Governing 'U': How much centralization?

By BILL HOSTEIN State News Staff Writer

is clear to many members of the iversity community that the governing acture of the University is in a state of x. But what is not clear are the pressures ing on that structure and in what ection it is headed. Is the University stined to become a decentralized nmunity of offices and academic units h little central authority or a highly tralized governmental structure with le individual autonomy?

any observers would agree that MSU. d most similar institutions, have centralized tremendously in the last few rs. Both faculty and students have manded more of a role in the governing ucture, with the result being a less werful central administration. Decisions merly made by the central administration cerning the selection of deans, the riculum of a department and who gets ed and fired are now made, at least in t. by students and faculty, or both.

limit the scope of this analysis. wever, only the top level central administrative organization will be considered here.

What is happening to the administrative structure of MSU? Both decentralization and centralization is the qualified answer. There are pressures on the University that push it in both directions at the same time. Consequently some functions of the University centralize, while others spread out over a large number of people.

Forces pressing this University toward greater centralization include the current financial stringency, trends in federal funding to institutions and state agencies rather than individuals and the possible unionization of the faculty.

Pressures to decentralize are generally related to sheer numbers and size, coupled with a prevalent philosophy which stresses participation in governance and a dislike for the dehumanizing social system which centralized power can represent.

What do MSU administrators think is happening?

President Wharton and administrators who think similarly speak strongly in favor of decentralization and claim that it is occuring here at a rapid pace. Certain phrases permeate the conversation of these adminstrators such as "maximizing input into the decision - making process" and "create initiative."

There is convincing evidence to support their contention that some functions of the University have in fact been decentralized, but other administrators and observers dispute that majority view, saying the University is still relatively centralized. Still others say more centralization is needed.

One example of the trend toward decentralization is the changed nature of the president's office itself. Former president John Hannah had tremendous power over this University, largely by virtue of his encyclopedic knowledge of the workings of the institution.

President Wharton describes it this way: "When Hannah began his term, the size of the University was much smaller and when the University expanded he was in a position to know the full workings of the institution right at his fingertips, because it was part of his own adminstrative experience and competence.

"There was not a brick built on campus that he didn't know about. He knew the people as well as the bricks. He knew the structure, he knew the organization. So there were many things that only he could have done from the unique perspective of his own experience.'

Other administrators confirm that general impression when they tell stories of how Hannah could point out the professors he knew were good teachers and appropriately award them when faculty raises came before the board of trustees.

That a University president knew the intimate workings and personalities of each department was something department chairmen kept in mind whenever they approached the administration, these administrators say.

Today, the president's office has little "power" as opposed to "influence," a fact readily conceded by Wharton.

The limits and boundaries of the president's power are so well defined within the institution that there is not an opportunity for unilateral action in the vast majority of areas.

Also, the president is more of a political leader than the educational leader John Hannah was. President Wharton must walk a tightrope between a number of forces including the legislature, the trustees, the students, faculty and other segments of the

Moreover, the growth of enrollment, the increase in physical facilities, the variety of functions and the annual budget have added a range of administrative and financial responsibilities that cause the high echelon administrative offices to closely resemble those of business corporations.

President Wharton and administrators who agree with him point out two other instances in which decentralization is

In the Office of Business and Finance, when Phillip May was vice president there. he had several assistants who reported directly to him. They had little authority to make decisions and hence worked very closely with May, checking with him before taking any significant action.

But a restructuring of the office has come about at the initiative of President Wharton. Now, the current vice president, Roger Wilkinson, has only two assistants who report to him. Those two assistants, Emory Foster and Steve Terry, have more clearly defined areas of responsibility and authority. Terry tends to finance, investments, accounting and similar matters while Foster is in charge of "operations" which involves housing, the physical plant and other services.

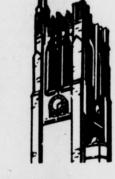

Those two men filter out many of the decision - making matters that previously would have been handled by only the vice President himself.

