Canada, Red China agree to establish diplomatic ties

OTTAWA (AP) — Canada and Red China agreed Tuesday to establish diplomatic relations at once and to exchange ambassadors within six months. Ottawa broke relations with Nationalist China.

Nationalist China, with headquarters on Formosa, announcing it in turn had severed relations with Ottawa, and declared Canada had ignored "its friendship of long standing with the government of the Republic of China."

Yu - chu Hsueh, Nationalist ambassador to Canada, left Ottawa by plane for New York, saying he was distressed by Canada's decision.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman expressed concern that the agreement between Canada and Communist China would have adverse effects on the international position of Nationalist China.

Canada's action came just 20 years after Britain took a similar course. But Britain and Red China never have exchanged ambassadors, allowing their embassies to be headed by secondary diplomats.

Forty - six nations now recognize Red China and 67 have relations with the Nationalist government. The United States recognizes the Nationalists of President Chiang Kai - shek and opposed Canada's move to begin the talks with Peking in Stockholm in January 1969. The White House in Washington would only say Canada and the United States had discussed the question for some time.

U.S. officials said the decision in part reflected the easing of Peking's relations with the West. They added that this was an important development but would not change U.S. policy on China.

Canada refused to accept Red China's demand that it recognize a territorial claim to Formosa in 20 months of negotiating in Stockholm. The Chinese call the Nationalist island Taiwan.

Announcing recognition, Foreign Secretary Mitchell Sharp told the House of Commons that Canada does not consider it appropriate either to endorse or challenge Peking's position on Formosa.

Peking, in announcing the diplomatic agreement, said: "The Chinese government reaffirms that Taiwan is an inalienable part of the territory of the People's Republic of China. The Canadian government takes note of this position of the Chinese government."

Sharp agreed with this, adding: "We are

Dean Bain quits post to return to teaching

By STEVE WATERBURY
State News Staff Writer

Jack M. Bain, dean of the College of Communication Arts, said Tuesday he is resigning as dean in order to return to full-time teaching.

Bain asked Provost John E. Cantlon to relieve him of his duties as dean of the college as soon as it is "convenient and possible to find a replacement."

In accordance with Bain's request, Provost Cantlon proposed the selection of a "broadly representative committee to help facilitate the search for a new dean."

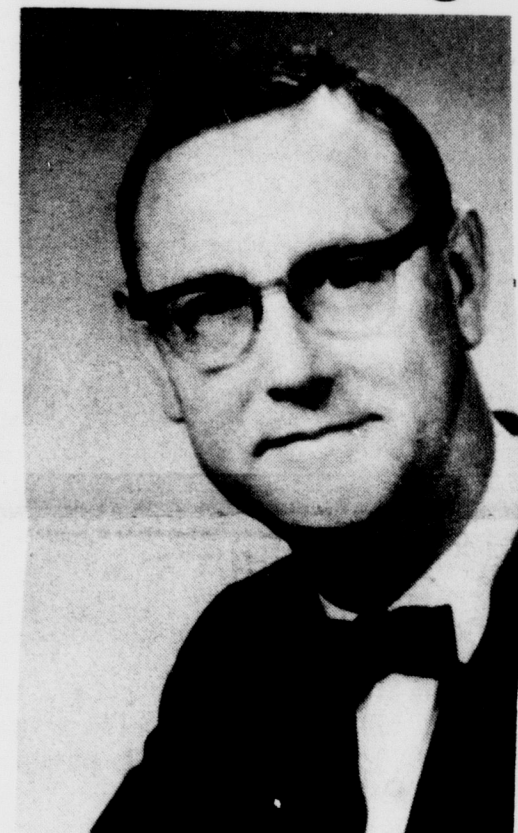

Cantlon said Tuesday he will ask William Rintelmann, professor of audiology and chairman of the College Advisory Council "to serve as the person responsible for coordinating the procedures for the selection of the search committee."

The committee is requested to establish criteria for selection, develop a system for full communication with the faculty and recommend a slate of two to five acceptable candidates.

The provost said one graduate student and one undergraduate student will be elected by their peers in the college to serve as members of the committee.

"The College of Communication Arts faculty should conduct an all - college election to determine four non - administrative members of the search committee with the understanding that no two members of the committee should come from the same department," Cantlon said.

The Dept. of Theater, scheduled to be transferred to the College of Arts and Letters Jan. 1, will not participate in the selection process.

JACK BAIN

Bain, who is a professor of communication, said he would like to concentrate on teaching at the undergraduate level. He has continued to teach a 200 level course in persuasion while serving as dean.

Bain came to MSU in 1954, and has served as dean of the College of Communication Arts since 1967.

Nursing college benefits told

By JOHN BORGER
State News Staff Writer

The proposed College of Nursing would develop greater community involvement and graduate programs, asserts the nursing faculty petition for college status.

The petition, being considered by Robert Schuetz, acting director of the Institute of Biology and Medicine, also calls for a larger role played by the nursing staff in community affairs, in areas including sex education and drug usage programs in elementary and secondary schools and the College of Education.

"What we're really looking at are the objectives of the school, and we're asking what is the best route to reach those objectives," Schuetz said Tuesday. "If it can be best done by having nursing as a college, then that should be done; if it can be done better or just as well as a school, then that should be done. There are advantages each way."

If nursing does become a college, Schuetz said it would be "at least initially linked" with the Institute of Biology and Medicine for maximum efficiency. The institute coordinates all University health programs.

To some degree, the institute represents the sort of clustering of colleges which Provost John Cantlon has said would be needed if colleges become too numerous.

"With a cluster like this, it's easier to grasp the larger problems than with every major division reporting to one person," Schuetz said. "This helps the total program. The administration should help the students' education, not warp it to conform to a rigid administrative pattern."

The petition proposes a graduate program in research in nursing, evaluation of nursing practice, teaching of nursing, nursing administration and/or geriatric nursing. These areas would avoid overlapping with the two other graduate nursing programs in Michigan, the petition says.

The petition says the proposed College of Nursing would also:

- Establish pilot units in the community health agencies to demonstrate different methods or approaches to the administration of nursing care.
- Become a coordinating center for state-wide continuing education in nursing.
- Establish preventive health centers in the community.

Reasons stated in the faculty petition for the School of Nursing to become a college stress funding and prestige. They include:

- "A professional program must be regarded as unique, and not an extension of another educational unit." The School of Nursing is currently part of the College of Natural Science.
- College status would aid in the recruitment of qualified faculty, as well as a replacement for resigning director Gwendolyn MacDonald.
- "Since the School of Nursing is primarily composed of women, the status of being a College of Nursing would increase the stature and influence of women on campus and in the community."
- As a college, nursing would be "in a position to bargain for greater financial assistance from the University, enabling us to increase our student enrollment and clinical facilities considerably, thus enabling us to better meet the needs of the community" would "merit funds for additional skilled faculty," would be "more likely to receive grants and funds from various agencies."

• College status would open channels of communication with the administration and the rest of the University. "As a small school, we are rarely elected to University committees and, consequently, our voice is never heard."

Schuetz said a shift to college status would "not necessarily" mean a higher budget allocation for the nursing program.

Senate rejects report by smut commission

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate heard the report of the Commission on Obscenity and Pornography denounced Tuesday as a repulsive example of "marshmallow - leached thinking," then voted overwhelmingly to reject all its major findings.

The 60 - 5 vote for a resolution condemning the report came moments after its chief sponsor, Sen. John L. McClellan, D-Ark., declared:

"I fear that if we allow and encourage the flow of obscene material, there will be no stopping these sex offenders. This filth is simulating to them, they feed on it and the commission would guarantee that they have their fill."

Milliken hints at negotiation

Gov. Milliken told newsmen Wednesday that he is considering intervening into the United Auto Workers strike against General Motors.

"The strike is moving into its second month now and is increasingly going to take its toll in the state," Milliken said. "It is costing the state badly needed resource dollars."

Milliken said he was thinking of intervening without taking sides. Although he would not elaborate on how he might intervene, Milliken said he intended to "creakily point out the public's interest to GM and the UAW."

In their findings, 15 of the 18 - member commission said there is no evidence that exposure to pornography is a significant cause of crime or leads to immoral or unnatural sex acts.

They recommended that "federal, state and local legislation prohibiting the sale, exhibition or distribution of sexual materials to consenting adults should be repealed."

The resolution, which expresses the sense of the Senate but has no legal force, follows closely a letter signed by 34 Republican senators urging President Nixon to "disavow" the commission's findings.

McClellan and a number of other senators said the commission wasted three years and $2 million in producing a final report they said consisted of "a series of unsupported or flimsily documented opinions resting largely on a philosophy of permissiveness."

"I do not think that the Senate should allow this report -- which would substitute hedonism for morality -- to stand unchallenged," McClellan said.

