings and the University Health Center.

The Jan. 15 deadline is the time at which the University must notify the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) if it can match the funds. The date was set by HEW when the grant was tentatively approved last spring.

"We're working on all sorts of approaches and we're working on the premise that we will succeed. To fail would be a real set-back for the University," Huff said.

Huff said no massive fund drive for the hospital alone will be conducted. Although he called the hospital "a prime need," he said other University needs must also be considered in fund-raising drives.

The hospital is part of a large south campus health and medical science complex. Life Sciences I is scheduled for completion in 1971. The hospital and Life Sciences II are still in the planning and money-raising stages.

When completed, the facilities will provide for a full health sciences program, including the training of physicians, nurses, dietitians and physical therapists and the exploration of improvements in health care.

Life Sciences II will contain classrooms, laboratories and faculty offices. The teaching hospital will be used for outpatient care and clinical instruction.

Hospital capacity is planned at 342 beds. Medical students would receive from one-third to one-half of their clinical training there.

The balance of the training would be done in hospitals and health facilities in Lansing, Alma, Baldwin, Flint, Grand Rapids, Howell, Pontiac, Saginaw and the western Upper Peninsula.

The south campus hospital could largely replace the University Health Center for the treatment of students, although the health center might continue to serve as an auxiliary health unit.

Experiments set for Model Cities

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration announced Wednesday a series of experiments with the $575 million Model Cities program designed to increase the power of mayors and eliminate federal red tape in urban aid programs.

Housing Secretary George Romney announced that between 12 and 18 of the 150 communities participating in the Model Cities effort will carry out one or more of the experiments.

The three so-called planned variations are: elimination of most federal reviews before a model city receives funding; expanded model city neighborhoods to include entire cities rather than specific ghetto areas; virtual veto power for mayors over all federal aid flowing into their cities.

The Model Cities variations emanated from high level White House discussions and are designed to further President Nixon's objectives for a new federalism that includes block grants and revenue sharing.

The experiments are a further step in the administration's previously announced plans for centering more power in mayors rather than citizen advisory groups and for expanding the size of model city neighborhoods.

The Model Cities program, initiated by former President Lyndon B. Johnson, is intended to focus the maximum amounts of federal, state, local and private dollars in selected neighborhoods, for massive uplift.

The Nixon administration, however, has decreased emphasis on Model Cities as a renewal effort and instead refers to it as a possible model process for all federal aid programs.

'Lion in Winter'— drama with taste, integrity, humor

A Life magazine article in the summer of 1969 described "The Lion in Winter" as a medieval "Virginia Woolf" which promised much. That promise was magnificently fulfilled with a film that parallels "Woolf" in a number of ways.

Both deal with a love-hate relationship between two people, equally matched, who enjoy inflicting pain on each other. Instead of weapons the characters use words to wound each other, which, as it turns out, are far more lethal.

Both screenplays possess a sarcastic, defensive humor that alternates with their venomous verbal exchanges. Both provide its actors with wide ranging, shrewdly written roles that demand and receive the utmost in return.

The settings, of course, vary. "The Lion in Winter" takes place in 12th century England where damp castles, flickering candles, clanging swords and complicated

By ROBERT KIPPER
State News Reviewer

espionages were the order of the day.

The plot concerns King Henry II, who filmgoers met in "Becket," and the question of which of his three sons will be named his successor.

Eleanor of Aquitaine, Henry's queen, has been imprisoned by Henry and is let out only when state ceremonies or holiday courts demand her presence. In her solitude Eleanor spends her time plotting against Henry in hopes of placing her favorite son, Richard, on the throne. Henry is equally determined to have son John as heir.

Geoffrey, the remaining son, has designs of his own for seizing power. To complicate things, King Phillip of France arrives in England to play the family against each other for France's interests in the spirit of patient revenge.

It's Christmas (1183) and the holiday brings Eleanor gloriously back to Henry's side at his court at Chinon. Despite the other plotters, the main battle rages between Henry and Eleanor. Despite their accusations, their schemes and their threats, a genuine affection still exists between them. They engage in the same game of "oneupmanship" that George and Martha played so viciously in "Virginia Woolf."

They struggle with each other for momentary triumphs and, upon achieving a victory, each sits back and with admiration waits for his opponent to make the next move. What follows is expert back - stabbing by two seasoned combatants who thrive on it and a family who have made the exercise of it their royal pastime.

As Eleanor, Katharine Hepburn is overpowering. Never before has her articulate voice, regal appearance and indomitable strength been put to better use. The contrast of a woman who has known power and prestige reduced to a vulnerable prisoner, presents Miss Hepburn with the challenge of her career. Mastering every nuance, she produces an unforgettable portrait of a complex woman crafty enough to impose her will but sadly aware of her compromising position. She makes Eleanor a creature of weathered elegance who, though petrified by the thought of the future and its possibility of continued loneliness, retains her unassailable facade to carry on her encounter with her king, the source of her strength and inspiration.

Peter O'Toole's Henry proves a near equal match for Miss Hepburn's Eleanor. Henry is essentially the same monarch O'Toole vibrantly introduced in "Becket" except here Henry is mellowing with age. He still revels in outmaneuvering everyone. He remains a man who never tires of proving his manhood in bed or asserting his authority in his kingdom. But underlying his boastings, shouting and coarseness is the serious side of a man beginning to be tormented by the prospect of death who seeks to live on through the achievements of a strong successor.

Beyond the composite excellence of its stars, "The Lion in Winter" also glitters with the supporting performances of Timothy Dalton, as Phillip, and Jane Merrows, as Henry's mistress; the literacy of James Goldman's script; the discipline of Anthony Harvey's direction and the power and sombre enhancement of John Barry's music score.

The result is a fully conceived and faithfully executed drama with taste and integrity all its own. The film, shown on campus last weekend, returns at 7:30 p.m. Friday in the University Auditorium.

Ratings set up for film animals

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The American Humane Assn. plans to start rating foreign-made movies "acceptable" or "unacceptable" next month, depending on whether animals in them have been treated cruelly.

A particular target is the so-called running W, used to trip a galloping horse into a spectacular fall, Harold Melniker, director of the association's Hollywood office, said.

Invisible wires linking a horse's legs and an off-camera stake send him head over heels, and sometimes he gets a broken leg or neck, said Melniker.

"The practice was quite common until 1940 when the American Humane Association came to Hollywood and worked out an agreement with producers to supervise animal action," he added. "One of the conditions was absolute prohibition of the running W."

"Now it's being used in some pictures produced in the last year or so in Spain, Italy and Yugoslavia. On the screen it's obvious. Some producers have said quite frankly they did it because they felt there was little chance of injury to the horses."

Involved, said Melniker, are foreign producers and a few Americans — "when they get outside the United States, outside our jurisdiction."

In several pictures made outside the United States animals were killed, Melniker added.

"We cannot tolerate actually killing animals for the sake of entertainment," he said. "We say an animal's life is entitled to respect."

ARGENTINE CENSUS

Housing shortage probed

Everybody has to stay home Wednesday for Census Day in Argentina, as 500,000 census takers pried into lavatory systems and asked whether there were any 12-year-old mothers.

The last census in this second largest country in Latin America was in 1960 when 23 million inhabitants were counted. The government, while wanting to know how many persons now live in the country, is also seeking information on how Argentines live so it can better plan future housing construction.

