Milliken aide filed no fund data

By ELLEN E. GRZECH
State News Staff Writer

Gov. Milliken's chief of staff, pointed to clean up and reorganize the Executive Office, failed to file expenses he incurred supporting Milliken in his 1970 campaign and thus has apparently violated the state election laws.

William Hettiger, a one-time Democrat who is now Milliken's executive secretary, formed and headed a committee in 1970 called Democrats for Milliken - Hart, which spent "$700 or $800," Hettiger told the State News in a recent interview. Hettiger said he did not file an account of expenses for the group.

State election law requires every treasurer of a political committee to file, within 20 days after the general election, a list of every sum received or disbursed by him for election expenses, including the date of each receipt, the name of the person contributing or receiving the money and the object or purpose for the expense.

The law defines a committee as a combination of two or more persons who "aid or promote the success or defeat of a candidate, or a political party or principle or measure."

Hettiger said the group consisted of "10 or 12" people in a loosely-run, "seat of the pants" organization.

When asked by the State News if he was not required, under law, to file a list of the group's expenses, Hettiger said: "If you raise or expend money directly you have to file. I paid for it all by myself, well, most of it. Doug (Remeny, an associate) paid for some of it."

The Elections Division of the secretary of state's office, which keeps records of campaign expenses, said any group of two or more people supporting a candidate and spending money must file with the clerk of the candidate's county.

"We contacted all Democratic precinct delegates by letter - that was the single largest expenditure,"

Hettiger said. "We did it (fund raising) as an aside."

Hettiger said he solicited contributions, but asked that the money be sent directly to the Milliken fund.

"We never kept any money or raised money directly," he said.

Hettiger said he contacted a lot of people he knew from the Democratic party on the phone and by personal contact to get them to support Republican Milliken.

"I like to think I made a very substantial contribution in this area," Hettiger said. "I got former Democratic county chairmen to support Bill Milliken." Hettiger said he contacted leaders in labor and the black community especially, where Milliken was weak.

One labor leader agreed that Hettiger played an important part in the election.

"I wouldn't want to say he elected Milliken," William Marshall, president of the Michigan ALF - CIO, said. "The governor put on a good show, and (Sander) Levin made mistakes. But Hettiger played a vital role in Milliken's election, absolutely - with that narrow margin of victory."

Hettiger commands respect as a tough, sharp administrator with a good background in government, but many observers at the Capitol temper that respect with recognition of his shrewdness.

"I'd trust him as far as I could throw the Capitol," one person said. "But if I were governor, I'd want one of him around. He would have no qualms about doing firing or dirty work."

Hettiger has been attacked in the (continued on page 12)

UNIVERSITY ROLE QUESTIONED

Faculty split on lifelong education plan

By DIANE SILVER
State News Staff Writer

Many faculty members have applauded the concept of lifelong education presented in a recent University report, but others say it has no place at MSU.

"The role of the University is intellectual and cultural and that is not a role for everybody," says Jan Devries, asst. professor of history. "It is a role for a minority of the population that can and wants to participate in this kind of life."

But Allan Jacobs, asst. professor of anatomy, disagrees: "I don't think education ends with getting a degree. Not only are we living in a fast changing world but this would keep the real world in touch with academics and academics in touch with the real world."

The cause of the controversy, "The Lifelong University" report released by President Wharton last Wednesday, outlines a program for extending MSU to the entire Michigan population.

Lifelong education, including credit and noncredit programs, would have an equal priority with undergraduate and graduate education at MSU. Admission criteria would include motivation, past life experience and career performance as well as academic background for people such as housewives training for new careers, professionals returning for refresher courses and retirees filling their leisure time with hobbies.

Even though he criticizes the report, Devries said he will approve of the idea if the new program has a serious commitment to scholarship and education.

"However, I don't see the university role as an annual supplement to the home encyclopedia."

Even so, the lifelong education concept does have support among the faculty. Julia Falk, associate professor of linguistics, Oriental and African languages, believes the people of the state deserve the University's benefits because they pay for MSU.

"This is a very appropriate idea for the University," she continued. "In this way we could serve the majority of the people of the state. And besides, we tend to become isolationist here and that is not good for us or for the people."

Some faculty members criticize the report, characterizing it as a move to gain political support.

"I'm suspicious of educational experimentation that is primarily intended for its political impact and the political popularity of the university," Devries says.

Devries, who qualified his comments with the fact he has not yet read the complete report, feels the committee which produced the report did not contain enough members from the academic community. He also believes the committee set out to promote the lifelong education concept without examining it objectively.

"It is not a forgone conclusion that any university should formulate its program and curriculum to that

200 area residents challenge proposed county landfill site

By CHRIS DANIELSON
State News Staff Writer

A controversy has developed over a proposal by the Ingham County Board of Public Works to establish a sanitary landfill adjacent to University farm property.

In the face of protests from 200 area residents, the Alameda Township Board of Supervisors tabled a motion Monday night to permit development of the landfill. The county has proposed the new landfill for a 176 acre site in the northwest corner of the township, about three miles from central campus. The site would be bounded by Hagadorn, Sandhill and Hulett roads and I-96.

University property west of Hagadorn Road which extends south of I-96 to Sandhill Road faces the landfill site across Hagadorn Road. This land is part of 500 acres that will be used in a $2.2 million project to be initiated by MSU's Institute of Water Research by August 1.

The environmental effects of recycling East Lansing sewage plant waste water for agricultural, irrigation and recreational uses will be researched during the project.

Opposition to the landfill proposal has been spearheaded by an ad hoc group named the Concerned Citizens of Alameda Township, which was formed (continued on page 12)

Bernitt says police share info with FBI

By LINDA DROEGER

NANCY CRANE
State News Staff Writers

In a development related to the use of informers by University police, the director of the Dept. of Public Safety has told students that his department shares information on campus "incidents" with the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) upon request.

Richard O. Bernitt responded to a question about the FBI during a Public Safety Committee meeting Monday.

Bernitt will answer questions on informers in an open meeting at 9 a.m. today in 328 Student Services Bldg.

"The FBI has limited jurisdiction on campus. We (Dept. of Public Safety) do have an ongoing relationship with the FBI," Bernitt said. "There is a sharing of information. If the FBI has a concern on campus they come and ask us for information."

One student claimed that a friend of his had seen a photograph of him at the People's Park demonstration in May 1970, labeled "property of the FBI."

Bernitt denied knowledge of the photograph and said that only files the department kept were "incident" files, but he did not make clear whether or not People's Park was an "incident."

Bernitt had been charged at the Public Safety Standing Committee meeting, on May 7, to respond to questions dealing with informers at the next meeting which was Monday.

But the committee never got to business of informers because it spent one-half hour trying to approve the minutes and then another one hour and a half deciding not to abolish itself.

After hearing a report on the jurisdiction of the committee, some members argued that the committee should not be maintained because it repeated the same function performed by other committees.

When the committee moved to adjourn and Bernitt rose to leave, stating he could not attend the next

Mayor urges public to harvest own food

By MAUREEN McDONALD
State News Staff Writer

After digging into the problem of soaring food prices, Lansing Mayor Gerald W. Graves says city residents can grow their own solution with victory over inflation gardens in their backyards.

The presumption that the picketing of a chain store is going to cut food prices in this time of great inflation is erroneous," Graves said in a recent interview. "We can eat cheaper for less if city dwellers are willing to return to the good earth and to expend a little physical effort by planting a garden."

Citing the bonuses of good exercise and nice sunbaths, Graves said housewives will enjoy the horticultural results of their labor.

He stressed that families can be brought closer together by sharing the planting experience and later canning the vegetables.

"We have our own garden," Graves boasted. "My wife cans between 60 and 80 quarts of pickles per season."

"I would challenge any cannery to come up with bread - and - butter pickles or chili sauce as delicious as those home canned by my wife," Graves said.

Graves, whose budding idea is reminiscent of the World War II victory gardens, estimated that 18 million victory gardens were grown throughout the United States at the height of the war.

Nationwide

Six members of a hard-working Reynoldsville, Ga. farm family were found slain Tuesday. Ned Alday, 66, three of his sons and a brother were found in a house trailer on their farm. The body of Alday's wife, Mary, was discovered in a field about six miles away.

Coroner Paul Mosley said the men "were all forced to lie face down, and were shot systematically in the back of the head." Mary Alday had been shot in the back of the head and in the back of the shoulders.

Placido Trejo, a 55-year-old Tucson, Ariz. resident, was crushed to death in a garbage truck that emptied the trash bin he apparently fell asleep in, Tucson police said Tuesday. His body was found in a garbage dump.

Montclair, N.J. police said that the bodies of a 45-year-old socialite and her 24-year-old pregnant daughter were found Monday night hanging in the basement of their 20-room home. Police declined to say whether they considered the deaths of Renee Cali, the wife of a building contractor, and her daughter, Leslie Grant, murders or suicides.

Former Columbus, Ohio police chief Dwight Joseph has formed a private narcotics squad of 15 trained agents that will infiltrate the local narcotics market, make buys, collect evidence and present it to the local law enforcement officials in a five-state area, including Michigan.

The bodies of two lighthouse attendants were found at sea five miles from Mount Desert Island in Maine early Monday. The deaths of boatswain's mate third class Neil Pichette of Shelbourne, Mass., and fireman Ronald Paquette of Newmarket, N.H. will be investigated, the Coast Guard said.

The Northern Star of Northern Illinois University reported that Bonny Adams, 17, previously charged as an adult with first-degree murder in the death of her new-born daughter, will be tried as a juvenile. Bonny and her parents were arrested last October when sheriffs found the body of a baby girl buried in the Adams' basement.

The body of Wendy Ann Vick, 18, a Beloit College freshman, was found Sunday morning in a South Beloit, Ill., motel, authorities said. Police said there is apparently no connection between her death and the death of Samuel Griffen, 52, of Beloit, whose body was found Friday along Illinois 2 just south of Beloit. He had been stabbed eight times.

