Mitchell tied to decisions early in re-election effort

WASHINGTON (AP) - Even while he was attorney general, John N. Mitchell was making major decisions in President Nixon's re-election campaign, the Senate Watergate committee was told Thursday at the start of its historic hearings.

Robert C. Odle, former director of administration of the Committee for the Re-election of the President, said memoranda were going to Mitchell at the Justice Dept. as far back as May 1971. Mitchell resigned as attorney general in March 1972 and joined the campaign as director a month later.

Odle said also that on the day five men broke into Democratic party headquarters, he removed a file from committee offices that he now believes contained "things which have no place in a political campaign."

The 28-year-old Odle, who is winding up the re-election committee's affairs, was the leadoff witness in the hearings.

He was followed to the stand by Bruce Kehrl, aide to former White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman, who quit under fire in the Watergate scandal on April 30.

Kehrl's testimony was restricted to describing White House staff organization.

Also testifying was Sgt. Paul W. Leeper, one of the three plainclothes policemen who surprised five men in the act of rifling Democratic headquarters in the Watergate office building in the post-midnight hours of June 17 and arrested them.

"They were probably five of the easiest lockups I've ever had," Leeper said.

Odle said instructions for him to remove the file stored in the desk of campaign deputy Jeb S. Magruder came in a three-way conversation with Magruder initiated by himself and Magruder aide Robert Reisner. Magruder was in California that day.

There have been published reports that the file contained summaries of wiretaps placed in the Democratic National Committee offices in an headquarters in the Watergate building.

Committee Chairman Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C., called attention to the sensational disclosures and mass resignations that grew out of what has Sen. Howard Baker Jr., R-Tenn., questioned Odle in detail about his activities the day of the Watergate burglary.

Odle said McCord's wife telephoned to say "something to the effect that Jim has been involved in a project which has failed. He's involved in the Watergate thing and he's in jail."

Two of the Watergate conspirators, Liddy and E. Howard Hunt, were not arrested inside the Watergate. Odle said he saw Liddy at committee headquarters later in the day.

"He asked me where the paper shredder was...he later came out and said how do you work it, and I said 'press the button,'" Odle said. "...Later I saw him with a pile of papers. He was on his way into the shredding room."

"I destroyed no piece of paper, not one shred of paper, in connection with the Watergate," Odle said with vehemence. "Now let me make a couple of things perfectly clear." The use of the familiar Nixon phrase drew laughter. "I'm glad to be cooperative," Odle added. "I've earlier breakin. But Odle said he did not look at the folder.

He said it was returned to Magruder on the Monday following the breakin.

Speaking in the huge Senate Caucus Room to a special panel of seven senators, Odle said there was no doubt that ultimate political authority for the campaign rested in the White House.

The much-heralded hearings began exactly 11 months after five men were arrested in Democratic party come to be called loosely "The Watergate scandal," much of it reported in unattributed news accounts.

Two of the men convicted of burglary, wiretapping and conspiracy in the Watergate breakin were employed in the campaign. G. Gordon Liddy, said to have been the supervisor of the burglary, was counsel to the committee's finance arm. James W. McCord Jr., was the committee's security chief, hired by Odle.

Richardson broadens search for prosecutor

WASHINGTON (AP) - Atty. Gen. designate Elliot Richardson promised Thursday that the special prosecutor picked to handle the Watergate case in the courtroom would have a free hand.

At the same time, it was learned that Richardson had widened his search for the special prosecutor by adding at least three and possibly as many as five new names to the list of prospects.

The new names, which were not revealed, join Justice William H. Erickson, 49, or the Colorado Supreme Court and David W. Peck, retired New York state appellate judge.

Two previous candidates, Warren M. Christopher, a former deputy attorney general, and New York federal judge Harold R. Tyler Jr., had told Richardson they were not interested.

Meanwhile, some former staff members of the National Security Council say Henry A. Kissinger ordered phonetaps on aids and newsmen when Kissinger himself was the prime source of leaks.

Kissinger denied to newsmen on at least two occasions that he initiated the electronic surveillance of members of his staff or newsmen, but he acknowledged talking about leaks and ways to stop them with then FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover.

Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo., said after a closed hearing with top former officials of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) that he finds it hard to believe President Nixon knew nothing of attempts to use the CIA to help cover the Watergate incident.

Donald H. Segretti, California lawyer and Nixon campaign figure, pleaded innocent to charges of distributing a phoney campaign letter during the Florida presidential primary that accused two Democratic candidates of sexual misconduct.

COURT UPHOLDS AUTONOMY

Tri-U decision made

By TERI ALBRECHT and DANIEL DEVER State News Staff Writers

The Michigan State Court of Appeals ruled unconstitutional Thursday any legal restrictions which the state legislature might place on educational appropriations to MSU. The decision, which comes at the end of University 1973-74 budget hearings with the state legislature, assures autonomous control over internal financial affairs and policies for the governing boards and administrators at MSU and two other major Michigan universities.

The appellate ruling of the Tri-U suit upheld a lower court decision made in Ingham County Circuit Court in December, 1971. The suit was originally brought by MSU, Wayne State University and University of Michigan against the State Board of Education.

Two members of the Senate

Appropriations Committee, Sen. Carl Pursell, R-Plymouth, and Sen. John Toepp, R-Cadillac, said they do not believe the decision will effect those universities' budgets now being considered in the current budget hearings.

When informed of the decision by the State News Thursday, Jack Breslin, executive vicepresident and secretary of the board of trustees, said he would not comment as to what effects the ruling will hold for MSU operations.

"There are all kinds of interpretations one might evoke from this legal opinion. I cannot make a comment until I obtain a copy of the decision," he said.

State Attorney General Frank Kelley's office, unaware of the opinion, could not comment on possible further appeals by the state government until their officials have an opportunity to study the decision.

Though legislators were reluctant to react to the ruling until they are familiar with its details, some who did comment spoke favorably of the decision.

"I'm very happy to see this," Rep. H. Lynn Jondahl, D-East Lansing, said. "The legislature can allocate funds but can't govern policies in these universities, and that frustrates the hell out of some lawmakers. But that's the wisdom of the constitution."

State Sen. Gary Byker, R-Hudsonville, a member of the Senate Committee, said he too is pleased with the court decision.

Braden asks action on ASMSU officials

By NANCY CRANE State News Staff Writer

Dana Braden, noted MSU conservative, filed a request for disciplinary action against ASMSU election officials Thursday. Braden filed a complaint with the

Braden, Rochester senior, accused members of the election commission of violating an ASMSU election regulation which states that all sources and uses of campaign funds must be submitted to the commission by the day after the election results are released.

He said that Simpson, had received only eight candidates' lists of sources of funds as of May 9. Braden contends that more than 30 candidates ran in the election, and that, according to ASMSU rules, those who did not report their fund sources should have their candidacies invalidated. Braden said the only person who was investigated by the elections commission was conservative Doug Carl, and that the real reason he was checked was because of political differences with the liberal Simpson.

"It seems odd that the election commission only investigated one candidate, Doug Carl, who happens to be a Republican candidate," Braden said. "If you call Ingham County Democrat headquarters, you will find out that Marla Simpson is in charge of

Library votes to fine profs

By DIANE SILVER State News Staff Writer

After considerable debate, the University Library Committee voted Thursday to charge faculty a $1 per day fine for books which are not returned upon the Library's request.

The unprecedented move is an attempt to prevent some faculty members from accumulating a large number of books which might deny students access to the books.

Even so, the ruling will not be implemented immediately because a plan for enforcing the fine has not yet been formulated. Furthermore, once a plan is created, it will probably have to be approved by the Academic Council.

The ruling will only apply to books which have been requested by another library patron. Thus, borrowers with overdue books will not be affected.

The controversy surrounding the Library's faculty loan and fine policies has stretched over several years and flared up again winter term after a State News report of the huge collections of library books held by some faculty under the no-fine system.

George A. Borgstrom, professor of food science, human nutrition and geography, was cited as an example with an estimated accumulation of 2,000 library books.

Borgstrom, a world renowned scientist, said he needs the books for his research.

Library officials have contended that faculty accumulations of books is

ASMSU OKs 14 judiciary posts

By LINNEA SLATER
State News Staff Writer

The ASMSU board Wednesday approved 14 appointments to University judiciaries and delayed voting on two other appointments until the board could investigate a possible conflict of interest between their jobs and a judicial position.

The board will vote on the appointments of Dave Johnson, Monroe sophomore, and Elaine Ziemba, Jackson sophomore, - both residence hall assistants - after studying updated job descriptions of resident assistants.

The board also wishes to determine the percentage of cases heard by the judiciaries which would involve residence halls.

Johnson was recommended by the all-University Student Judiciary, which makes all recommendations for judicial positions, for appointment to the Anti-Discrimination Judicial Board. Ziemba was recommended for the All-University Student Judiciary.

Charles Massoglia, Off-Campus Council representative, asserted that resident assistants are part of the executive branch of University government, reading a Wilson Hall resident assistant contract and job description which stated that resident assistants must enforce University regulations.

"My position is that it is inappropriate for any resident assistant to be a part of any judiciary because they are a part of the executive branch," Massoglia said.

Members of the board also attempted to delay voting on the appointment of John Braden, Rochester sophomore, but the motion to delay was defeated and Braden was appointed to the Student-Faculty Judiciary by a vote of six to five, with one abstention.

Deane Sweet, Inter-Fraternity Council representative, asked for the delay so that the board could investigate Braden's political involvements as possible threats to his impartiality as a justice.

"Braden is very involved in local politics, national politics and board politics," Sweet said. "I question his impartiality."

Braden is president of the MSU College Republicans, which endorsed a slate of Republican candidates, including five present board members, for the ASMSU board.

Braden told the board he would step down from hearing cases which involved his immediate family or the College Republicans.

Several members expressed concern that Ken Cole, Detroit junior, would find that a position on the All-University Student Judiciary would conflict with his position on the Academic Council, but the board approved his appointment.

The board also appointed nine other students to the All-University Student Judiciary, which has jurisdiction of conflicts involving student organizations, major governing groups, ASMSU, and appeals from lower judiciaries.

Other appointments to the Student-Faculty Judiciary were Nick Pavona, East Lansing junior and Paul Hunt, Brecksville, Ohio junior. The Student-Faculty Judiciary is the highest University judiciary; its decisions are final and appealed to the vice president for student affairs.

The board also appointed Greg Hauser, Rochester, sophomore, to the Anti-Discrimination Judicial Board. In other business, the board approved an allocation of $75 to pay for photos and other expenses for the ASMSU informational booklet.

The board also held an open hearing on the proposed Labor Relations Cabinet service. Braden requested the board study the service to insure that it would duplicate existing University services.

Tim Cain, president of the Kellogg Center Student Employees Assn. repeated his contention that students need an office more directly concerned with student than these services are.

The ASMSU Policy Committee is studying the proposal and is expected to make recommendations on the service soon.