There is a serious housing shortage in Argentina. Poor families live in squalid shanty towns sprawled around the outskirts of Buenos Aires — the seventh largest city in the world — and other Argentine cities.

Argentines buy rather than rent apartments. But the shortage of units means a young couple must pay from $12,000 to $15,000 for a one-bedroom apartment.

The price seems particularly expensive because $200 a month is considered a good wage in this country.

The census takers, most of them recruited from universities and colleges, sought information on the type of construction, the materials used and the available space in the dwellings of the people they interviewed.

There was also a section on sanitary facilities. The census takers wanted to find out if families had hot and cold water and toilets.

However, because the shanty towns are without such niceties, there were also spaces on the census forms for families having outhouses or nothing at all.

All women 12 years and over had to answer questions about how many children they have had born alive.

When the forms were distributed last week, a court inspector, Dr. Carlos A. Minones, the Argentine equivalent of a U.S. marshal, unsuccessfully sought an injunction against including that in the interview.

Minones said the question was illegal, immoral and against the law, since 14 happens to be the minimum legal age for marriage in Argentina.

He argued that if any little girl under the age of 14 admitted to having had children, the census taker would have to report it to police and charge of rape would have to be lodged against somebody.

Documentary film crews face occupational hazards

NEW YORK (AP) — Filming a documentary requires adeptness with a camera, an artistic eye and a patient disposition. But it also can suddenly turn dangerous.

It did just that for three NBC film crews working on segments of the upcoming "First Tuesday" in Lebanon, Canada and Peru.

The crew dispatched to Beirut, Lebanon, to film Arab students at the American University got there about the time of the plane hijackings and ran into trouble about everywhere they turned.

In Canada, reporter Steve Delaney went looking for methyl mercury pollution, but ended up looking down the barrel of a rifle. He was threatened by an Indian in White Dog, Ont., for being on his property.

Filming the aftermath of the disastrous June earthquake in Peru put two men in the hospital with hepatitis.

The crew in Lebanon was manhandled during a street demonstration, threatened with a hand grenade and had its camera cable cut. Twice they tried to film Palestinian students occupying the Jordanian Embassy, but were thrown out by Lebanese soldiers. They came back at midnight and got the story.

Intrigue of a more dangerous sort was needed to film a Palestinian commando school for children. Bill Aulepp, the unit manager, was refused permission because it was near the war zone.

"So we had to sneak through the checkpoint and go to the military camp without papers," Aulepp said.

At the camp they convinced the commander that the story would help inform Americans about the Palestinian cause.

They returned to Beirut, where Aulepp said "we had papers drawn up of doubtful authenticity giving us permission to film."

The crew returned at dawn to the camp, but the commander was rather skeptical of the signature. He said a commando leader was expected later and let them film the story in the meantime.

"Luckily, we finished filming before the leader arrived and got the hell out," he said.

The crew in Peru was not so lucky. They were hospitalized in a Russian relief clinic for what was thought to be dysentery. But on return to the United States, cameraman Leigh Wilson and unit manager Philip Miller were hospitalized again, this time for hepatitis. The producer, Tom Tomizawa, who also was stricken in Peru, has not yet had his ailment diagnosed.

Psych committees open to undergrads

By MARY MORRICE
State News Staff Writer

Nominations for 12 undergraduate student positions on governing committees in the Dept. of Psychology are being received until 5 p.m. today in 109 Olds Hall.

Under a proposal approved by the department last spring, undergrad students will serve for the first time on five of the 10 department committees.

"It's the first department in the University that has implemented the suggestion in the McKee Report to allow undergrads to serve as full voting members on faculty committees," Dick Aslin, Brookfield, Wis. senior and chairman of the Psychology Club said.

The McKee Report proposing increased student participation in academic governance, is now being reviewed by the Academic Council.

Positions open to undergrad psychology majors are on the following committees: Undergraduate Instruction Committee, which determines curriculum and graduation requirements; Advisory Committee, a liaison between the department chairman and undergrad students; Human Subjects Committee, which decides ethical procedures for human subjects in experiments; and the Space Committee, which assigns departmental building space.

Officers of the Psychology Club, of which all psychology majors are automatic members, are also being nominated. Positions of president, vice president and secretary are open.

These student representatives and Psychology Club officers will have full voting power at all regular faculty meetings as well as on their specific committees.

Any psychology student desiring nomination should leave his name and phone number in the box at 109 Olds Hall. A short biographical sketch is optional. All psychology majors will receive ballots by mail before Oct. 5.

"A lot of students are bitching about this and that, and here is an opportunity to get involved in the decisions of the department," Gary Wood, Flint senior, said.

Wood, cochairman of the Psychology Club, hopes to see course revisions within the department and an increase in clinical courses.

"At least 60 per cent of the psychology faculty is in the clinical area, and there is only one undergrad offering in clinical psychology," he said.

Courses in drug therapy, student personal adjustments and more field placements in local institutions are other reforms that Wood and Aslin foresee after students obtain voting power on committees.

'SURVIVAL KIT'

Miami freshmen get tips on VD, drugs, protests

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — "Save yourself a beating or possible rape," says a little blue booklet. "Travel in groups at night."

It adds: "If you've got a convertible save yourself a slashed top and leave your doors unlocked. . . . Concerning birth control, if you need it — use it. . . . Drug use exists. . . ."

The booklet is part of a purple and white "Survival Kit" handed to each freshman registering this fall at the 18,500-student University of Miami.

Other items in the package include pamphlets titled "About Syphilis and Gonorrhea," "Modern Methods of Birth Control," and "Drug Abuse: The Chemical Cop-Out."

There's also a wallet-sized card giving emergency telephone numbers, including one for bail-bond service.

The blue booklet was prepared by the university's Student Life Committee, which also put together the survival kit. It's the first such effort by the group of faculty advisers and upperclassmen.

"We've tried to give you some information about the area which, we believe, will present some of your most difficult decisions," the committee said in an introduction to its booklet.

"On homosexuality, it advises: 'If you are naive about sex or have little experience, those already well-firmed in homosexual practices may make advances toward you. While it may be frightening to see that members of the same sex are attracted to you, this does not imply that you are homosexual.'"

Veneral disease: "Get treatment at the first sign of trouble. The University Health Center will treat you and the world won't find out."

Campus protests: "Express your feelings and ideas. However, keep your mind open to more than one idea, or opinion, or philosophy. The university has in the past brought disciplinary action against individuals involved in disruptive demonstrations. There is no reason to think this will change."

Drugs: "Drugs are illegal. Are they worth the risk to you? The experiences are attainable; they could be good, they could be bad — but make up your mind. . . . If you are caught with drugs on campus, there is a good chance you will be kicked out of school."

Is the frankness likely to upset parents? Apparently not. Dr. Nicholas Gennett, dean of students, told Wednesday of an older woman registering for classes who asked for extra survival kits for her college-age children enrolled elsewhere.

"This is the kind of thing she wanted them to know," Gennett said.

How did the students like it? "A sign of receptivity to material given out at registration can be found in the library area where the students register," Gennett said. "We didn't find any survival kits littering the grass."

And though the kits were designed for freshmen, the upperclassmen have been asking for them too.