William Howard Abernathy, an employee at the Lockheed Airline Terminal, was shot and killed by FBI marksmen Monday after he seized a hostage and threatened to blow up an aviation fuel tank at the Portland, Ore. airport.

Michigan

State Police traffic records showed Tuesday that 729 persons have been killed on Michigan's streets and highways so far this year, compared with 702 killed at this time a year ago.

A brawl at a Buchanan apartment complex Sunday night involving a dozen persons resulted in the arrest of Joseph Thompson, 25, from Mishewaka, Ind. for assault with a deadly weapon. Two South Bend, Ind. men were hospitalized after the incident with knife wounds.

Cashmir Konarski, 65, died Monday when he fell from a tractor on his farm a mile north of Luther and was pinned under the vehicle.

Beverly Kersten, 34, of Kalamazoo, was in serious condition in Bronson Hospital as the result of a freak accident involving her car and a semitruck tire that had fallen on U.S. 131 north of Kalamazoo. The tire popped up, struck her hood and caused the car to hit a guard rail and drop over a bridge down a 48-foot embankment Monday night.

Michigan Congressman Robert Huber Tuesday praised Oakland County Prosecutor L. Brooks Patterson for his crusade against pornography.

"Our society's moral values are declining rapidly," Huber said. "If more elected officials would follow Patterson's courageous actions we might be able to reverse the tide." Patterson has campaigned against X-rated films and literature in his area.

PROBLEMS PLAGUE SKYLAB

Plans proceed for launching trio

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Temperatures soared to desert-like levels Tuesday in the Skylab space station already crippled by a serious power shortage.

But engineers say the problems are not "show stoppers" and plans proceeded tentatively for a manned mission to the orbiting laboratory set for Sunday.

The space agency is considering sending the Skylab 1 astronauts on a short inspection mission to seek solutions for a series of power, temperature and gyroscope problems plaguing the giant orbiting laboratory.

A space center official said Tuesday this plan has been suggested as experts seek to salvage something from the $2.6 billion project.

Another possibility is to send astronauts Charles Conrad Jr., Dr. Joseph P. Kerwin and Paul J. Weitz up with a large aluminized thermal blanket to cover a section of the outer skin of the ailing Skylab.

The blanket would replace a micrometeoroid shield which was torn away during the launch on Monday, leading to a heat problem with temperatures inside the spacecraft soaring to 100 degrees.

If you've ever broken the outer pane of a storm window during the winter, you can understand the problem affecting Skylab 1. Instead of letting warmth out, the loss of Skylab's shield is letting heat in.

The shield was designed to reduce the slim possibility that the space station workshop would suffer a pinhole puncture from streaking space dust.

But it also served a second function of helping to keep Skylab cool.

Problems developed aboard the $294 million space station Monday only 63 seconds after the 118-foot craft was launched from Cape Kennedy.

Later, two of six sets of solar cell panels failed to open properly, cutting the Skylab electrical power supply by half. The solar panels convert sunlight to electricity.

Conrad, Kerwin and Weitz were scheduled to be launched Tuesday for a 28-day mission aboard the space station. Instead, they flew to the Johnson Space Center near Houston to await developments.

The spacemen will remain in quarantine in Houston as engineers work to salvage some type of mission from Skylab. Launch of the astronauts was tentatively scheduled for 11:01 a.m. Sunday.

William C. Schneider, Skylab program director, said plan is under study to supplement the reduced power aboard Skylab by borrowing electricity from the Apollo command ship which ferries the astronauts to the space station.

Schneider said the medical, scientific, earth resource and other experiments will have to be curtailed because of the reduced power.

Even if the astronauts must work in a temperature around 90 degrees, engineers say they will be surrounded by the kind of "dry heat" Easterners often talk about when describing how surprised they were to find themselves comfortable in the blazing sun of Phoenix, Ariz.

Area attorney cites evidence that death penalty on decline

By BOB OURLIAN
State News Staff Writer

Evidence indicates that the use of capital punishment may be on its way out in the civilized world, a cochairman of the Michigan Committee Against Capital Punishment told students, Tuesday, in a Great Issues class.

Eugene Wanger, a private Lansing attorney, said there is historical "continuum" which shows a gradual decline in emphasis of the death penalty.

"Less than 200 years ago, England had over 200 crimes that were punishable by death," he said. "Now, England, as well as Canada have abolished capital punishment."

"Throughout the world, the number of crimes punishable by death have been greatly reduced," Wanger said.

Also, in contrast to the public displays of capital punishment in old world and Puritan times, when a person is executed today, it is done with few people present. The press is not allowed to take any pictures to show the outside public.

Also contrary to past years, the execution is not drawn out and bloody. "You find that when somebody is executed, it is done as quick and painlessly as possible," Wanger told students.

This evidence demonstrated that capital punishment is fading away, Wanger believes.

He is, however, distressed that the death penalty is being reinstated in many states.

In 1846, Michigan, the first governmental jurisdiction in the English speaking world to abolish capital punishment, Wanger said. In Michigan's 1963 constitution, Wanger added, Article IV, Section 46 states, "No law shall be enacted providing the penalty of death."

"Proponents of capital punishment," Wanger challenged, "will have to bear the burden of showing the need for a state to take a life and for Michigan take a life, where it has done so for over 125 years."

He continued his case against those in favor of capital punishment saying, "Capital punishment is not only useless fighting crime, but it positively harms society."

Wanger pointed to the eight innocent people in the country who were executed and found free of guilt to late.

"In the whole universe nothing can be more horrible than the execution of the wrong man."

Hearing planned on Kellogg union

A hearing on the dispute between the Kellogg Co. Student Employees Assn. and the MSU administration scheduled to be held before the Michigan Employment Relations Commission at 10 a.m. on June 5 and 6 in the state Dept. of Labor Building, 300 E. Michigan Ave.

A hearing is necessary to resolve the conflict, the relations commission said, because the parties have become "polarized" over the issue.

At a May 2 meeting with MSU administrators and elections officer from the state commission, the Kellogg association asked the University for recognition as a separate bargaining unit.

The administration refused, saying the Kellogg students employees did not constitute a unique community of students.

COMPUTERS TO POOL DATA

Network to link universities

By TERI ALBRECHT
State News Staff Writer

A $1 million computer network, that will link MSU, University of Michigan, and Wayne State University, was dedicated Tuesday at the Kellogg Center.

The Michigan Educational Research and Information Triad (MERIT), Inc., program is an effort to pool the research data and information banks of the state's largest universities.

The computer network will have provisions for high-speed numerical computations and information resources stored in each computer system at each university.

Key University officials and Michigan legislators called the project "an initial effort to pull together the resources of the three schools, creating more cohesion, especially in the area of long-range research."

The computer network system has been in planning stages for the past five years, under the directorship at MSU of Milton Muelder, vicepresident for research development.

Funded by the Michigan legislature with $600,000 and by the National Science Foundation with another $400,000, the network expects to need further funding by the legislature, but is an independent, nonprofit corporation.

Though Rep. William R. Copeland, D-Wyandotte, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said he did not know how much additional appropriation would be necessary, he added: "naturally they will want additional funding, however, I hope this will soon become self-supporting."

Copeland, who formally presented the network dedication, said he was a chief proponent of the project's funding in the legislature and added, "their system would not have had a foot in the door had I not given approval for appropriations."

Muelder said he did not know what, if any, costs would be charged to MSU students and faculty for use of the computer system. But he added that much of its use would be by students and faculty collaborating in studies funded by various grants.

Thomas Owen, asst. director of the National Science Foundation, said, during the ceremonies, that the foundation is interested in the computer system as a "pilot program."

"The computer network provides an excellent pilot system for use in identifying potential problems and in deriving solutions that can be applied on a much broader scale to computer networks of the future," he said.

Provost John Cantlon emphasized that the combined capacity of the computer systems could permit further interaction in research data.

"When all three information centers are linked, students who have problems in research projects have ready access to the library resources of all three and the capabilities of the different computers," he said.

The system is hooked up as a telephone-teletype portable computer and a student must have permission by his professor relating to a specific course in order to use the systems network.

Muelder said that the project will be open to linkups with other state colleges should they request to participate in the program.

"In addition, we hope not only to embrace areas of information centers in Michigan, but also expand out of state, to areas which could help our educational efforts and concentrations," he said.

Oil halt underscores Arab political power

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Four Arab nations stopped pumping oil briefly Tuesday in a gesture of support for the Arab struggle against Israel.

Their slowdown, while only symbolic, underscored the increasing talk among Arab leaders about using their oil riches as a political tool in the Middle East.

Meanwhile, Secretary of State William P. Rogers appealed to Venezuelan leaders for joint development with the United States of potentially rich oil reserves.

Rogers said development of the vast deposits in the belt along the Orinoco River could double the Western Hemisphere's oil reserves.

Libya suspended pumping for 24 hours, the official Libyan News Agency reported.

Algeria, Iraq and Kuwait said they suspended pumping for one hour, complying with an agreement by the Federation of Arab Trade Unions in Cairo earlier in the month.

Western oil company officials maintained supplies were not affected by the pumping halt.

Effective or not, the gesture added a note of urgency to the talk in Arab capitals of turning their balked gold into a political force against Western support for Israel.

COGS denies PIRGIM fund bid

By LINNEA SLATER
State News Staff Writer

The Council of Graduate Students (COGS), refused, its Monday meeting, to donate $650 to the Public Interest Research Group in Michigan (PIRGIM).

PIRGIM had asked for a $650 to pay about half the cost of hiring a summer intern. Five interns are expected to work on projects this summer.

COGS had asked PIRGIM at the last COGS meeting if the money could be allocated with the provision that an MSU graduate student be hired or at the project COGS money supported would be used directly to graduate student welfare. PIRGIM representatives said they could not guarantee that such stipulations would be followed.