Fists, tempers highlight women's rights debate

By MAUREEN McDONALD

DETROIT - Fists flew and tempers rose to a peak Wednesday night when Rep. Josephine Hunsinger, D-Detroit, held the first public meeting to attempt to rescind Michigan's ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Lorraine Beebe, chairwoman of the Michigan Women's Commission and former state senator, said she was beat up after the meeting in the lobby of the Detroit union hall where the meeting was held.

"It was incredible," Beebe said. "One woman backed me into a corner with her hind end. She pushed me and hit me, just waiting for me to retaliate; but I couldn't give her the satisfaction of hitting her back. I called the police."

Beebe, like other women who attempted to speak in favor of the Equal Rights Amendment, said she had never seen a hearing held in such a chaotic fashion.

"I've held many hearings on controversial issues, including abortion, and the meetings never got out of hand," Beebe said. "Last night I was honestly afraid to walk out to the parking lot."

More than 200 women and a small number of men showed up for the hearing. Six women were dressed in red and white striped skirts and in blue and white starred blouses. The called themselves the "United Angry Women." A large segment of the women who testified against the amendment hailed allegiance to the Northeast Mother's Alert, an antibussing organization.

Another group of anti-amendment women said they were members of the American Independent Party.

The women who testified in favor of the amendment were Beebe; Cecil Carrigan, a member of the United Auto Workers (UAW); Mildred Jeffrey, head of the UAW consumer division, and Angela Games, a Grosse Pointe "professional housewife."

Fifteen women spoke against the measure, while four spoke in favor of it.

Self-reliance was cited in much of the amendment testimony.

Linda Van Stennis, a housewife, claimed that she is the boss of her family and that she did not need the amendment.

"I run the house and can guarantee you I do not want to get raped in a hole," she said. Earlier, Stennis said she was against the amendment because women would be drafted along with men.

Nicolina Johnson, a housewife, received a barrage of cheers around of depicting members of women's movement as a bunch of bra burners perverted about women's rights who had a "mentality."

Hunsinger said she was not aware of the disturbances in the lobby. In fact, she said she refused to believe that it was possible.

Atty. Gen. Frank Kelley said Tuesday that the first state decision on amendment would be but Hunsinger said at hearing that "Kelley has a cloudy mind."

FOR EXTENSION POSSIBILITIES

City eyes MSU bus system

By LINDA SANDEL
State News Staff Writer

Transportation in the East Lansing area could become more accessible if the city Mass Transit Committee pushes the development of a plan to extend the University bus system to the city. A subcommittee was set up by transit officials April 25 to study the feasibility of extending the MSU bus system to off-campus areas within East Lansing.

In addition, the 1974 budget, adopted Tuesday, provides $14,000 for a newly created public transportation fund.

Ralph Stonebreaker, senior city planner, said that the allocated funds would be used to finance a local transport system.

Stonebreaker added that the funds could be used to finance either an extension of the MSU bus system or development of increased local service from the Capitol Area Transit Authority system which currently runs buses from Lansing to Meridian Township.

"Right now the authority provides east-west transportation service through East Lansing, but we have no means of moving people on a north-south basis," Charles Downs, member of the East Lansing Mass Transit Committee, said.

"It doesn't make good sense for East Lansing to set up its own private system, but if we can finance an extension of either the MSU or authority service we would correct our lack of north-south transportation," Downs added.

At this point the possible expansion proposals are largely conjecture. MSU officials have declined to make any commitments until the city can provide extensive, definitive plans for the extended transport system, Stonebreaker added.

Stonebreaker said that the subcommittee studying the problem is looking into possible routes and a means of financing various plans.

He said the committee is considering a system involving two possible routes which would run on a loop pattern through East Lansing.

An interior route would serve areas of the city which have been designated as consisting primarily of student residences. This route would also serve the city's central business district.

Nonstudent residents and students living in outlying areas of East Lansing would be served by a second route running to the exterior of the city, Stonebreaker said.

The subcommittee is also studying methods of financing the alternative systems. Downs said that officials have considered either continuing the MSU term pass purchase system or selling "one-per-ride" tokens to residents who wish to use the service.

Other problems have centered around decisions concerning the possibility of either integrating the current MSU transport routes with a city-based system or providing a route system serving only the city.

If the city-only plan were implemented residents would have to change buses to be transported on-campus.

The subcommittee hopes to have definite plans within a few weeks.

SENATE COMMITTEE

'U' law school plan attacked

By DANIEL DEVER
State News Staff Writer

Members of the Senate Appropriations Committee strongly attacked the idea of an MSU law school Thursday at a public hearing on the University's proposed budget for 1973-4.

The committee generally responded favorably to the rest of the requested allocations, however, assuring University administrators of $78 million in funds at a private meeting later in the day. That amount is in line with Gov. Milliken's recommended allocation for MSU, though the University would like to have an additional $9 million.

MSU is requesting $877,400 to create a law school which would open in January 1974 with an initial enrollment of 75 students.

Sen. Charles Zollar, R-Benton Harbor, chairman of the appropriations committee, said he is not sure Michigan needs another law school.

"I don't think there is an ultimate need for more people in the law profession," he said.

Another member of the committee, Sen. John Toepp, R-Cadillac, agreed with Zollar.

"No one has convinced me yet that we need another publicly supported law school in the state of Michigan," Toepp said.

He added, however, that if surveys can show a need for another law school, he would favor Western Michigan University as the site for the new program.

A bill which comes before the Senate next week would create a law school at WMU.

President Wharton defended MSU as the best geographic location for a new law school, citing the University's close proximity to the Capitol as a definite advantage.

"We would be able to provide a type of legal training at MSU which is not available in other law schools in the state," Wharton said at the hearing.

Meijers rates 1st in PIRGIM study

Lifelong ed a good idea

Lifelong education - the most revolutionary concept to hit educational systems since kindergarten - may soon become a reality rather than an idea, but only if given the support needed to overcome the obstacles that face the project.

A report recently released by the Task Force on Lifelong Education at MSU outlines an ambitious attempt to provide educational opportunity for every citizen in Michigan.

But for lifelong education to be the success as proposed by the task force, University cooperation and manpower will be required. MSU will have to allocate human time and effort into making the educational system more responsive to the needs of the entire society.

The two major obstacles facing the program are funding and support. According to William Wilkie, chairman of the task force, funding may be available from foundations and from a special fund from the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare for the next two to five years.

Lifelong education presents a viable alternative to present educational systems. Careful consideration and support are essential for its success.

environmental impact statement was issued that said the construction would not significantly impair the location's ecology.

The need for revamping this area is obvious and necessary, but East Lansing should also come up with alternative means of meeting the ever - increasing traffic problem.

In the past two years over 90 accidents have occurred at the corner because of its baffling collection of corners. But the city of East Lansing should consider options to putting down more concrete, which could better eliminate traffic hassles.

East Lansing does not need more cement. It needs a good mass transit system that can take more cars off the road, but down on pollution and eventually save the people of this area dollars.

If mass transit cannot be achieved in East Lansing and redesigning roads is the only solution, then roads must be planned with full consideration to both the environment and the people who live near them.

The city of East Lansing has blundered by not listening to its citizens' input on a project that affects them so dearly. But an even greater blight on the city and its people would be to continue "improving" roads while not spending money on larger mass transportation systems.

POINT OF VIEW

Animals deserve respect

By BONNIE ROSENZWEIG
Secretary for the Dept. of Agricultural Economics

I have read with interest the various letters to the editor that have been printed concerning Small Animal Day. I was surprised to see that anyone would try to justify the practice of destroying the small animals at the end of the day.

This letter is therefore directed to those who fail to see the point of my argument.

I am sensitive to the fact that children should have the opportunity to be around animals, both large and small. I watched their fun and excitement as they petted the piglets, lambs and kids.

Obviously, many of the children had never seen these animals up close before, and it was a very warm experience for them. In addition to allowing a child to come close to and touch the animals, Small Animal Day should teach them love and respect for living things.

This includes imparting the understanding that certain animals can be hurt by improper handling. It is only common sense that if a child holds and plays with something as tiny as a baby quail, he not only takes the chance of hurting the animal but also misses the chance to learn a very important lesson - that a life, be it the life of a human being or the life of an animal, should be respected and cherished.

Obviously, there are two points to the argument. The first one is the possibility of the baby chicks and ducks being harmed by constant handling of them by the children; the second is the fact that whether they are harmed or not, the past practice has been to destroy the animals because they have been contaminated.

This killing was only stopped this year because of the publicity. People who are involved in research with animals run the risk of becoming hardened to the destruction of these animals, and therefore, may be prone to destroy them needlessly.

I agree that Small Animal Day is very important both for public relations and to give the children a chance to be with farm animals they may never come close to again. However, I believe the day can be made much more meaningful if the lives and feelings of the animals involved are protected.

By all means, give children a chance to touch the larger animals, but the life of a small animal for a few minutes of a child's enjoyment - can you really justify that?

ROTC-yes

To the Editor:

In reply to associate professor Philip Korh who is of the opinion that military recruiting should be done off campus or not at all, I would like to submit an opposing view.

Ultimately this issue hinges on the necessity of standing military force in this country and to think, at this point in our history, that we do not need one is at best unrealistic. If one then adopts the view that a military is a necessary evil, then I would think it logical that the influence of civilian life is paramount to the prevention of a military regime. Why, then, shut off one of the major influences of the civilian world by intolerance of ROTC at this campus or any other? Would you, Korh, prefer that all of this nation's officers come from military academies?

The influx of ideas and values from our universities is, I feel, a needed consideration. I also feel that the presence of the draft had a great deal to do with the pressure brought upon the government to try to resolve the Vietnam issue. I would be tempted to think that the people of this country would have become more complacent about Vietnam had they not had a vested interest in an unjust war. For these reasons and those acquired through personal experience (the reserve officers on my ship outnumbered the lifers 5 to 1), I would think it foolish to not encourage this source of civilian influence on the military.

PIRGIM rectifies information in fast-food service document

By JOSEPH S. TUCHINSKY
PIRGIM executive director and
PATRICIA MIERZWA
PIRGIM fast-food project coordinator

We want to thank the State News for Wednesday's two editorials on PRIGIM's fast - food report. They may help keep the issue alive until public opinion forces adequate corrective measures.

The editorials suggested that our report is "shallow" and lacks "specifics," but that it nonetheless correctly identifies the problems and the solutions, perhaps by "luck."

The PIRGIM report was not released prematurely, as the editorials suggested. It is based on six months of research and interviewing, and nothing would have been gained by delaying its publication. Its conclusions are well based.

In October 1972, a report called "Food Service Sanitation Program: An Assessment of Effectiveness" was issued by the Health Impact Project of the Executive Office of the governor. Among other statistics, it reported that:

•67.3 per cent of the licensed food service establishments in Michigan do not meet minimal sanitation standards.

•About 2500 or 10 per cent of these establishments are so unclean they should immediately be shut down, in the opinion of the executive secretary of the Michigan Restaurant Assn.

•61 of Michigan's 63 local and county health departments have restaurant and sanitation enforcement programs too deficient to be rated "acceptable."