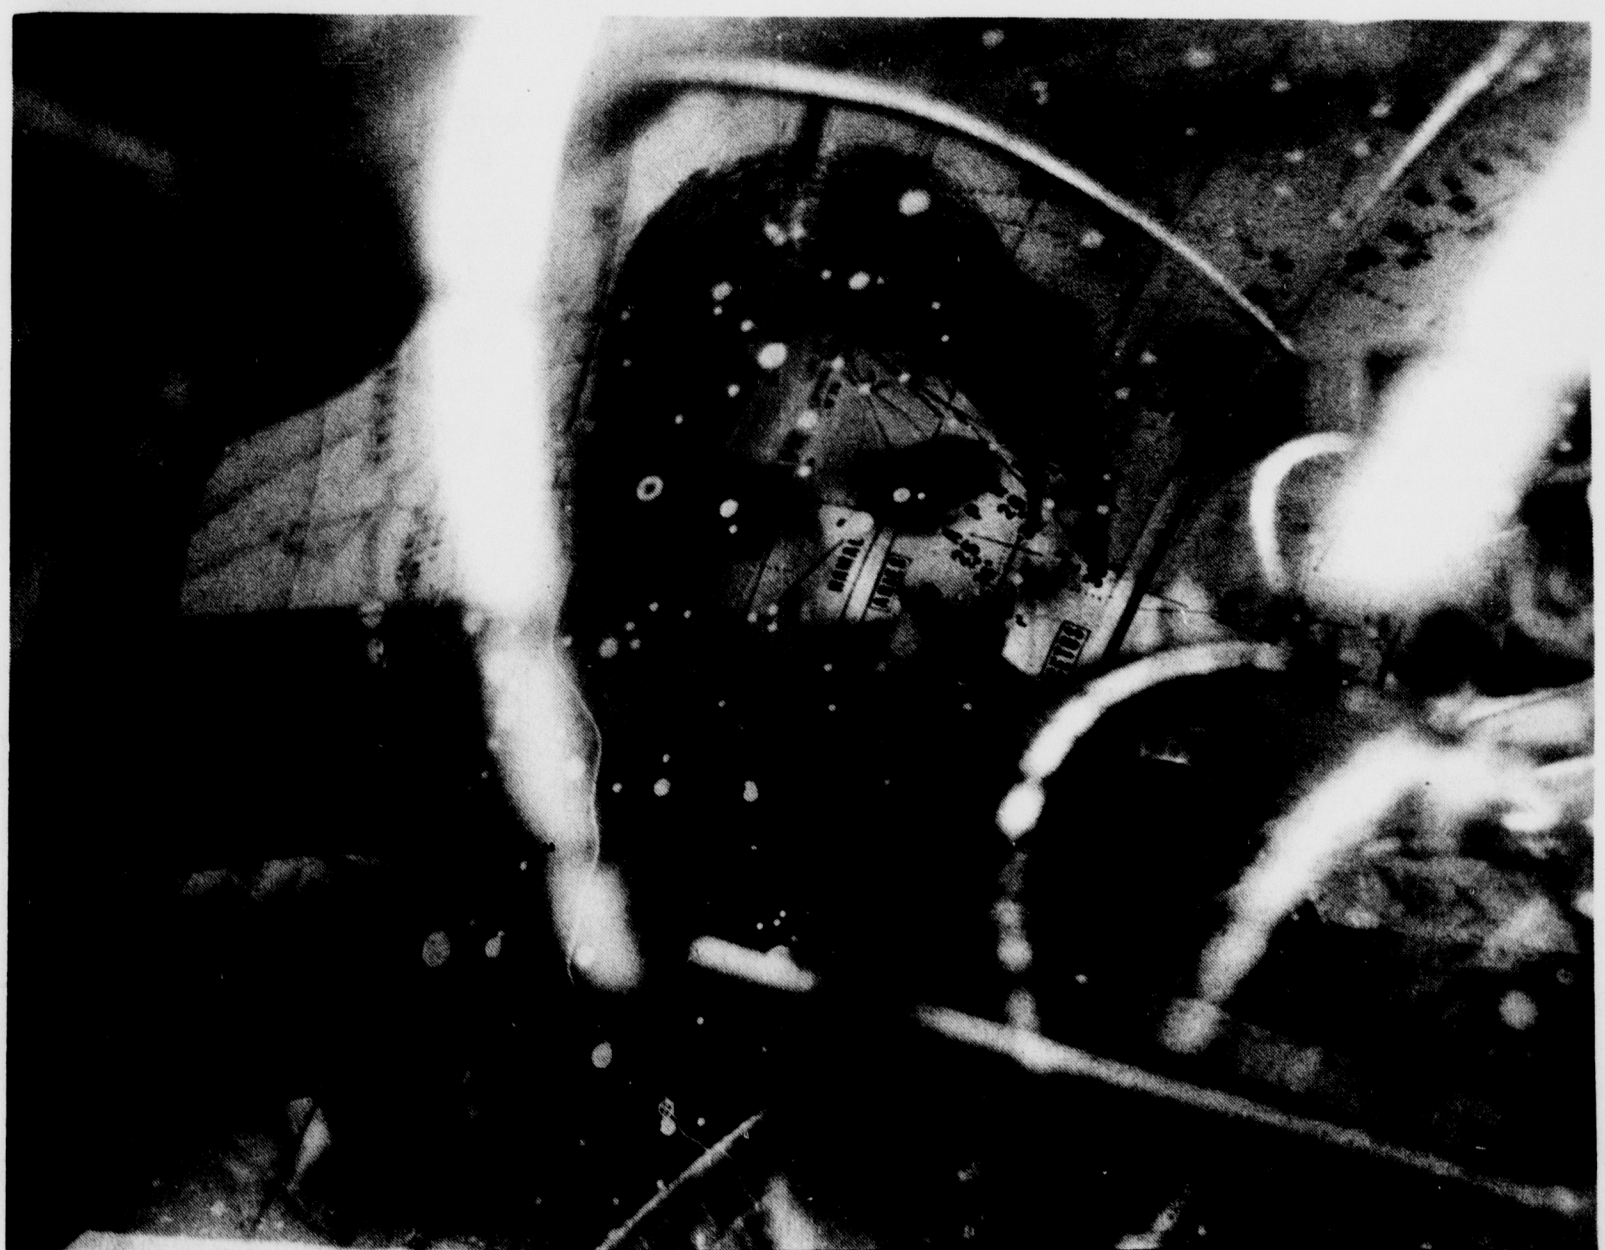

Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., added: "The report gives the impression that the majority of the commission have essentially given up on human nature and are prepared to accept a very cynical view of any inherent good in the human soul."

Sen. Gordon Allott, R-Colo., said he was particularly incensed at what he termed pseudoscientific testing financed by the commission involving measuring the reaction of young men exposed to pornographic material.

It declared also the sense of the Senate that the commission failed to carry out the mandate of Congress in reaching its conclusions.

'U' discontent exists, Cantlon tells faculty

By DAVE PERSON
State News Staff Writer

Provost John E. Cantlon said Tuesday many people in the academic community have an "anti-university feeling."

"Many students tell us they are disenchanted with us," Cantlon said. He addressed the first fall luncheon of the Faculty Club, where he forecasted the coming year in the academic community.

Cantlon said "an element of disenchantment" exists between the University staff, alumni, prospective members of the board of trustees and groups such as the Detroit Geographical Expedition (DGEI) which staged a rally in front of the Administration Bldg. Monday.

He predicted that this year would bring "more of the same" and he blamed this, in part, on the size of the current MSU budget.

He said the University expects to maintain forward momentum in the area of human medicine, osteopathic medicine and scientific development.

However, he said, many projects which are still in the "dream stage" will probably have to remain there for at least another year. The proposed law school is one such project. At best, he said, we will have enough money for planning.

Other "dream projects" which will have to wait are the proposed all-events bldg. and fine arts center.

"This doesn't mean we can't have forward momentum in these areas," Cantlon said.

Cantlon said MSU has stabilized its enrollment, and freshman enrollment next year will be cut 1000 students to the figure it was for the 1969-70 school year. He said that President Wharton's commission on admissions is working on "shaking out" enrollment problems.

A problem of the administration, according to the provost, is what is to be done in the area of disadvantaged students, as well as those who have special advantages.

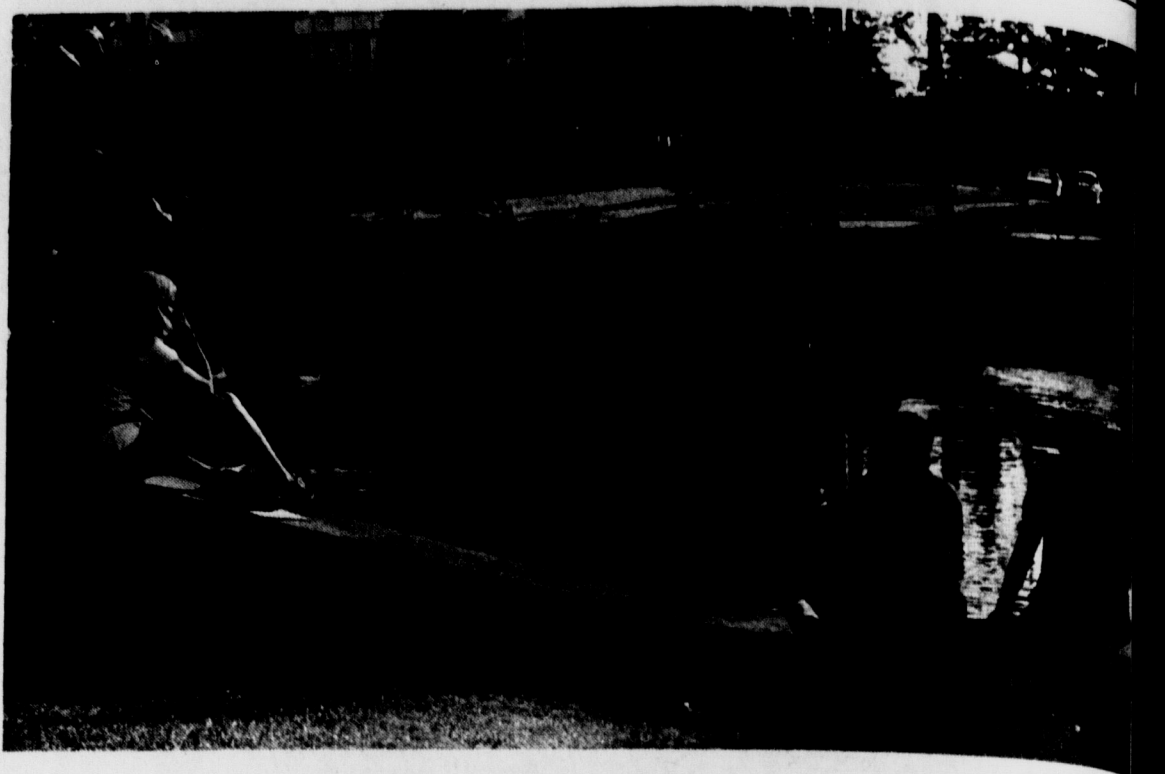

He said considerable pressure last year to break away from the image of "elitism" at MSU derived from the enrollment of many National Merit Scholarship students. However, he added, the University is continuing to upgrade the excellence of the institution. Cantlon mentioned the difficulty which departments and colleges have in weeding out their least effective programs so that funds may be allocated toward more beneficial programs.

He explained that the flexibility of the University with such problems is a little more constrained than it would be in a factory.

"At any given moment," Cantlon said, "We could get into difficulties."

He used as examples difficulties which could arise from unsatisfied National Merit Scholarship students, heavy faculty loads and student housing. Cantlon added that even a "high-handed provost" could create problems.

In regard to student housing, he said student groups often get in a hurry and mistake time spent on planning for administrative indifference.

The Quebec Cabinet met Tuesday to discuss its negotiations with the Quebec Liberation Front (FLQ) for the release of a kidnapped British diplomat and the provincial labor minister. There were indications the kidnappers were taking a tough stand.

Robert Lemieux, an attorney for various members of the front - or FLQ - declared he had instructions only that the kidnappers' demands be met.

Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau told the House of Commons in Ottawa he endorsed the action of Premier Robert Bourassa of Quebec, who got the talks going by publicly asking the kidnappers to set up "a mechanism of negotiations."

Trudeau said the only thing to be done was to "insure through negotiations that there be a mechanism established" for the release of James Richard Cross, British trade representative in Montreal kidnapped Oct. 5, and Pierre Laporte, Quebec labor minister abducted at gunpoint five days later.

The Saigon government plans soon to offer the Viet Cong a new basis for a political settlement in South Vietnam, American sources reported Tuesday night in London.

Details of the proposals being prepared by the government of president Nguyen Van Thieu were not disclosed. But in general their aim, according to the sources, will be to reinforce President Nixon's peace initiative.

It was Thieu personally, the informants said, who urged the Nixon administration last July to put forward its plan for a cease-fire in place.

The House passed Tuesday a compromise, three-year farm bill which, for the first time, would impose a $55,000 ceiling on subsidy payments to cotton, wheat and feed grains producers.

"There will be no further payments for failing to grow crops," Chairman W. R. Poage, D-Tex., of the House Agriculture Committee told colleagues.

The House, by a vote of 190 to 146 sent the bill to the Senate where it was uncertain whether the measure would be considered before Congress leaves Wednesday for a month-long election recess.

A top Army general said Tuesday a large international force "with military muscle" may be required to police any negotiated settlement in the Middle East.

Lt. Gen. Richard G. Stilwell, the Army's deputy chief for operations, spoke before the Association of the U.S. Army, saying:

"Realistically, the longstanding emotionally deep hostility which lies at the root of the Arab-Israeli conflict may dictate some type of international presence in the Mideast to assure compliance with the provisions of any negotiated settlement."

Interior Secretary Walter Hickel says government installations will improve their sewage treatment sufficiently by 1972 that the processed waste will be clean enough to swim in.

Hickel told a news conference at the San Francisco International Airport late Monday that federal agencies, including the military, have been instructed to provide secondary treatment for sewage.