COGS defeated a motion which would have bottled the funding request in the Finance Committee. Definitely as a way to step the request. Several COGS representatives said that COGS should make its final public rather than keep PIRGIM waiting. The representatives used the request because COGS could not afford to give away $650, which is five per cent of the COGS budget.

In other business, COGS appointed three graduate students to the COGS seats on University standing committees and reappointed 18 students who wished to continue working on University committees.

Three important committees received these appointments: Tom Louis, East Lansing graduate student, and Pam Deiss, Midland graduate student to the Academic Council; Gary Slimak, Clawson graduate student, to the Graduate Council; and Gratia Worgess, East Lansing graduate student, to the Graduate Judiciary.

Other appointments included: Mark Phillips, Southfield graduate student, Ed Leinbach, East Lansing graduate student, and Robert Swanson, East Lansing graduate student, to the University Educational Policies Committee; William Pierce, Olivet graduate student, and Richard Zollinger, Sacramento, Calif. graduate student, to the University Student Affairs Committee.

Steve Chazen, who was appointed to investigate the status of undergraduate assistantships on campus, reported that he had received information favoring the assistantships from two COGS representatives but had not had time to investigate the situation personally.

Undergraduates have been given assistantships mostly in the Depts. of physics and chemistry. The controversy over undergraduates in teaching positions in the Dept. of Biological Sciences was based on a graduate students misunderstanding, Chazen said.

In other business George Seperich, COGS treasurer, said he is working to get represented on the Athletic Council, a University committee responsible to the Executive Vice President.

PIRGIM report lacks depth; blanket condemnation unfair

Last week the Public Interest Research Group in Michigan (PIRGIM) released a shallow report on conditions in the fast-food service restaurants in Michigan.

The report is a blanket condemnation of fast-food chains. Since there are no names listed in the 41 page report, one must assume that all fast-food restaurants are equally suspect.

In the past, PIRGIM's major strength has been in depth reports, the depth which is sadly lacking in this report.

The "study" is filled with nameless people giving very damaging accounts of practices going on in nameless fast-food chains. PIRGIM kept the report in the anonymous stage to avoid lawsuits.

As it now stands, the report is seriously lacking in credibility. Every fast-food service in Michigan stands equally condemned by PIRGIM's inability to provide specifics.

The question now becomes - why didn't PIRGIM hold this report until it could legally substantiate the claims it makes?

There are two possible answers. One is that they felt it was their duty to the public to release a half-baked report immediately rather than a well-substantiated report in the future. The other is that it seemed like a good way to get some much-needed publicity. Perhaps the real answer lies somewhere between the two.

One thing in PIRGIM's favor is that they may be on to something. While one must question the methods used in the report and the over-all weakness of it, the rebuttal to the report has been even weaker.

State Dept. of Public Health officials have stated that some of the conditions PIRGIM reported could possibly exist and cite inadequate manpower as the reason why regulations are not better enforced. Most fast-food chains have not replied at all, considering the report unworthy of any comment.

PIRGIM does not deserve commendation for this study. It is poorly documented and the means used to gather the information are highly suspect. That they may be on to something seems to be more luck than actual skill.

Food examinations need restructuring

A recent PIRGIM report criticizing both fast food services and local and state health departments, despite its shortcomings, has indicated that there is a need for the state to take over the inspection of all food handling operations in Michigan.

The State Public Health Dept. now employs six men who serve in advisory capacities to the 20 local health units throughout Michigan that employ over 400 people.

These local health departments not only inspect food services, but also inspect for 20 other areas including water supplies, sewage, swimming pools, housing and air pollution.

David Hodgson, asst. chief of the food service division of the state health dept., said that some local health departments spend about 50 per cent of their time inspecting food services, which does not allow adequate time for the inspection in the other 19 areas.

At the same time, other local health departments spend too little time inspecting food services while concentrating on the 19 other areas.

If the state of Michigan wishes to improve sanitation standards in all areas under current inspection, local health departments must be alleviated of some obligations.

With the necessary legislation to provide funding for additional manpower, the Public Health Dept. can take on the onus of food service inspection and give it the attention PIRGIM has shown to be necessary.

O'Brien's abortion

To the Editor:

I am appalled to read of Rep. O'Brien's House resolution opposing the performance of abortions at the University Health Center.

To take such a stand based on the fear that "we won't have enough students to fill our elaborate schools which have cost millions of dollars" shows a gross insensitivity not only to the existing population crisis, but more importantly, to the human needs of women.

Shall the individual woman with an unwanted pregnancy pay for the shortsightedness of those who built schools for the products of postwar baby boom?

Carrying O'Brien's point to its logical extreme, I can imagine that we would someday be required to bear children in order to guarantee that the schools not go empty!

O'Brien further believes that his constituents deserve some say in whether people may obtain abortions at the University Health Center.

He would make an individual's problem with her own body once more a matter of public concern. This is an intolerable infringement on an individual's rights.

If Rep. O'Brien is so concerned with preventing abortions, he could put his efforts into seeing that the bill permitting contraceptive education in public schools, which recently passed the Senate, passes in the House. He might then leave us alone to deal with what should be a private matter between us and our physicians.

Front end troubles

To the Editor:

I wish to report an almost identical experience to that of Richard K. Freer (State News, May 10) with the Roberts Automotive Center.

Last August, my wife took our car to Roberts for a tune-up, and after examining the car, they told her the car had serious front end problems, that it was unsafe to drive and quoted a price of $120 to repair it.

At the suggestion of a friend, we took our car to Liskay's Auto Safety Center, where we were assured a front end alignment was all that was needed. This was done for $10.

We have had no front end trouble since.

Lack of organization hurts black students

Recently the Southern Africa Liberation Support Committee was formed to inform people inside the United States about the liberation struggles being waged in southern Africa.

The committee seems to be headed in the right direction, especially as far as black people are concerned, because black people in America are hereditarily linked to African people's

The committee is composed of most of the elements which make up a good organization: concern, dedication and people who integrate serious study with practice. The only element lacking is interested blacks. Out of a group of ten there are only four blacks.

The next question that must be asked is where the black student movement is. It seems to be a good question in light of coming events such as African Liberation Day and talk of the Sixth Pan-African Congress.

In 1968-69 black students were among the most progressive in the country. There was always some kind of activity going on. Not activity for the sake of activity, but activity based upon concrete study and practice.

When Stokely Carmichael was on campus, the black student population turned out en masse. But shortly afterwards, black students regained their old consciousness and returned to the role of just being students.

The failure of black students to be a progressive force at MSU is not just a problem of outside forces. The problem is organizational as well as ideological. Until some black student or a large group of black students decide to seriously study student organizational and ideological problems, black students will remain subject to the whims of an educational system which is systematically opposed to the plight of black and other oppressed people.

Their skills must be transferred back to the black community via independent educational institutions. That is what the movement is all about.

The black student movement at the University lacks three important organizational elements: concrete objectives and functional organizational definitions, concrete goal is something more than just the word freedom.

Black students must define what their relationship to the black community will be in the future and how they will function to serve their communities. Any attempt to define the black community as black students at MSU will only lead to a false notion. The University provides black students with the hope of success one day, while the black community in reality only provides continual struggle.

Black students must become student workers. A student worker is one who integrates serious study with practice. While at MSU, black students should gain the skills and knowledge to be selectively taken back to the black community.

The responsibility for the revitalization of the black student movement does not depend upon how many people are involved. The responsibility is up to each individual black student. The individual must decide that "to be" does not mean "to be like" our oppressors.

Black students must realize that there is no such thing as a neutral education process. Education either functions as an instrument, which is used to facilitate the integration of the younger generation into the logic of the present system and bring conformity to it, or it becomes the practice of a freedom as a means by which men and women deal critically and creatively with reality to discover how to participate in the transformation of their world.

The Doctor's Bag

By ARNOLD WERNER, M.D.

Letters may be addressed to Dr. Werner at the University Health Center. Names need not be included unless a personal reply is requested.

I am studying to be a dancer and also enjoy jogging. It is undesirable for dancers to develop bulky muscles. My dance teacher said that heavy jogging would develop big athletic muscles. Is this true? (Written by a woman.)

There are many factors that go into muscle size and shape other than just exercise. The shape of muscles appears to be largely dependent upon the presence or absence of androgens (male hormones). Hormones with androgenic activity are found in both men and women as are hormones with estrogenic (feminizing) qualities.

In the presence of large amounts of androgen, muscles tend to assume more mass and appear more bulky. The tendency can be accentuated by certain types of exercises such as weight lifting. However, women who engage in the same type of activities as men will not develop as bulky appearing muscles because of a lack of sufficient amount of androgens in their systems.

Another important fact in the shape of muscles appears to be genetic. Body size and shape is often hereditary and two people from different families on the same diet engaged in the same activities are apt to have vastly different appearing muscular configurations. An interesting sidelight to this is that there are also differences between individuals in terms of muscle metabolism so that some people are capable of energy expenditure over a very long period of time whereas others are better equipped to utilize large amounts of energy over a short period of time. This is most apparent if one studies the difference between sprinters and long distance runners, where they often have markedly different body configurations and also have different patterns of energy consumption during activity. Jogging and swimming tend not to develop bulky muscles, but rather to develop thinner muscles with longer fibers.

Though I have been able to have normal sexual relations with several women, I sometimes lost my erection after penetration. It usually happens because I am unable to block out a certain memory: As a child I was taught to use a euphemism for the word penis (which I never heard used by anyone else) and was endlessly teased by my platmates for using it. Though it may seem like a minor incident, I cannot block it out of my mind. Is there anything I can do?

I guess that the euphemism is sufficiently distinctive, for you are reluctant to even mention it in your letter. However, I must admit you have really made me curious about what word could possess such magic.

Particularly in the area of sexual performance, the capacity for a single unpleasant event to inhibit activity is certainly remarkable. The intrusion of this obsessional thought at such inopportune times as you describe, should not be difficult to deal with. You need to see someone experienced in working with behavioral techniques to extinguish unwanted thoughts. I suggest you call the Counseling Center (355-8270) for an appointment and ask to see such a person.