Gennett said, "One of the things universities have been guilty of is to assume a rather ostrich-like posture. It isn't sufficient for universities to confine themselves to academic advising and advice on student activities."

"We have some sort of an obligation to prepare students to adjust to the campus environment."

Center chooses prof to serve as director

The visiting professor who coordinated meetings of the plenary group of the African Studies Center throughout the summer has been chosen to serve as the center's acting director.

Victor N. Low, professor of history, has agreed to serve until next August, but he will leave the center if a new director is found before then.

The plenary group was established as the governing body of the African Studies Center last year after the center was shut down and presented with a list of black student demands last October.

The group, which includes 11 students, has been meeting since then to establish new policies for the center and to find a permanent director.

Charles Hughes, former director of the center, resigned in the wake of the student demands last year.

Rock bottom support

This MSU coed chose to display her support for Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., in an unusual way — by sporting a bumper sticker on the seat of her pants. She was attending the MSU Students for Hart meeting Tuesday night.

Hart supporters plan drive

By DAVE SHORT
State News Staff Writer

MSU Students for Hart formalized plans Tuesday for voter canvassing, fund raising, voter registration and speaker appearances in the final month of the campaign drive before the Nov. 3 elections.

Approximately 125 students attended the organizational meeting, the group's first of the fall term.

Randy Bodwin, chairman of the MSU Students for Hart, outlined the various activities that the group will undertake in the next few weeks to "produce votes, change minds, and get money."

The primary action by the organization in the next few days will be increasing voter registration in the area before the Oct. 2 deadline.

Two speaking appearances later this month represent the organization's prime fund-raising activities. Mrs. Jane Hart, the senator's wife, will appear at 3 p.m., Friday, Oct. 9 in the Auditorium.

Students involved in ticket sales and promotion for Mrs. Hart's talk are meeting at 7:30 tonight in the U.N. Lounge of the Union. Bodwin also said he "expects" Sen. George McGovern, D.-South Dakota, to appear on campus

Oct. 26 to speak for the Hart campaign.

Bodwin urged students to write "Letters to the Editor" in their hometown and area newspapers concerning the Hart campaign and related topics.

Members of the group plan to maintain an office in the UN Lounge until the election. They plan to sell and distribute literature there in order to raise money.

The organization also plans to give people rides to the polls on election day and to have workers supervise the election procedures.

Hart's statewide student coordinator, Don Tucker, spoke briefly during the meeting. He called the MSU chapter of Students for Hart the "biggest and most effective" of the 60 campus organizations in the state.

Senator Hart will speak at 11 a.m. this Saturday at the opening of 6th District Congressional candidate John Cihon's campaign headquarters.

GUARDS CHANGING

Capitol updates security

By ROBERTA SMITH
State News Staff Writer

Under a new security plan, 36 specially trained security guards, supervised by a total of 21 State Police personnel, will guard the State Capitol complex area.

Until the new security guards began duty in the area this week, untrained and unsupervised watchmen acted in a protective service capacity for the six building complex.

Sen. Charles O. Zollar, R-Benton Harbor, explained that the Legislature felt professionals should provide security in the area. Many complaints of security had been voiced, he said.

Zollar, who chairs the Appropriations Committee, said no additional funding is necessary to provide the $613,000 that will maintain the force. The money was included in the State Police budget, Zollar said.

Initially the State Police were asked to form proposals for an improved security system. Zollar said that the State Police were assigned the job because they were "probably the best and most properly trained police in the state."

The guard procedure is structured closely to industrial security and that used at the Capitol in Washington, D.C. In Lansing, the guards patrol the several blocks with the Lansing Police.

"Within five years the complex inherited four buildings plus the underground parking that many secretaries must enter in the late evening," Sgt. William H. Carter, commanding officer of the Capitol Complex Security, said. "The guards had spread themselves too thin and couldn't keep up with the times."

"Let me stress, however, that people will be first and property second," Carter said.

Included in the 140 hours of guard training is constitutional law, community and human relations, law of arrest, search and seizure, first aid, firearms, personal combat and extensive fire training.

The training is similar to that of State Police troopers with the exception of studies in motor vehicle regulations and extensive physical training.

Zollar said the guards have worked out "quite well" in their first week of duty.

Memorial set for Nasser

Memorial services for Egyptian president Gamal Abdel Nasser, who died Monday will be held at 8 p.m. Thursday in Parlor C, Union.

Speakers at the service will be Fauzi Najjar, professor in Justin Morrill College and social science; Mohamed Abouelseoud, asst. professor of natural science and a representative of the Pan-African Student Organization of the Americas (PASOA).

The services are being held through the Organization of Arab Students.

Mrs. Nixon leaves Rome, rejoins husband in Naples

ROME (AP) — Pat Nixon Wednesday said farewell to Rome, "a beautiful city," where, she said, "I'd like to stay and play."

As a motorcade drove down the Appian Way to the airport, the First Lady stopped to say hello to a group of girls and nuns from Santa Rosa's Home for Retarded Children. Dressed in blue uniforms, the girls gathered to wave Italian flags and applaud her along the roadside.

Mrs. Nixon got out of the car to greet the sisters and the girls, who gave her a bouquet of flowers.

She said she learned the group had turned out before to watch her pass, but the motorcade and its police escort went by too fast and did not have a chance to stop.

The First Lady made up for it today with a special greeting. Sister Claire Holmes from Chicago told Mrs. Nixon to say hello to the President.

"Tell him we're praying for him."

Mrs. Nixon had stayed behind in Rome for two days while President Nixon went off to visit the 6th Fleet and confer with military and diplomatic leaders in the Mediterranean.

She took the presidential jet, Air Force One, from Ciampino Military Airport to rejoin the President in Naples Wednesday afternoon to fly on with him for visit to Yugoslavia.

At planeside she greeted a lineup of Girl Scouts and Brownies who came to say goodbye.

On Tuesday, Mrs. Nixon handed out rosebuds in a friendly neighborhood in Rome. On her last night in Rome, Mrs. Nixon had what she says is her favorite food — spaghetti and meat balls — in her hotel suite where she dined alone, her press secretary, Constance Stuart, said.

Mrs. Stuart said that Wednesday morning, with a bouquet of flowers, Mrs. Nixon received a hand-written letter addressed to "The First Lady of America." It said:

"Please believe that the entire Italian 'silent great majority' stands by President Nixon and by America with deep gratitude, high admiration and every most heartfelt good wish." It was signed "All the True Italians."

Mrs. Stuart, who showed it to reporters, said she did not know who sent it.

Prof lists varied sources of mercury contamination

ANN ARBOR — Mercury pollution by man comes from many sources, an MSU water chemist told scientists at an International Conference on Environmental Mercury Contamination Wednesday.

"We increasingly recognize this contamination as a widespread and serious threat to man and his ecosystem," Frank M. D'Itri, asst. professor with the MSU Institute of Water Research, said.

D'Itri was one of a number of scientists addressing the conference in Ann Arbor sponsored by the University of Michigan (U-M) and Michigan State University.

D'Itri noted that some mercury is present in nature and accumulation of mercury by this natural process warrants further exploration.

The most well-known source of mercury contamination happens when lye, or caustic soda, is manufactured. Caustic soda is a basic building block for other substances in the chemical industry. One of the sources of mercury polluting Lake St. Clair and the St. Clair River is believed to have been a chemical plant using this process.