"Many of the decisions that came to this desk (when May sat in it) no longer come to this desk," said Wilkinson, who describes the

Scant turnout, drizzle spoil Veteran's Day ceremonies

WASHINGTON (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew led Veterans Day observances Monday with a call for support of President Nixon's war policies while an antiwar demonstration in the capital fizzled

But peace forces claimed that a protest near Ft. Hood, Tex., brought the largest number of arrests of active-duty GIs in any

Police at Killeen, Tex., said at least 100 persons were arrested near the big Army base, but the United States Servicemen's Fund said 125 soldiers and 25 civilians and veterans were arrested. The arrests were made as the demonstrators tried to march without a permit, which had been denied them earlier by Killeen authorities and U.S. District Court in Austin.

In Washington, rain and lack of a crowd washed out the planned start of an antiwar campaign. A rally on the Washington Monument grounds and a march on the White House were put off until Tuesday.

Agnew got in his speech earlier in the day before the heavy rain started, but only a sparse crowd sat through the dark gray drizzle to hear him.

"We can show the veterans of Vietnam, and the veterans of our earlier wars, no finer appreciation of the contributions they have made to freedom and to our welfare as a nation than to assist the President in his pursuit of peace and his efforts to make them the 'last generation of American war veterans," Agnew said.

Later the peace groups scattered from the monument grounds, where only about 300 had gathered compared to the hundreds of thousands who have attended other mass antiwar rallies here. Workshops were held Monday evening at a local church featuring civil rights activists Hosea Williams and Dick Gregory.

Police bldg. in Detroit hit by explosion

DETROIT (UPI)-A dynamite blast caused extensive damage to the Detroit Police Officers Assn. (DPOA) Headquarters Monday in what police called an obvious "attempt to assassinate police officers."

No one was injured. But as a result of the blast, precinct stations and police bureaus were ordered to tighten their security.

Inspector William R. Morris, acting chief of Detroit detectives, called the bombing "obviously an attempt to assassinate police officers."

Windows were shattered in a four-story apartment building behind the DPOA building, but none of the 80 residents were injured.

Police said they also were investigating the "potential" connection of the bombing and a false shooting report of an officer. They said 11 minutes before the explosion was reported, a false report was received that an officer was shot and lying in an alley a couple of miles from the DPOA headquarters located in the new center area.

No officer was found as reported. Shortly after the explosion, estimated to have caused $3,000 damage, police evacuated a restaurant and an apartment building east of the DPOA headquarters when they received a threat of a second

A search of the area failed to turn up a second bomb and the apartment house residents were allowed to return.

Inspector Roy E. Chlopan said the bomb apparently was a simple one involving five or six sticks of dynamite taped together with a timing device.

The windows in 10 cars in a parking lot behind the DPOA building also were blown

Chlopan said that although the department receives 10 to 20 bomb threats a day against stores, banks and other buildings there had been none recently against the

However, Morris contended that the telephone calls this morning and the bombing itself indicated a conspiracy aimed directly at the lives of police officers.

RHA meeting

RHA President Mike Flintoff looks pensive at a meeting between RHA members and city council campaigners to decide the policy on whether candidates could canvass within the residence halls.

RHA sets campaign guidelines

By BILL WHITING State News Staff Writer

Proposals to limit political candidate access to students living in residence halls were turned down in favor of a broad distribution guideline in a special meeting of the RHA board in Akers Hall

Hall representatives voted to allow candidates for public office to place material in student mail boxes, provided the mailbox has a name and address. In doing so, the board turned down a proposal drafted by Mike Flintoff, RHA president, which would have subjected political material to approval of the hall governing body before it could be placed in the boxes.

Controversy over University regulations on distribution of political material and canvassing in residence halls arose last week when several students were prevented from distributing literature in Shaw and McDonel halls. Sunday's meeting was called by Flintoff to set guidelines for candidates in the last week of campaigning for East Lansing Counsel.