"This will not provide drinkable water, but it will be swimmable," Hickel said. "It's a step toward tertiary treatment which will produce water you can drink."

Two members of the White Panther Party pleaded guilty Tuesday to charges of harboring fugitive Lawrence (Pun) Plamondon, 24, defense minister of the party, while he was on the FBI's "10 most wanted list."

The two, Milton E. Taube, 23, Ann Arbor, and John W. Forrest, 21, Warren, were arrested with Plamondon near St. Ignace July 24 when the car in which they were riding was stopped after someone tossed out a beer can.

President Nixon's veto of a bill which would have limited campaign expenditures brought sharp criticism Tuesday from two Democratic candidates for statewide office.

In separate statements, Sander Levin, candidate for governor, and Richard Austin, candidate for secretary of state, urged Sen. Robert P. Griffin, R-Mich., to vote to override the President's veto.

State News Staff Writer

ANN ARBOR -- A representative of the National Chicano Moratorium described events Monday night leading up to and after the August 29 Los Angeles Chicano Moratorium, at which newsmen Ruben Salazar was killed.

"Most people not living in L.A. don't even know what happened in L.A. on August 29," Gilberto Cano told approximately 50 Chicanos and non-Chicanos at the Michigan Union.

"The press has been completely repressed into not printing what actually did happen at Laguna Park and the unprovoked death of Ruben," Cano said.

Ruben Salazar, news director of KMEX (Channel 34), a Spanish language station, was one of two persons killed during the riot in East Los Angeles. He was a veteran reporter for the Los Angeles Times and an award-winning columnist who, for the past year and a half, had been covering news concerning Chicanos.

His most recent coverage had been interpreting the significance of the Chicano Movement, Cesar Chavez's farmworkers' plight and the role of bilingual education.

Cano said that the reason for creating a National Chicano Moratorium is to "bring the war home." "Ten million Chicanos of the United States are being screwed daily by the Anglo," he said.

One one hand, the Chicano is drafted and sent to Vietnam to fight for "democracy," a thing that he does not even have here in the United States, he said. On the other hand, the Chicano is being ignored by the institutionally racist college antiwar movement.

"The college middle class students realize that killing is immoral, a realization that is keeping the white man out of the war," Cano said. "But for every white that stays out - a Chicano, a black or poor white is being drafted and killed in Vietnam."

The Chicano Moratorium is set up on a family-type basis, having no funding or salaries of any kind, supplying only food for its workers. The rest of the money goes into a bail fund for the more than 520 people arrested August 29.

In May the moratorium's leaders met with the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Dept. to discuss plans for August 29. The moratorium was planned as a non-violent demonstration, an almost family-style outing, at which children, old ladies and invalids could participate in a calm mood with no fear of any possible rioting, Cano said.

The moratorium's marshals and workers had made it a point that there would be no internal squabbles or petty disorders by spreading the word throughout the Chicano community that no weapons should be brought, he said.

"But the police did bring weapons," Cano said.

"We never thought that they would attack 40,000 Chicano families," Cano said.

Negotiations with the police had required the moratorium leaders to present a march route and an operational plan of the day for scrutiny by the police, and the police in turn would reveal their 15-page operational plan, but, Cano said, "they never showed it to us and we never met with three liaison men who were to use for communication purposes."

The march started at 11:30 a.m. at Belvedere Park, went from 3rd Street to Atlantic, south to Whittier Boulevard, west on Whittier Boulevard, terminating at Lugana Park where speeches and music would wrap up the day's activities.

Along the march route, many merchants offered free refreshments to thirsty marchers. This may have created the illusion to the marchers that all merchants were giving away beer or pop.

Many Chicanos went into a liquor store, the only one open in the area, according to Cano, to buy, not steal, beer and soda.

The East Los Angeles Sheriff's station said the owner called for their assistance in calming the customers coming into his store.

The owner denies having called the station, Cano said.

"Although the police said there would be no more than 300 police to direct traffic, we were completely surrounded by police stations all located conveniently around East L.A.," Cano continued.

According to information received by the moratorium leaders, $1.3 billion was spent in overtime pay for law enforcement for that one day.

Justice Black blasts busing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Justice Hugo L. Black, long time foe of racial discrimination, lashed out Tuesday at those he said would "try to change the lives of the people around the country" by busing children far from their neighborhoods to attain school desegregation.

The 84-year-old Alabamian told a tense Supreme Court hearing room he approves of the practice and tradition of neighborhood schools and said: "I don't like this trying to condemn a whole way of living."

The justice's startling outburst was directed at James M. Nabrit III, an attorney for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, who argued that the neighborhood schools in Charlotte, N.C., are really "racial schools."

"You want to haul people miles and miles to give them equal percentages in the schools," Black told Nabrit. He asked the black attorney: "How can you rearrange the whole country?"

The court is considering a North Carolina law that prohibits compulsory assignment of students by race to accomplish desegregation as well as the compulsory busing of children to attain racially balanced schools. The court is in the process of examining these and other questions in cases from Charlotte - Mecklenburg County, N.C.; Mobile County, Ala.; and Clarke County, Ga.

Nabrit said the Charlotte board used "chicanery" and every possible means to avoid compliance with the Supreme Court's 1954 decision that the racially separate public schools are unconstitutional. He said that while attorneys for Charlotte, and for the government as well, speak in favor of neighborhood schools, "this neighborhood school concept is really a fiction."

Nabrit said schools are built and zones arranged not for the children's convenience especially but to provide as much segregation as possible.

Black, following the argument closely as he rocked gently in a tall leather chair, told Nabrit that "from the first case, I am interested in plain discrimination on account of race. We should correct that. But it disturbs me to hear you suggest we should try to change the lives of people around the country."

Several times Nabrit said what he was advocating simply was compliance with the 1954 Supreme Court decision and the elimination of all - black schools wherever they exist in the South.

The North Carolina law was defended by Andrew A. Vanore Jr., an assistant attorney general of the state. He said it is not an antibusing law but an anti-discrimination law in that it seeks to prohibit the assignment or exclusion of students to and from schools on the basis of race.

Vanore said the neighborhood school plan is "the only realistic plan that will work for the North and the South." He added: "The only real approach is to allow a child to attend the school nearest his home."

Whiteford S. Blakeney, attorney for a group of parents in Charlotte who object to compulsory busing, said: "We oppose the compulsion that we go away from the natural geographic zone, away from the child's home."

The state law was declared invalid by a three-judge federal court in Charlotte.

Milliken introduces crime control plan

By ROBERTA SMITH
State News Staff Writer

Gov. Milliken introduced Tuesday a new, nine-part integrated crime control system including provisions for a Civil Disorder Center aimed at preventing violent outbreaks in schools, colleges and cities.

In his weekly news conference, Milliken said Michigan and local governments must do more to "wage a common assault on a common enemy."

While the governor called his program an "attack on crime," he said that essential constitutional guarantees should be preserved.

"We must do it in such a way as to avoid a wave of repression or denial of individual liberties," he said.

The governor also made proposals in areas of juvenile delinquency, corrections, the state police, drug abuse, organized crime and public corruption, local police assistance, judicial reform and criminal justice programs.

If re-elected, Milliken said he intends to assign his running mate, James H. Brickley, as chairman of the Michigan Commission of Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice, popularly known as the Crime Commission. Brickley was formerly a FBI agent, a chief assistant Wayne County prosecutor and U.S. attorney. He would coordinate the effort among various levels of government.

Of the Civil Disorder Center, Milliken said, "the Center will attempt to prevent disorders by good intelligence efforts. If disorders do occur through the coordination of programs, agencies would be able to respond in the most effective, responsible way," he said.

Milliken noted that Att. Gen. John Mitchell's plan for FBI infiltration on campuses would only be a supplement to the Center.

"The threat of bombings and guerrilla warfare (on the campus) is greater than ever before. Never in this country have we found this violent possibility," the governor said.

Att. Gen. Frank Kelly, Tuesday, in Grand Rapids, said "today's crime crisis represents an internal threat with effects that can be devastating as was the external threat that endangered our nation in the 1940s."

Kelley urged Republicans, Democrats and Independents to join and "fight this kind of menace."

Some of Milliken's proposals included:

- Changes in criminal procedure laws "to strengthen the hand of prosecutors."

- Experimental development of modern techniques such as video tape for speeding up the judicial process and expediting appeal reviews.

- Reorganization of the state's youth agencies to place greater emphasis on community-based treatment and prevention programs.

- An increase in police-school liaison programs and development of new efforts to prevent violence and crime in schools.

- Participation in the National Bomb Data Center and provision of specially-trained officers to deal with the criminal use of explosive devices.

- Supplying local police with sophisticated equipment for sniper detection, night vision, bomb detection and video-tape surveillance.

- Specialized training for local police in such areas as intelligence gathering and mass arrests.

- Expansion of local-state-federal programs to halt the illegal flow of drugs.

AS LEADERS ARRIVES

U.N. security measures tighten

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — With striking guards back on the job, the United Nations rounded out preparations Tuesday for the biggest gathering of world leaders in the organization's 25-year history.

Canadian Foreign Secretary Mitchell Sharp, whose country joined the ranks of those recognizing Communist China, will be the first speaker at the 10-day commemorative session opening Wednesday.

Strict security precautions were imposed as all 230 U.N. guards returned to work after a one-day undeclared strike by about a third of force. They sought more pay and improved promotion procedures.

At Tuesday's session the General Assembly admitted the Pacific Island country of Fiji as the 127th U.N. member country. The U.N. began a quarter century ago with 51 members.

Col. Harold A. Trimble, the Canadian chief of U.N. security said precautions will be greater than in 1960 when Premier Nikita Khrushchev of the Soviet Union and President Dwight D. Eisenhower were among those attending the General Assembly.

More than 40 heads of state or government, and around 100 ministers of cabinet rank will take part in the commemorative session. There has been apprehension that the current wave of political kidnappings might be directed at one of more of the visiting U.N. dignitaries. Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko was the highest ranking official in the Soviet delegation. The absence of Premier Alexei N. Kosygin and President Georges Pompidou of France dimmed the summit aspect of the celebration.

President Nixon and British Prime Minister Edward Heath will address the assembly Oct. 23.

U.S. Secretary of State William P. Rogers was expected to open up a round of informal talks with the visiting foreign ministers in New York Friday.

He will meet at least twice with Gromyko for a private review of U.S.-Soviet relations, admittedly at a new low point in the wake of the unresolved Middle East situation.

The chief U.N. delegates of the Big Four met for about two hours Tuesday, but announced no progress in their long quest for an Arab-Israeli peace formula.

The Canadian foreign minister is opening the commemorative round of speeches in the place of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, who canceled plans to attend the session.

Bitterness heightens in the DGEI debate

Tempers are beginning to flare and bitterness heightening in the present crisis facing the Detroit Geographical Expedition and Institute (DGEI). Presently, bitterness is being directed not only at the MSU administration in general but at several black administrators as well.

DGEI, a community - controlled educational project allowing blacks from the inner-city in Detroit to take MSU classes, was begun last year with funds from the Center for Urban Affairs (CUA). As the experiment continued, additional CUA funds were supplied and the number of students, courses and volunteer instructors increased.

The reason for distress among those in DGEI is the current reluctance of MSU administrators to increase the funds needed for an expanded program.

Originally U - M subsidized the experiment, but MSU now is the only major college or university in the state to fund the program. The major objections lodged by MSU administrators are (1) there is simply no money at MSU to supply DGEI with more funds and (2) the experiment was expanded "without any formal University approval."