For each ton of caustic soda manufactured using the mercury process, between one-quarter and one-half pound of mercury escapes into the environment. The process involves passing an electric current through a bath of brine containing mercury electrode.

In addition to mercury lost in the brine, some is lost through spills in the plant and in hydrogen gas which is given off in the process. The brine is constantly being renewed and pumped back into the ground where it can carry mercury into the environment.

"The mercury cell process results in a very pure grade of caustic soda," D'Itri said. While the process using mercury was more costly than other methods for making caustic soda, the use of the method has been growing and now accounts for almost one-third of all production of caustic soda.

Besides making caustic soda, mercury is also used as a catalyst in the manufacture of plastics such as urethane and vinyl chloride, and also the chemical acetaldehyde. Effluent or waste from plants making acetaldehyde and vinyl chloride has been blamed for over 40 mercury poisoning deaths in Japan in the past decade, according to D'Itri.

But while the chemical industry has been receiving most of the publicity in the mercury contamination drama, it accounts for only 26 per cent of the approximately 5.6 million pounds of mercury consumed in the United States each year.

More mercury, 28 per cent of total consumption, is used in the electrical industry where each year a million pounds of mercury is put into the long-life batteries — batteries which are eventually thrown out. Silent switches, high intensity street lamps, photo-copying machines and fluorescent lights all contain mercury, D'Itri pointed out.

Dentists use a quarter of a million pounds of mercury each year to form amalgams of silver or tin which are used to fill teeth.

The paper industry is another source of mercury pollution. Mercury is used as a slimeicide to prevent the growth of microbes in pulp before it is turned into paper. This use of mercury is decreasing but still accounts for 0.6 per cent of consumption, D'Itri said.

Jean Claude Killy at Jenison, Fri. Oct. 9 8 p.m. Door prizes and valuable tips from the pro tickets available at Men's IM.

Mercury contamination also occurs in agriculture, he said. For example, many seed dressings, fungicides and sprays contain mercury. Although this source is only a small percentage of the total mercury consumption (less than 5 percent) all of this mercury is left in the environment and some probably gets in the food we eat.

The MSU chemist notes that mercury is also used in drugs, on pharmaceutical products, which account for 30,000 pounds of mercury, and in diuretics and antiseptics such as mercurchrome.

Many cosmetics, D'Itri reported, contain a small amount of mercury to act as a preservative, and most paints contain mercury to act as an antibacterial agent and fungicide.

He pointed out that an undisclosed amount of mercury could be entering the environment from the coal we burn, for mercury is present in coal in parts per billion or parts per trillion.

Trip nets Nixon political support

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — In visiting Yugoslavia today President Nixon is in some ways wooing the political support of a million or so Americans who have relatives in this country.

That figure is the estimate of a Yugoslav official who said: "The great majority of Yugoslav-Americans are moderates. They are loyal to both the United States and Yugoslavia."

Officials here contend most Yugoslav-Americans are proud of their homeland and of the fact that it is being visited for the first time by a U.S. president. They admit there are activists in the United States hostile to President Tito's regime, but say these are fewer than five per cent.

Jovan Grbovic, secretary of the headquarters for Serbian emigrants abroad, a cultural organization, described anti-Tito extremists and terrorists as Fascists, some of whom collaborated with Hitler and Mussolini during World War II. "They are making a business of extremism and they are not contributing anything to the United States," he said.

A government official said the government attitude toward Tito feeling abroad is that "we are not asking any country curb free speech, but of course we are against illegal terror activity if it is directed against Yugoslav sovereignty." This was a reference to terror bombings of Yugoslav diplomatic missions.

Poll says Milliken leads race

DETROIT (UPI) — Democratic poll show Republican Gov. William G. Milliken 5.2 percentage point ahead of Democratic challenger Sander Levin. But Levin's supporters feel confident he will carry enough of the undecided vote to win the election.

Milliken got 45.6 per cent of the vote and Levin 40.4 per cent with 14 per cent undecided, according to a survey released Wednesday. It was completed for Levin Sept. 9 by Marketing Strategy, Inc. of Detroit.

The pollsters said the undecided voters were leaning toward Levin because they were voting heavily in favor of the rest of the Democratic ticket and they preferred Levin's stand on six of seven major issues.

The poll predicted the Berkeley State Senator would be elected by a 51 to 49 per cent margin.

AS TALKS RESUME

Berlin changes predicted

BERLIN (AP) — West Berlin's mayor sees this week's resumption of four-power talks as a probable turning point in East-West dialogue over Berlin's future.

"I expect an additional clarification of positions," says Mayor Klaus Schuetz. "I expect that at the latest at the end of this year, we will know if we will get an agreement that is satisfactory and at the same time we will know what such an agreement will look like."

The ambassadors of France, Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States will reconvene Thursday.

The mayor believes the Russians want to see movement in the Berlin question. He cites their desire that West Germany ratify its new Moscow pact as soon as possible. The Bonn government has tied ratification of the agreement to a "satisfactory" easing of conditions in and around Berlin.

In an interview, Schuetz said he felt the surrounding East German Communists had "aligned themselves" with the Soviet position following the signing of the Bonn-Moscow pact.

The mayor conceded that East Germany is in a difficult position because of its sharply formulated past policies directed at West Germany. But he said: "It would be foolish to believe there is a steep divide between East Berlin and Moscow. I have the impression that a decision has been made."

He listed what the West is seeking:

1. Access: that entry and exit of persons and goods be unhindered by land as it already is in the air. "Land" means canals, roads and by rail.
2. That West Berliners again have access to East Berlin through the Communist Wall and access to East Germany proper. The West Berliners, Schuetz emphasized, are discriminated against when East Berlin and the German Democratic Republic bar them.
3. West Berlin's relationship to West Germany on the economic, legal, financial and cultural levels be accepted by the Communist side as part of the Berlin realities of today.

GUERRILLAS SAY

Arab truce called failure

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Jordanian army launched artillery and ground attacks Wednesday against two guerrilla-held towns in Northern Jordan in violation of the latest truce, the Palestine guerrillas charged.

The three-man Arab truce committee in Amman, the Jordanian capital, sent Arab observers to investigate. The two cities are Irbid, 50 miles north of Amman and the scene of violent fighting in the 11-day civil war, and Ramtha, 10 miles to the east.

In the United Nations, the United States appealed to Israel and Egypt to resume the stalled Middle East peace talks.

The Palestine guerrilla charge, broadcast over Camasus radio, said "the roar of explosions can be clearly heard from the Syrian border." Ramtha is only five miles from the frontier.

"The Jordanian military regime exploited the current state of deep grief which has gripped the entire Arab world over President Nasser's death to stage the new attack on Irbid and Ramtha to implement its plan of liquidating the Palestinian resistance movement," the guerrilla statement said.

It called the bombardment "an open violation of the Cairo agreement" reached Sunday between King Hussein and guerrilla leader Yasser Arafat to stop the civil war.

A guerrilla communique described the ground attack as massive. It said the ground forces struck after a day-long artillery bombardment of Irbid and Ramtha.

The communique said the main target of the ground attack was the old fort of Ramtha. Guerrillas there "put up a heroic defense using rockets and antitank guns," it added.