The Health Impact Project report was scholarly and thorough, compiled by researchers with access to agency files, and backed by the prestige of the governor's office.

It got brief attention in the press, then was forgotten. No action was taken, no public outcry raised. The industry and public health agencies hardly bothered replying to it.

PIRGIM's report started from the statistics in the Health Impact Report (and footnoted their source), then brought the numbers to life with vivid, stomach - turning examples of the abuses behind the statistics.

We are not a governmental agency, so we could not make surprise raids on restaurant kitchens, with food inspectors and bacteriologists.

So we used the one research method readily available to a student - supported citizen group: we interviewed people who had seen and experienced the conditions first - hand.

It was not statistically random or even necessarily representative selection of people or places - and we said it was. We accepted, and still believe, the statements of industry and health authorities that the fast food franchise has the best sanitation in the restaurant industry.

We got similar first - hand stories again and again, people hundreds of miles apart with nothing in common except working in the hamburger and fried chicken industry. We made allowance for exaggeration and the inexperience of our mostly student informants.

But the stories rang true, showed statewide consistency and were confirmed by the experience of the PIRGIM coordinator, who has spent 23 months working for fast food chains.

We had a number of reasons for withholding the names of food establishments and informants.

We were advised by our legal consultant that we did not have the kind of proof that a defamation suit might require unless we were to drag our informants, many of whom work in the industry, into court.

But that was a secondary reason. Most important, that we did not want to stimulate a flurry of inspections of the places we named, while the rest of the industry continued to be practically ignored by the inspectors.

No one has offered the slightest refutation of PIRGIM charges. Most "experts" have criticized our "methods" while conceding our charges might have some substance.

We have compiled a list of our informants willing to testify in court.

If a legislative committee will hold an investigation of the fast food industry, we will produce our witnesses, will name places and times.

We think PIRGIM has brought a serious abuse to public attention. That is the job Michigan's students can do.

The next move is up to those in government who will take corrective action.

Keep after us, State News. And keep after them too.

U.S. Indian's struggle for freedom

By LARRY FRAZIER
Livonia senior

I am writing this letter in a response to the point of view by Vick Renninger concerning the "bandits" at Wounded Knee and the rest of the "parasite" Indians living in the United States.

I cannot agree entirely with the Indian actions at Wounded Knee, yet it was a necessary occurrence, one brought on by the ignorance and apathy of Americans towards the plight of the American Indian. Neither can I agree with the ruthless statements made by Renninger though.

In her point of view Renninger mentions the fact that she was "robbed at gunpoint" because the government had to spend 2.7 million dollars at Wounded Knee. Perhaps if the government had dealt fairly with the American Indian in the past this 2.7 million need never have been wasted.

She also states they are "looters; demanding the modes of housing, education, medicine, clothing, transportation and currency developed by the white society."

Perhaps Renninger should take a look at the history of this country and see whose idea the reservation was, who first occupied the land we now call our own.

His life expectancy on the reservation is 45, infant mortality and suicide are twice the national average, many live in abandoned cars, some tribes have a sum of two cents a day to be spent on food, clothing, housing and medical needs.

There are wonderful schools that force our religion and culture upon the Indian children, at the same time demanding that they speak none of their native language within the school, they cut their hair and, in completely deny their culture and heritage.

Perhaps the next time Renninger is eating corn squash, beans and other items, indeed, the Indians given us more than simply agricultural items, perhaps should become a little more aware of what they have us and what we are giving them.

Grant aid is provided, yet at all points the Indian gets little say as to where it is spent. They have little control over their own reservations. The Bureau of Indian Affairs leased out all mineral rights to the Black Mt. Arizona without tribal consent. This area is to be mined by the Peabody Coal Co. despite the fact that the feminine deity of the Hopi Indian's religion.

Yet here is the crux, they are people, ill treated, maligned by the majority in this country. Such a crime the one by Renninger have been run in this country the Indians made contact with the white society.

I am for the struggles of the American Indian, perhaps as much as Renninger is against them. Both sides extremes, yet I feel before one so viciously condemns people they should look into the causes behind the actions.

Every action has something behind it, and if the action that violent, then there must be some good reasons. Perhaps should be found and looked at thoroughly before judgment like Renninger's is passed.

Hubbard vs. Wilson

To the Editor:

This letter is in retaliation to your recent article concerning Wilson's much talked about softball team. We at Hubbard consider these statistics meager and unworthy of any praise. Our team sports a .740 batting average while at least five other floors in Hubbard hit at a .500 clip or better. While Wilson's "phenomenal" team produces 3.2 runs per inning, we cross the plate 4.6 times per inning. I dare not go into individual averages, since Wilson's .200 plus hitters would be so embarrassed to hear that our low man is batting .500, they might drop out. To wind this letter up, I offer a challenge to Wilson to contact the athletic representative of Hubbard 5 and set up a scrimmage. A team batting average of .481, HA!!

Cyclists

To the Editor:

Two letters and your illustration in the Tuesday State News exemplify the misunderstanding and closed mindedness of many people toward motorcycles.

In the letter complaining about city noise it was suggested that motorcycles be banned from campus during certain hours. This would be typical of much motorcycle legislation that harasses all cycle owners of the irresponsibility of a few riders. The laws against excessive noise should be enforced, but a law banning cycles unnecessary.

The second letter, from Susan Babcock, complained about motorcycles destroying wild life by riding in unauthorized areas. Presently there is no land in the Lower Peninsula specifically authorized for motorcycle use. Off - road riders have choice but to ride on the same land as hiker - picnickers use. The only solution to this problem is to set separate areas for bikers and exclude them from other areas.

I have been riding off - road enduro and cross - country runs for five years and have never seen any serious damage to wildlife. Of course, again so irresponsible riders will ride without mufflers and spark - arresters or tear up the landscape unnecessarily. These riders should be arrested so that the majority of riders can enjoy their ride and nature.

Tull show peaceful

To the Editor:

I want to thank all the marshalls and the audience for really keeping it together at the Jethro Tull Concert last Tuesday night. I had never had the pleasure of seeing Tull before and the willingness of the audience to sit down and let me and others see what we paid for made it a truly enjoyable experience.

As far as I could tell, smoking was also reasonably controlled.

When concerts are handled and organized in a manner similar to the way this one was, all of the waiting for tickets, etc. seems insignificant.

POINT OF VIEW

Hunt and cronies invented Eagleton

By HOWARD BRODY
East Lansing graduate student

As the tangled mess of the Watergate investigation grows daily (as Alice would say) more and more curious, the question in everyone's mind is:

What next? Clearly each new development must be more outrageous than the previous one. Who would have guessed, two weeks ago, that the Watergate crew would be implicated in such disparate events as the Ellsberg trial and the Kennedy cablegrams on the Diem assassination?

And now we have learned from an unimpeachable source in Bethesda, Maryland (there are no unimpeachable sources left in Washington), of the ultimate "dirty trick" pulled off by the Committee for the Re-Election of the President forces in the 1972 election. This revelation has been released exclusively to the State News.

What was the greatest blow suffered by the McGovern campaign? McGovern has answered this himself by pointing to the Eagleton fiasco and blaming his first running mate for his loss of momentum going into the fall. Why is it that no one had heard of Thomas Eagleton until he was nominated in Miami? There is only one plausible explanation: there never was a Sen. Thomas Eagleton of Missouri.

Vice-presidential candidate Eagleton was the invention of the Committee for the Re-Election of the President. The master plan was approved by John Mitchell in preference to an alternative plan, which would have leaked reports to the press that George McGovern had driven a car off a bridge in Sioux Falls, South Dakota with an attractive secretary in the front seat.

The day after McGovern was nominated, Jeb Stuart Magruder infiltrated his staff headquarters. Since everyone was groggy from lack of sleep, it proved a simple task to sneak the name of "Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D. Mo." onto the list of vice-presidential possibilities that was being compiled.

That night, E. Howard Hunt disguised himself and appeared on the convention floor as Sen. Eagleton, accompanied by a glamorous wife and two well-scrubbed children (rented from a commercial TV studio with funds from Maurice Stans' office safe). The phony Eagleton was nominated without difficulty.

Our unimpeachable source then relates how Donald Segretti subsequently phoned two Knight Newspaper reporters and told them of the past psychiatric treatment of the nonexistent Eagleton. After an interval well-calculated to minimize credibility, Hunt-Eagleton confessed all at a news conference, then further upset the McGovern camp by resisting his removal from the ticket until the maximum adverse publicity had been accumulated.

After stepping down from vice-presidential spot on the ticket, Hunt-Eagleton made periodic appearances to speak on McGovern's behalf, utilizing these opportunities to spy on the Democratic machine in various localities and to divert some Democratic campaign contributions to the Committee for the Re-Election of the President. After the election he returned to his usual identity, which also explains why no one has heard of Eagleton since.

A further item of confirmatory evidence was provided in a recent interview by McGovern himself, when he noted bitterly that Eagleton had never leveled with him even to the extent of letting him see the psychiatric records that had caused the furor. It is clear that Eagleton never produced the records because there never were any records, since there never was any Eagleton.

And so there you have the latest development in the Watergate case. Just remember you read it first in the State News.

A few days ago one of our constant readers - and letter writers - wrote in to complain about newspaper reporters. He likened them to police officers, sitting quietly at meetings, taking notes to intimidate, distort, and otherwise disrupt (he said) the orderly processes of free speech. Apparently this reader would have been happier if the reporter, no doubt with nothing in his hands but a press card in his hatband just like the speaker and proclaimed, "Folks, I'm a reporter. I'm a - crucify the bunch of you!"

Not ask the permission of the figures involved in the stories before they set about reporting them. Should they, as this reader seems to suggest, when the newspaper plans to print something less than idolizing about a public figure that the public has a right to know about? (Remember, it is the public figure seeking the good publicity that screams when bad publicity gets into print.)

"There are many definitions of 'news,' as many as there are definition-makers, but all definitions essentially contain the same central idea: news is a report of an event."

There are many definitions of "News," as many as there are definition-makers, but all definitions essentially contain the same central idea: news is a report of an event. This may be a minor event (a dog biting a man), a major event (war, pestilence, famine, fire, ASMSU wrongdoings) or an upcoming event (next week's moon shot or baseball game.) Given this definition, the problems for the reporter become: what does he draw out of the event to give to the reader? And how does he express it so that the reader will understand it?

The idea of the reporter (press card in hatband or not) sitting quietly at the meeting of Young Americans for Fascism or Campus Conservative Reactionaries (or whatever) taking down the speaker's every utterance for stenographic transmission to the public next morning is a very common stereotype of the role of a newspaper. It is also an inaccurate and narrow concept of reporting.

A speech, like a press release, is always self-serving. The president of General Motors, whatever his zeal for sowing the truth, does not write press releases extolling the faults of his latest line of cars. Nor does he address the National Assn. of Manufacturers by advocating socialism, blasting his stockholders as money-hungry fools and praising Ford's products.