Although Flintoff suggested that canvassing be limited to registered voters only, he said such policy determinations will have to be set by hall governments. "There are presently no policy prohibitions on door to door canvassing," he said.

Flintoff said canvassing unregistered voters was a "waste of time" to both students and candidates. "Students who aren't registered might be bothered," he observed. "We have to protect the student in his primary concern - and that is education. It is naive to say that students are going to be involved in all outside activities.

"We are not imposing restraints which are unreasonable," Flintoff said. "It is within the hall right to regulate people who come into the hall and make use of its facilities. I cannot sit back and let candidates have carte blanche access to a hall."

Several candidates from Meridian Township and East Lansing who attended the special meeting voiced concern over proposed restrictions, but appeared satisfied with the board's final action. However, they pointed out proposals to give hall governments authority over political material distribution and canvassing could double campaign expenses.

David Cole, council candidate for Meridian Park, told the student representatives; "It shocks me to think that it's possible that 35 to 40 per cent of my constituency may be unreachable if a dorm council so decrees.'

James E. Vandebunte, also a Meridian candidate, suggested the board allow individual students to make decisions about talking to candidates by placing a sign on their door. He called attempts to make candidates seek hall government permission to canvass in residence halls "clearly unconstitutional."

Another Meridian candidate, Rodney Hagenbuch, said, "The question here is whether registered voters in residence halls abve the same rights as others to be informed of candidates and issues."

Several student representatives, however, expressed concern about students being annoyed by canvassing candidates. William Vernier, Dearborn Heights sophomore, representative from Williams Hall, said, "Our dorm is passive, in this sense. We just don't want people walking up and down the halls."

Patrick Blackwell, Grand Rapids junior, Fee representative, said he felt political literature was performing a service to students by keeping them informed. "We should allow candidates to put out as much energy to reach people as they want," he said.

Flintoff agreed the board's action left the question of political campaigning vague, but said it would allow time to observe campaign practices and abuses in residence halls as a basis for future policies.

EDITORIALS From the people who gave us Haynsworth...

The President announced Thursday night that his decision to nominate Lewis Powell and William Rehnquist to the Supreme Court was based on their judicial philosophy. Nixon called both men judicial conservatives, a term which apparently means one thing to scholars to constitutional law and something completely different to the President.

A judicial conservative traditionally has been described as a justice who usually adheres to precedent. He will decide a case on the narrowest grounds possible, minimizing the legal ramifications of his decision. He does not consider personal political preferences when he makes a decision.

The President's kind of judicial conservative seems to be a justice who

Royalties

Students long have complained about professors assigning their own textbooks in their own classes. The objection centers around two main points. First, the use of a professor's own textbook often leads to a duplication of lecture material. Secondly, professors receive increased royalties by assigning their own textbooks.

This presents a rather touchy situation. A student still must buy texts in most courses. He is going to have to pay a royalty to someone anyway if he buys a new text. Yet there is always the possibility that a professor will assign his own text instead of another, possibly better written text, for purely monetary reasons.

Further, any duplication of lecture material resulting from using the professor's own text runs contrary to the precepts of the education process. Another writer's point of view could broaden the scope of a course.

MSU professors would do well to follow the example of the social science professors who refunded their royalties to students in a course using their text. Such a policy would more than quell any possibly royalty controversy.

will strictly adhere to the Constitution, as long as the GOP party line is advanced. While Nixon did say, "By judicial philosophy I do not mean agreeing with the President on every issue," Nixon obviously used exclusively political criteria when selecting Powell and Rehnquist for this nation's highest court.

The President showed his true colors when he said, "As a judicial conservative I believe that some court decisions have gone too far in the past in weakening the peace forces as against the criminal forces in our society. The peace forces must not be denied the legal tools they need to protect the innocent from criminal elements."

In essence Powell and Rehnquist are the two legal tools the President has in mind. In a speech last year Rehnquist argued the decisions such as Miranda (police must inform the accused of their rights when arrested) should be overruled. Both men favor wiretapping; in fact, Rehnquist as Assistant Attorney General has helped set Justice dept. policy in this field. If confirmed by the Senate, Powell and Rehnquist would bring order to the court—law and order.