I am a 21-year-old woman. My pubic hair is straight (not curly) and quite long, extending as far as three inches on the insides of my legs. My problem causes me embarrassment when I am dressing in the residence hall and wearing bikinis in the summer. I was wondering how common this is and why pubic hair curls (or why mine do not). Would it be related in any way to the effect that I have used a razor or scissors to trim the hair?

For the life of me I cannot figure out why pubic hair curls. The answer is probably lost in our heritages somewhere. Anyway, there is really no reason why you shouldn't trim the hair so it is more comfortable and the appearance is less obvious. It will cause no harm and probably will ease hygiene considerably. Incidentally, have seen other people with straight pubic hair but never really discussed the matter with them.

I would like to know if pubic hair turns gray as one ages.

Yes, though at a slower rate than the hair on one's head.

Reporter informers

To the Editor:

With all of the shouts of "police informers," I think it's time to put the whole issue in perspective.

The informers on this campus are not all from the police. The press uses them all the time. They're called reporters.

"Don't be silly," you say, "reporters are aboveboard." Are they? I fail to see the difference between a reporter who sits quietly without identifying himself in a meeting while taking notes and a police informer who does the same thing. Indeed, some of the things the press does to get information are as bad, if not worse, than what the police do.

"But police informers are trying to catch you at something, while reporters are merely trying to inform the public." I am no longer naive enough to believe that. I know of too many situations where the press, too, has been trying to catch someone at something. The investigation and crucifixion of Dana Braden on the pages of the State News is an example.

"But the police can do a lot more damage through their informers than a newspaper can." Is that proven? It seems to me that defamation by a newspaper can be just as personally damaging as a police file; indeed, the police must show you have broken a law before they can take any action against you, while all a newspaper has to do is print its allegations and the damage is done.

"What about freedom of speech? The possible presence of a police informer inhibits and intimidates a group." And so does the presence of a newspaper reporter. How freely can one speak when he knows that what he says may be quoted out of context and used in a biased way in tomorrow's newspaper by the reporter sitting there?

And what about the Republican who sits in on an SDS meeting, or the Democrat who attends a College Republican meeting? They, too, are informers, if only for themselves. And they, too, inhibit free speech.

The key word here is "intimidation," and the police do not have the monopoly on the commodity. If people want to attend meetings of various groups merely to gather information, that is their right. But if they attend meetings in order to intimidate the people there, that's wrong, whether practiced by the police, the press or an individual.

Warning!

To the Editor:

Last Saturday I purchased some items from State Discount. I received my change, and as I walked out the door I realized that I had been shorted $5.00.

I returned to the cashier immediately and told her what had happened. She replied that she could not do anything then, but took my name and telephone number and said they would call me.

No one called, so I went to the store and inquired if the mistake had been found. I was told that no extra money had been counted, and I would be notified if anything new occurred. I doubt very much that my money will be returned.

Recent art redundant, authority says

By MAUREEN GENTLE
State News Reviewer

Ivan Karp, director of the O.K. Harris Gallery in New York, gave a fascinating presentation on the New York art scene last week at Kresge Art Center. Karp, who says he views the work of some 50 artists a week, has some definite ideas about the tired and the trendy in contemporary art.

In what he called a summary of modern times, Karp dismissed the recent works of many well-known artists as redundant. He criticized Adolf Gottlieb for merely "re-experiencing" his own art, as evidenced in a recent work done in his familiar but overworked abstract style. Karp feels that such an artist, who has followed an idea to its limit, must either invent new forms or hang up his brushes.

One such new form, a recent trend in painting called empty center, was labelled by Karp as a result of the "anxiety in abstract art." Karp did not praise the refinement and economy of this style, composed of the barest essentials of space, color, and form. Instead, he criticized recent empty center works of Jules Olitski and Kenneth Noland for their shallowness and their basic lack of artistic conviction.

Karp showed numerous examples of another interesting trend in art that is receiving severe denouncement from establishment critics, namely the radical or photo-realists. The subject of these works is what Karp called the "Rocky Mountains of the 20th century," the franchised hamburger stands and pick-up trucks that grace the country side.

Other favored subjects of the photo-realists are horses, inspired by documents known to the trade as horse fan magazines, and a macroscopic vision of a foil gum wrapper, blown up to 12 by 5 feet. Karp praised the visual vitality in these simple observations.

While painting is exhibiting various disturbing symptoms of the times, contemporary sculpture has apparently never been healthier, Karp noted. The trend is an art based on the nature of materials, works neither analytical nor intellectualized. Instead, this art is straightforward, honest, and refreshingly symmetrical.

In one work by Robert Morris, unsightly carpet matting was "resurrected" as a fine arts material. Karp called this work an example of "art about the nature of disreputable materials."

Another set of sculptures, by John De Andrea, exploit polyester resin, a material that, when painted, uncannily resembles human flesh. De Andrea's life-sized, life-like nude couple made of this material recreates human presence to the extent of causing extreme uneasiness in the viewer, who feels as if he is eavesdropping on an intimate encounter.

Karp concluded his talk on an optimistic note concerning the state of art in America today. Defining fine art as any work that changes, provokes or adjusts the viewer's sensory perception, Karp's presentation substantiated his belief that creative energy in art has never been higher.

'Godot' captivates audience

By DAVID HOHENDORF
State News Reviewer

Samuel Beckett has never offered works into which the modern audience can flee from more harsh realities. Certainly, "Waiting For Godot," the latest production of the Ledges Playhouse, is no exception. Unfortunately, Beckett belongs to a class of writers often read, quoted and discussed, but seldom viewed. This naturally denies other important dimensions to any playwright's work. Therefore, this production offers a chance to experience an important work that will not often be repeated.

"Waiting For Godot" is a challenging work to produce. By its very nature, it demands that all elements of production exhibit skill and talent for a successful presentation. Surely the entire staff at the Ledges deserves praise for its success in handling these elements.

Thomsen as Vladimir attempting to pass two days in the country marked by nothing more than waiting for the mysterious Godot. Both men were excellent, combining their skill with Beckett's strange wit to draw the audience into the expectations and the agonies of the pair.

audience when there was "nothing to be done."

"Waiting For Godot" should be viewed before it completes its run at the Ledges this week. An excellent presentation of a work of this nature should not be missed.

This new recording of works by ragtime composer Scott Joplin has the smell of a ripoff around it.

This does not mean that the performances recorded are bad. On the whole, they are very well done. The album includes the two solo piano versions of "The Entertainer" and "Sun Flower Slow Drag" by pianist Myron Romanul.

The enormity of the crime is seen when it is realized that for the price of this record one can have both of the original Nonesuch recordings of Joplin that have the piano versions of the rags.

To further top it off, the Nonesuch recordings present more style performances. The only point that Angel has for it is that these are original orchestrations of the rags as found in "Red Back Book," collection of rags for theaters, dance halls, park bandstands. They good orchestrations, repetitious.

Brother Sun

Graham Faulkner is comforted by his mother Valentina Cortese in Paramount Pictures' "Brother Sun, Sister Moon" now playing at the Meridian theatre. Director Franco Zeffirelli's interpretation of the early years of St. Francis of Assisi is his first film since the acclaimed "Romeo and Juliet."

Zeffirelli misses point in film on St. Francis

By BILL MECHANIC
State News Reviewer
Franco Zeffirelli's "Brother Sun, Sister Moon" is a turgid extravaganza of simplicity and innocence. Zeffirelli seemingly does not understand that the road to excess does not lead to the devout, Spartan life of St. Francis of Assisi.

St. Francis, who disdained the materialism within the Catholic Church in the 13th century to discover a more earthy, natural path of expression and communion, is returned by Zeffirelli to the bonds he so thoroughly rejected.

Francis, played by a typical new - young - star - blank - eyed, vacant faced Graham Faulkner - exemplifies his beliefs in "Brother Sun, Sister Moon" through grand gestures and picturesque actions. It is as if this Francis held the key to symbolism within his metaphysical hand.

In one sequence, though any number of scenes would do, Francis takes off all his clothes in the middle of the town square. This magnificent gesture, which must have overexerted the screenwriters' minds, is as contrived a symbol of antimaterialism as one could possibly conceive.

Further alienating Francis' sincerity in this film, is Zeffirelli's insistence on drawing the line of the worthy and unworthy with castrating clarity. The bad guys, the materialists are groveling gluttons, while the good guys, the spiritualists, are just noticeable without halos.

It is always easier to make people on the screen look ugly, crude or repulsive than to make them look honest or sincere. Zeffirelli succeeds in the easier path but fails in the more difficult, the sincere.

Because Zeffirelli takes the easier path, "Brother Sun, Sister Moon" becomes cliché - ridden, stereotyped nonsense rather than a meaningful recapturing of St. Francis of Assisi. The inspiration St. Francis searched for is lost through his concern with artifact and beauty.

The trouble is disregarding the St. Francis story in favor of beauty, Zeffirelli strangles St. Francis in the same materialism he tried to escape. It is sincerity, not beauty, which Zeffirelli fails to understand as the point of his film.

Blues band plays 'quiet' gig

By GARY OZANICH
State News Reviewer

There are three blues bands that stand head and shoulders above the rest. The Paul Butterfield Blues Band and the James Cotton Band are two of them. The third played at the very Monday night - Siegel - Schwall Band (at times referred to as Corky's Good Time Band).

Any one of these bands can at times almost point to a religious experience. Not only do they play good blues, but they have a very energized, live show.

The Siegel - Schwall Band consists of Corky Siegel on harp, electric guitar and vocals; Jim Schwall on guitar and vocals; Shelly Plotkin on drums and Rolloff Radford on bass.

Those who grew up in Detroit and were into music in the 1960s undoubtedly caught the band at the Chessmate Coffeehouse, where they would tear the place up on a regular basis. The Siegel - Schwall Band is a rarity - they are more interested in playing music to a good audience than in making money. For a long time they refused to play the ballrooms or large arenas because they felt their performance was designed for a smaller and more intimate atmosphere.