MSU says although DGEI is a fine program and should be given as much financial aid as possible, it is still only one experimental program of many at MSU and DGEI would be wiser to seek aid from other sources.

CUA provided $20,000 this year for DGEI. Last year CUA supplied $21,000 plus an additional $28,000 as the experiment expanded. However, the $20,000 given this year will probably not be supplemented, causing DGEI to turn away students who expected enrollment in the program.

It might be monetarily beneficial for those in DGEI to make contacts with the legislature as well as other Michigan colleges and universities. For instance, there is no reason why Wayne State University, located in Detroit and serving many in the inner-city, should not help subsidize DGEI.

While DGEI continues its efforts to educate many black high school drop-outs, students and welfare mothers, MSU should make a major concomitant effort to reevaluate its academic direction and program emphasis. For too long the University has continued extensive fiscal support for agricultural extension programs while remaining hesitant to follow the state which has become urbanized.

The MSU administration does not recognize DGEI as anything more than an experimental program, and hence feels justified in the minuscule funding it has appropriated. Perhaps DGEI has not progressed beyond the infant stage, but the administration should move to help develop the project into a full - scale operation.

If indeed, MSU has no further funds available, simply chastising DGEI directors for raising "the emotional content of the debate," will do little to resolve the situation. The University could also seek outside funds for the program, either from the legislature or other universities.

Catch 23

Letters may be addressed to Dr. Werner at Olin Health Center. Names need not be included unless a personal reply is requested.

I would like to know if birth control pills could cause any birth defects in an unborn child.

Your question is deceptively simple. I thought of three different possible questions you might be asking, so I'll answer them in an ontogenetic order.

Children born to women who have been on oral contraceptives and then stopped their use in order to become pregnant, do not have a higher incidence of birth defects although a higher frequency of multiple births has occasionally been reported.

If your question is directed at the situation that would exist if a woman conceived while taking oral contraceptives, the answer is more complicated. When correctly taken, the incidence of pregnancy with the oral contraceptives is so low that it would take a very long time to find enough children who started life in such luckless circumstances to draw any conclusions. It is known that high doses of hormones can be damaging to the developing child and can even result in an alteration of sexual characteristics, but it is unlikely that the doses in oral contraceptives are sufficient to do this.

The last question that came to mind was: What would happen if the woman started to take birth control pills not realizing that she was already pregnant. As in the preceding example, this would be a very difficult thing to study as it occurs very rarely and while the chances for damage are small one cannot be sure how small.

The prescribing doctor should always perform a pelvic examination and instruct the woman on the use of the pill. It is usually begun on the 5th day of the menstrual period following a normal menstrual flow. Chances for pregnancy at this time are negligible. Unfortunately, many women start oral contraceptives by bootlegging pills from a friend's prescription without ever seeing a doctor. People who practice medicine on themselves (either with or without a license) are probably foolish enough to take birth control pills after getting pregnant.

My fiancé and I pet very heavily but we have agreed not to have actual intercourse. Is it dangerous for either of us to continually carry through almost to orgasm and break off? What if orgasm is reached?

There is no danger in what you are doing, but unless I misunderstood your letter, the frustration you and your fiancé are experiencing comes through clearly. Petting to climax is a safe and helpful form of sexual expression for people who feel comfortable with it. The couple who has agreed not to have intercourse but who feel comfortable with heavy petting can find that petting to orgasm provides sexual gratification without the risk of pregnancy. Many people find that the intensity of feeling in petting to climax can equal and

Object 'otherness' separates life, self

Half dozing the other night, I sat in a dim corner of an equally dim bar. The half - light, the drone of the bar sounds — people, juke box, glasses clinking — and the possession of certain spirits all contributed to create a condition of acute auditory awareness and, more by accident than intent, I began to tune on the various conversations going on at the surrounding tables.

To my right, two fraternity types: "Jeeze, I dunno why she would act like that — I mean, I just can't figure some people out..."

In front of me, a conclave of freaks: "It's like it's all karma, man. Everything has to do with force and energy..."

"Don't you believe in an underlying reality for the whole cosmos? You know, the ancient Hindu idea of Brahma?"

"No man, it's all flux and no substance..."

On the other side of the hips, three secretary / Sally Sorority types:

"Well I was brought up a Catholic, but honestly, I just couldn't relate to it. You know what I mean? Well..."

Taken singly these conversations have no particular significance, but when viewed together a surprising common denominator emerges. All these people in their various ways were asking, coping with, handling about the supreme question of life: "Why?"

It seems, in fact, that if there is any single attribute common to all intelligent life as we know it, it is than thinking beings are uncomfortable with the state of being alive. They cannot leave it alone — they must worry with it, dissect it, examine it — but seldom, if ever, relate to it, get into it.

A dog, a plant, a sea urchin does not ask the fundamental question "Why is life?" The "lower creatures" take the state of being alive as given. To them it is such an absolute postulate of existence that the thought of questioning it or even of conceptualizing the need for a question never occurs to them.

This is an important point. The answering of the question of life is of secondary relevance. The singular fact that there was the original necessity for the formulation of the query is profound.

In asking a question about something, we are immediately transforming that something into an object so that we can focus our attention on it. The thing must then be other than us, for if it were the same, it would be part of our subjective totality and, hence, unquestioned and unquestionable. As soon as something becomes an object it becomes separated by an immeasurable gap from us.

At first glance what we seem to have here is an irreconcilable paradox. As with many enigmas, however, it rests its quality of circular confusion on a shadow base. The initial object / subject separation of life from the living man is actually false and only apparently true.

Life cannot be separated from itself. That thing which is being discussed as a thing apart is, in fact, apart: It is words and concepts about life and not the actual essence of life itself. It is only man spinning a veil of objective otherness to shield his eyes mind / being from the ultimate realization of his own living being.

When we talk about life we do not have to think (no, not think exactly, but there is no "word" in "English" that connotes the state of ultimate, essential, elemental realization and consideration about life.

It is said that man hides behind the object subject curtain because to shed it and gaze upon the true light of universal sameness that is life would be to forsake the ghost world of day and night, joy and sadness, good and bad and so on. And man feels that he has a vested interest in the status quo.

Or maybe he's just afraid.

Terminate the corporate tax

Vice President Spiro Agnew has said that the present Republican administration will safeguard free enterprise in America. If so, I hope Agnew stays out of the act, for I can only interpret his words as a friend to power and an enemy to freedom. It is nice to have some people as enemies instead of friends.

There is no defensible capitalist ethic. Suppression and massive accumulations of power are bad under any system. The defensible ethic is freedom. (No defensible socialist ethic either).

The ethic that Agnew is defending is the right of the national administration to perform as it will without criticism from the media or the young effete snobs... while he defends the goodness of powerful corporations and powerful universities, declaring the injustice of black demands for 10 per cent instead of 2 per cent enrollment at the University of Michigan.

The only enemy of free enterprise worse than Agnew is our federal income tax system.

Big corporations are growing bigger, and bigger ones becoming conglomerates, not because of efficiencies of scale, but because the federal tax structure makes it mandatory for enlightened corporate management to plow earnings into limitless expansion.

Most corporations are still paying dividends, though companies like Litton have never paid one, and Litton has expanded all the way from inertial guidance systems into operating Job Corps centers and the food service industry.

Corporate earnings are twice taxed. First to the corporation; then if distributed as dividends, taxed again to the shareholder. For the shareholder in a 30 per cent tax bracket, 70 cents of his dividend dollar is available to him (after tax) for reinvestment. If the corporation hadn't paid the dividend, it has the whole dollar for investment in the shareholder's behalf. Left in the corporation, the shareholder has a full $1 working for him to generate new earnings. Taken out, he has 70 cents for an alternative investment.

Obviously, enlightened corporate management retains a large part of corporate earnings for reinvestment and expansion; firms like Litton retain it all. The better business schools of the nation teach that no dividends or low dividends represent proper corporate policy; more and more corporations are following.

Excessive accumulations of either political or economic power are not in the interest of the people.

Yet, corporate giantism is not, as most would have it, the result of corporate megalomania, but a rational response to federal tax policy.

It is pretty common to blame the ills of our society, or some of them, on corporate giantism. But it makes no sense at all to advocate that corporate management should keep the corporation small in the interest of the public good, when to do so is directly contrary to the best interests of the shareholders.

The effect of this tax policy does not a little damage; it does a vast amount of damage. Certainly this tax policy has played a major role in creating the corporate giantism that is the industry half of the military - industrial complex. And, certainly this tax policy has contributed in a major way to the impersonalization of the corporation.

The remedy is to end the corporate tax and report the corporate earnings on the shareholder's tax return, whether paid to the shareholder or not.

If the shareholders had to pay tax on the earnings, the shareholders would want the money... and corporate management would have to go to the open market for funds for expansion.

The result would be a very different economic climate in the U.S. ... and a very much better one.

It would not only stop unwarranted corporate growth, it would undoubtedly also mean the break - up of many of the present giants.

The socialist solution argues, in effect, for an ideological acceptance of giant accumulations of power... but that power is supposed to be benevolent when controlled by the state. In other words, monopoly is bad, cure it with the super monopoly of the state.

The socialist rationale and Agnew's rationale each admire power — their brand — and each argues that their brand of super - power is benevolent to the people.

Besides trying to control and regulate corporate giantism — and besides talk of socializing it — another solution is to correct the bad law that is causing the problem.

America may be at fault for Bolivia's turn to left Turmoil in Bolivia last week made little impression on Americans. In the U.S. the weather and Latin American revolutions have always been treated in the same ho-hum manner.

Such Yanqui attitudes have played no small part in the current abysmal state of American - Latin American relations and may have been a factor in last week's series of revolutions.

Bolivia is a very poor country, much of its industry American. But the Americans are not there for their own health. Bolivia has a great wealth of natural resources and fairly cheap labor. In short, Bolivia is exploited.

Things are changing. Last week's series of governments (three in three days) culminated with a left - wing military regime headed by General Juan Jose Torres. The right wingers were only in control for about a day, brought down by pressure from students, miners and Indians, not to mention the Air Force.

The result is that left wingers will probably have their own way for some time. This means that a great deal of foreign industry may be nationalized and trade with the Communist bloc may commence.

If the United States should lose its trade with Bolivia, it has only itself to blame. Instead of helping Bolivians to help themselves, American industry exercised a policy of exploitation which forced the Bolivians to look toward other directions.

All Americans, North and South, must work together. The people of South America need consumer goods, a new technology — not impressive buildings and out - dated WWII bombers and gunboats. Any really helpful efforts America makes in South America are done on too small a scale. Peruvians, for example, are only fed when they have an earthquake.

Bolivia may now look to the Communist world to give her those things which she really needs. As in the Arab world and Southeast Asia, if Communism comes to be influential in Bolivia, America will only have herself to blame.