Elsewhere in the Middle East, kings and world leaders gathered in Cairo for the funeral

Thursday of Gamal Abdel Nasser.

People throughout the Arab world continued to mourn his death, which occurred Monday of a heart attack.

In some instances violence flared. Arab mourners in the occupied Gaza Strip threw a burning tire at an Israeli army vehicle and shouted "God is greater than Israel" when Israeli troops fired over their head.

The Arabs marched through Gaza waving black flags and chanting: "God is great. Take Nasser to paradise."

In Beirut, the Lebanese capital, shooting broke out when parading mourners tried to stop cars in the street, but no one was hurt. Cars with portraits of Nasser toured the capital.

After the Palestinian truce-violation charge was broadcast in Damascus, Amman radio broadcast a statement from Brig. Ahmed Abdul Majid Hilmi, the Egyptian commander of the Arab cease-fire observation force in Jordan, ordering the army and the guerrillas alike to cooperate with the mission to the two northern towns.

Hilmi said the mission was accompanied by Jordanian army officers, a measure apparently designed to prevent army forces from firing at the missions' convoy.

Other Arab truce officers began making the rounds of Amman, rounding up guerrillas and taking them to base on the outskirts.

The three-man Arab truce committee, headed by Premier Bahi Ladgham of Tunisia announced Tuesday a two-phase plan for the restoration of peace. It calls for the withdrawal from Amman of both the army and the guerrillas.

Milliken chides opponent

By JEFF SHELER
State News Staff Writer

Gov. William G. Milliken took a job at his Democratic opponent, State Sen. Sander M. Levin, Wednesday, accusing him of fence riding until Levin said he opposes a proposed antiparochial amendment to the State Constitution.

"I'm glad Sen. Levin's long silence has been broken on this matter," Milliken said at his weekly news conference. "After all, you can't play leader while you're sitting on the fence."

In a statement earlier this week, Levin said he would not support the proposed Amendment C which will appear on the statewide ballot in November. Milliken voiced his opposition to the proposal last week.

Controversy over the amendment proposal, which would ban public funds from nonpublic schools, picked up steam last week when John W. Porter, acting superintendent of public instruction, released an analysis of the "potential results" of the amendment should it be passed.

Porter said the law could be interpreted to prohibit funds for auxiliary services in including fire and police protection and sanitation services to nonpublic schools.

Later Wednesday, Levin responded to Milliken's remark and charged that the governor was "grasping at straws" in his morning statement.

"It would appear that my Republican opponent has been stung by the charge, now heard more and more often in Michigan, that weak leadership from the Romney-Milliken administration brought us to the brink of crisis, not only in education but in the areas of drug control, crime and unemployment," Levin said.

Levin asserted his position against parochialism "has been totally consistent" since he has supported auxiliary services to private schools while opposing "direct grants."

Levin called for a "formal statement of opinion" from Atty. Gen. Frank Kelley to determine what the effects of the amendment would be if it becomes law.

Milliken said the exact effects of the amendment would not be known for certain "until the courts make the final determination."

"Regrettably, this determination will not come unless there is an affirmative vote on the amendment itself," the governor said.

He said Porter's letter "presumably" speaks for Kelley, since "his (Kelley's) deputy participated directly in drafting that letter."

On the UAW strike against General Motors Corp., Milliken said an increase to 9 per cent unemployment in the state could be expected by the year end if settlement is not reached soon.

"If the strike ends soon we can expect about 5 per cent unemployment at the end of the quarter," he said.

Earlier, Milliken met with Virginia H. Knauer, President Nixon's special assistant for consumer affairs, and Charles Harmon, who the Governor appointed Wednesday as his special assistant for consumer affairs.

"Our meeting today underscores the need for action on the part of all levels of government — federal, state and local — to respond to citizen demands for greater attention to consumer protection," Milliken said.

RADICAL-LIBERAL

Agnew rebukes Goodell

MINOT, N.D. (AP) — Vice President Spiro T. Agnew said Wednesday he would have to include Sen. Charles E. Goodell, R-N.Y., in "that radical-liberal coalition that has been obstructing the President's program since 1968." He said he would not support Goodell for re-election.

And in New York, Goodell attacked Agnew, saying he was "deeply disappointed in Agnew's public statements about the presidential commission's report on campus unrest."

In a television interview taped for showing Wednesday night in several North Dakota cities, Agnew said: "Sen. Goodell has left his party. He has not supported this administration on the key measures."

Asked if this meant he might support Conservative James Buckley, in the November election the vice president said, "You can't make that assumption. I merely say that my support for Sen. Goodell is a moot question because he already rejected the support of the administration and suggested we stay out of his state. I'm merely saying I'm not supporting Sen. Goodell."

At Palm Springs, Calif., Sept. 12, Agnew declined to specify that Goodell was one of his "radical-liberal" targets, but said, "I probably will make some judgment about that particular senator somewhere along the campaign trail."

Goodell also faces Rep. Richard L. Ottinger, D-N.Y., in the senatorial election.

In response to Agnew's statement that he would not support Goodell for reelection, the senator said in New York:

"I am confident that the people of New York State will not allow Spiro Agnew to pull the lever for them in November."

Although the vice president said he was not announcing his support of Buckley, Ottinger declared: "This is an internal Republican party matter. It is not surprising that Mr. Buckley would be Mr. Agnew's choice."

Converted 'S' linebackers ready for big test

Mike Hogan

By JEFF ELLIOTT
State News Sports Writer

Three former Spartan linebackers converted to defensive linemen this year will face one of their toughest challenges of the season Saturday when they confront a big and powerful Notre Dame offensive line.

Seniors Mike Hogan and Tom Barnum and junior Dan Kulikowski were all used as linebackers last year, with Hogan a starter, and Barnum seeing action in all ten Spartan games in '69. But injuries to six defensive linemen during spring and fall practices, Coach Duffy Daugherty was forced to do some quick shuffling of personnel.

"I'll bet we're the only team in the country that has lost six defensive linemen after just one game," Daugherty recently said. "We needed some big men who could handle an offensive tackle. All three players, Hogan, Kulikowski and Barnum, have strength and speed — two needed characteristics of a good lineman. Now they'll just have to mature in their new positions — but in a hurry."

Barnum actually started spring practice as a lineman due to a surplus of Spartan linebackers. One of the stronger players on the know I'll need both this Saturday, but I think we're gonna surprise a few people — wait and see."

Hogan has been a two-year starter for the Spartans, playing 207 minutes his sophomore season and 221 last year. The Kettering, Ohio native ranked second on the team in tackles last year with 82 to run his career total to 114. Hogan suffered a knee injury last spring which required surgery, but he's at full strength this fall.

"I don't feel my knee has slowed me any," Hogan said. "In fact I feel a little quicker this year. Speed can really be a valuable asset to a lineman. That's where Washington killed us the first game. They weren't very big but they were real quick."

"Actually playing in the line is almost like playing linebacker with the exception you're in a three point stance and you don't have to worry about pass coverage — just the pass rush. I'm still a little unsure of myself in certain situations, like what kind of pass rush to use and how to shed a blocker. But Coach Perles has helped me and the other former linebackers a lot."

Spartan coaches were waiting for this season to see a healthy Kulikowski. Last year the 6-1, 215 pound junior was slowed by an injury and sophomore inexperience. But this year is another story as the Muskegon native has come on strong after being hampered by an ankle injury a week before the season opener. While he was used as a down lineman last week, Kulikowski will see action both on the line and as a linebacker against the Irish.