Their return to the Brewery marked the end of a long absence from this area. The last time the band was here, they put on a legendary performance at Grandmothers (later the Tini Lizzie, now the Brewery) on Easter Sunday 1970.

The show on Monday was nice, good enough to please any hard - core Siegel - Schwall freak. What was really nice, was that the band played at a low volume (they didn't "want to hurt anyone's ears.") One had to listen instead of reacting, a very nice change and a rarity in this area.

Musically, the performance showed just how talented the individuals are. Siegel is one of the best harp players, bouncing around on stage as he builds to climactic solos. His vocals are unique - choppy and nasal - but pleasant to hear.

Schwall's guitar work also is unique, with a highly individualized tonal quality. He is a fine guitarist, not getting into the repetitive - riff syndrome, but staying loose and creative.

Drummer Plotkin and bassist Radford, provide excellent backing for the individualism of Siegel and Schwall, giving the band their cohesiveness and integration.

If you are one of the "unbaptized" and have never caught the Siegel - Schwall Band live, you missed a nice chance Monday.

Senate passes bill allowing hospitals to deny abortions

The Michigan Senate approved a bill Tuesday which would allow any hospital, clinic or other medical facility to refuse to perform abortions without civil or criminal liability.

The bill also forbids a hospital from refusing to hire a person or from discharging an employee for refusing to assist in an abortion.

The legislation, which passed 32-1, is intended to permit hospitals to decline from performing abortions without fear of legal suits.

Sen. Daniel Cooper, D-Oak Park, the only opponent of the bill, said the legislation could be unconstitutional because it allows publicly supported hospitals to refuse to perform a certain operation.

"You're letting a board of directors of a publicly funded hospital make a decision, based on religious beliefs," Cooper said.

But supporters of the bill contended that hospitals have the right to decide whether or not they will perform a particular operation.

"It is a policy decision. A hospital may decide not to perform an operation because of other reasons. You can't always say a decision is based on religious reasons," Sen. William Ballenger, R-Delta Township, said.

The bill's sponsor, Sen. Alvin DeGrow, R-Pigeon, also defended the measure. "It's a conscience clause," he said. "There are institutions who don't want to take part in abortions because of moral beliefs."

Panel urges passage of House abortion bill

A state House bill allowing hospitals and doctors to refuse to perform abortions cleared one hurdle on the road to passage by the Michigan House of Representatives Tuesday when the Committee on Social Services and Corrections voted to recommend its passage.

The recommendation approved 7-3 opened the way for debate on the measure by members of the House.

Patricia Silea, executive director of the Michigan Women's Commission, called the proposed House bill unconstitutional and unnecessary in testimony before the committee. She said the measure was a de facto denial of what the Supreme Court has already decided.

"Just because the Supreme Court makes a ruling does not mean I have to agree with it and go along with it," Rep. Peter Kok, R-Grand Rapids, sponsor of the bill, said.

The bill sets a dangerous precedent for regulating medical services offered by hospitals, Silea said. No legislation is necessary to allow hospitals to refuse to provide emergency care, sterilization operations, she said.

The proposed bill is too broad, John Veenstra, American Civil Liberties Union representative, told the committee. It is wrong to give publicly financed institutions a blanket protection from having to provide needed medical services, he said.

Though he opposed an abortion personally, committee member Rep. James Bradley, D-Detroit, said, "I wonder if I have the right to force my views on others. I wonder if we have this right."

No one testified in favor of the bill to the committee.

Area OEO training service saved

By JANE SEABERRY
State News Staff Writer

Youth, community involvement, and citizens training programs are among the services of the capital area Office of the Economic Opportunity (OEO) that have been saved, at least temporarily, as a result of a court ruling blocking administrative measures to phase out the OEO.

The ruling also keeps the seven community centers in Ingham, Eaton, Clinton and Shiawassee counties open. Three of the centers, located in Lansing, are essentially referral services that help low income people find housing and jobs.

The federal district court's ruling April 16 stated that the OEO was created by Congress and that only Congress could eliminate it. Top officials of the Nixon administration had sent directives last January to phase out the office. However, Charles Haskell, acting executive director of the capital area office, said the court ruling made those directives "null and void."

Elimination of the OEO would affect its own programs as well as programs of the Dept. of Health Education and Welfare, the Dept. of Housing and Urban Development and the Dept. of Labor, Haskell said.

"Other agencies wouldn't have a vehicle through which to function," he said.

The capital area office is scheduled to receive funds through Sept. 30. It has applied for additional funds to last through March 1974. Haskell said that $280,000 a year is involved in the dispute over the fate of the OEO.

Haskell is hopeful about receiving the court-ordered funds, but added that the Nixon administration has 60 days to appeal the decision which could result in the reinstatement of the phaseout.

Meanwhile, Haskell is unsure of congressional action, but is optimistic that the economic opportunity offices will remain open.

"The struggle to save the Office of Economic Opportunity shifts to Congress," Haskell said. "Because of various administrative investigations - like Watergate - it's difficult to tell what Congress will do," he said.

Delay asked in activists' trial

CADILLAC (UPI) — Attorneys for two members of the Rainbow People's party were to file a motion Tuesday in Circuit Court asking for a delay in their client's trial which is set to begin June 11.

Deadline

The deadline for applications for membership on the senior class council is 5 p.m. today. Applications will be taken until then in 307 Student Services Bldg.

The motion for continuance was to be argued by attorney Hugh (Buck) Davis on behalf of his clients, Lawrence (Pun) Plamondon, 27, and Craig Blazier, 22, who are free on bond on charges of armed robbery, conspiracy to extort, extortion and criminal usury in connection with an alleged attempt to collect $3,000 in a marijuana transaction with Uwe Wagner of Beulah.

A spokesman for the party, David Fenton of Ann Arbor, said Monday that Davis also was to ask Benzie County Circuit Court Judge William Peterson for a change of venue in the case.

Davis said the major political and legal questions that the defense hopes to raise in the case were time consuming and expensive and that this "expensive preparatory defense work" cannot be accomplished by June 11.

"We intend to show through our case that these people in the state attorney general's office and the Michigan State Police are just legalized gangsters," Plamondon said.

Fenton said that the request for a change of venue was necessary "in order to insure a jury of peers."

Plamondon was a key figure in last year's landmark U.S. Supreme Court decision declaring wiretapping of radical domestic groups illegal without a court order. He was charged with conspiracy in the September 1968 bombing of a CIA office in Ann Arbor, but the Justice Dept. dropped charges rather than disclose the wiretap evidence it had gathered.

Academic Senate slates meet today

Reports on the review of departmental chairmen, the current status of academic plans for the College of Urban Development and the residential college review will be presented at today's Academic Senate meeting at 3 p.m. in 104B Wells Hall.

The review of departmental chairmen, mandated by the senate bylaws to occur about every five years, is a review of the desirability of continuing the appointment of each chairman and the chairman's willingness to continue in his position.

The College of Urban Development, set up in May, 1972, hopes to begin classes next fall term. The report will probably concern the status of the college's curriculum plans in the curriculum committee.

A report will also be presented on the first complete formal review of James Madison College, Justin Morrill College and Lyman Briggs College. Aspects of their operation are being studied. Recently controversy has surrounded the administration decision to eliminate Justin Morrill's intensive language program and relocate it to the Dept. of Roman Languages.

TV broadcast of Watergate hearings set

The Watergate hearing will be shown on the instructional television campus network, Channel 10, starting at 10 a.m. Thursday. A repeat broadcast will be carried by WKAR-TV at 8 p.m. All sessions will be carried on any television connected to the system.

Students probe city politics, economy

By SHARON HANKS
State News Staff Writer

For students anxious to probe the bastion of a structured classroom and investigate local nitty-gritty issues, relief is on the way through an independent study called Radical Research.

Radical Research, initiated this term by the Coalition for Human Survival, is an effort to probe the city's government, politics and economic mechanisms and point out areas of the city that demand immediate attention and improvement.

Some of the areas under investigation include commercial ownership, zoning, land use and sale, the city manager and the city budget and the administration of law by the police and the court.

Check on city

By regular investigation and publication of the results, Radical Research hopes to keep a constant check on the city of East Lansing.

Currently, 22 students are enrolled for either three or four University credits for no credit. The results of their work will hopefully offer more educational input into governmental decisions, Allen Clobridge, coordinator of the project said.

Clobridge said he expects the independent study to coordinate 50 to 100 undergraduate and graduate students with MSU professors next fall.

The project is also expected to expand to areas of research. Besides local government, law enforcement and economic issues, Clobridge said an internship program with the Ingham County Board of Commissioners will be available and research will be done on University-community relations.

Bank co-op

Eva Kipper, former MSU student, is exploring the possibility of a local bank co-op. "I have no idea what will come out of the research," she said, "but I've been interested in a bank co-op for a long time and it's strictly my own project."

Two other enthusiastic researchers, Margaret McNeil, East Lansing senior, and Pat Schrems, Saginaw freshmen, are tracing the life of the city residents' hard-earned tax money in East Lansing, namely -- the city budget.

They have been talking to the city planner, city manager, bankers and finance experts in an effort to understand the reasons behind the allocation of city funds.

Research demanding

Most students said the research was demanding, a little involved and not always exciting. But one researcher, Bruce Brown, noted he is gaining an adept and expert know-how about places he can go for information.

"I've also learned to use the library a lot more efficiently," he said.

So far, the students say they had no problem in obtaining credit for the research. The results of their work will be available by the end of July for $2 per copy.

Radical Research has gained further impetus by financial support from a group called Resist in Cambridge, Mass. The funds have been used for rent of an office at 501 MAC Ave. Students interested in doing Radical Research should contact the coalition for more information at 337-7274 during the evenings.

MICHIGAN'S SUPREME COURT said Tuesday that it will hear a case involving the right of home rule cities to hold executive city council meetings in private session.