Powell and Rehnquist should be examined closely by the Senate Judiciary Committee during the next few weeks. Although their personal political politicies may be repugnant to some, the two should be evaluated on the grounds of legal and judicial competence. Their past records must be spotless — there must not even be room for reasonable doubt. They must have a thorough understanding of the judicial process, there being no room on the court for mediocrity.

Both Powell and Rehnquist should be subjected to the same rigors as Abe Fortas, Clement F. Haynsworth, and G. Harrold Carswell. The responsibilities of a Supreme Court justice demand that rubber stamp approval of nominees become a thing of the past. The nominees must, at very least, have a better understanding of judicial philosophy than the President.

POINT OF VIEW

Suburbia, pull it all together

By MIKE DAKESIAN
Detroit Graduate Student

I attended Mackenzie H. S. in Detroit when it was 75 per cent black. My brother attended when it was 99 per cent black. We are white and still live in Detroit in an integrated neighborhood, while my brother attends MSU. No one should EVER be subjected to schooling where the numbers are 3,000 black, 30 white, as my brother and his buddies did. No black should be in the opposite situation, as in Bloomfield or Birmingham, although THEIR school lives are much more relaxed in that situation, in these black militant times.

The point is, people, we are still alive and safe and sound. Are you listening, suburbia?! I am tired of your racist fears and inhibitions. Yes, we had our hassles during those school years. So what?! I only regret that our grade school was not sufficiently integrated, and I regret the Detroit Board of Education allowing such racial lopsidedness as in my brother's situation.

For you see, people, children have their heads together. Youngsters at early ages cannot see the color difference in playmates as their prejudiced parents do. They only understand "nigger talk" as they grow older.

However, suburbia, I realize that all of you are not prejudiced, just a majority. Try and understand a simple point: If grade school children are educated with a substantially equal percentage of black and white (50-50, 60-40, whatever), racial bias and fears can be overcome despite their parents ignorance. Again, children have their heads together that way.

I enjoy making black friends as much as white friends.
Suburban parents who say they enjoy PTA meetings, fund raising bake sales, school projects, etc., and do not want to send their children into Detroit, are obviously lacking in one way. Why not continue such participation in the child's new school? The reason is that their white parents do not want to associate that way with black parents, and to some degree, vice versa. I'm sorry, but you are sick people. I have no hangups against any race of people, and that is due to my upbringing and schooling.

Black parents of Detroit who are against busing and are allowing black militaristic separatism to grow, are acting as ignorant as whites. Don't anybody tell me blacks and whites cannot live together. What do black children who have attended all-black schools know about white people? Nothing, and I'm sick of sick talk.

By the way, this writing is not political, for those who must classify busers as dictatorial democrats. I'm not playing politics, I don't even know what that is. I'm talking about people and experience.

Thousands of children are bused to school everyday. What difference does it make if they are on a bus 15 minutes or 30 minutes? Thousands of bused youngsters have neighborhood friends who are bused along with them. That will not change, so there is no argument that potential neighborhood friends will be lost. In fact, that is absurd, because many neighborhood kids have attended different schools (parochial and public) for years.

Hopefully, local property taxes will soon cease to pay for public schools, and education should become financially equal, as the State takes over the responsibility through Gov. Milliken's reform package.

True education, and I'm talking about life and people, will be fulfilled only through integration of the youth. Middle schools are fine, but they are not near enough.

I feel sorry for Mrs. McCabe and other NAG members; for their fears and inhibitions are too deeply inbedded. If their efforts would have been directed toward smoothing the busing situation, Pontiac grade schools could become incentives for racial equality.