OUR READERS' MIND

Solzhenitsyn never captured by Germans

To the Editor:

In last Friday's Michigan State News, Oct. 9, you published a story about the Russian writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn who was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature for 1970. It is stated in the article that he "was captured by the Germans in 1945." As a matter of fact Solzhenitsyn never was a prisoner in Germany. While an artillery captain with the Soviet Army he wrote some critical opinions about Stalin in personal letters to friends, while reflecting on the future of Russia after V-Day, 1945. One of those letters came into the hands of the Soviet anti-spy agency SMERSH, and the highly prized and decorated captain Solzhenitsyn was arrested, sentenced to eight years of hard labor, and sent to Siberia. After Stalin's death in 1953 Solzhenitsyn was released and rehabilitated, and he started a brilliant literary career. However after the fall of Khrushchev new trends of "re-Stalinization" developed in the USSR, and the Communist Party began to attack and smear Stalin's critics all over again. Solzhenitsyn among others became the victim of the new political wind, because by that time he had become one of the most popular critics of "Stalinism," and a courageous fighter for freedom. At this point some Soviet newspapers and Party leaders spread the rumors that Solzhenitsyn had been a prisoner in Germany which, of course, was only a tactic to discredit the writer in the eyes of his numerous admirers inside the Soviet Union. Solzhenitsyn himself vigorously denied any insinuation of his having been outside Russia at any time: "Within my lifetime my feet have known none but the Russian soil," he is known to say. It is regretful that some of our story writers here let themselves be misled by Soviet propaganda.

Group develops awareness

To the Editor:

The article quoting Charles W. Thomas in the October 9 issue of the State News is an example of inadequate and faulty information on his part concerning women's liberation. Contrary to Thomas's assertion, women's liberation is concerned with social realities and the social plight of all persons in our society. Female liberation is an attempt to examine realistically the myths that have enslaved and confined women in their own minds as well as in the minds of others. Men and women are mutually oppressed by a culture and a heritage that mutilates the relationships possible between them.

In contrast to Thomas's statement to the contrary women's liberation is a serious business of liberation and has implications for the total reform of society. The problems that face women are related to the structure of the whole society and will lead us to the realization that we must attempt to change our whole society.

In "Liberation of Women," Laurel Limpus states, "A central problem is that this society has produced an image and a mythology of women that has deprived them of their humanity and creative role in society. The myth that women's natural place is in the home and that naturally she will find the fulfillment of her creativity in bearing and raising children and in submitting to a man is just that: a myth."

My experience is that the small "rap" group concept is effectively aiding area women to become sensitized to the common problems encountered in a male-oriented society and in developing awareness of personal growth potential.

Back Brody 'blob' boosters

To the Editor:

For returning students, the scene is the same: "The Campus in the Park" divided by a filthy river, belching chimneys and rhetoric. Another year, another comic strip — Red Cedar ducks will remain objects of ridicule, the State News will continue to print graphic pictures of campus smoke stacks vomiting at peak capacity during early morn, and everyone will tacitly agree that something must be done — words, like sewage, continue to flow and our action campus remains pusillanimous. The number of students and faculty members who have tried to disrupt and reverse ecological suicide on the MSU campus is, indeed, very unimpressive. New students — you too will soon learn that "pollution is a dirty word" and that the best thing to do is to slowly disappear into a stinking sewer of apathy.

However, if you can disengage yourself from all the slimy words and apathy, there is something you can do. If you're more than simply a sunshine antipollution enthusiast, you can put your body and mind to effective use.

If you are sincerely think that the Red Cedar can be restored to its natural state, and if you prefer to die in a manner other than breathing your last from foul air (assisted by those naughty MSU smokestacks), we need you. Mr. Leonard Stuttmann, ecologist renowned for his effective attempts to halt pollution and increased population, recently spoke in Emmons Hall and expressed a desire to assist campus residents who had a sincere interest in fighting MSU pollution. A few Brody residents are now attempting to form such a group but we need help — from both students and faculty.

Hopefully, this attempt could be expanded into a committee of "Students for Environmental Action" But, again, we need help. We need "give-a-damn" students and faculty members willing to assist as advisers for such a group. If you're interested in helping to organize or advise, call 5-2502 or 5-0607. Perhaps the whole thing is idealistic, but then, when it dawns on you that this little blob of earth is all we've got, isn't anything worth a try?

Mugs, but no books

To the Editor:

Why is it that, term after term, the bookstores in East Lansing are unable to supply students with required texts on time and in sufficient quantity to go around? This occurs even when books are neither late ordered nor new, and when estimates of class size are accurate. I realize the high cultural purpose served by unlimited stocks of sweat shirts and beer mugs, and I am not so radical as to suggest that local stores carry an ample choice of books other than texts. But in a quarter system, the unavailability of texts works a hardship that seems as unnecessary as it is outrageous. The display windows proclaim their welcome to students, yet the working policy seems to be: Students be Damned!

p.m. in the "Captain's Room"
Union. These programs include positions for almost any talent from football to politics.

Registered student organizations must re-register with ASMSU each year and do so by completing the appropriate form. The registration for this year is due Friday, October 23, 1970 and the form for this is available in the Student Activities Division, 101 Student Services. When it is completed, this form should be returned to this office for verification. Organizations which fail to re-register will not be entitled to the privileges accorded registered student organizations. These privileges include events, outside speakers, and revenue producing events, and the use of University services and facilities.

FISHERIES & WILDLIFE CLUB will meet tonight in room 183, Natural Resources Bldg. at 7 p.m. Plans for c canoeing the Pine River will be finalized. Dr. Baker, MSU Museum curator, will be the guest speaker.

TV used to study doctors' diagnostic skills

The doctor's first patient of the day is a trim, pretty roed who woke this morning with a sudden and, to her, a terrifying illness. She is in tears and nearly hysterical.

Or so it seems. Actually the doctor knows that the patient is an actress who has trained for several months to play this particular role. The situation, however, is so realistic that he becomes as engrossed as if he were in his own office with an actual patient.

As the doctor goes about asking questions, performing a physical examination and ordering tests, he is closely observed through a one-way glass by a MSU researcher. Every movement and word that he or the patient makes is recorded by two television cameras.

This and two similar dramatic productions are being recreated weekly here but with a new, top-rated doctor in the lead role each time.

The purpose is to enable a team of MSU researchers to pin down the specific skills and mental processes involved in medical diagnosis at its very best.

"If we can identify the problem-solving skills employed by the master physician, then we should be able to teach these skills to medical students," Dr. Arthur S. Elstein, of MSU's Office of Medical Education Research and Development (OMERAD), said.

Testing for the inquiry project is just getting underway after more than a year of painstaking preparation by Dr. Elstein, the project director; Dr. Hilliard Jason, director of OMERAD; Dr. Lee S. Shulman, Dr. Norman Kagan and other members of the OMERAD faculty. The research is being supported by a National Institutes of Health grant.

After each session, the doctor and an interrogator from the OMERAD staff review the entire tape. As the doctor sees himself in action he is able to relate with remarkable clarity what is going through his mind at each moment.

"When you see yourself," the doctors are told, "when you see your own body movement, when you hear every little tone of voice, you are going to find that it's like taking a microscope, a powerful microscope, and looking at the interview."

"With the stop-start switch, please stop the playback as often as you possibly can, whenever you remember anything that came to mind. We are especially interested in what you were thinking, what you were feeling and what you thought the patient was thinking or feeling, and sometimes what you wanted the patient to think or feel, when that's appropriate."

The regimen for each of the master physicians taking part in the research is carefully controlled so that it is as much as possible like the experiences of other physicians taking part in the test.

The critical difference in each case is the physician himself. MSU researchers will seek to learn the traits and talents common to those physicians who are most successful in diagnosing each case. They will try to define what interviewing skills the physicians employ, what information they seek to learn and how they go about acquiring that information.

Although the physicians are aware that the patients are acting, all who participate agree that the situation seems quite real and they are quickly caught up by the challenge before them.

Each case is solvable if the physician asks the right questions. He can request any laboratory test that he thinks is needed and will be given a written report of the results.

Time is telescoped; the doctor does not have to wait for results of a test, so that each session can take place within a relatively short time. However, no pressure is put on the doctor to complete his diagnosis in the specified time. He is told that he can take as much time as he wishes, because no other patients are waiting.

Participating physicians are nominated by their peers. At Dr. Elstein's request, members of hospital staffs and medical school faculties have named colleagues considered to be superior diagnosticians.

The persons who receive the most votes by this process are invited to the University. Each of the doctors spends two days on the campus. His expenses and a stipend are paid out of the grant.

To prepare for the inquiry project, the researchers first developed three cases which would fit the requirements of the experiments. They then programmed an actor and two actresses to portray the three types of illnesses.

This was followed by a long series of "dry runs" in which various members of the College of Human Medicine faculty, local physicians and visitors to the campus were asked to interview the simulated patients.

After each dry run, the techniques employed, including the camera angles, the interrogation process and the instructions given to each doctor, were carefully reviewed and evaluated and then refined into a set of optimal procedures.

The researchers do not expect immediate results. They plan to continue the experiments over the next year and then to spend another year analyzing the results before they attempt to make a definitive report.

The principal investigators represent a diversity in backgrounds. Dr. Jason is a psychiatrist and holds a doctor of education degree as well. Dr. Elstein is a psychologist. Dr. Shulman is an educational psychologist. Dr. Kagan, also an educational psychologist, developed video playback techniques several years ago as a means of teaching interview techniques to counselors.

Many members of the medical faculty have also taken part in the planning.

FOR PRESIDENCY

Agnew denies ambitions

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — Vice President Spiro T. Agnew has no personal presidential ambitions, he said Tuesday.

He added he has read comments that, if he had such hopes, he might well be killing his chances by pursuing his tough-tongued campaign style and not weaseling on the issues.

Agnew spoke in reply to questions from a television panel, taped for later broadcast on station KDFW.

Asked whether he was coming himself for a presidential try, he said: "My opinion as vice president has not in any way been geared toward personal self-aggrandisement. I do not have any ambitions for the presidency."

Agnew said that, probably as the result of the publicity he and others are giving to the issue of violence, the climate of the country is improving.

"It is obvious that the people who are running for office realize people are fed up," he said.

"People in the other party are in a rapid race to the center," Agnew continued. He added that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., who, he said, once bailed out arrested student dissidents, now is deploring violence.

He said he does not clear his speeches with President Nixon, although he is in close and frequent touch with the President.

On other subjects, Agnew said:

*He has not seen "any rampant sentiment" among Senate Republicans for replacing Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania as their leader. Scott has not always followed the administration line. Agnew said he has endorsed Scott for re-election to the Senate, but the question of leadership is one for the voting members of that body to decide.

'Catch-22'--tough, courageous

By ROBERT KIPPER
State News Reviewer

"Catch-22," which opened throughout most of the country this summer, finally arrives in Lansing today.

By now most viewers have seen it elsewhere or have heard so much about it the chance to see it without preconception seems lost beyond recovery. If you haven't seen it, by all means do. The Mike Nichols' film — that approached an anti-establishment theme in establishment fashion (big budget, stellar cast and reams of press coverage) — has incited such a polarization of opinion since its opening it is worth seeing simply to join the argument.

Some find the film a massive disappointment: a clunky film that says what has already been beaten into redundancy by previous antiwar films; an elliptical film that has condensed the Joseph Heller novel until only skeletal theme and simplified characters remain and an overlong film that makes its points and delivers its message with the subtlety of an earth mover.

They concede, of course, that Heller's rambling narrative presented a prodigious challenge to any filmmaker and that

Nichols can be excused because of his intrepid but, alas, ill-fated efforts.

Others overlook the film's shortcomings because of the daring involved and excuse the slight fragmentation because of its makers' insistence on preserving only the novel's theme rather than developing a purist's attitude toward it entire text. What they see is a courageous film with enough scattered brilliance to place it above many a fully realized but less ambitious film.