Yet the reporter - and his newspaper - impressed by the man's position in the community, may give a very straight, very factual report of the man's speech that no journalism textbook could fault for accuracy or completeness - but would it be meaningful?

And is it meaningful to give the campus groups the publicity they seek merely by reporting their straight propaganda as straight news? In comes a new dimension for news reporting - called interpretation - and it is here that much of the friction between "newsmaker" and reporter takes place. (No one has ever called the State News to complain about us printing their press release, unless we got a date or name wrong.)

Interpretation, simply, means putting the facts into perspective, so that the reader understands speech-makers and other word-mongers who are spouting something less than the gospel. When a speaker says, "This is the most important event since the Creation," the skeptical reporter should point out that the same speaker used that same phrase for his speech last week on another earth-shaking event - and the week before that on another earth-shaker... and so on.

When a speaker quotes a statistic, the reporter should find out its source and its reliability, since speakers are fond of quoting (or making up) statistics that support their arguments. Best of all, reporters should go behind the speech to other news sources to see what other sides of the story there are - and there are always other sides; presidential press secretary Pon Ziegler did not tip off the Washington Post on where to find the truth about Watergate. And they never asked his permission on what to publish. A reporter must tell what all sides say, and if they all tell half-truths he must report this, too.

Certainly this does not excuse the mistakes the press makes in overstepping the bounds of interpretation and injecting the reporter's opinion into his news stories. Perhaps this is all the constant reader and letter-writer is complaining about. But the stories he refers to as critical because they put his friends under a harsh scrutiny revealing their faults - along with their shenanigans.

He is free to speak his mind on our reporting, of course, and to write letters we will publish, and even to take out advertising space criticizing us; but when he stirs up the dust in the public arena he must expect some of it to settle on him, and some reporter to notice it.

Nixon facing 2nd significant hearing

FROM OUR WIRE SERVICES
WASHINGTON — The Watergate hearings that began Thursday in the marble-columned caucus room of the Old Senate

Office Building may be vital to the progress of Richard Nixon's presidency. Another set of congressional hearings, 25 years ago, propelled him from the obscurity of a representative's first term onto the path to the White House. Nixon himself has acknowledged that his role in those hearings of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, which dealt with the identification of Alger Hiss as a Communist by the late Whittaker Chambers, "brought me national fame." It was August 1948; he was nearing the end of his first term as a Republican congressman from California's 12th Congressional District. It was the first of his "six crises."

Four years later, at the 1952 Republican National Convention, Dwight D. Eisenhower introduced Nixon, by then a senator, as his running mate with an easily-recognizable reference to his "special talent and an ability to ferret out any kind of subversive influence wherever it may be found."

Spy hearings stir memories

WASHINGTON, (AP) — The morning breeze was strong and cold, but the cop on the Capitol's plaza was already hot under the collar. "Get it in tight, dammit!" he barked at a parking motorist. "We got little enough room as it is. Or didn't you know that this is Watergate day?"

Sen. Lowell Weicker, eager as usual, knew. History would record that at 9:04 a.m. the Connecticut Republican had the first news release pumped into the hands of 220 newsmen covering the Senate Watergate hearings. An hour and a half later, the national television audience would hear him with these words: "the gut question is..."

And the Caucus Room of the Old Senate Building was surely the place of places for the gut question. It was here that the Teapot Dome was aired, where Joseph McCarthy split hairs and reputations with his screams of "point of order, Mr. Chairman," where both Bobby Kennedy and brother John announced their presidential campaigns. And just for laughs, it also was where financier J. P. Morgan once bounced a midget on his knee.

President Nixon was pictured as relying on staff-prepared summaries of televised Senate hearings on the Watergate scandal, leaving TV - watching to others. "He doesn't watch much television," press secretary Ronald Ziegler said. "He doesn't have a television in his office."

Electric mini-bus

The Capitol Area Transportation Authority is sponsoring a one-year experiment in the use of small, electric buses which may be the wave of the future in mass transportation. The five mini-buses serve an eight-block area in downtown Lansing, and hold 18 to 25 passengers. Most riders feel that the service makes shopping easier.

Lansing experiments with mass-transit plan

By ELLEN E. GRZECH
State News Staff Writer

The five electric mini-buses serving an eight-block area in downtown Lansing represent more than the quick, convenient transportation they are intended to provide for shoppers.

They may be the wave of the future in mass-transit systems, the director of the Capitol Area Transportation Authority suggested Thursday.

"This experiment is funded in part by the federal government as part of a long-range forecast for mass transit," W.T. Matthews said. "By using these buses, we're trying out a possibility for tri-county mass transit."

The electric bus program is financed by matching funds from the city, state and federal governments as part of a one-year demonstration.

A similar program using propane buses has been operating in Model Cities areas in north and south Lansing since early May, and Matthews said it is working "pretty well."

Though the buses may provide the U.S. Dept. of Transportation with an answer to mass transit problems, Matthews said the transportation Authority has another interest in the program.

"We have one objective," he said. "And that's to increase our ridership so we can break even."

The authority is now dependent on grants, and Matthews said he is optimistic that the electric buses will be financially successful. But his optimism about the success of the plan is tempered with caution.

"The rider response has been fair," he said. "But it's nothing to rave about. I'm expecting it to go up, though."

Matthews said people still are not aware of the buses, which will be free until Monday when a 10 cent fair will be instituted. "The public's not that used to buses yet, it's still new," he said. "Also, there's not that much shopping on weekdays."

Riders on the buses Thursday agreed it made shopping easier. "It's easier and cheaper to park further away from the downtown mall area and ride in," one passenger said.

Mainly because we got into an accident. I joined 10 other passengers on the blue bus, which is supposed to be able to handle about 18 to 25 people, and it was fairly crowded on the seats. The bus at first sounded like a giant electric shaver, then ran silently for awhile.

While maneuvering around parked cars in Washington Avenue mall, which is closed to all through traffic except the buses, the bus hit a parked car, and we stopped, alerted by a very loud noise. The damage was minimal - some scraped paint - but the driver went off to call her office and the police.

"I knew this would happen one day," the driver said after we filled out cards with names and addresses. Six people came up to the bus wanting a ride, but the driver said, "This bus is not in service."

"There's people waiting at the other corner, though," one lady insisted. "I rode the bus yesterday," she added.

"Yes, ma'am," the driver said, "I remember you." "I think the buses are a stupid idea,"

"Yes ma'am, you told me yesterday."

Severe hand

Tom Greer, owner of the Galliard Gallery, fixes the light on this sculpture by Boris Gruenwald. A Gruenwald exhibit is now on display at the Galliard Gallery, 301 MAC Ave., for the rest of the month.

There is hardly a person who hasn't read, written, laughed at, been repulsed or enlightened by and sometimes downright outraged with graffiti or with the removal of graffiti.

Boris Gruenwald, a Yugoslavian artist who resides in Columbus, Ohio, persuaded a wrecker to allow him inside condemned Franklin County Jail, outside of Columbus, to photograph graffiti on the prison's walls before its destruction. Twenty-three of the 150 prints made by Gruenwald are part of a photographic and sculpture exhibit on display this month in the Galliard Gallery at 301 MAC Ave.

Tom Greer, owner of the Galliard Gallery, described Gruenwald's exhibit as the most controversial that has been displayed there. He said that Gruenwald's work depicts what the artist refers to as "the human condition."

The photographs show drawings by inmates of nude women wearing crosses, various sex acts and faces expressing boredom and frustration. They reflect the ruminations of men deprived of free wills, reincarnating their past freedoms upon cell walls. Some of the most poignant include a crude sketch of a telephone receiver and dial, a list of the men who were denied visitors and a calendar with X's marking off the days until...

The sayings are as modern as "whatever turns you on," as traditional as "home sweet home" and as relevant to the setting as "sudden death," "hard times" and "the things we do." They are explicit but symbolic.

Gruenwald does not attempt to analyze the portrayals or to impose his interpretations. The viewer is allowed his reaction to the photographs. The graffiti was the only record left by the prisoners of Franklin County Jail.

Neither the jail nor those records exist now in substance but have been transmuted into the story told in Gruenwald's photographs. Gruenwald, whose parents died during World War II, lived in orphanages most of his childhood. Greer suggested that this is perhaps a basis for Gruenwald's identification with confinement.

The effect of war upon the artist's life also is manifested in one of his sculptures of a hand representing that belonging to a South Vietnamese peasant which Gruenwald was protruding from the ground in a photograph.

Everything on display is for sale. The prints sell for $20 and the sculptures range from $4,000 - 12,000. Greer said the prices would be 100 per cent higher if Gruenwald had a name for himself, indicating that the artist is still in the process of earning a reputation for his work.

Gruenwald now works as an auto mechanic in Columbus, Ohio, and creates in his home. His exhibit at the Galliard Gallery has been shown at Ohio State University where Gruenwald was an art instructor, Chicago and The Light Gallery in New York.

Exhibit at local gallery depicts intensity of life

MAUREEN GENTLE
State News Reviewer

Featured at Galliard Gallery, 301 MAC Ave., through May 31 is a one-of-a-kind group of works showing sculptures of a group of works named "Jail Prints," by Yugoslavian artist Boris Gruenwald.

While the works in each medium are different in execution, the subject of Gruenwald's art is the human condition. Specifically, his art deals with the scope and intensity of human suffering.

While the enormity of the sculptures seems to speak of the scope of human suffering, the carefully taut, straining lines speak of its intensity. One group of works that would be called a "parts of body" series, is made up of clenched fists and flexed fingers.

These works manifest a tangible, physical sensation that is literally stronger than life. These five pieces tower over the viewer and force him to come to a disturbing worm's-eye point-of-view.

Though these pieces describe a negative aspect of human condition, their work, a standing nude, describes a positive one. This monumental work, one of Gruenwald's best efforts, utilizes the same swollen, bulbous forms of the "parts" series to different ends.

The sculptures in the "parts" series describe isolated, incomplete forms, each expressing a single, overpowering emotion. These same forms, as used in the female nude, describe the human body as a unit of strength both serene and dignified. This work is much more satisfying in effect than the other works.

Unfortunately, it is the exception in the collection rather than the rule. The exhibit is not without other problems. Creating unresolved contradiction with the use of these pushy, abundant forms is the material of which all but two of the works are made. The artist has chosen to use extruded aluminum, involving a Lansing, process difficult and costly as well as time and energy consuming. The process is the casting of melted aluminum into several sections, between layers of plaster and wax.

The aluminum material is characteristically a cool, silvery gray in color, and icy to the touch. Thus, whereas the outstretched palms in the "parts" series and the swollen curves of the nude figure beg to be touched, one is repelled by the coldness and the hardness of the surface.

Both sculpture and the prints in this exhibition, deal with Gruenwald's vision of the scope and intensity of human suffering. By token of the relevancy of this exhibit, gallery director Tom Greer which all but two of the works are made. The artist has chosen to use extruded aluminum, involving a Lansing,

'Cosmic Cowboy' album fine package

By GARY OZANICH
State News Staff Writer
"Cosmic Cowboy Souvenir" by Michael Murphey. A&M Records.
From the streets of Austin, Texas comes this new album from Michael Murphey. Backed by some of his local friends, "Murph" has put out a fine album.