"When I'm playing on the line my biggest problem is staying low," he said. "I'm used to playing a linebacker post where you're always standing up. When I try to rush the passer that way, it gives the offensive man a better shot at me."

Kulikowski, who is called Kuku by his teammates because he gets so emotional and excited while on the field, has put on 15-20 pounds over the past two years, a weight which will come in handy Saturday.

"We've seen films of Notre Dame's offensive line and they're big and quick," he said. "You know a lot of these guys were on the freshman team when we were freshmen. We beat them then and I think we're gonna beat 'em again Saturday."

You can bet that the three converted linebackers will be doing their share to see that statement come true.

REASONS VARY

ND, Cougars, Illini lose number 2 QB's

It was a bad day for No. 2 quarterbacks as three teams, including MSU's opponents for this Saturday and from last weekend, saw their second string signal callers quit the squad.

Bill Etter, Notre Dame's No. 2 quarterback has resigned from the football team and given up his football career on the advice of team physicians, Coach Ara Parseghian said.

Etter, a junior from Spokane, Wash., was hospitalized two weeks ago with severe headaches. Doctors indicated a contact sport could develop a head injury from the condition Etter has had for some time, a Notre Dame spokesman said.

"Bill was given extensive tests in the past two weeks and the results indicate that he should give up football or any other contact sport," Parseghian said. "The doctors anticipate no problems but Bill will drop out of school until January and stay with his brother in Arizona."

Etter will be replaced at the No. 2 signal calling slot by sophomore Pat Steenberge.

Washington State quarterback Jack Wigmore has quit the team to concentrate on his pre-dental studies.

Wigmore, who had been battling soph Ty Paine for the starting berth, dropped his bombshell on Coach Jim Sweeney prior to Tuesday's practice.

Wigmore was the starting quarterback last year until the seventh game when he injured a knee and had to undergo surgery.

He had hit 10 of 28 passes for 171 yards this season.

Illinois Coach Jim Valek said that Steve Livas, last season's regular quarterback, has quit the football team because he has been relegated to substitute status.

Livas, a junior from the Chicago area, told Valek he made his decision to quit the team after last Saturday's game in which sophomore Mike Wells played the entire four quarters in the loss to Tulane.

Livas started as quarterback in Illinois' first game, a victory over Oregon, but was removed in favor of Wells who scored three touchdowns and was named the UPI's Midwest Back of the Week.

Valek said he was unable to persuade Livas to remain on the team. George Samojedny, a defensive tackle and also a junior, also quit the team because he was dropped from a first string player to a substitute, Valek said.

Strike for umpires? more money wanted

NEW YORK (UPI) — Major League umpires may hold a sit-down strike before the playoffs begin unless their salary request for handling the Championship series and the World Series are increased.

The umpires, who receive $2,500 per man for covering the playoffs last year and $8,500 for covering the World Series, are seeking an increase to $5,000 and $10,000 respectively. Unless they get it, they have hinted that they will strike.

"We intend asking for $5,000 and $10,000," said Augie Donatelli, a veteran of 20 National League campaigns. "We believe they owe us that much. We have always accepted their terms and we have always come up short. We intend to go a little further this time and we hope they're a little more generous."

Donatelli, who avoided use of the word "strike," said the leagues had made an offer to increase umpires' salaries for both post-season events but Donatelli said the offer was inadequate. "They sit still. The original (please turn to page 13)

Spartans to hijack
Irish air patrol?

Somewhere in this land of ours the sun is shining brightly; somewhere hearts are gay and somewhere children shout, but there is no joy in East Lansing, 'cause Ara's horde is comin' to town.

The noble "experts" who have so "wisely" tabbed Michigan as a solid underdog to Notre Dame Saturday might do well to remember the last time the big Irish machine descended on Spartan Stadium, back in 1968.

That day, the score read 21-17, with the higher number staring at the STATE side of the scoreboard. Not likely to happen again! Not after Notre Dame's 48-0 shellacking of Purdue. Not after eight Spartan fumbles last Saturday. Not with Joe Theismann (call him Thees-man, like it was meant to be) returning to Tom Gatewood and making a mockery out of the MSU defense.

Not, Not. As Spiro would say, "nabobs of negativism." This year's team may or may not be as good or as bad as Duffy's was or wasn't (how's that for double meaning?), but the remains that MSU can win any game on its schedule. (Can = the ability to). Whether the Spartans will win any more games remains to be seen. Quarterback Mike Rasmussen said after the game last Saturday that MSU is a better team than it looked against Washington State.

One would certainly hope so. A win over Notre Dame is always a win; it means nothing but prestige in the short run, but in the long run it might mean a recruit whose instincts say "Go to MSU" and whose dreams say "Go to Nowhere Deem." And it might mean a certain amount of sunshine this early October in East Lansing, because Woody and his boys'll surely want to play in blood the next week.

As for looking ahead, the Spartans don't have to, unless it's to the Northwestern game, the Spartans' annual breather at the end.

Booters chase national rankings

The soccer team opens its season Friday afternoon at the field south of Spartan Stadium. Payton Fuller, a one-time All-America here under Gene Kenney, has taken over from his former mentor and hopes to push the MSU squad past Cleveland State, which nudged the Spartans out of the NCAA tournament last year.

The booters never draw big crowds, and that's really too bad, because the 1969 record of 7-2-1 was the worst ever fashioned by a Kenney-coached team. The Spartans aren't ranked nationally this year for the first time in a number of campaigns. A Friday could push them that much closer, at least on the wings sheet, to old nemesis St. Louis.

The MSU cross country team opens Saturday at Indiana, and the Spartans will have a tough road to hoe, er, course to run. At the rate, Indiana, MSU, Illinois and Minnesota should all be in the sport this time around, and a win over the Hoosiers would be a big boost to the harriers.

Long distance buffs in East Lansing will have to wait till the following week to see the Spartans on their Forest Akers course, when MSU hosts Ohio State in a prelude to the grid battle with the Bucks.

Spartan athletes are seeing some new faces this fall in the training room areas of the stadium and Jenison. Aiding head coach Gayle Robinson and assistant Jerry Kimbrough are two new grads, Dan Kinsey and Don Kiger. Kinsey performed on the MSU gymnastics team a couple years back. New team physician for the football squad is Dr. Lawrence Jarrett.

Umpires

was a bag of peanuts and association turned it down," Donatelli said.

Donatelli, a member of the National League Umpires Board, would not officially affirm that the umpires were planning a walkout if their demands were not met, but the indication was there.

"We haven't made any statements to that effect," said Donatelli, referring to the possibility of a strike. "But you can read between the lines."

With the playoffs scheduled to begin Saturday, the threat of a strike by the umpires has caused some concern among major league officials. It was learned that several minor league umpires had been approached by the respective leagues to act as strike breakers.

Cheerleaders
meet tonight

There will be an open clinic and tryout for all students interested in cheerleading tonight from 7:30-9:30 in the Sports Arena of the Men's IM Building. Everyone must come dressed for activity.

Other clinic-tryout set-ups are scheduled for October 6, 8, 13 and 15.