"Catch-22" is a film to admire — and defend — for its toughness, its singularity, its biting satire and its bitter tragedy. The film is more serious and reflective than the novel but it is in no way inferior to it.

Just because "Catch-22" was a smashing success as a novel does not mean it cannot be improved or equaled by men daring enough to tamper with it, condense it and rearrange it for its presentation in an entirely different medium.

"Catch-22" is the story of Captain Yossarian, a bombardier reluctantly caught up in the insane process of making war whose sanity makes him a rebel and a menace to the men in command and the men profiting by war. Yossarian dares to take impersonal exploitation personally.

War to majors and colonels means the chance for promotion; to businessmen, the opportunity for enormous profits but to Yossarian it poses simply a personal threat. Strangers are trying to kill him and he is being asked to kill strangers. Yossarian screams and broods, challenges the established madness and eventually escapes it.

Although I could expound on its superb transitions from satire to sombre tones, its fine supporting cast (with Jon Voight as Milo, Art Garfunkel as Natley and Marcel Dali as a shrewd 107-year-old pimp its standouts) and Nichols' pacing and delivery, I prefer to dote on Alan Arkin whose performance as Yossarian gives the film distinction beyond dispute.

Arkin is nothing short of perfection in his embodiment of a rebel who chooses escape rather than seeking to enlighten others as his ultimate form of rebellion. The impatience, the frustration, the disgust and the silent, shrieking horror are all here in his, the definitive and classic antihero.

Unlike the film itself, Arkin is flawless. Unlike most films on the screen today, "Catch-22" has something worthwhile to say about urgent themes. Its observations about individuals in war — threatened, scared and destroyed by it — are worth stating and restating even at the risk of seeming redundant.

Redundancy with an issue when so many remain complacent about it is no weakness. Its insistence that the viewer confront and rethink possibly dormant thoughts is one of the many strengths that render "Catch-22" a flawed but near-great piece of cinematic illumination.

The film begins today what should be a long run at the Lansing Mall theatre.

Center reopens to handle rumors

The Hubbard Information Center, formed last spring during the strike to confirm or deny the many rumors circulating at the time, resumed operations Monday in G-26 Hubbard.

REVOLUTIONARY SPOOF

'1776'—musical with wit, style

In March, 1969, the musical "1776" opened on Broadway to both excellent and poor notices from the critics. It was a time in our history that good feeling for America was low, and this new and innovative musical left few without comment.

The MSU Lecture - Concert Series this year has purchased a Broadway Theater Package which promises "five great nights of entertainment." If "1776," which played in the University Auditorium Monday and Tuesday was in any way indicative of the caliber of entertainment we can expect from the Lecture - Concert Series, MSU and local audiences can look forward to a very good year.

Both the play and the players of "1776" exceeded in both art and artistry what the Lecture - Concert Series delivered last year. "1776" is a glorious presentation of the Continental Congress as it met in Philadelphia to give birth to this nation.

It is a musical with wit, passion and style, and it is often quite amusing. It goes on its own merry way without much regard for the traditional mechanics of musicals. The authors (book by Peter Stone and music and lyrics by Sherman Edwards) have boldly put in songs wherever they saw fit.

Time magazine wrote that

"the musical score might have led Van Gogh to dispose of his remaining ear," but actually the music is both modern and appropriate. Some of the numbers are stirring, including the representative of South Carolina's chilling exposure of Northern hypocrisy in the slave trade, and a soldier's haunting song about war.

Only 12 of the 56 original signers of the Declaration of Independence, along with several members of their delegations, are represented in the musical. The Congress seems farcical at times, and this would perhaps upset some people who take their American history seriously.

Critic Brendan Gill's contention that the authors "have contrived to turn one of the great events of our history into a series of childish romps" is entirely valid. The representative of the state of Virginia, Richard Henry Lee, gallops around the stage like a ninny and seems far more appropriate to "The Beverly Hillsbillies" than to a solemn moment in the birth of the United States.

Thomas Jefferson is portrayed as being so hung-up sexually that he has difficulty writing the Declaration of Independence until John Adams summons Jefferson's wife to Philadelphia. After several hours of sexual pleasure, the Declaration is written in nothing flat.

John Adams, deemed "obnoxious and disliked" by all the members of Congress, is the "agitator" who relentlessly fights and strives to obtain his dream of freedom and independence for the colonies. Ben Franklin, who has the funniest lines in the musical, suffers from gout and is sure that history will be kind to him.

When engaged in the dance routines, some of the delegates appear to prefer being in a barbershop quartet or vaudeville to being where they are, and to many the whole question of independence seemed a colossal hassle and waste of time.

The actors did a commendable job in their various roles, although the actor playing Franklin could have been more physically suited to his role. Don Perkins as John Adams and Patrick Hines as John Dickinson were outstanding as leaders of the opposite factions. Jerry Lanning as Edward Rutledge and Larry Small as the courier for General Washington were in excellent voice. In short, the entire production was highly satisfactory.

Sea island chosen for spring trip

Palma de Mallorca is the destination for the spring break trip package offered by ASMSU.

Mallorca, located 100 miles off the east coast of Spain in the Mediterranean Sea, is probably the most known as the playground of the international jet set and European royalty.

ASMSU's Travel Office is offering MSU students, faculty, staff, alumni and their immediate families, eight days in Mallorca. The price for the trip is $299.

The trip will leave from Detroit March 20 and return March 28.

Included in the price are the round trip transportation, seven nights' accommodations in a first class hotel, three meals a day, sightseeing tours, cocktail parties, and a car for each room's occupants for the entire eight days.

The trip will be loosely structured, so as to give people the chance to explore the scenic and historic sights on the island on their own.

A deposit of $100 is required before Nov. 1, with the remaining money to be paid in installments.

For any further information, contact Pola Sorkin in the ASMSU Travel Office in 327 Student Services Bldg., of call 355-4560 or 353-6062.

James M. Gibbons, former varsity basketball starter for SU, remained in good condition Tuesday in Lansing General Hospital-Osteopathic after a two-car accident Oct. 2, at the corner of Jolly and College roads.

Gibbons suffered a fractured lower jaw in three locations and fractured ribs, Dr. Thomas K. Mieson said. He said it was certain when Gibbons would be released from the hospital.

The accident occurred 6:30 p.m. on Oct. 2 when a northbound car on College Road rolled out from a stop sign and failed to see Gibbons' car approaching, State Police said. Gibbons had played forward and center on the MSU varsity basketball team the past three years.

'Soldier Blue'

Peter Strauss and Candice Bergen play two survivors of a massacre in "Soldier Blue," Ralph Nelson's brutal film based on fact. It is now showing at the Michigan Theatre.

'Blue'--bloody war film

Two bloody massacres and the sloppy gestation of love and respect between a young cavalryman and a woman are high points in an otherwise drab film "Soldier Blue."

Billed as the most savage film in history, the film, now playing at the Michigan Theatre, attempts to achieve that promise in an Indian-dominated massacre at the beginning and a cavalry-dominated slaughter at the end of the film.

Between the arrows, the blood and the decapitated bodies, the story merely muddles on. The viewer watches Honus Gants, the only survivor of the first massacre as he travels with Christa Lee, once an Indian's wife, as the two flee to safety to a frontier fort.

Underlying that is the theme of "My, how awful war is." The first blood-letting is committed by the Indians in their drive for money to purchase weapons for use against the white man.

A paymaster's wagon is ambushed, its cargo of gold secured and all but Gants and Miss Lee killed. She was along for the ride, en route to a fort to be married to another cavalryman.

The bulk of the film's footage is devoted to their trek through hostile territory. As the ex-wife of an Indian warrior, her knowledge of survival techniques goes far in extracting the two from potential sure-death situations.

Respect and love for each other grows during the several days they spend together eating berries and enduring all the other hardships of the frontier. Each, however, remains true to an individual cause: he to the cavalry and she to the Indians.

It is that adversary relationship, mingled with a little humanism, that makes the film more than a shoot 'em up, stock Western.

The final scene should at least suggest to the viewer that war is, indeed, hell, particularly combat that has no logic other than that dictated by stubborn minds. What may be a nonchalant attitude toward the horrors of war, as portrayed in the first slaughter, changes to an attitude of the seeming worthlessness of combat.

Either through intent or carelessness in production, the scenes between Miss Lee, played by Candice Bergen, and Gants, played by Peter Strauss, are hopelessly sloppy and trite. It is difficult to believe that Gants can be so naive and Miss Lee so all-knowing.

Giving producer Joseph E. Levine the benefit of the doubt, it can be imagined that the scenes which seemed to unnatural were however, remains true to an individual cause: he to the cavalry

STORY OF THOREAU

Play relevant but shallow

"The Night Thoreau Spent In Jail" Jerome Lawrence and Robert Lee's newest play, is more like a grade school primer on nonconformity than an effective dramatic presentation of Thoreau's thinking. Most of the time is spent reciting philosophy that has been heard many times before, and although highly relevant in 1970, is nothing new.

The authors, who are known for their past successes ("Inherit the Wind," "Auntie Mame" and "Mame") have centered the action around Thoreau's overnight imprisonment following his refusal to pay his taxes, which supported what he thought was an unjust (and undeclared) war against Mexico. It is Vietnam that the authors have in mind though, and the unspoken references to today's problems are exceedingly obvious. Thus the play is another in the long line of cash-in - on - what's - happening - now productions, which merely restate current problems and add nothing new.

PANORAMA:

Some of the honestly interesting moments in the play are concerned with Thoreau's relationship with Ralph Waldo Emerson. Emerson thinks of Thoreau as his "young conscience." He is a "walking ethic" says Emerson, "who lives what I talk about." At first Thoreau is grateful for being in Emerson's employ, during which he has his experience at Walden Pond. Thoreau, however, gradually begins to despise Emerson's lack of backbone. "What are you doing in jail Henry?" Emerson calls through the bars. "What are you doing out of jail Waldo?" Thoreau replies.

In order to lessen the effect of Broadway, "The Night Thoreau Spent In Jail" is under contract with the American Playwrights Theatre and its members, which comprise the leading American theatre, community and university theatres, and thus member theatres have exclusive rights to the play until May, 1971.

After playing in about 100 theatres across the country, the play will find its way to New York, and thus the country will have a chance to see the play no matter how well it is received on Broadway.

The play is currently playing at Wayne State University's Bonstelle Theatre in Detroit. It is reasonably well acted, with the better performances coming from Lee Smith as Thoreau, Art Beer as Emerson, and David Frank as Thoreau's cellmate.

Tickets may be obtained by calling 313-577-2960, or in person or mail from the Hilberry Theatre, corner of Cass and Hancock in Detroit.

Company to develop safety car

WOLFSBURG, Germany (AP)—A spokesman for Volkswagen, Inc., announced today the company plans to develop a new car in which occupants can survive a 50 mile-an-hour head-on collision without serious injury.

Development will be undertaken, said the spokesman, in close conjunction with U.S. and European authorities. The car will weigh in the area of 2,000 pounds but no other design details were announced.

The spokesman said that it was impossible to say when the new automobile would be ready, but commented that it takes some four years to develop a conventional vehicle. The prototype safety car will be used for experiments and will have safety features that will be incorporated into other models.

He said that the new car would not replace any of the current Volkswagen models.

3 classrooms remodeled by Dept. of Communications

By BARBARA FARY
State News Staff Writer

Three experimental classrooms developed by the Dept. of Communication are making their debut this term at Berkey, Wonders Halls and the Auditorium.