I'm not talking out of my hat, people. My brother and I saw a lot of jerks in high school, most of whom will not change very much. But there is a whole new generation of youths starting school and attending these same institutions. They still have a chance to change their ways and learn to live with all peoples. Living satisfactorily with one minority will make you more competible towards others.

with one minority will make you more compatible towards others. I don't think it's a funny joke to say we should all be brothers and sisters. Peace.

Context of sardine little help for study

What is the "ideal" situation for good roomies to study in? There isn't one. There are four of us in my room, and many other dorm rooms have three in the same room. We tried several ways to study when all of us were in the room at the same time, and none of them worked. The only way for all to study at once is if you don't—that is, study whenever no one else is in the room. Here's what happened to us.

Our first approach was the traditional one—each of us at our respective desks, the correct lighting and no noise. This worked well for about two minutes at which time one of us sneezed. I jumped as the sternutation broke the silence, causing a jerky line across the book I was highlighting.

I overlooked this one incident, took a sip of the cola I was drinking and went back to reading. Three minutes later a hiccup slipped out from within me. If looks could kill, as the saying goes, my roomies would have been booked on premeditated murder.

After a short exchange of words, we decided our mode of silence was anything but golden. We reasoned little noises were more noticeable in absolute silence so perhaps we should put some soft music on.

On went the radio. This situation lasted about five minutes due to the fact that it was news time, and who listens to that anyway. When no. 8 of the Top Forty went on, my roomies attentiveness went off. One of the four in my room, began to sing along. The rest of us turned to look at her. So glanced up with a sheepish grin and applopized for her rude outburst.

we decided perhaps the radio wasn't out best bet after all — you subconsciously listened to it so you wouldn't miss anything. Next came the stereo. If we put on a record we all knew, we would be used to it and wouldn't have the need to listen to closely. On went "Abbey Road." This was the best way yet, or so we thought.

But as history repeats itself, so did she, he she was rocking in her chair, she began drumming along and jiving to the best. Since I was re-reading the same paragraph for the sixth time, I was understandably perturbed. As I raised from my chair, my voice raised also.

"Damnit. You mind?"

"I'm sorry, but I just get involved withthe words," she replied with a slight increase volume.

"Girls, girls," began another of the roomies, "Perhaps if we put on a recognition without words, everyone would shut up."

On went "Finlandia." This would have been fine, except that I played this in my high school orchestra. I was really excited I explained to the girls the the clarinet solo was coming up, but their faces revealed only irritation.

The first of our major quarrels beganthe "there's just one little thing you that bothers me" type.

I told her I didn't like the way she we always tapping and making noise when we were trying to study.

Finally, the last of the peacemaks and the final roomie, intervened before bodily harm occurred. She suggested we take a short study break and let things blore.

We decided to watch "Laugh In" to fifteen minutes, but somehow it we bedtime before we finished.

Next morning we were rudely awakened by incessant typing for a paper which was due that day.

Bicycle busts not student aid

To The Editor: Over the pas

Over the past few weeks, this campus has witnessed an increase of harrassment by the Dept. of Public Safety (sic) regarding the University's bicycle regulations. To a casual observer, the over-reaction by the police seems to be approaching, or going beyond, the point of absurdity. First, the police confiscated unregistered or improperly parked bicycles around dormitories. Then they expanded their efforts to building areas and pre-existing parking racks. And as of last week, cyclists riding on sidewalks are threatened with ticketing. The next act of

Pollution

To the Editor:

Perhaps one day our Bills of Rights will guarantee the citizens of this country the right to clean air, water and landscape. I hope so. At the moment, as a resident of Cherry Lane married student housing, I am most concerned about the clean air.

On any given day, the stench and falling ash resulting from the burning of hundreds of pounds of raw garbage in apartment incinerators is enough to gag a maggot. I lodged a protest with the Ombudsman and the Michigan Dept. of Health and I was informed that the situation would be rectified—by next fall.

As with most environmental issues on this planet, "better late than never" just doesn't cut it. If this enlightened community isn't ready to do something about pollution now, who the hell is?