Fuller injures knee;
to undergo surgery

MSU's soccer team received bad news Tuesday when it was learned that first year Coach Payton Fuller will require knee surgery following an injury sustained Monday afternoon.

For Fuller the setback came at a very inopportune time. The season opens Friday and Fuller had optimistically looked forward to this fall's campaign. News of the necessary operation, however, has only meant frustration and disappointment for Fuller and the Spartan booters.

The injury occurred in a practice session with the goalies after regular drills for the day were completed. Fuller kicked balls at his goalkeepers and in the process twisted his right knee, the same knee he had problems with when he was a Spartan great a few years ago. The damaged cartilage will be operated on Saturday morning.

Fuller, who is on crutches, is planning to coach Friday's encounter with Cleveland State and be back for next week's games. Assistant Coach Trevor Harris will direct the squad during practices in the absence of Fuller.

The starting time for the Cleveland State contest has been changed from 1:30 p.m. to 3 p.m., Friday.

By JOHN VIGES
State News Sports Writer

Every year public relations men, sports writer, radio and TV broadcasters and even the run of the mill fan finds within himself the urge to fasten a label to something as abstract as a football season.

If it's not the "year of the running back," it's the "year of the blue shirted wonders." For reasons best explained by a quick glance at college rosters that list Archie Manning, Rex Kern, Joe Theismann...ad infinitum, 1970 has been termed "the year of the quarterback."

But, ask any quarterback (MSU's Bill Triplett for instance) and he will tell you that he is only as good as his receivers.

Saturday, one of the standouts of the "year of the quarterback" Notre Dame's Theismann, invades Spartan Stadium. But the ace Irish hurler will be the first to admit that much of his success depends upon the sure hands and quick feet of his top receiver, Tom Gatewood.

Only a junior, Gatewood has become the perfect compliment of Theismann. A Baltimore, Md. product, Gatewood has caught enough passes, all from Theismann, to rank sixth among Irish receivers. Two more completions will move him to fifth on the all-time list.

Gatewood's play has almost always been as flashy as the golden helmet he wears. His speed, moves, quick hands and ability to run after a reception have been favorably compared with those of former Purdue great Leroy Keyes.

Like Keyes, Gatewood lines up in various positions, ranging from split end through tight end and flanker back, keeping the defense loose and unable to concentrate on just a few pass patterns.

"We have used Tom at all of these positions and he has done an excellent job at each," Notre Dame Coach Ara Parseghian said recently. "Generally we have him at the split end spot but playing him at different positions throughout the game makes our offense much more mobile."

The Theismann to Gatewood combination easily rivals the famed Hanratty to Seymour team although it has yet to gain as much attention.

Last season Theismann completed 152 passes and 47 of them, nearly a third, went to Gatewood. Gatewood accounted for 855 yards and nine touchdowns and once in back to back games caught 19 passes for 319 yards.

Gatewood has not let up the pace as a junior. After two games he is leading the nation in pass receptions with a 9.5 average per game. His 19 catches have been good for 303 yards and three touchdowns.

Theismann is well aware of the help he gets from his 6-2, 235 pound converted halfback.

"Tom is a fantastic receiver," says Theismann. "He just seems to float through the secondary and he has the uncanny ability to adjust his patterns with one quick step. Every quarterback should have a target like Tom to throw to."

"Last year it took us a few games to establish the proper communication that a quarterback and receiver must have," Gatewood counters, "but Joe's ability to scramble gives me extra time to find openings when my routes are blocked!"

The communication gap that Gatewood referred to worked itself out in Notre Dame's third game last year. The Irish faced an undefeated team but by the end of the afternoon their opponent, MSU, was well on the way to a dismal season.

The Spartans were blistered by Notre Dame's powerful air attack as both Theismann and Gatewood had field days. Gatewood was playing only his third varsity game that day but he caught 10 of Theismann's 20 completions for 155 yards.

Gatewood prepared for this year's MSU game with an outstanding performance against Purdue. Twelve passes fell into his hands as he scored three TDs.

Rose confident of Cincinnati victory in National playoffs

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Queried about the upcoming playoff series with the Pittsburgh Pirates, Pete Rose had just one comment: "We're ready for them."

Rose, the Cincinnati Reds team captain, isn't worried about the apparent slump the Western Division champs went into in the second half of the season.

"Our pitching troubles have slowed us down during the second half of the season," the two-time National League batting champ said. "We've had some unfortunate injuries to our pitchers but they can't be helped."

Rose pointed out that the three top pitchers — Jim Merritt, Wayne Simpson and Jim McGlothlin — all turned up with ailments and injuries while each was throwing at his best in mid-season.

"We were 25 games over .500 early in the season when everyone was healthy," he stated, "but in the second half of the season, despite the loss of pitching, we still won the games when we had to."

"I'm convinced that if all our pitchers had been healthy for the entire season we would have done 115 games and sewed up the division title much earlier than we did," Rose commented.

Looking at the five-game playoff series with Pittsburgh, Rose sees Jim Merritt's ability to throw as the only unanswered question now that Simpson is definitely out and McGlothlin is back.

"Jim Merritt is a big question mark right now," he said. "If he's healthy it will make a big difference."

Merritt is 20-12 on the season but has not worked for any length of time since injuries to his arm several weeks ago. Gary Nolan has picked up much of the slack in the pitching chores and now is 18-7.

Asked about the batting slumps of some of the power hitters in the Reds lineup, such as Lee May and Tony Perez, Rose pointed to mental letdowns.

"I think slumps are much more mental than physical," he said. "One pitch hit poorly at the wrong time can put a hitter into a slump because he starts to think about it."

"And," he continued, "one pitch hit well at a crucial time can just as easily bring a batter out of a slump."

Pete stated that he was well satisfied with his season personally, as well he should be in view of his over 200 hits, the fifth year he was accomplished the feat since joining the Reds in 1963.

"I think I hit with more authority this year than any time before," he said. "And anytime you get over 200 hits and score over 100 runs you can't complain."

Without bragging, "Pistol Pete" pointed out that "I lead the team in every hitting department except home runs and RBI's."

Those two categories are pretty well locked up by another well-known member of the Reds squad, catcher Johnny Bench.

"I wouldn't mind hitting about 25 home runs a season," Pete said, "but I wouldn't sacrifice 30 points on my average for it."

"I'm the team captain and I'm the leadoff hitter," he said. "My job is to get on base so Bench or Perez or May can bring me home."

"When I do my job well it makes their job easier," he added.

Pete had only one observation on the playoff series which was inaugurated last year.

"I like the playoffs but I also think it's possible that a team could be the best ever in baseball and still lose in the playoffs," he said.

Pete Rose is accustomed to winning, as he has done since his days at Western Hills High School here.

He considers the Reds one of the best teams ever in baseball and says he isn't worried about their chances in the playoffs.

"We're ready to play," he stated emphatically, "just like we have all season."

Harrah's Tahoe racebook Wednesday listed the Reds and Baltimore Orioles as the favorites for this weekend's major league baseball playoffs.

The racebook made the Reds 10-13 favorites to beat the Pirates in the National League Playoff and the Orioles 2-3 favorites to beat the Minnesota Twins in the American League playoff.

In man to man betting, if you like the Reds you risk $13 to win $10 and if you prefer the Orioles you risk $3 to win $2.