The renovation is part of an experiment headed by David C. Ralph, professor of communication and director of undergraduate education in the department.

The classroom "suites" are designed primarily for communication 100 and 101 students, Ralph said, but will be utilized by other communication classes. Communication 100 is one of the largest classes on campus with 10 sections of 66 students each. Communication 101 has four sections.

"The rooms are designed to facilitate the communication process by making the students feel like inter-relating in a life-like situation," Ralph said. "This is a set-up where teacher and students are not restricted to one kind of teaching by one kind of room."

Ralph said the rooms feature three innovations in classroom settings: sliding partitions, "symbolic" tables, and flip charts.

The partitions can be pulled out to divide the room into two groups of 33 students, one group of 66, or 6 groups of 11.

"The entire class can work together, in two sections led by instructors, or in small student-led groups. Individual students can also use the room to do their own thing," Ralph said.

The "suites" are furnished with contour chairs and "symbolic" tables, Ralph's name for the small tables that give writing space without a classroom appearance.

The classes make extensive use of closed-circuit TV, piped into all three suites. The rooms in Berkey Hall are carpeted.

"You'll notice the rooms have no blackboards," Ralph said. "This is to make the room resemble a classroom as little as possible. Instead, we use portable flip-charts. If one group wants to share an idea with another, all they have to do is rip it off and send it over."

Furniture costs for all three "suites" totaled $6,673. Most of the construction work was done in Berkey Hall, where three small rooms were combined into one, at a cost of $8,295. Work in the Auditorium cost $3,282. The rooms in Wonders Hall did not need extensive remodeling.

"This is an experiment in flexible teaching, and was necessary because we have a shortage of staff," Ralph explained. "Last year we had an instructor running back and forth between two classes led by graduate assistants and received many complaints. The instructor was never in the right room at the right time."

"Faced with a shortage of staff and funds, we decided we would remodel rather than ask for new rooms. We chose the locations that we did to have two rooms in the center of campus and one out in the dorm complex available for our students."

The project was developed through the Office of Space Utilization. Completion of all three "suites" is slated for mid-term. Ralph said that when the rooms are finished, they will also be used as seminar rooms.

"In light of recent innovations in teaching, it is an anachronism that we should be using the same style of classroom we've been using for years."

Plan could weaken Saigon

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top White House officials say communist acceptance of President Nixon's Indochina cease-fire plan could somewhat weaken the grip of the Saigon government on the Vietnamese countryside.

However, they described the president's five-point package as marking a calculated risk worth taking in the hope of promoting meaningful peace talks in Paris. The officials, who insisted they not be identified by name, briefed news media representatives Monday. A transcript of their statements was made available Tuesday.

In the briefing session, the Vietnam peace initiative vied with the continuing Middle East problem among subjects of greatest interest to the reporters, editors, publishers and newscasters present.

The officials said that they did not know how close the United States had come to the brink of military intervention in September's Jordanian crisis but credited U.S. insistence on keeping all options open with having played a major role in easing the possibility of a broader Middle East conflict.

Talking about Nixon's cease-fire proposal, already received with a chill in the Communist world, the officials said all American studies indicate Saigon's control over the population of South Vietnam -- especially in areas adjoining Laos -- would decline to some extent should the Nixon plan be accepted by the Communists.

The officials cited that as evidence the United States was not asking the Communist side to place itself at a disadvantage by accepting and added that the administration is willing to take a risk and pay a price for a cease-fire that could bring nearer an end to the war.

They argued that Nixon's controversial Cambodian intervention of last spring and increasing combat readiness among South Vietnamese troops now made possible a cease-fire offer under conditions that could have been catastrophic six months ago.

The officials said the Soviet course in the Middle East has caused increasing doubts within the administration about Soviet desires to promote the kind of Middle Eastern stability that is seen here officially as necessary to lessen risks of a super-power confrontation.

For the moment, they said, the Soviet objective will be to consolidate its ties with the new leadership of the United Arab Republic, which they said would be going through a period of uncertainty and fluidity in the weeks just ahead.

Events in Jordan and the unexpected death of the UAR's Gamal Abdel Nasser only demonstrated how quickly Middle Eastern events can get out of control and raise dangers of another full-scale war there, they said. It was their hope that the lesson would not be lost on the Israelis, the Egyptians or the Soviets.

In talking about "Indochina," they said the President does not favor any governmental peace decision responding to demonstrations in the streets or other pressures but rather feels strongly that he owes something to those who have served in Vietnam, to the survivors, friends and relatives of those killed or wounded there as well as to protesters.

In the event of an eventual complete withdrawal of U.S.

forces from South Vietnam, one of the briefers was asked, could some eventuality such as resumption of open warfare "cause us to go back in again?"

While saying it was not a fruitful question for speculation, the official said Nixon has indicated he would make no major military commitment in the future without consulting the Senate and questioned whether Senate acquiescence would be likely in such a contingency.

Egypt's Sadat likes family life

CAIRO (AP) — When Anwar Sadat was nominated to be president he called a family gathering and laid down the line: "Things must go on as they have before. There will be no change in the style of life for any of us."

He had been chosen by the National Assembly to succeed Gamal Abdel Nasser, whom he served as vice president. His election to a six-year term seems assured in a national yes-or-no plebiscite, called for Thursday, to ratify the nomination.

Throughout 18 years in public life Sadat has jealously guarded the privacy of his family life, and he evidently intends to keep it that way. He and his wife, Gehan, like to spend their evenings with their children and grandchildren, sometimes acting as tutors.

Sadat, who is 52, has six daughters and a son, and five grandchildren. At family gatherings Sadat frequently plays table tennis. Other times, he likes to race one of the younger generation across the pool at Heliopolis Swimming Club.

"He has always wanted his children to have a normal life," says one close friend of the family.

For 14-year-old Gamal, the only son, it may be a bit too normal. He failed one entrance examination for high school. He has been attending a combination primary and secondary school run by a Roman Catholic order.

"The Sadat parents have let it be known that Gamal, like any other child, will have to make a second attempt this year," one of his teachers says.

Like most Moslem wives, Mrs. Sadat is usually excluded from her husband's business outside the home, in this case, politics.

However, in 1966, when Sadat was one of four vice presidents in an earlier Cabinet setup, Nasser sent him to the United States and Mrs. Sadat accompanied him.

WITH URBAN PLANNING

Grads aid Honduran city

Two graduate students in urban planning have returned to MSU after spending the summer in Danli, Honduras, helping that town plan for the coming of a new stretch of the Pan American Highway.

Willis Martin, Grand Rapids graduate student, and Albert Beke, Trenton, N.J., graduate student, spent the summer in Danli constructing a master community development plan that hopefully will allow that town to take advantage of the new highway and expand its position as a regional trading center.

Martin spent three years in Honduras as an urban planner for the Peace Corps before returning to MSU. He says the new highway will bring a number of changes to Danli.

It currently takes three hours to travel the 60 miles of unpaved, mountainous road between Danli and Tegucigalpa, the capital of Honduras. Commercial traffic is limited; bus fare one way is $2, about twice the daily wage in the area.

The new highway will bring the capital city about an hour and a half closer to Danli. Commercial vehicles will have a reliable route. Transportation costs should be greatly reduced.

But negative factors also enter into the picture. It will be easier for farmers to reach Tegucigalpa where prices are higher and consumer products are lower. The lure of the big city will be stronger for the young people of Danli, and Tegucigalpa, like most other Latin American cities, is already straining under a rapid, undesirable rate of urbanization.

"Urban planning is a totally new concept in Danli," Martin says. "The people have never before been concerned with problems like effective traffic routing, proper location of schools and preservation of historic buildings and sites."

"In the past," he said, "the people of Danli built their homes with no thought of making the most effective use of power lines and water supplies."

If the plans of Martin and Beke are implemented, numerous changes will occur in the town. The existing sewer system, built by the Spanish more than 200 years ago, will be expanded to service the two-thirds of the population now without sewers. A 200-year-old cathedral and its grounds will be preserved as a historic site.

Martin and Beke were financed by funds from the Agency for International Development (AID) and the School for Advanced Graduate Studies. The project was undertaken at the request of the government of Honduras.

Myles G. Boylan, director of the school, says future plans include study programs for Central American engineering students to give them a background in urban planning which will equip them to undertake projects like that accomplished in Danli.

Canvassers try to inform voters

Focusing campaign strategy on voter education, the Movement for a New Congress has begun canvassing in the Greater Lansing area with emphasis on stimulating voter interest through dialog and information on candidates' positions.

Canvassing will be largely directed toward densely populated areas and marginal precincts in the Lansing and East Lansing areas, Jeff Greenspan, Allentown, Pa., senior and MNC canvassing coordinator, said.

Marginal precincts are defined as those in which a candidate's victory in past primaries was determined by 60 per cent or less of the total vote.

The MNC will narrow its support to two candidates and one major issue during the canvassing.

Canvassers will discuss the 18-year-old vote during their door-to-door campaign while also educating voters on the positions of Democratic Sen. Philip Hart and John A. Cihon, Democratic candidate for Congress from the Sixth District.

A workshop has been scheduled for tonight to train interested participants in proper canvassing techniques and to review candidate positions.

The training sessions will include role-playing situations, discussions and the distribution of campaign information. The meeting will be at 7:30 p.m. in 36B Union.

Additional information can be obtained by calling the MNC offices at 355-8302.

are that this is the Chinese way and we realize the importance they attach to it, but have no comment to make one way or the other."

John Diefenbaker, former prime minister, commented:

"This move by Canada will result in a loss of support for those who have stood against communism in Southeast Asia... This will be taken as approval of communism."

Robert Stanfield, who succeeded Diefenbaker as leader of the Conservative opposition, criticized Canada's break with Communist China while agreeing that Red China should be recognized.

"Both Peking and Taipei assert that it is not possible to recognize simultaneously more than one government, as the government of China," Sharp said. Taipei is the Nationalist government.

T.C. Douglas, leader of the new Democrats, said he now hoped Canada would support Red China's admission to the United Nations when the issue comes to a vote next month. Sharp told reporters after the session that Canada would vote against Red China in the United Nations.

Bees find nectar by scent

The common honeybee's keen sense of smell is one of the most important factors in the bee's process of flower selection, according to an MSU entomologist.

"When a foraging bee visits a flower in quest of nectar, the scent of the flower clings to the hairs and body surfaces of the insect," E.C. Martin said. "If the nectar of that flower is abundant, the bee, on its return to the hive, dances around in a peculiar fashion and attracts the attention of the other bees."

Two types of dances are performed by honeybees. If the source of nectar is close to the hive, the finder - bee does a "round" dance in which it remains in one spot on the honeycomb and turns rapidly around - first in one direction, then in the opposite direction. If the find is farther from the hive, the bee does a "wagging" dance. It runs in a straight line for a short distance, rapidly wagging its abdomen; makes a complete circle to the right; then runs straight as before and makes a complete circle to the left.

Both the round dance and the wagging dance are repeated several times in the process of communicating the good news to the other bees.

As the bees of the hive approach the performer, they keep their antennae (in which the sense of smell is located) close to the body of the gyrating bee, Martin explained. Once familiarized with the specific odor of the plant the new arrival has been visiting, the other bees fly out to locate plants from which a like odor is emanating. "The time comes, however, when the flowers have been largely robbed of their liquid treasures and yield only diminishing returns," Martin said.

"When this happens there is no longer good news to spread throughout the hive and the returning bees discontinue their inciting dance."