Richard Hohlstein
E. Lansing gradaute student
Oct. 20, 1971

the police will be difficult to predict.

Ironically, the reasons for such a crackdown offered by the Dept. of Public Safety seem weak, if not dubious. Blocking of building entrances or pedestrian walkways seldom occur. The cluttering of bicycles generally occur in the immediate vicinity of overcrowded parking racks. The dispersal of the twenty remaining parking racks will surely never be able to handle the increase of bicycles on campus. And when the police are questioned as to what they are doing in order to help the situation, setting such dispersal smacks ominously as tokenism.

As for the ticketing of cyclists on sidewalks, the police should consider why the students are taking to the sidewalks. First, the cycle paths on this campus are poorly designed, and poorly maintained. Secondly, riding on the streets of this campus is a dangerous undertaking. Many motorist seem unaware that cyclists are sharing the same road as they are. The University bus system is equally unaware of this fact. I have experienced many occasions when I had to scramble over a curb in order to prevent from being flattened by passing automobiles and busses. Thirdly, the existing bicycle paths do not service all the building on this campus. Considering the one-way streets, it is virtually necessary to ride on the sidewalks to get to some buildings.

The police actions seem to be violating the spirit of the regulations, as pointed out in a State News editorial. And considering the spirit of the law, if the cyclists on this campus are going to be subject to enforcement and ticketing as motor vehicles, then cyclists should enjoy the same rights as a motor vehicle, such as having rights-of-way and equal priority to street space. Any cyclist knows that this clearly is not the case as of today.

As a final thought, one cannot wonder why the sudden wrath of the police has descended upon the cyclist. When considering the recent events, regarding cyclists, a pattern of fore-thought and precalculated action against a significant sector of the student population can be seen. If the campus police are so over-staffed as to have nothing better to do than bust bicyclists, then appropriate action should be taken, especially when the University as a whole is in a budget squeeze. The professionalism of our campus police seems foggy and wasted if they are to spend their time pursuing such avid criminals as the bicyclists. As is so often the case with the campus police, they seem to be working against, rather than for the population which they serve.

ENROLLMENTS CHANGE

Special ed gains students

By LESLIE LEE State News Staff Writer

Students in the College of Education are changing their enrollment patterns but not deserting the college, despite predictions that a slumping economy would force exodus from the major.

Picking their major with more care, undergraduates are increasingly picking up the special education option, Kenneth L. Harding, coordinator for undergraduate student affairs, said.

With a 50 per cent increase in students enrolled in special education, for the first time, the number of special education majors exceeds elementary education majors at the freshman level.

graduate registered in this area at the MSU Placement Bureau in 1970-71. This career choice is also probably related to the heightened social awareness exhibited by young people today."

This student interest also corresponds with the U.S. Office of Education's goal of providing full educational service to the handicapped by 1980.

Predicting a saturation of this market in Michigan in the near future, Mange said that nationally one-third of the handicapped are being reached while in Michigan the figure is already two-thirds.

"Already, our training programs are saturated and we will not be admitting new students for some time," he said. "Also, there has not been a drop off in enrollments in all fields of secondary education," Harding said. "The figures have held up remarkably well even in light of a moratorium we imposed on enrollments last year."

The only area where this might not be true is in the social sciences. Preliminary indications would point to a drop in that area's enrollees, Harding said.

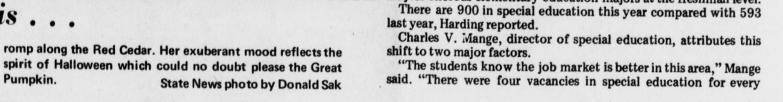

Meanwhile, William B. Hawley, acting dean of the College of Education, is striking a hopeful note on the employment picture. He said the situation is not as bad as it appeared to be at the beginning of the year.

Reduction of class size and adequate educational funding would improve employment opportunities, Hawley said.

While not admitting there is a teacher surplus, he said there "at least is not a shortage." The real criteria is in the relationship between financing and the demand for teachers Hawley said.