Tough defense

EDGE CLEVELAND, 4-3

Tigers nail down fourth place record evened at 1-1 as five walks got him into trouble. Three of them came in the first inning after Jim Northrup doubled with two out. Lamont then followed with his single.

The Tigers scored what proved to be their decisive run in the eighth off reliever Steve Mingori on a walk, an error and El Maddox' double.

Cleveland chased Reed in the ninth when with one out Vada Pinson and Duke Sims unloaded back to back homers. It was Pinson's 24th and Sims' 23rd of the year.

Tom Timmerman came in in relief of Reed and gave up one more run before getting Buddy Bradford on a hard line drive to center to end the contest.

Detroit has now won only four of its last 21 and has gone from 15 to 29 games behind Baltimore in a faster-than-the-Titanic sinking. Detroit must win its final game of the season or the Tigers will finish with their worst record since 1960.

But the suspense isn't whether or not the Tigers are going to clinch fourth place or not — it's whether General Manager Jim

Campbell is going to announce Friday that Billy Martin has signed to manage the team in place of Mayo Smith or whether he'll wait until later to formalize it.

Bears awe Lions — at least on film

DETROIT (UPI) — The Detroit Lions went to the movies Tuesday and saw a few new things — and a lot that were painfully familiar.

The Lions viewed films of the Chicago Bears' first two games of the season — both victories. Detroit hosts Chicago next Monday night in a nationally televised game.

"They're a much-improved team and they're aggressive on defense — as always," Head Coach Joe Schmidt said.

Defensive coach Bill McPeak was equally impressed.

"We've got a lot of respect for the Bears," he said. "They play the same kind of game they've always played — very physical."

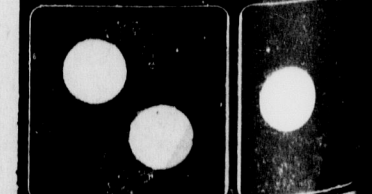

Both McPeak and line coach Chuck Knox were awed by the performance of the Bears' middle linebacker, Dick Butkus, who played in last Sunday's game against the Philadelphia Eagles despite a leg injury.

Knox said Butkus "put a great blitz on" late in the game and then wondered aloud, "How badly can he be hurt?"

McPeak put in that Butkus hit one player in Chicago's game with the New York Giants "and nearly broke him in half."

The Bears and Lions will match identical 2-0 records in Monday night's tilt. The Bears are off to their best start since 1963, the last time they won their first two games of the regular season and the last year in which they shared a championship.

BY LEVIN

Renewal, reform sought

By ROBERTA SMITH
State News Staff Writer

Democratic gubernatorial hopeful Sander Levin Wednesday urged a standing - room - only audience to meet the challenge of the '70s by recreating the spirit of the '60s. He addressed an audience of at least 300 in Wells Hall, and told the audience, predominately student: "The student population isn't apathetic. You've proven that." Discussing the state's unemployment rate, Levin viewed the situation as "going nowhere fast."

"It's time to get this state and country moving again," he said. "In this state we should develop vocational and technical education programs so that we can fill the many open positions with trained workers." Remove the faceless leadership and rekindle the faith in government, Levin urged. Most people know society not only can do better but must do better, he said. "I hope this improvement will come about with your help. We must march together to give the state the vigorous leadership it needs to face the 1970's."

because he is registered with a different draft board which has not reached his number. Selective Service has placed a ceiling of No. 195 nationwide this year, meaning the more than 4,000 local boards may not call men with higher numbers.

But below that ceiling the boards have reached widely varying upper numbers. Some have not yet called numbers higher than 170, a draft spokesman said. A few are even lower.

Thus, a number such as 180 could mean extended liability for a man whose draft board has reached 180, but not for a man whose board only reached 179.

The new regulations, contained in an executive order signed last Saturday by President Nixon, also clarified the induction of men who have reached age 26. They may be inducted, the order said, only if their draft liability extends to age 35 and if the induction order is issued before the 26th birthday.

Later in a question - answer session, Levin voiced opposition to an indefinite shutdown of the University in the event that another "Cambodia situation" arises. "But universities ought to set their policies so that there is every opportunity for free expression," he said. Levin said he hoped college students really believed passage of the 18 - year - old vote matters. It's been discussed so long, people are probably of the seven - mile procession. The remainder of the distance to the suburban mosque where Nasser will be buried in a palm - shaded garden will be a "people's procession" of thousands of Egyptians.

There were some notable absentees. President Nixon's decision not to attend was no surprise since Egypt has had no formal diplomatic relations with the United States since Nasser alleged American intervention on Israel's side in the 1967 war.

More unexpected was the absence of President Tito of Yugoslavia, who long was regarded as one of Nasser's closest friends, and Prime Minister Indira Ghandi of India who shared Nasser's claim to leadership of the so - called third world.

Tito was receiving Nixon in Belgrade and apparently was more interested in that than making a gesture of respect to Nasser's memory.

Also absent was Morocco's King Hassan, who boycotted the week - long Summit conference on the Jordan crisis which led to Nasser's fatal heart attack Monday.

Nasser's body lay in state in ex - King Farouk's former palace on the outskirts of the city. Many buildings were draped in black and portraits of Nasser appeared on walls, cars, on skeptical that it won't matter at all if it allows young people to vote, he said.

"I'm positive you have a greater intensity of concern with the world about you than was true of my generation," he said. "And I'm sure you won't vote like your parents; in fact, I'm in favor of it because I know you won't vote like your parents."

If civilian control can be safeguarded, elimination of the draft and selective service system would be a good step, Levin said.

"However I do not believe it's moral for a society to draft some and send them to war never to return and at the same time grant a blanket reprieve for those who don't go," Levin said.

It is one problem that can't be discussed intelligently until the war is over, he continued. Perhaps cases could be judged on an individual basis.

Police were forced to cordon off Nasser's home in suburban Heliopolis. His widow and five children in seclusion there, visited by Kossygin.

The funeral procession will begin at the old revolutionary headquarters on the Nile River, and will end with the burial at Manshiet el Bakry Mosque, not far from Nasser's home. A gun carriage carrying Nasser's coffin will be escorted by 40 Egyptian generals and a detachment of 5,000 troops. Acting President Anwar Sadat and the other top members of the Egyptian leadership will proceed the foreign dignitaries marching behind the coffin.

That class requirements other than attendance be waived during the period specified. The proposal would allow students to participate in the election process, but would not require the University to interrupt its normal functions or cancel class work, Kruch said. The policy wouldn't interfere with the rights of students who want to attend class, but would offer an option for students who want to campaign for a candidate, he added.

Petitioning for the office of cabinet president will begin today and continue until October 14. The election of a new cabinet president will take place at the ASMSU board meeting October 20.

candidate, he added. Petitioning for the office of cabinet president will begin today and continue until October 14. The election of a new cabinet president will take place at the ASMSU board meeting October 20.

The other odor

No feminine spray can stop it.

The "other" odor. It starts in the vaginal tract where no spray can work. You can't spray it away. And it's more offensive than external odor caused by perspiration. That's the reason you need Norforms - the second deodorant. These tiny suppositories kill germs - stop odor in the vaginal tract for hours. Something no spray can do. And doctor-tested Norforms can be used as often as necessary. They insert easily, quickly. Get Norforms protection for the "other" odor no spray can stop.