Martin pointed out that this succeeding apathy on the part of the bees is not the disadvantage it may appear.

Birds rip Reds, 9-3, lead 3-0

BALTIMORE (UPI) — The charging Baltimore Orioles parlayed another sensational game by Brooks Robinson and Dave McNally's grand slam homer — the first by a pitcher in World Series competition — into a 9-3 rout Tuesday over the dazed Cincinnati Reds and a 3-0 lead in the series.

The Orioles, who've now reeled off 17 consecutive victories since their last loss on Sept. 19, can close out their second four-game series in the last five years with a victory Wednesday.

Baltimore's first two victories were close but this time the Reds never were in the game. The 51,773 Oriole partisans — a crowd slightly short of capacity — roared at the play of Brooks Robinson, McNally, Frank Robinson, who snapped out of an 0-9 slump with three hits including a homer, Paul Blair, who had three hits, and Don Buford, who hit a solo homer.

But the standing ovations were saved for Brooks and McNally.

After each game in which Brooks makes a standout play, Manager Earl Weaver always says, "Watch tomorrow and he'll make another one" — and sure enough, he does.

Brooks made one sensational play with a dive to his right on Johnny Bench's liner in the sixth, added several merely superb ones in the first four innings and had two doubles — driving in the Orioles' first two runs off Tony Cloninger in the first inning.

Brooks' first double and the solo homers by Frank Robinson

McNally's slam was the 12th in World Series competition. Jim Northrup of Detroit hit the last one in the sixth game of the 1968 Series.

Ironically, McNally — who was working with eight days off — didn't have his best stuff and was touched for nine hits while going the route. None of the Orioles' three starters — Jim Palmer, Mike in the third and Buford in the fifth made it 4-1.

Cloninger was then routed in the sixth inning and Wayne Granger, the Reds' ace reliever, came out of the bullpen and served up the grand slam to McNally on a 2-2 pitch that made it 8-1.

McNally, who hit a grand slam during the regular season, also had a homer in last year's series when the Orioles hit only three homers while losing to the New York Mets in five games. This year the Orioles have seven homers in five games and their power has been a key difference.

McNally's slam was the 12th in World Series competition. Jim Northrup of Detroit hit the last one in the sixth game of the 1968 Series.

Cloninger then walked Blair on a 3-2 pitch and Brooks Robinson followed with his two-run double that brought the cheering Orioles fans out of their seats.

Cuellar and McNally — have been at their sharpest, but it hasn't mattered because the Oriole hitters have been teeing off on the crippled Reds' pitching staff.

Cloninger, who hasn't completed a game all season, got the nod for the Reds. He had a lot of heart but not much stuff. In fact, he barely survived the first inning.

Buford walked on four pitches to lead off the Orioles' first and after the next two batters were retired, Frank Robinson sent him to third with a hit — and — run single for his first hit of the Series. It's bound to be said that Frank was charged up by Manager Sparky Anderson's quote — which the Cincinnati manager has denied — that Frank's in the "twilight of his career." But it could be just that Frank was overdue.

Cloninger then walked Blair on a 3-2 pitch and Brooks Robinson followed with his two-run double that brought the cheering Orioles fans out of their seats.

Super defense

Baltimore second baseman Dave Johnson is about to make a diving stab of this line drive off the bat of Cincinnati's Pete Rose in the third inning of Tuesday's World Series game. Johnson's effort and several great stops by Brooks Robinson helped Baltimore win its third straight game, 9-3.

WINNING COMES FIRST THOUGH

Martin eyes all-America status

By JEFF ELLIOTT
State News Sports Writer

Wilt Martin makes it plain, simple and direct — he wants to be an All-American end.

It's not that Martin's greedy or big-headed, but he knows he has the ability to become an All-American. But he also knows that in order to become one, the Spartans will have to become a winning team — and that's what Martin wants most of all.

The St. Louis native who played his prep ball at Anchor Bay in New Baltimore, is having his third outstanding season for the Spartans. In 1968 he lettered with 198 minutes of action and had 24 solo tackles and 17 assists. Hobbled with an ankle injury last year, he still managed to get in 259 playing minutes with 34 tackles.

The senior defensive end is off to a good start this year, ranking third on the team in tackles with 36. He's also dropped opposing ball carriers four times for 25 yards in losses to lead the team in that category.

Halloween Spooky Specials

The 6-3, 220 pounder has seen some action at a defensive tackle this year, due to shortage of Spartan defensive linemen. While he feels more comfortable at the end spot, Martin says he'll play anywhere "if it'll help the team win. Sure my goal is to be an All-American, but the most important thing is to have the team win. Everybody benefits when the team wins."

Coming into the 1970 season, Martin felt one area which he must improve on was his overall strength. While he brought his weight down from 235 to 220 pounds, Martin increased his overall strength by lifting weights during the summer.

"I feel much stronger this year," Martin said, "and still feel as quick as ever. You need both speed and strength to play defense. Against Washington State I was able to run over their tackles, while against Ohio State I needed to rely on my speed."

Like most everyone who has any connection with the upcoming game with Michigan, Martin says this will be "the" game of the season. Even after two consecutive shutouts, he says there's no way the Spartans won't be ready for Saturday's game.

"We could play nine straight games and lose them all and we'd still be up for this game," Martin said. "These games aren't just a one-day affair and then you forget it. We go to school nine months a year and you always remember how you did against Michigan in football."

Martin will be in top form for this year's game, something which wasn't so last year. He suffered a badly sprained ankle two weeks prior to the U-M game and missed a week and a half of practice. He saw some action against the Wolves but wasn't too effective.

Martin, who majors in advertising, would like to pursue a career in public relations. But like most college football players today he would first like to go professional ball a try.

"I'm not that big to play defensive end in pro ball," he said. "I would like to give it a try as an outside linebacker, though. I'm sure I have the speed and strength, but I'd have quite a bit to learn about playing there."

Asked about playing an opponent for the third straight week that was rated in the top nationally, Martin said the team will be ready this time.

"I don't believe all this stuff in the paper about Ohio State and Notre Dame having all these super players," he said. "Against Notre Dame we started playing some good football in the second half once we realized that they weren't really that good. We were ready for Ohio State and I think we played a good game. The game was really closer than the score indicates."

Martin denied the possibility that the defensive squad was getting discouraged about the Spartans' offense failing to score any points.

"No, we're not discouraged by any means."

Depth a grappler problem

By RICK GOSSELIN
State News Sports Writer

Last year, MSU athletic teams combined for a second place finish in the Big Ten all-sports standings. The Spartans were squeezed out of the top spot by Michigan, who had topped the Spartans by a mere .06 of a point. Even more stunning was the fact that MSU had only one first place finisher of the thirteen sports entries that competed for MSU.

That one athletic unit — a squad that showed awesome strength in capturing the title from the nine other teams in the Big Ten — was wrestling.

The MSU grapplers were not content with just the Big Ten title, however, and set their sights even higher, at the national title. But the bubble burst in the semi-final round as only one of the six Spartan qualifiers made it into the final round. That one wrestler, Greg Johnson, collected all the glory in winning the national title as the country's top 118-pound mat man. The best part about it is that Johnson is only a junior, eligibilitywise, giving him two more shots at the national title.

"We should have been national champions," Coach Grady Peninger said. "The kids will tell you we should have been the champs. We sent six people into the semi-finals and only one came out. Four of the five wrestlers who lost were defeated by only one point."

The Spartans have a strong cast coming back in an attempt to give Peninger his sixth consecutive Big Ten title, and possibly the elusive NCAA title that has eluded MSU's grasp since 1967.

Returning are Johnson; Big Ten champions and national placers Tom Milkovich and Vic Mittleberg; Big Ten and national placer Gerald Malacek; Big Ten champions of 1969, John Abajace and Tom Muir; and a host of other talented grapplers.

There is only one problem, though. The lower weight classes have little depth. Currently, there is no back-up man to Johnson at 118, and only three wrestlers are competing for the 126-pound position.

"We need depth in the lower classes because if someone should get hurt down there, it would be an automatic five points for the other team," Peninger said. "I feel there are people on this campus with talent, and we would certainly like to have them come out — for any weight class."

The turnout for wrestling has not been as large as it had been in previous years. Normally close to fifty people try out for the sport, whereas only around forty are trying out this year. Close to twenty freshmen usually tried out each year, with only six out for the team this fall.

Anyone who is interested in going out for the team should stop in and see Peninger at his office in the Men's IM Building.

This year's team is a squad strung together by family ties. Two brothers act highlight the roster: the Zindels (Bruce and Jeff) and the Cioleks (Dave and Mark). The Zindels had a brother who won two Big Ten titles, Jack, in 1969-70. Rick Radman, competing in the 158-pound class, had a brother who won a Big Ten and national championship in 1967, George.

But names don't win titles, performances do.

"We have pretty good balance up through the classes, which is probably the main reason we are favored to win the Big Ten again this year," Peninger said. "We're about evenly rated with Iowa State for the runner-up spot in the nationals with Oklahoma

Hard at work

MSU wrestling practices consist mainly of exercises where a group of wrestlers will work together. Here four Spartan grapplers do sit-ups. The MSU team is practicing daily to prepare for the upcoming season in which they will be seeking their sixth straight Big Ten title.

any means," he said. "We know the offense will jell pretty soon. We might sometimes feel disappointed standing on the sidelines watching, but once we cross that sideline marker and go back out on the field, you forget all that. We just go out there and play like we know how. It all boils down to pride, and this team has got it."

Martin certainly has the physical qualifications of an outstanding player and has the right attitude towards the game. His All-American goal certainly is within reach, especially if the Spartans can get back on the winning track.

HOLDS NEW COURSE MARK

Soph harrier a surprize

By DON KOPRIVA
State News Sports Writer

Arms upraised in the traditional sign of victory, Randy Kilpatrick was finishing a race in first place. No big thing ordinarily, but for the Troy sophomore it marked his first varsity win as an MSU cross country runner.

Kilpatrick's 26:06.6 clocking was not exceptionally fast, but the course was soggy after torrential rains on Friday. The time went into the books as a course record, since the Spartans' five mile route at Forest Akers Golf Course was remodeled slightly for this year's campaign.

Surprisingly enough, Kilpatrick would have been a good bet not to win after a so-so week in practice. But he took off from teammate Dave Dieters in the last mile and sped to a two-second victory to lead MSU to a 17-46 conquest of Ohio State.

"I feel a lot stronger this year," Kilpatrick said. "I ran more this summer and I guess that helped a lot."

"I just hope I can keep improving."

Kilpatrick started out slowly last season and moved to the top position on the MSU squad in the Big Ten meet as he placed 11th. This year Kilpatrick again started slowly and placed only tenth in the Spartans' 17-46 loss to Indiana in their opening meet.

"Randy's come along real well so far," MSU Coach Jim Gibbard said. "But the season has a long way to go yet and we just hope he can keep improving."

Only two Big Ten freshmen were ahead of Kilpatrick in last year's league meet. One of them, Garry Bjorklund of Minnesota, the defending individual champion, is among Kilpatrick's opponents here Saturday as the Spartans take on the Gophers at 10 a.m. at Forest Akers.

"I've got to try to stay up toward the front," Kilpatrick said, noting that if MSU is to have a chance at upending the 1969 Big Ten titlists, then Spartan runners must break up traditionally tight, and second man, senior Don Timm. If Kilpatrick and his teammates can keep their momentum going after dumping Ohio State, then the Gophers could be in for a battle. MSU and Minnesota meets are