The case involves a suit brought against the Flint City Council and city manager by the Flint Journal.

Both the Genesee County Circuit Court and the State Court of Appeals have ruled that the Flint City Council may not hold closed sessions.

When the lower courts ruled in the Journal's favor, the city took their appeal to the Supreme Court.

Kelley offered this opinion in a statement for Rep. Josephine Hunsinger, D-Detroit, who has held hearings on rescinding the ratification of the amendment which passed the Michigan House and Senate last year.

The opinion Kelley issued was based on the U.S. constitution, which provides a process of ratifying constitutional amendments, but none for rescinding them.

A $300,000 SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION for the Michigan Public Service Commission was approved 92-4 by the House Monday.

The money will be used to hire utility experts and management consultants to help the commission speed up their job of determining rate structures for Michigan's utility companies.

POLICE BRIEFS

TWO WOMEN TOLD campus police that a man exposed himself to them at 6:30 p.m. Monday in the second floor hallway of Rafter Hall.

The women told police that the man followed them up the stairs and said, "hey girls." Police said when the women turned around the man was standing with his hands on his hips exposing an erect penis.

The man was described as a white male, about 25 years old, six feet tall, 180 pounds with ear length reddish-blond hair and a mustache.

A TAPE DECK and bowling bag containing a bowling ball and shoes was stolen Sunday night from a Wilson Hall student's car parked in Lot F.

Entry to the car was gained by punching out the trunk lock. Total value of the articles was $113 and $50 damage was done to the car.

A STUDENT'S ROOM in Armstrong Hall was broken open between 10 a.m. Saturday and 5:30 p.m. Monday and cash and nine prescription pills were taken from a desk drawer. Campus police were told the door was locked at the time.

Popejoy's confidence high after super mile victories

By CHARLES JOHNSON
State News Sports Writer

When MSU's Ken Popejoy raced to a 3:57.0 clocking last week against Notre Dame, the feat left no doubt about the pint-sized runner's outstanding ability.

Nevertheless, there were still those who believed the performance to be just another chapter in the up and down collegiate track career of the Glenellyn, Ill. senior.

After all, hadn't Popejoy, after capturing the NCAA indoor mile title, suffered a complete collapse in the following conference outdoor season? Didn't the once-fabled blistering kick of Popejoy appear to be a thing of the past in last fall's cross country campaign?

Well, though the record in print still remains intact, it finally appears that Popejoy has shaken the undulating pattern and is ready to ascend to the mile paramouncy he periodically has known.

The past weekend saw Popejoy register an astounding victory at the

Martin Luther King Games in Durham, N.C., posting a 3:57.3 to edge out Reggie McAfee of North Carolina.

If you're keeping tab, that means in a two week span Popejoy has bagged two sub-four minute mile victories, which leaves no question of a fluke.

Perhaps the most bewildered of them all about Popejoy's amazing consistency is none other than the runner himself.

"I really shocked the stuffings out of myself when I ran the 3:57.0 against Notre Dame," Popejoy remarked. "However, with the win at the King games, my confidence is at an all-time high. I know now that I can run two types of races. I can strike out fast like I did in the Notre Dame meet or I can lay back and then use my kick like I did this weekend."

At the Martin Luther King Games, Popejoy overtook McAfee in the last 50 yards, which again says something for his finishing kick.

Though Popejoy readily admits his past unpredictability, he now believes that his relaxed attitude has made him a better runner.

"Previously I would be tight before a race and it sometimes would work against me," the Spartan runner said. "However, as of late I have just been running my own race and it's this relaxed atmosphere that is making the difference."

With the amount of high caliber competition Popejoy has faced this year, the pre-law major is not worried about this weekend's Big Ten meet.

"I don't think anyone can touch me in the conference," Popejoy remarked confidently. "Mike Durkin of Illinois is my toughest competition and I don't think he's capable of going under four minutes."

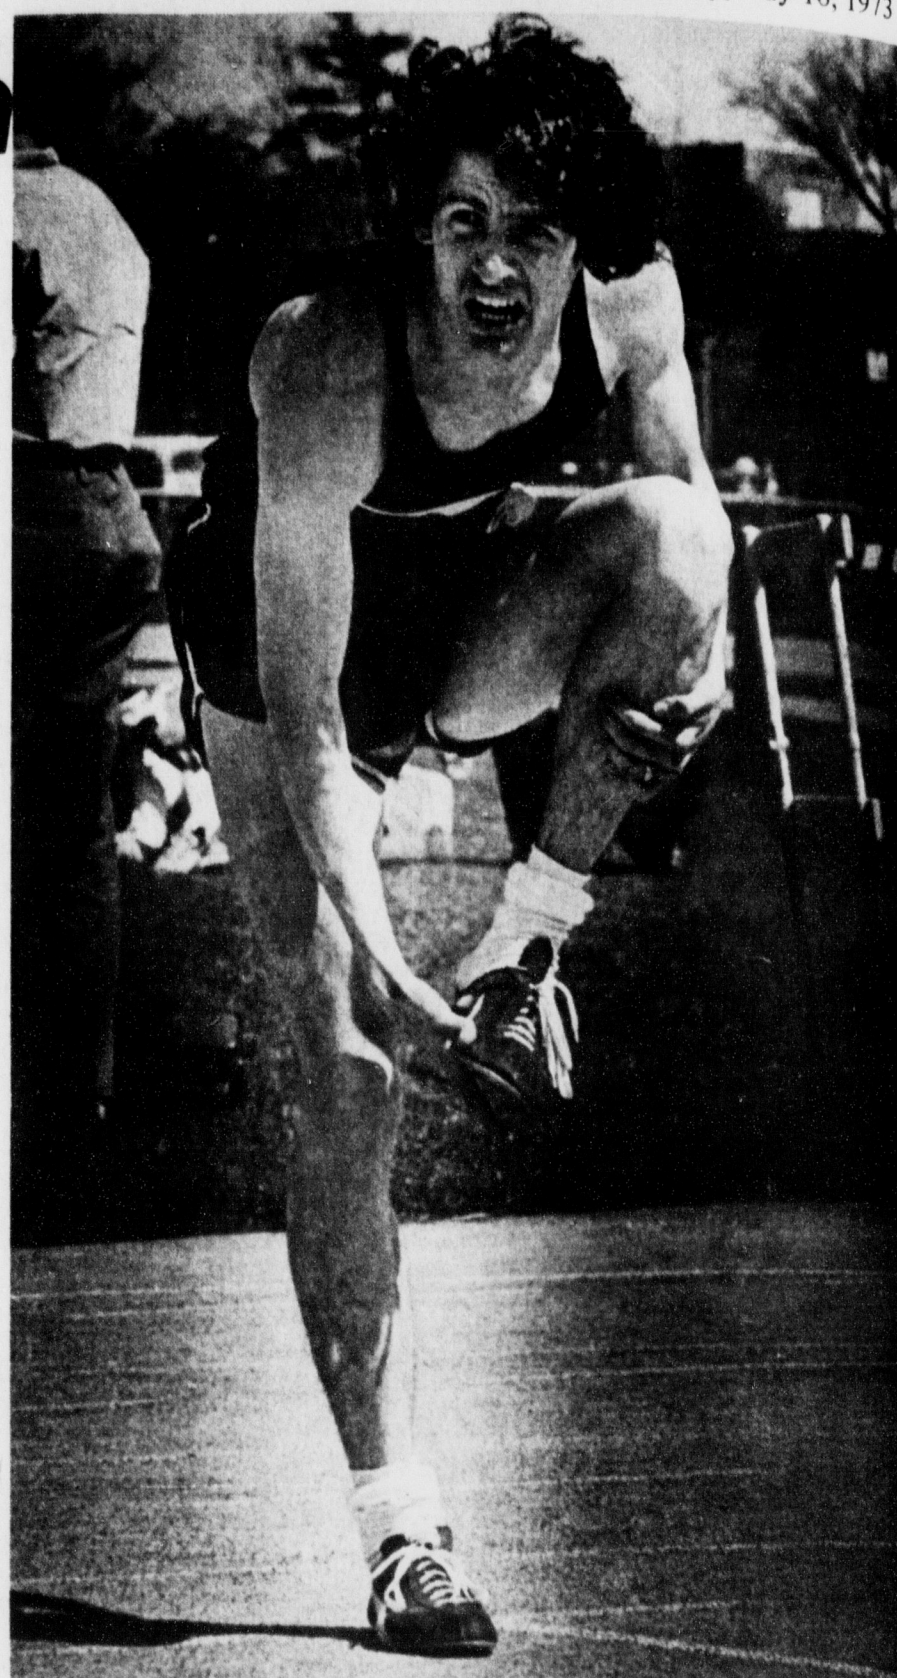

"Durkin's only a sophomore and is definitely a good miler, but I'm more confident than ever about winning the Big Ten. If the weather is good up in Minneapolis (site of the conference championships) I'm going to run under four minutes," Popejoy predicted.

With his career as a Spartan drawing to a close, Popejoy has his eyes set on law school, though he hasn't had much luck so far.

"I've applied to several law schools and I've been rejected from a fair amount, but a law career is first and foremost in my future," Popejoy said.

MSU will take a total of 17 men to the Big Ten championship meet this weekend, and though the Spartans have some great individual performers, Popejoy discounts the Spartan's chances for anything higher than a third place finish.

"Our goal is to make a respectable showing, and if we finish third at the conference meet we will have met our potential as a team."

The mile man

MSU's Ken Popejoy posted his second straight sub-four minute mile victory at the Martin Luther King Games last weekend, coming across the tape at 3:57.3. The previous week, the Glenellyn, Ill. senior had registered a 3:57.0 to become the best miler in Big Ten history.

Batsmen divide pair; Moore blanks CMU

By STEVE STEIN
State News Sports Writer

Lefthander Elliott Moore's first shutout of the season highlighted the afternoon for the Spartan baseball team Tuesday as MSU split a nonconference doubleheader with Central Michigan.