How long since you've had an album that you couldn't get tired of hearing, one that you just kept flipping over everytime one side is done? Personally, it is a rare occasion, but this is one.
Murphey is one of those few vocalists who can make an album a personal experience. Not only are his vocals nice, but the backing and instrumentation is excellent.

The style of the backing is perfect for the music, the music perfect for the vocals and the vocals perfect for the lyrics - a very nice package to offer.
There's not a bad track on the album, but my personal favorites are the title track "Cosmic Cowboys" dedicated to J.J. Walker and Kenneth Threadgill, among others, "Rolling Hills" and "Honolulu". I'm tempted to list every song.

"Peace and Understanding is Hard to Find" by Jr. Walker and the All - Stars. Soul Records.

After hearing from so many different sources about how Jr. Walker and the All - Stars tore apart the Ann Arbor Blues and Jazz Festival last September, I was really looking forward to hearing something new from the band, hoping that it wouldn't be quite as commercial as some previous albums.

Unfortunately, this album, like so many Motown products, has a heavily produced, commercial sound. Some of the tracks are overproduced to the extent of sterility. "I Don't Need No Reason" and "I Can See Clearly Now" are examples of this overproduction.

A few tracks show a nice potential, like "Gimme That Bear" and "I Ain't Going Nowhere." Likewise, the sax work is nice and shows interesting potential. That's all this album does - show potential - while working within a two to four minute frame work never really letting go. Come on Junior, cut loose, we know you can do it.

"Flo and Eddie." Reprise Records.
"Can an ailing heart patient and a resident nurse find happiness as ... Flo and Eddie?" Well, what can you say about two ex-Mothers, ex - Turtles, whose major accomplishment has been the snorting of cocaine in Lincoln's desk while dressed in tuxedos when the debutante ball at the White House?

Nothing much, right? all here - Mark Volman, Howard Kaylan on vocals and guitar, backed by an excellent studio band, including Aynsley Dunbar on drums.

MSU singers to present fre spring recital

The MSU Women's Glee Club will present its annual spring concert at 8:15 p.m. tonight in the Music Auditorium.

The free concert will feature a variety of vocal works performed by the club's voice glee club conducted by Leona Witter, a professor of music.

Opening the program will be Handel's "How Excellent Thy Name," a work requiring a double piano accompaniment. The pianists will be Sharon Letbetter, a junior major in music therapy, and Nancy Konrek, a freshman music student.

Orchestra embraces quality, mood of pieces

By DAVID BURGE
State News Reviewer

Despite rumors to the contrary, there were other activities going on Tuesday evening besides Jethro Tull. One of them was the MSU Chamber Orchestra Concert under the direction of British guest conductor John Carewe.

Starting with "Transitions," a piece by Jere Hutcheson, the orchestra played with a tone that was exemplary. The strings lost the harshness that always seemed to be part of MSU strings, playing with a nice, clean, full-bodied sound. The piece, which differs from Hutcheson's previous work because of the element of thematic repetition to give unity, was given a performance that caught the exact mystery and build of the work.

The next work performed was "Concerto for Bassoon" by Johann Hummel, featuring Edgar Kirk, bassoon instructor. Though a contemporary of Beethoven's, Hummel was more classically oriented.

The concert came to a rousing climax with a performance of Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony. Though the strings started to scratch a bit and get off pitch, and the second movement was taken too fast, making it choppy instead of flowing like Mozart wanted, the performance was one to remember.

Detroit Edison's rates too high, Kelley claims

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL
 Gen. Frank J. Kelley Thursday said the Michigan Public Service Commission to reduce the rates Detroit Edison Co. charges "much-abused rates" rather than increase them.
 Kelley said Detroit Edison already gets much more money from its customers to pay for a rate increase.
 The company has asked for a $30 million rate increase and authority to raise appliance repair charges on its customers.
 Kelley said the effect of the rate hike would be to increase the electric bills of commercial and industrial customers by 5.7 per cent and the electric rates of residential customers by 3 per cent.

 The appliance repair charge, which Edison says is designed to eliminate a loss of $9.6 million, would further increase the cost of electric service to Edison's residential customers by 4 per cent, Kelley said.
 "I urge the commission to reach a final decision on this case as quickly as possible consistent with fair play to all parties concerned," Kelley said.
 "In the calendar year 1972, Edison earned net income after taxes of $76.7 million, up 25 per cent from the $61.2 million in 1971," Kelley said.

PERCY

Percy links spy probe to firing of GOP chief

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL
 Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., said Wednesday Kansas Sen. Robert Dole was "probably" pushed out of the Republican national chairmanship because he tried to find out what was behind the Watergate bugging.
 Percy told reporters at a news conference at the Lansing Civic Center Dole "did everything he could" in 1972 to find out what was going on concerning Watergate in the Committee to Re-elect the President, but could learn nothing.
 "It would be a terrible tragedy if anyone in this country felt it was the Republican party that did this dastardly act," he said. "It was a small group of people who plotted and planned and schemed and kept that information from the Republican party."
 "Bob Dole tried mightily to get information about it, and he as chairman of the party was given no information about it, and that's probably why he was dismissed," Percy said.
 The Illinois Senator, in town to address a $100-a-plate GOP legislative fund raising dinner, said, "I hope no one mistakes" that the party had no connections with the Watergate bugging and coverup.
 "If this election had been left in the hands of the Republican National Committee we not only would have had no more difference than one or two percentage points in his plurality, but we'd have elected far more Republicans across the country and we'd have had no Watergate," he said.

 "It would be absolutely impossible to have a covert activity of that kind in the democratic process that's used in the Republican National Committee and it would be impossible in the Democratic National Committee."
 In his prepared speech to the dinner, Percy said President Nixon was mistaken when he hinted both major political parties have in the past been guilty of excesses similar to Watergate.
 "It would be a cruel injustice if the Republican party were to be penalized by the American voter for Watergate," Percy said. "The party does not deserve to be branded with guilt by association. Neither major party has ever been guilty of the pervasive, cynical and utterly contemptuous disregard for the law which characterizes Watergate."

MSU Women's Glee Club Wins Black Male Conflicts

Play wins scenario contest

amar Boyd, Detroit sophomore, won first prize in the scenario contest held by the Dept. of American Thought and Language in connection with Media '73 to be held on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.
 Boyd, a television and radio major, won $70 for his play depicting conflicts between two black males, one a militant and the other a hustler.
 Second prize of $30 went to Mary A. Holeman, Adrian sophomore, who wrote "Valentine Green," a play of love rejection.

Third prize of $15 went to James Zingser, Southfield freshman, for a woman's suicide note in the form of a tape left by the distraught woman.
 Judges were William Chamberlain and John H. Ferres from the Dept. of American Thought and Language; Dan Preston, director of the Learning Resource Center of University College; and Richard P. Brundie, WKAR-TV.
 The scenarios will be produced in workshops during the Media '73 program and presented at 10 p.m. Saturday in Wonders kiva.

Court upholds Tri-U autonomy

 "The legislature should concentrate on the funding and stay out of the policies of the universities," he said.
 Beginning in 1971, the legislature began imposing restrictions on the universities in budget bills the lawmakers approved for the three big universities.
 The legislative restrictions first appeared during the time when campuses were the scene of antiwar demonstrations and student strikes. One restriction would not allow the schools to receive any money from the state government to pay the salaries or educational costs of teachers or students convicted of "interfering with the operation of any public institution of higher education."

 Other restrictions were put on the number of out-of-state students admitted, the minimum number of credit hours instructors were expected to teach and the tuition rates.
 In addition, the legislature had said the schools could not use any funds for construction, maintenance or operation of self-liquidating projects without prior approval from the State Board of Education.

Library votes to fine professors not a big problem. The materials which faculty borrow usually differ from those checked out by students. Students are therefore not denied access to needed materials, officials say.

 However, many students felt the old policy was unfair. Elizabeth Andrus, president of the Council of Graduate Students, stated the students' position in a letter to the committee in February.
 "The point here is that MSU's Library is not the private possession of the faculty," Andrus said.

Though only two per cent of the faculty abuse their library privileges, students still suffer, she said.
 "If you happen to be unlucky enough to be a student whose request is not heeded by an individual in the two per cent, and that particular book is rather important to your project, it is just too bad for you."
 The committee also voted to extend the privilege of 70-day loan periods to undergraduate and graduate students for books that have not been circulated in the last year.
 This policy will be implemented as soon as possible, Richard Chapin, director of the Library, said.
 Chapin noted, however, that few undergraduate students will be able to take advantage of this because of the restriction to seldom circulated books. These materials are usually only of use to researchers. Students most often need more popular books, he said.

Water war

Residents of Shaw Hall staged a tug of war across the Red Cedar River Wednesday afternoon, and the penalty of defeat was a dousing in the river. St. Elmo's of Five East got the chance to pull the Nads of Three East into and across the Red Cedar.

 MSU Democrats, and that anything that deals with Democratic politics on campus should go through Marla," he added.
 Braden also contended that Simpson actually encouraged Claude Hersh, who worked with her in the McGovern campaign, to run a slate of Democrats as the People for Progressive Politics candidates.
 Simpson did not deny that she and Hersh are friends, but she did deny she was involved in the campaigns of any ASMSU candidates.

Nemesi said she thought the commission considered Carl's case and not those of other candidates because Carl was the only one to have a complaint filed against his candidacy.
 She said that perhaps all candidacies should be reviewed regardless of controversy.

She admitted that she got most of her information (about the election) from Simpson.

Marcia Allen, member of the Young Socialists Alliance and runner-up to Carl in the ASMSU election for representative from the College of Arts and Letters, had filed the original complaint against Carl, charging that he over spent campaign allowance.

At the original elections Commission hearing, Carl was found innocent of charges of overspending.

Allen appealed the decision of the commission to the All-University Student Judiciary, which initially ruled on the case. The results of that hearing will be released Friday.

Spring fest to demonstrate local art work

Quilting, weaving, pottery and other folk arts will be demonstrated hourly at the Union Board's first Spring Craft Festival, to be held from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday on the lawn east of the Union.

The craft festival is being sponsored in conjunction with the fourth annual Spring Flea Market, also sponsored by the Union Board.

Booths are still available to MSU students, faculty and staff at a rental cost of $4.

Mitchell tied to early decisions

Odle has been called to testify before the grand jury which is in a continuing investigation of Watergate and also to give pre-trial statements in a series of civil suits that grew out of the affair.

As office manager for the committee, Odle hired McCord in October 1971. He said the former CIA agent's job was to protect the committee offices.

McCord was in the hearing room audience as the afternoon session began. Odle's testimony in the two-hour morning session also touched on these points:

• He believed finance chairman Maurice Stans had ultimate authority for campaign spending and actively participated in campaign budget sessions. "I would say in budget session his (Stans') agreement was necessary before we could allocate a great deal of money," Odle said. The Watergate break-in and bugging was financed with at least $199,000 in campaign funds.