At the same time the College of Education is limiting enrollment in the light of employment realities, Hawley's position is that "MSU wouldn't make a dent if it didn't turn out any teachers."

The present emphasis, in any case, is on teacher quality. "Part of the selection process for teaching candidates is an evaluation and an in depth contact with children as a way of assessing the individual's concern in working with the individual student," Hawley said.

"A couple of times this season the opposition had such a large following and it upset our guys a little," Coach Payton Fuller said. "Against Ohio Saturday, their crowd was extremely noisy and they helped Ohio score two goals in the third quarter with their cheering."

The Spartans have done some cheering on their own the last couple of days as they increased their won-lost record to 6-1 with a key win over Ohio Saturday.

The one loss, against Wisconsin - Green Bay Oct. 16, is still pending an appeal from Fuller and the athletic administration.

"I wrote a letter and I gave it to director) and Gene Kenney (assistant to the athletic director), Fuller said. "They made some suggestions and supposedly have typed the final copy. But I haven't seen it yet.'

Rudy Mayer scored two goals against the Bobcats and Nick Dujon and Gerry Murray tallied the other two. Fuller has alternated Dujon, Murray and Lennox Robinson at center forward, with two of them in the position at the same time, and the move has apparently payed off with a better offensive thrust.

The booter defense turned in a solid game against Western Michigan last week, shutting them out for the first Spartan whitewash this season. They then allowed three goals against Ohio but this figure does not reflect the true situation.

"The defense played an exceptional game," Spartan goalie Dave Goldman argued. "They (Ohio) scored those three goals because the ball was quite wet and hard for the goalies to handle." It rained steadily until the fourth quarter.

"The defense isn't too bad." Fuller commented. "But I need strong games from Terry Blalark and Phil Bertelsen the next two

WIN AFTER THREE LOSSES Sophs help end streak

By GARY SCHARRER State News Sports Writer

Four weeks ago Monday, Coach Duffy Daugherty was honored at a press luncheon for his 100th MSU coaching victory after the Spartans had defeated Oregon State. Daugherty was naturally quite elated but said that the next hundred would probably come a little harder. If the interval between No. 100 and 101 is any indication of a repeated pattern, then truer words were never spoken.

Daugherty's No. 101 win came against Iowa last Saturday after consecutive losses to Notre Dame, University of Michigan and Wisconsin.

Iowa sunk helplessly into the cellar of the Big Ten standings with their defeat and a 0-7 record. The Hawkeyes may not provide a good measuring stick because of obvious weaknesses, but the Spartan offense continues to improve.

"Our downfield blocking was great," Daugherty said. "It was the best it has been all year. "Malcholz (Skip) did a fine job by helping Eric

Hughes death due to heart disease

DETROIT (UPI) - An autopsy disclosed Monday that wide receiver Chuck Hughes of the Detroit Lions died of "Arteriosclerosis - an acute coronary thrombosis."

Hughes, 28, collapsed in mid-stride Sunday on the Chicago 15-yard line with 62 seconds remaining in the Lions game with the Bears. He was officially pronounced dead 50 minutes after the game ended.

Arteriosclerosis is a chronic disease characterized by abnormal thickening and hardening of the arterial walls.

Hughes suffered the fatal attack only minutes after making his only pass reception of the season.

Three plays after making the catch, Hughes clutched his chest and fell to the ground on the 15-yard line. He was rushed to Henry Ford Hospital where he was pronounced dead a short time later — the seventh fatality in professional football's history.

The 28-23 loss to the Bears was forgotten as distraught players filed out of the Lions' dressing room, some weeping

There was grief among the Bears, too. In the dressing room after the game - before they learned that Hughes had diedthe Chicago players knelt in a silent prayer for him.

Afterward Bob Wallace, a Bear wide reciever who had played and roomed with Hughes at the University of Texas. El Paso, said:

"I didn't want to play any more. I wished they'd called the damned game off."