Moore pitched the Spartans to a 1-0 first game victory, but MSU dropped the nightcap to the Chippewas, 8-4.

The Spartans bats were once again silent, as MSU collected only five hits in the twinbill. Central's pitchers chipped in with 15 walks.

MSU's only run in the opener came in the sixth inning. Ron DeLonge led off the frame with a double over the rightfielder's head but stayed there as the next two batters went out.

However, Bailey Oliver drew a walk, Steve Cerez did the same, and then pinch hitter Larry Romaine drew the third free pass in succession from Chippewa pitcher Bob Kocisky to tally the run.

Kocisky was plagued with wildness as he walked nine Spartans during the contest.

Meanwhile, Moore wasn't allowing the CMU squad to put together a threat as he scattered five hits in the game. The Highland Park senior fanned five and walked only one, that one coming in the final inning.

The victory raised Moore's record on the season to 7-2, while Kocisky dropped to an even 5-5.

Tuesday's second game was a different story, however.

Central jumped on MSU starter Steve VanderLaan for runs in the first five innings and grabbed an 8-0 advantage.

Terry Lynch and Al Senchuck paced the Chippewas. Lynch had a double and a single and drove in five runs, while Senchuck had four hits, scored three runs and had three stolen bases.

MSU scored single tallies in the fifth and sixth innings and added two in the seventh to close the gap.

Bill Simpson tallied twice, both times after drawing walks. Amos Hewitt had MSU's first hit, a triple, which came in the sixth inning, scored once and drove in one run.

ISSUES NEW CHALLENGE

Larrowe getting itchy

By G.F. "PETRUCCHIO" KORRECK
State News Sports Writer

Here I was on the way to Yankee's to buy me some Al Caiola records and this dude stops me and says Lash Larrowe has come out of hiding.

Now this is a surprise. I know Lash is in some state of mental depression after losing paddleball to Tiger Jack and I can't figure why he wants to get out of it.

We goes to this old salvage yard with a hundred yard long sign which says "RUSSO'S JUNK" on front and we winds our way out back.

Holed up in the shell of a green '56 Buick is Lash - still wearing his uniform and grinning as if he seen hen's teeth.

"Ya bring my knockwurst sandwich?" Lash asks.

"No," says the dude.

Lash's uniform is green around the collar and sleeves and the smell is getting to my lungs.

"I'm glad you're here," says Lash to me.

I half grins with my hand moving to my mouth.

"I want you to issue me a challenge," Lash says.

"Oh?" says I.

"I been thinking, son," Lash says while pulling some rye bread from his beard. "I been thinking that I can't ever beat Tiger Jack, but that don't mean I can't beat no one else."

I moves to the back seat of a Pontiac and gives a listen.

"Anyways," Lash says, "This here fella Riggs beat this woman in tennis and I's thinking I can do the same in paddleball."

"Gee, Lash--" starts the dude.

"Yup," says Lash. "I can beat any woman on that campus in paddleball."

"You putting up any dough?" I asks.

"I's willing to go 50 cents," he says. "How 'bout putting up the residuals to your book," I asks.

"Well, maybe it's good to get the book in there, but I make kids buy it for my class and don't want to risk it."

"If you beat 'em you don't risk nothing. You ain't hedging there, are you, Lash?"

"No," he gets up. "I ain't hedging. Bring 'em all on -- let 'em use two paddles and cleats -- I don't care, I'll beat 'em all."

It was then I leaves, because I knows Lash with his ego on fire. He's probably still sitting there eating knockwurst and grinning, waiting for some lady to take him on.

Retired Spartan rooter continues work at MSU

By LYNN HENNING
State News Sports Writer

In addition to being a 73-year-old great-grandfather, Harold Brockbank has a number of things he's proud of.

Like his birthplace, England. Like the 19 years he spent as a MSU engineer. He's also plenty proud that he hasn't missed a MSU home football game since 1953.

And tacked solidly on his left lapel is the MSU Varsity Club pin that Harold is especially proud of; given to him last year when the club made him an honorary member.

Harold officially retired from MSU Jan. 1, 1967 from the agricultural engineering department. But he's still a regular on the campus, called over to help out whenever the athletic department needs assistance taking tickets or whenever a security guard is needed at Spartan Stadium or Jenison Fieldhouse.

"I've enjoyed it more since I've retired," Harold admitted. "I've always enjoyed the friendship of the athletes and the coaches. I've always respected them because they have a job to do."

Since he came to Lansing from Barrow, England in 1922, Harold has watched and known a good many athletes come down the MSU pipe.

"There have been some mighty good athletes. It's whatever you excel in that counts," he stressed. "Football is my favorite, I think you'd have to put Clint Jones and Herb Adderley on that list of top athletes. And George Webster was a good boy."

"On any team there's always an outstanding performer," he continued. "And there were always the guys who didn't get off the bench, but they were good boys who enjoyed what they were doing."

Harold came to MSU in 1948 after a couple of long stints at the Reo and Oldsmobile plants.

He took a position as a night engineer in a MSU research lab where he worked with students, helping them with doctoral work and attempting to improve efficiency of farm machinery.

He became involved in the MSU athletic picture soon after.

"I had always liked sports, I used to play soccer and rugby in England. Well, I started to ask around if there was any way I could see a football game without paying for it," Harold explained.

"So they put me on ticket taking. I've seen every football game here since 1953."

"They kind of kid me around here, they say they wouldn't be able to kick a ball without me there,"

There's scarcely a coach or a Jenison Fieldhouse administrator who doesn't know Harold, something he is intensely proud of along with his friendships with the athletes.

"I also work at the Campus Theater four or five nights a week taking tickets," Harold revealed. "I see the boys in there and they all holler. It's a nice feeling to have the boys come by and say hi to you."

After 25 years of being closely associated with MSU students Harold's formed some very definite opinions.

ATLANTA (UPI) — The Atlanta Braves and Detroit Tigers swapped minor-league catchers Monday. The Braves sent Bob Didier to Detroit's Toledo farm club in exchange for Gene Lamont, who goes to Atlanta's Richmond farm.

Didier was the regular catcher for the Braves in 1969 and was on the Atlanta roster in 1970-72. So far this season, Didier has batted .279 in 21 games at Richmond of the International League. Lamont had been used sparingly by Detroit this season.

MONTREAL — The Philadelphia Flyers Monday traded defenseman Rick Foley to the Detroit Red Wings for Serge Lajeunesse, the Wings' No. 1 draft pick in 1970.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS. — Tom Sanders, a 13-year veteran with the Boston Celtics and a tenacious defensive player, was named head basketball coach at Harvard University Tuesday, succeeding Bob Harrison.

NEW YORK — Willie Mays, the 42-year-old centerfielder for the New York Mets, denied Tuesday that his being placed on the disabled list meant his definite retirement.

Mays, suffering from either a pulled muscle or tendonitis in his right shoulder — the same shoulder which has been hurting him on and off the past three years — said the press conference was called to clarify his placement on the disabled list, which began Sunday.

"If I can play again I will," he said. "When I come back I'll see how things are."

"If I come back and can't play then I shouldn't play. If I can, I don't see why I shouldn't play again."

CHICAGO — Billy Williams' two-run homer sparked the Chicago Cubs to their seventh straight victory, a 4-3 win over the New York Mets Tuesday.

The win increased the Cubs' hold on first place to three games over the second place Mets.

Still at it

Harold Brockbank ranks pretty high on the Spartan fans' seniority list. The 73-year-old great-grandfather has taken tickets, been a Spartan Stadium and Jenison Fieldhouse security guard and hasn't missed a Spartan home football game since 1953. "I've always enjoyed the friendship of the athletes and coaches," he says.

Poet urges black sense of identity

By BILL TAYLOR
State News Staff Writer

Black students must begin to develop a sophistication for power if they are to become heroes for their children, Don Lee, revolutionary poet and political activist, said Monday.

Lee spoke before about 60 students in Wonders kiva as part of a lecture series sponsored by the Office of Black Affairs in conjunction with the Center for Urban Affairs.

"A culture is the sustaining force of any nation. We have been taught to be antiblack," Lee said. "Whites have imposed their frame of reference on the world."

Lee explained that black people are totally dependent upon others for resources. The first step in achieving liberation is that blacks must develop their own frame of reference.

This frame of reference would include unity, self determination, a collective work of responsibility, creativity and faith in relationship to Africa.

"Blacks have cultural, political, biological and economic ties to Africa," he said.

Lee compared the economic situation of blacks to Jews. He explained that black people see themselves vying for power among themselves and not together. "The Jewish people have a nationalistic conscience working for their people. They have developed a sophistication for power," he stated.

"You either work for your people or against them," he continued. "There is no in between the lines."

Many black activists say blacks are culturally deprived, but Lee said "we are culturally different."

"Romanticizing their existence" is one problem Lee said that blacks experience. "We are black people first and our vocation is second," he stressed.

Within the framework of black nationalism, Pan-Africanism, and African socialism blacks can begin to define existing problems, Lee said.

Lee explained that blacks must begin to define terms. He said Pan-Africanists are people who think in terms of survival. Black nationalism involves people moving in the interest of themselves and having control over the land that they occupy.

"We accept others' definitions of ourselves. We have no sense of identity," he said. "We must become examples for our young. The freedom falls on us."

Speakers will discuss experiences in Africa

Dennis and Ginger Mercer, spokespersons for the Liberation Support Movement — a group that studies African nationalist movements — will speak on campus Thursday and Friday about their experiences working in Southern Africa.

The Mercers will appear at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Parlors A, B and C of the Union and at 8 p.m. Friday in 35 Union.

The Mercers have spent several months working with groups such as FRELIMO, a Mozambique organization which is fighting to free the country from Portuguese minority rule.

The Mercers will show a film they have produced comparing areas controlled by the Portuguese to areas controlled by FRELIMO in Mozambique.