• H. R. Haldeman, who resigned April 30 as Nixon's chief of staff, took an active interest in campaign activities, Odle said, particularly in connection with advertising and polling. Haldeman is a former advertising executive.

• Gordon Strachan, Haldeman's "eyes and ears" at campaign headquarters, Odle said and added that he personally talked with Strachan two or three times a week during the campaign.

• Odle said he believes fired White House counsel John W. Dean III "from time to time" had contacts with the campaign headquarters.

• There was no technical or legal relationship between the campaign committee and the Republican National Committee, Odle said. "I think that everybody at the National Committee was doing everything they could for the President." He added it was necessary to have two committees because at the start Nixon was not yet the party's nominee.

Sen. Edward J. Gurney, R-Fla., asked if Odle ever received instructions from anyone in the White House.

"I talked from time to time to Mr. Strachan, who was the White House liaison," Odle said. "He made some suggestions and ideas. I believe he said at one time the switchboard was overloaded and overburdened and he had trouble getting in, would I please hire another telephone operator. That was the only instruction I remember. There may have been others."

Odle said various people from the White House would come to the committee from time to time and "the President came over one night and shook hands. There were a number of White House officials that came to the committee from time to time."

He said he saw Haldeman and Ehrlichman only once each.

Black unit to present civic award

The United Blacks of Wonders Hall will present the second annual "Ujamaa Award" on Saturday.

The Ujamaa award will be presented to a person who has made a significant contribution to the MSU and Lansing black communities. Ujamaa means brotherhood in Swahili.

Those being considered for the award are Henry Broddlock, a counselor at the Multi Ethnic Center; Ralph Hanson, Detroit senior who has worked with the breakfast program; Jessie Wiggins, for her work with Reach Out, a program which helps ex-convicts to adjust to life after prison; Kimathi Muhammed, a student at the Marcus Garvey Institute for the studies of African people for his work in promoting the Pan-African ideology and Ervin Armstrong, for his contribution to the BUF sports league.

Priority for welfare spending urged

By ROSANNE LESS
Welfare spending should be the number one national domestic priority but significant reforms will only result from actions taken at the state level - this was the consensus of the first Michigan Public Affairs Conference on Welfare, held Thursday at James Madison College.

Conference members included William Ryan, D - Detroit and speaker of the House; John Dempsey, the state budget director and formerly with the governor's Office of Community Affairs; Louis Easterling, of the Michigan Chamber of Commerce and Andy Brown of the Community Services of the United Auto Workers. Ryan, Dempsey, and Brown said they believe that the entire welfare problem remains significant on the list of national ills but potential reforms rest completely at the state, city and county levels. This is because the Nixon administration's Family Assistance Plan, which was a relatively progressive piece of legislation, was defeated, they said.

The cutbacks at Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, the Model Cities programs, day care centers and the Office of Economic Opportunity also indicate that the future of federal welfare legislation is bogged down in the political - voting process, at least in the decade ahead, they said.

"Watergate has made it quite clear that this administration is sapped of all its vitality," Dempsey said. "However, at the state level there is only a limited chance to reform the welfare system through more tax dollars."

Federal budgets reflect inherent philosophies that appropriations equal priorities, Ryan said. Lyndon Johnson's Great Society "hardly dented the core of poverty, much less eradicated it," he said. "It is ludicrous to treat poverty as a state problem, however, when the federal government is encouraging employment cutbacks."

By 1980, Easterling claimed, only 10 per cent of available jobs will require a college degree. In the meantime, the myth prevails that people receiving public assistance are uneducated.

"There is an increasing amount of people on welfare," Easterling said, "who speak Latin, know what a dangling participle is and can discourse on the farming methods of ancient Egypt."

More employment opportunities should be given to the blind and the disabled, Brown said. Brown, who is an assistant to Leonard Woodcock in the community services and retired workers division of the United Auto Workers, said, LBJ tried to do something about poverty, at least symbolically. Working is supposed to be a great thing but sometimes there is a punitive idea attached to it," he said. "Welfare is talking about people, not things," Brown stated. "Ours is the only country in the West that does not have a comprehensive health program for its citizens," he said.

Phone expenses threat to future of Free Store

If the Free Store doesn't receive financial help within the next month, it could close down, Cathy Locke, president of the store, said.

The store, located in the Room 4A of the Student Service Bldg. is having a hard time paying their only expense - the phone bill.

Recently, a canteen was installed in order to collect contributions. It has helped the deficit somewhat, but Locke encouraged more people to donate funds.

Right now, the store has a good supply of clothes, books, magazines and shoes, but volunteers who work at the store say it could use more household goods, especially furniture. "As long as it's in good shape, we'll take anything," Locke said. So if you're cleaning out your cubbyhole this spring, bring in any usable items and exchange them for some other articles.

"People from the inner city have come in and picked up anything from diapers to refrigerators," she said.

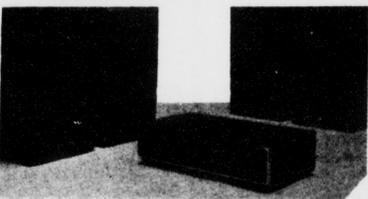

The store has been in operation for nearly a year. It had previously been located at Quonset 80, but in November the store moved because the site will be used for the new ice arena.

Volunteers estimate that about 50 people come in daily and browse around. All are welcome to stop by the store on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Where good times happen...

No one loves old Coke cans

By CHRIS DANIELSON
State News Staff Writer

What's red and white and rusts all over? Your '58 Thunderbird? No. Skylab II? Wrong again. An antique fire engine with white lettering? Not even close.

The answer to this burning question is the 1.5 million cans of Coca-Cola sold on campus every year.

The Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Lansing, which holds an exclusive franchise to vend soft drinks on campus, sells their product in red and white steel cans with aluminum tops and bottoms.

Since the cans have virtually no recycling value, they are either trucked to sanitary landfills with the rest of the University garbage, or slowly rust in locations scattered across campus.

"We have investigated the possibility of recycling steel cans, but local salvage yard officials said they were worth nothing," Ron Whitsitt, plant manager of the Lansing Coca-Cola bottling division, said.

Bruce Kempton, Birmingham freshman, is advocating the sale of all-aluminum soft drink cans on campus.

Their campaign has been an outgrowth of a communication department class project.

Members of the group have contacted Whitsitt, the Waste Control Authority and University officials, he noted. They are now seeking widespread public support for their efforts in order to show Coca-Cola and University officials that the community wants recyclable aluminum cans.

Metal salvagers will pay about $200 per ton for aluminum cans, and a maximum of $5 per ton for the mostly steel cans, Kempton said. It takes 48,000 aluminum cans to make a ton.

The rusting or oxidizing process begins slowly when steel cans are manufactured, and a steel can will rust completely except for the aluminum portions if left out in the weather for about five years. Since the recycling of oxidized steel is an expensive process, it is not profitable to salvage steel cans, Kempton explained.

Whitsitt said a recent Coca-Cola Bottling Company survey showed no all-aluminum soft drink cans are being distributed in Michigan.

Charley Craft, plant manager of the Howell Pepsi-Cola plant which cans all Pepsi-Cola sold in Michigan, stated the Pepsi-Cola cans are all-steel except for the aluminum top.

Whitsitt said that both companies use all-aluminum cans in areas such as the West coast where great hydro-electric power capacity facilitates the production of the cans.

An inquiry made to the national Coca-Cola headquarters in Atlanta, Ga., disclosed that the introduction of all-aluminum cans into Michigan is not likely at the present time, Whitsitt said.

Volunteer Bureau

Interested? For additional information call Student Services Bldg., 353 or stop by the MSU - 4400.

An East Lansing day care center, located close to campus, needs volunteers to interact with and supervise children's activities. Times can be arranged anytime between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. Male and minority volunteers are especially needed. Volunteers are needed immediately and until at least September. Training is provided by the agency.

Volunteers are needed to teach elementary skills in ceramics, woodworking, leather craft, jewelry making, art, wood carving, paper craft, block printing, weaving and puppetry. Classes meet once a week. One volunteer is needed for each hobby area. Requirements: knowledge of the subject matter and the ability to instruct others in developing skills.

A free school needs volunteers to work with 50 children grades K through 6 with times arranged. There is a possibility that the agency will provide transportation. The agency will provide training.

Glassblowers turn out 'U' research apparatus

By PAULA HOLMES
State News Staff Writer

The intricate and delicate instruments used by scientists in laboratory research are the product of a patient and dexterous scientific glassblower.

"Glassblowers are a different type of person," Keki Mistry, master glassblower and supervisor of the University Glassblowing Shop, said. "Because of the tremendous pressure they work under all the time, they tend to be high strung."

Research apparatus is so delicate that a scientific glassblower may work two or three days on a single piece of equipment and then lose it, he said.

A perfect glass ship can be completed in two hours, Jerry DeGroot, junior glassblower at the shop, said.

It takes years of patience, practice and study of glass technology to become a professional, scientific glassblower. A person must study for five years under an apprenticeship with a master glassblower before obtaining the status of junior glassblower.

During the first six months of study the apprentice watches the master and receives instruction. After that he begins making small instruments in preparation for more difficult apparatus. The apprentice usually spends four days in the shop and one day in class.

After completion of the apprenticeship it takes "10 to 15 years to become a master glassblower," Mistry said.

New Jersey is the only place in the United States that offers a scientific glassblower apprenticeship program. "However it is not officially recognized because it is only a two-year program," Mistry said. "A person interested in glassblowing has to get fitted in wherever someone is willing to take them on."

Though most large universities have glassblowing shops, only 100 skilled glassblowers and 400 other scientific glassblowers work in the United States, he said.

Mistry, a master glassblower for 21 years, did his apprenticeship in scientific and electronic glassblowing in Cambridge, England.

England developed an apprentice program because of a shortage of glassblowers just before World War II. Europe is the recognized leader in apprentice programs, Mistry said.

The University Glassblowing Shop, located in the Chemistry building basement, serves 70 University departments and 12 outside institutions. Two master glassblowers, Mistry and Andrew Seer, and a junior glassblower, DeGroot, work in the shop.