Harry Jones, a former Eagle who was a close friend of Hughes, said he thought the person that told him about Hughes death was "either drunk or starting some vicious rumor.

Jones, his voice cracking, said "Chuck and I both used to think that losing a football game was the biggest tragedy in the world, until today." Hughes was described as a "class person" and a "dedicated young man" by Pete Retziaff, who played with Hughes and then was General Manager of the Philadelphia Eagles before the flanker was traded to the Lions.

William Clay Ford, owner of the Lions, summed up the team's feeling shortly after learning of Hughes' death.

"He was a great player and a great person," Ford said. "I'm just horrified and shocked."

Hughes was survived by his widow, Sharon Leah, and 23-month - old son, Brendon Shane.

A journalist herself, Ms. Steinem said the women's movement has been distorted and trivialized by the press.

"No one I ever knew of burned a bra," she said. Part of the problem for women, she said, is that they have been reading white male history. "For the first half of human history there's lost of reason to believe women were seen as equal, if not superior to men," she said. "Women were gods. We were worshipped because we had the children. Men's religious services imitated it. Men envied

Then she said, paternity was discovered.

"Some say women discovered paternity several hundred years before they told men about it," she remarked

Ms. Steinem emphasized the parallels between women and non-white males.

"White women and black men and women have the same goal, because women have the same status as slaves," she said. "It's obscured for us by those who say women have an honored and easy status typified by being an ornament or child. But even they realize the pedestal is a prison just like any small place.

"I wouldn't compare the suffering (between blacks and women). Women lose their identity, but black men and women lose their lives. However, said: non-whites and women have always been characterized by a jobs that require a penis or vagina small brain, childlike natures, passivity." The audience was receptive to Ms. Steinem's humor. She said:

Faculty women, she said, "are probably not being paid, promoted or hired at the same rate as males.

Ms. Steinem, 35 and looking 20, dressed in shirt, slacks, hiphugger belt and salmon suede boots, said the women's movement is not against love or

"Some women need and love men but not any more than men need and love women. It has to be equal, though, or it doesn't work. Love cannot exist between unequals," Ms. Steinem said.

"This movement is for men too," she said. "Men are de-humanized by the male role, by the notion they're supposed to be unemotional, totally responsible financially, able to subdue others by violence or economic measures and emerge

She said anthropologists have studied peaceful societies where there is great gusto for the joys of everyday life, but no polarization of sex roles and no concept of heroic manhood.

To turn the woman's movement into a true humanist revolution, she said, we have to attack these roles and live the revolution everyday...

This development of a "middle academic officers. management" layer of decision structure in that office "still looks pretty centralized to me."

The various offices that report to Breslin such as the personnel office and athletics office are generally "very careful of decisions" and usually consult with Breslin himself before making any decisions involving money, this source said.

President Wharton points out another type of decentralization he sees occurring. One measure in the president's mind of decentralization is the number of contacts he makes within the University in the decision making Wharton says, and his assistants confirm, that he talks to many people likely to be affected by a decision before making that decision.

Also, the president has developed and formalized a number of advisory groups with whom he meets regularly. Those groups include the administrative group, the executive group, the student advisory group and the operations group.

HOUSE REPUBLICAN LEADER Clifford H. Smart, R-Walled Lake, announced Friday that he will not support a drive headed by Rep. Joseph P. Swallow to replace the state's current two-house system with a unicameral legislature.

So far, six House members - all Republicans - have formally announced their support for the campaign to put the unicameral question on the November, 1972 ballot.

THE MICHIGAN CATHOLIC CONFERENCE Monday urged the state legislature to adopt the House version of the state welfare

"To do less would be harmful to the poor and to our whole society as well," the Conference's Board of Directors said in a statement sent to all members of the Legislature.

Before recessing in September, the House approved a $535 million welfare appropriation, but the state Senate reduced the appropriation to $503 million. The bill is now before a joint House -Senate Conference Committee which is attempting to iron out differences in the House and Senate versions.