Crisis in America, United Ministries in Higher Education and the South Africa

Liberation Committee are sponsoring the appearance of the Mercers.

Lovemore Nyoni, a spokesman for the South African Liberation Committee says the Mercers were asked to speak, "because most Americans get their ideas about South Africa from what the newspapers and the government say. I question how much black and white Americans really know about South Africa."

Carol Thompson, spokeswoman for the South African Liberation Committee, said that Thursday's presentation will be primarily audio-visual. However, she said Friday's presentation will include a panel of the Mercers, African students and Palestinian students who will discuss the problems of African and Palestinian liberation struggles.

Revolutionary poet

Poet Don Lee told an audience in Wonders kiva Monday that "Whites have imposed their frame of reference on the world." Lee called for blacks to develop their own frame of reference to achieve liberation.

Graves urges gardens

Late plantings, poor growing fields and decreasing crop yields throughout the country will cause skyrocketing food prices this year, Graves notes.

Graves is not alone in expecting consumers to hoe down the price of food. Peter Brennan, U. S. Secretary of Labor, also favors victory gardens, and Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve System, recommends that housewives buy cheese as a meat substitute.

But Graves doubts that the Lansing City Council will support the idea.

"They're not much for gardening. I can't count on them, they're all travelers," Graves said.

Graves does not speculate that the idea will win him any votes from housewives.

In fact, Jean Tubbs, housewife and chairwoman of the 6th District Women's Political Caucus, broke out in a hearty laughter when asked about the victory over inflation gardens.

"Good old Jerry," Tubbs said. "He's always thinking of ways to keep us women at home."

"I'm in favor of gardens," she said with reservations.

"But it would have to be a 'togetherness project' with husbands and wives sharing the canning and planting responsibilities."

Residents protest proposed area land fill site

Judy Gordon, wife of elected group spokesman John Gordon, said that she knew of no area residents who were in favor of the landfill.

She described the landfill site as an agricultural area surrounded by residential homes.

"It is a beautiful piece of property that could be turned into a beautiful subdivision amid rolling hills," she noted.

The major complaints against the proposal concern traffic problems, Gordon said. Truck traffic would complicate driving conditions which are already bad and possibly endanger the structure of an overpass carrying Hagadorn Road across I-96, she claimed.

She also noted that the Huron Creek - which empties into the Red Cedar River - crosses the prospective landfill site and that the landfill itself would not be conducive to a pleasant entry into Lansing.

Fred Kellow, chief of the Division of Solid Waste Management, Environmental Protection Branch, Michigan Dept. of Natural Resources, noted that all solid waste disposal areas must be licensed by his department.

Environmental impact studies of the prospective site must be submitted and approved to get a license, he added. The board of public works has not yet submitted a license application, he said.

meeting, students in the audience voiced strong objections. "Bernitt was charged with reporting to the committee today," one student in the audience protested. "This committee has made a conscious attempt to filibuster."

Before the motion to adjourn was put to a vote, John "Sunshine" Massoglia gave a warning to the committee.

"This committee will be responsible for anything that happens," he said in reference to the committee's motion to adjourn before the informer business was discussed. "You assholes," he said and then stalked out of the room.

The motion to adjourn was defeated in a 6-5 vote, but the informer discussion did not begin because the committee "did not have time."

Bill Derman, professor of anthropology, requested, and Bernitt agreed, that today's meeting be open for community input.

The first discussion with Bernitt began when Jerry Kracht, aide to State Rep. Perry Bullard, D - Ann Arbor, directed a question to Bernitt regarding the definition of probable cause as used in the police search of a vehicle.

Bernitt defined probable cause as evidence convincing an officer that a crime has been committed or will be committed.

purpose," he says. Furthermore, he questioned the high priority given to lifelong education in the report. MSU's first commitment is to upgrade existing educational programs, which are terrible, Devries says.

"Simply to extend a watered down, inadequate education to the general population is irresponsible," he added.

William Vincent, instructor in humanities, also said lifelong education should not have equal priority with undergraduate and graduate education.

"It is probably my own prejudice but I think the university primarily should be for undergraduate education," Vincent says. "If lifelong education reduces the effectiveness of undergraduate education makes it so we do improve it, then we made a mistake."

media for alleged conflict of interest. Stratton Associates, a Southfield municipal consulting firm, he helped found and organized in 1963, was the first to receive approval to borrow with the state to repay private lenders. Hettiger active participation in the firm in 1968, and opened his income tax returns to prove he had received income from the firm in 1968.

"It hurt me personally," my family personal Hettiger said. "Half the news media in this town investigated me now, the governor has."

Hettiger said his position in the administration was not a pay-off for a campaign help he gave Milliken. Milliken appointed him director of the Department of Administration in January 1971, and executive secretary, a post he held over full time last month, September 1972.

He has been called "assistant governor" and "hatchet man," but Hettiger says he is really an expert and fire-fighter Milliken.

"It's a general management type of job," he said. "I do whatever is helpful to the governor, to free up time for highest priorities."

"You do many of the things that if he had time, he would do himself," he said.

Hettiger said he was thinking about going into industry.

Hettiger said he is seriously thinking about running for an office.

"Once you have this of a position, it's a step down into one position, and I would care for it," he said.

Reps delete shield bill section

By TOM HAROLDSON
State News Staff Writer

Supporters of the state press shield bill are claiming victory after the House defeated a controversial section of the measure Tuesday.

The section deleted by the House stated that only newsmen who have bylines attached to their stories could be protected by the shield bill. Opponents of this section said it would hurt the bill by destroying its original purpose.

"If the House keeps this section in, then there is no reason for this bill to exist," Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Kalamazoo had said.

With the removal of the byline section, by a vote of 63-47, Rep. Dan Angel, R-Marshall, attempted to delete from the bill two sections which state that newsmen involved in defamation suits may protect their sources unless the court states otherwise, and the newsmen who are party to a criminal act may not be protected by the shield bill. The House defeated this attempt also.

After a series of attempts by various opponents of the bill failed to change its current status, the measure was rushed to third reading, where its final fate will be determined. Rep. Jackie

Vaughn, D-Detroit, sponsor of the bill, said that on third reading, "there could be no more crippling amendments attached to it."

Vaughn said opponents of the bill were trying to attach amendments that would destroy the original intent of the bill. He said by getting it to third reading, it has a better chance of surviving any crippling amendments.

Vaughn said Tuesday's actions by the House, regarding the defeat of the byline amendment as well as the other defeats of damaging amendments, were a sign that the bill will be passed by the House Wednesday and sent to the Senate.

"I will predict that this bill will pass Wednesday and will get right over to the Senate for confirmation," Vaughn said. "We have taken too long to discuss this bill and the longer it waits around the more it is damaged."

Vaughn said he is happy with the shield bill as it is now because it has been perfected after long public meetings, House debate and professional press studies.

One press group which doesn't share Vaughn's enthusiasm is the Michigan News Broadcasters Assn. which urged its members Tuesday to oppose the bill because it is full of loopholes. The association cited two amendments which they said were evidence of loopholes, but one of these, the byline section, was removed in the House.

State cannot enforce meat laws, court rules

Michigan's strict meat processing laws can no longer be used to keep substandard meat out of the state.

The U.S. Supreme Court let stand Monday a decision barring Michigan from enforcing its rules against out-of-state meat processors. The court based its decision on a more lenient federal law already on the books.

But Michigan's 357 meat processors will still have to conform to the state law. Michigan uses in-state meat more than most other states do, a spokeswoman for the state Dept. of Agriculture said Tuesday.

The court's brief order came on an appeal by state Atty. Gen. Frank J. Kelley from a ruling on Oct. 13, 1972, by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati.

The U.S. Agriculture Dept. on Dec. 23, 1972, proposed bringing federal standards into line with Michigan's. The department gave interested parties until Feb. 21 to comment.

Current federal regulations permit the use in sausage products of the udders, lips, ears and snouts of cattle, sheep, swine and goats. Michigan law provides that only skeletal meats be used.

Contrary to Michigan law, federal regulations permit up to 15 per cent of poultry products in "cooked smoked sausage."

Michigan law requires a minimum protein content of 12 per cent, whereas no minimum percentage of protein is necessary under federal regulations.

Nominations due for MSU awards

All MSU students and employees are eligible to nominate a person they believe has made distinguished academic contributions to the University for the distinguished educator awards. The senior class council will review the nominations and will present five awards.

The deadline for submitting the nomination forms, which can be obtained in 307 Student Services Bldg., is 5 p.m. today.

Gold hits record high; dollar continues to slip

FROM OUR WIRE SERVICES
LONDON - Gold hit record highs in Europe for the second straight day Tuesday and the U.S. dollar touched new lows. Experts said another international monetary crisis appeared likely.

The deficit in the U.S. balance of payments soared to a near-record $10.2 billion in the first quarter of this year, the commerce dept. reported.

The deficit in the January-March quarter was $8.6 billion larger than the $1.6 billion deficit reported in the fourth quarter of last year. It was the second biggest deficit in history, exceeded only the $11.9 billion deficit in the third quarter of 1971, another period of crisis.

The rush of speculators' dollars out of the country was largely responsible for the huge deficit in the balance of payments. Meanwhile, sagging investor confidence has pushed stock market prices to some of their lowest levels of the year.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials has plummeted about 150 points from its Jan. 11 peak of 1,051.70, while the broader New York Stock Exchange index of some 1,500 common stocks is down over nine points from its high that same day of 64.48. Both are down about 14 per cent.

Gold closed in London and Zurich, the world's two largest bullion markets, at a record $110.50 an ounce, up $8 for the day. But $5 of that climb came in the first hour alone and the markets appeared steady later.

The dollar staged a recovery that some dealers said could be carried over into today's session. Over the longer run, however, several dealers said they were looking for still lower rates for the dollar. Tuesday's activities were seen by financial observers in Europe as reflecting a crisis in confidence in United States' economic stability and political leadership.