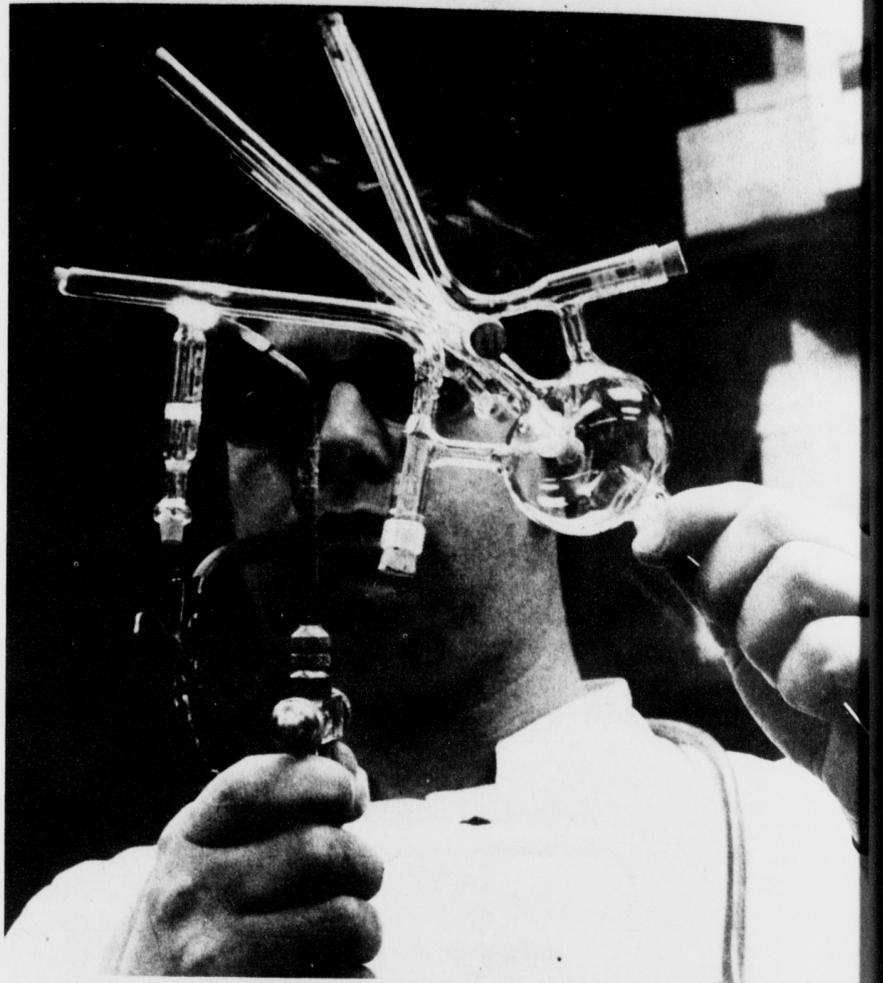

They design apparatus, with or without a blueprint, for faculty and student researchers. They also make instruments used as teaching aids.

The shop's official hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, but it is open other hours by request because "research does not follow strict hours," Mistry said. "It is an on-going process."

University subsidies allow the shop to keep its prices low. "Our prices for glassblowing services are $8.50 and hour," he said. "Outside prices are about $16 to $17 an hour."

In addition to designing equipment, the shop conducts its own research on different types of apparatus. Researchers often consult the shop on technical decisions in the construction of apparatus, Mistry said.

The shop also teaches a glassblowing course, which is open to everyone. The course explains the fundamentals of laboratory glassblowing.

Glassblowing intricacy

Jerry DeGroot, junior glassblower at the University Glassblowing Shop in the basement of the Chemistry Building, constructs a piece of scientific apparatus. Some intricate instruments take two to three days to complete. The shop turns out glass instruments used in research by faculty and students.

Bike trip slated for study of East Lansing housing

"Hear chilling tales of the day-to-day strife of those who are so bold as to take up lodgings in our city, and to explore the deepest and darkest corners of our rental housing market."

That is part of what the Coalition of Human Survival has in store for participants in a bike tour of East Lansing Saturday.

The tour will start at 10 a.m. at the corner of Collingwood Drive and Grand River Avenue, and will include a picnic lunch at Alton Park.

Charles Ipcar, director of the event, said that the tour will include stops at all types of housing in East Lansing and time will be spent discussing what it is like to live in particular houses and apartments.

The coalition has invited City Council members, administrative staff and all local residents interested in learning first hand about housing conditions in the city.

Ipcar promises an "extraordinary expedition" and great learning experience for those who participate in the tour.

Top negotiators

TO FIRM UP VIET PEACE ACCORD

U.S., Hanoi begin talks

PARIS — With a display of mutual cordiality, U.S. presidential security adviser Henry A. Kissinger and Hanoi's Le Duc Tho opened a new series of talks Thursday to firm up the shaky Vietnam peace agreement they negotiated last winter.

The meeting in Suburban St. Nom La Breteche opened a new round of talks between the United States and North Vietnam. The talks were decided upon when it became fairly clear than the Jan. 27 agreement was crumbling.

Despite smiles and handshakes at the start of the session, a heavy atmosphere of charges and counter-charges dominated the talks. Neither side made an official comment.

At the same time, representatives of the Saigon government and of its Vietcong adversary held another fruitless session aimed at bringing the two sides together for future political cooperation. As in the previous 10 such sessions, Thursday's meeting ended in a deadlock.

Kissinger's hands are considerably tied by the growing opposition in Congress against the continuing U.S. involvement in Indochina.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved 15 to a bill to limit the war powers of the President.

The measure, identical to one passed by the Senate last year, would allow a president, without prior approval of Congress, to use U.S. troops in combat for only 30 days to repel attack or the threat of attack on U.S. forces or territory and to rescue Americans endangered abroad or at sea.

On Tuesday the Senate Appropriations Committee voted against continuing appropriations for military operations in Laos and Cambodia. Last week, the House went on record against continuation of the U.S. military involvement by voting to cut off funds for the bombing of Cambodia.

Batsmen face Big Ten foes in season closeout

By STEVE STEIN
State News Sports Writer

MSU's baseball team has a last chance to reverse its late season tailspin this weekend as the Spartans close their Big Ten and regular seasons against Northwestern and Wisconsin. The Spartans, losers of 10 of their last 14 games and seven of eight conference contests, face the Wildcats in a doubleheader beginning at 2 p.m. today at Kobs Field. Wisconsin will come to East Lansing to meet MSU in a twinbill starting at 1 p.m. Saturday. Coach Danny Litwhiler's squad goes into the weekend with an even 7-7 conference mark, while Northwestern is deadlocked with MSU at 6-6 and Wisconsin currently resides in third place at 7-5.

Minnesota (10-4) will try to hang onto the league lead as the Gophers host tailending Illinois and Purdue in doubleheaders. Michigan, 9-5, is only one game behind the leaders. U-M also battles Northwestern and Wisconsin this weekend.

MSU's pitching rotation is uncertain, but Duane Bickel is slated to go in the first game today.

Elliott Moore, Don Ballard, Steve VanderLaan and Rick Deller are all possible choices for the other three contests.

Moore and VanderLaan each started against Central Michigan

MSU stickmen close season, Wittenberg foe

By JACK WALKDEN
State News Sports Writer

MSU's lacrosse team closes out a somewhat disappointing season this weekend as the Spartans host Wittenberg University from Springfield, Ohio, at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Secret Practice Field across from Spartan Stadium.

The Spartans, under first-year coach Bob Stevenson, have been going through the process of a rebuilding season and enter the season finale with a 3-8 league mark. MSU stands 2-5 in the Midwest Lacrosse League.

"We're going to go all out to win this game," Stevenson said. "However, if I see late in the game that we won't win them I'll try to get everyone into the game."

The contest promises to be a very physical game especially after the early ending to last year's game.

In last year's tilt, won by Wittenberg 10-4, the action was halted with eight minutes still remaining on the clock as fighting broke out between the two teams and turned into a near-riot.

"This year's game will be somewhat of a grudge match because of the fight that the two teams had last year," Stevenson noted. "We look to play a sportsman-like game and beat them." Stevenson doesn't expect anything to happen in this year's game, however.

"I don't expect anything like that to happen this year because the game is here," Stevenson explained. "Michigan State is noted for its sportsmanship and this is one of the most sportsmanlike lacrosse teams I've ever run across."

There is no admission charge for the game.

Tuesday while Deller pitched two innings in relief.

The contests will mark the final home appearance for several Spartan seniors.

They include pitchers Deller and Moore, catcher Bailey Oliver, shortstop Steve Cerez, first baseman John Rohde, and outfielders Ron DeLonge, Robin Dilday and Jerry Sackmann.

Needless to say, the Spartan hitters have been in a deep slump during the losing string. In fact, MSU's Big Ten batting average stands at .198.

"Normally, only one or two guys go into a slump, but this time it was the whole team," Moore commented. "Everybody has been trying real hard to break out of it."

MSU will have to have its hitting shoes on if it wants to have a successful weekend. Wisconsin has a league-leading team batting mark of .327 while Northwestern is fifth at .265.

It will be interesting to see what batting lineups Litwhiler pulls out of his hat this weekend. He switched the order around in the second game of the double header against Central Michigan Tuesday in an attempt to put some hitting attack together.

Litwhiler indicated that he would continue to alternate Sackmann and Dave Collison in left field.

"Dave's only a sophomore and could use the playing experience," Litwhiler commented.

MSU will be trying to improve upon its recent record on its home grounds. The Spartans have won just one contest in their last six at Kobs Field.

Spartans set for Big Ten meet

By CHARLES JOHNSON
State News Sports Writer

The MSU track team will put it all on the line today and Saturday when it goes up against conference foes at the Big Ten outdoor track championships in Minneapolis.

Despite making good progress in practice this week, the Spartans, who are gunning for a second consecutive Big Ten outdoor crown, go into the meet as heavy underdogs to favored Indiana.

The Hoosiers, power-packed in almost every event, will be going after a double-title year after racking up the conference indoor championship in March.

A conference spokesman said he expects this year's Big Ten meet to be the most competitive ever, with almost all conference records vulnerable to betterment.

MSU will take a squad of 17 athletes in its title bid, with sprinter Marshall Dill and mile ace Ken Popejoy bearing most of the Spartans' load.

Dill has been tremendous this season, with his time of 9.3 in the 100-yard dash standing as the best in the conference. The sophomore speedster from Detroit Northern has been the most consistent performer on the squad this season, with his record unblemished in collegiate competition.

The superb dashman will compete in both the 100 and 220-yard dashes this weekend.

Going in the mile run for the Spartans will be Popejoy, who has come up with two amazing sub-four minute clockings in as many weeks.

The little miler has surfaced as one of the "big boys" on the national collegiate circuit this season, posting a 3:57.0 in a dual meet against Notre Dame and a 3:57.3 clocking last Saturday at the Martin Luther King Games in Durham, N.C.

With these two outstanding performances under his belt, Popejoy is very optimistic for a big showing this week. "I don't think anyone can touch me in the conference," Popejoy said. "If the weather is good in Minneapolis, I'm going to run under four minutes."

No way out

MSU infielders Steve Cerez (15) and Craig Gerard (11) have this Central Michigan baserunner caught in a rundown between first and second in a game played earlier this week. The Spartans face Northwestern today and Wisconsin Saturday in a pair of doubleheaders to close out their Big Ten and regular season schedules.

The Spartans will send Mike

Murphy and a healthy Bob Cassleman in for the 440-yard dash. Cassleman, who has been bothered by a muscle strain for most of the season, will double his duties by running his specialty, the 440-yard intermediate hurdles. Bill Nance may also stake his bid in the 220 and 440-yard dashes.

Chris Cassleman, Paul Zolinsky and Todd Murphy will compete for the Spartans in the 120 and 440-yard hurdle events.

Hurdling ace John Morrison will be back in action this week, participating in the 120-yard high hurdles.

Handling the shot put and discus throw tasks for the Spartans will be Marv Roberts. The long jump will see Del Gregory, John Ross and Steve Kemp competing for MSU.

"We have a much healthier squad than we have had at any point of the season," Dittrich said. "Naturally, one would have to favor Indiana, but our team could definitely pull a few surprises."

PURDUE, OSU CHIEF FOES

Golfers eye conference title

By PAT FARNAN
State News Sports Writer

LAFAYETTE, Ind. — The MSU golf team has a good idea where it stands — and where it would like to sit.

The Spartans are a solid bet to place in the top division of the Big Ten. But before the fireworks are over, coach Bruce Fossum's crew could find themselves with a chance to plop their behinds on the Big Ten throne.

Nine other teams have similar notions, however, and the Spartans are going to have to finesse their way around the short, wide open Purdue layout to rise above such conference stalwarts as Ohio State and Indiana.

Competition began at 8 a.m. today with an enduring 36-hole slate schedule for today and Saturday.

"The team that breaks from the pack to win is going to have to be physically strong," Fossum said. "This many holes two days in a row can be a tremendous grind."

The Hoosiers and OSU are favorites to annex the annual league title but Purdue and the Spartans are not to be overlooked. The Boilermakers have the home course advantage and in the past that has proven to be a key factor.

"We're playing pretty well right now and if we get it going we're going to be right in the thick of things," Fossum continued. "We got a slow start this year but if we can continue to jell through this tourney we could be tough."

Last year the Spartan contingent could muster only fifth place in Minneapolis. This year's track however, the Purdue north course, will make the two day affair more evenly matched.

"We have to get together and stay together," Mark Timyan, the Spartan number one man and a prime candidate for medal honors said. "The course is the kind of course that someone could really tear up if they got hot. We have to make sure that happens to us and try not to let anyone get away from us."

In the 880-yard dash the Spartans will send Ron Cool. His twin brother Rob will take part in the 3,000-meter steeplechase and the three-mile run.

BULLETIN

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (UPI) — The Big Ten decided Thursday to join the rest of the nation and allow "red-shirting," spreading athletic eligibility of athletes over five years instead of four.

Marcus Plant of Michigan, chairman of the Big Ten Conference, and Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Duke announced that the 10 faculty representatives in the conference approved the change Thursday.

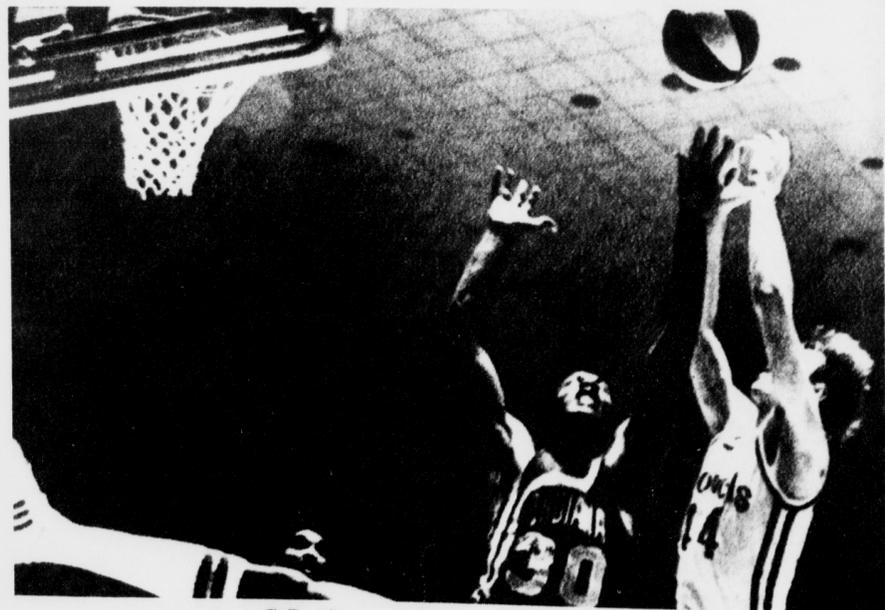

The red-shirting rule became effective immediately and for the first time since 1958 athletes in the Big Ten may spread their eligibility over five years.

Big Ten faculty representative approved the red-shirting idea at the meeting in March but since at least one member opposed it — the exact number opposing it wasn't announced — a second vote was required. And the second vote only a simple majority was required for passage.

College press: Ohio State encourages profs to find jobs outside of campus

Many Ohio State University faculty members can earn more than their yearly teaching salary by working just one day a week as consultant for an outside organization, Ohio's associate provost said.

The university encourages a moderate amount of outside work because it keeps a teacher up-to-date in his field, the provost said.

A faculty member who receives money for consultations with a firm must first clear it with his department chairperson, dean of his college and the provost for academic affairs.

The spokesman referred to several sources who said that $100 per hour for consulting is not an unusual fee.

The final exam consists of picking the winners out of the entries listed in a racing form.

One of the instructors who has been around horses and race tracks since he was a boy, readily admits that horse racing is a chancy proposition. "Sometimes I can lose several days in a row at the track at $25 to $30 a day. But then sometimes I can win big."

He also tells the story about a woman who picked five wins in a row based on the horses' names and colors.

The woman was his wife.

The chairman of the Athletic Council at the University of Texas at Austin said that all television commercials involving university facilities will be discontinued.

The announcement came after an investigation of statewide commercials done by football coach Darrell Royal for a local car dealer in which automobiles were filmed in the university stadium.

Royal was unavailable for comment.

Their movie credits include "The World's Greatest Athlete" and "Planet of the Apes."

The financial aid director of Lehigh University said, "It is very inconsistent for a student who says he needs financial aid in order to continue at the university, to keep a car, an expensive stereo or some other trapping of affluence."

Violators of the financial aid guidelines have been caught in the past, he said. He has never withdrawn a student's full award, though the aid office is empowered to do so.

Women vet students see few biases

By SUE BURZYNSKI

Many women veterinary students believe they are capable of treating a cow as they are of treating a dog, but their entrance into the traditionally male field of caring for large farm animals is often met with prejudice. Jacquelyn Smith, a senior in the MSU veterinary medicine school, said that though the professors in her small animal section show no prejudice toward women students, the large animal section professors seem to doubt their capability. Smith said though a woman veterinarian may need some help in holding a large animal down, a woman is just as capable in the technical operations on the animal. Smith said she doesn't feel that a veterinary career is more demanding than any other career a woman may traditionally choose. Married and the mother of two, she said being in school is difficult timewise, but she does not think she is neglecting her family. Smith plans to start a mixed practice for both small and large animals someday, and she does not think being a woman will be a disadvantage. She said the attitude of most of her fellow male students has been one of assistance without making a woman feel dumb. Smith said the increase of women in the department is a sign that old prejudices are lessening. Agreeing with Smith, Willis W. Armistead, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine at MSU, said the perception of veterinary medicine as strictly a man's field is disappearing. "More women have been applying to the veterinary school, and subsequently more women are being accepted," Armistead said.

Presently, there are 65 women out of 274 students in the MSU veterinary department. Armistead said MSU has more women veterinary graduates than any other college and the number is increasing.

"Women who are admitted to the school do not have a harder time than the male students because their motivation is so great," he said.

There is no set policy on admitting women students, Armistead said. Students are chosen because of their ability. Virginia Dodd, a 5th term veterinary student at MSU, does not think there is any discrimination on the part of the veterinary school toward woman students.

She said the interview for women trying to get in to school is rougher because the department wants to be sure a girl is not going to quit half way through to get married. Dodd said she thinks a woman's sincerity in tackling such a demanding career is the key to success. Don Sheets, a 5th term male veterinary student, said he has no hard feelings toward the women in his class and says he feels having girls around makes classes a lot easier.

MSU CRIMES CAN PAY

'72 bike thefts total $51,000

What occupation has come into vogue that yields a high profit for just a few hours' work?

Based on MSU Dept. of Public Safety records, it is stealing bicycles.

Sgt. Harold Henderson, of the public safety department, said that 736 bikes were stolen from the beginning of fall term 1971 to the end of spring term 1972 with a total loss of about $51,000. He said he expects this year's totals to exceed last year's figures.

Henderson said that even though officers arrested nine persons last week for stealing bikes, the thefts continue.

He said the most valuable aid to the department for apprehending thieves is a report from citizens about suspicious activity around bicycle racks. The department has had good success on the calls it has received and people generally use good judgement in making reports, Henderson said.

He said the department considers bike thefts a serious problem and has intensified its street checks of bikes and racks.

The department suggests three actions that students and faculty can take to help cut down the number of bicycle thefts on campus:

- Report any suspicious activity around bike racks to the University police (355-2221).

- Lock your bicycle in and to a rack with a strong lock and chain. Henderson pointed out that in almost every theft tools were used to cut the lock or chain.

- Register your bike with the MSU Dept. of Public Safety. Henderson said officers frequently stop nonstudents riding expensive bicycles on campus that are not registered. He said if bicycles are not registered the officers have no way of knowing whether the bicycles are stolen or not.

STATE REP. EDGAR Geerlings, R - Twin Lake, has introduced a resolution in the House congratulating and commending Alpha Pi fraternity, a chapter of Delta Sigma Phi fraternity of MSU.

The resolution cites the fraternity's 50th Anniversary, the contributions of the fraternity to MSU, and several other achievements by the fraternity as the reason for the tribute.

The resolution goes to the House Policy Committee to be examined.

A RESOLUTION TO EXEMPT the sale of school books to students from the state sales tax has been introduced in the House by Rep. Perry Bullard, D - Ann Arbor.

Bullard said the resolution would cover only books sold by schools or other educational institutions. He said because the state has exempted the sales tax for some items such as food sold to students by schools and other institutions it would be logical to exempt school books from the sales tax.

TEACHERS WILL BE LICENSED every three years as well as be required to attend an internship program before receiving a license if a bill introduced by State Sen. Anthony Stamm, R - Kalamazoo, is passed.

Stamm introduced the bill Thursday and said it would establish a seven-member commission, appointed by the governor for four year terms, that would study the licensing procedures of teachers as well as the standards of certification.

An earlier form of the bill was defeated by the legislature in the last session, but Stamm said additional studies have shown confusion involving permanent teaching certification and the tenure law.

STATE REP. CASMER Ogonowski, D - Detroit, introduced a resolution in the House Thursday that calls for an investigation of travel agencies in the state.

Ogonowski, chairman of the House Committee of Tourist Industry Relations, said certain travel agencies have been responsible for unscrupulous practices which have inconvenienced tourists traveling in this country and abroad.

"The public wants and needs this type of investigation," Ogonowski said. "I feel that the travel industry itself wants it for its own self-protection against those within it that are damaging its prestige through sloppy, unscrupulous and questionable practices."
