Area residents foresee beef shortage, stock up

By JOHN LINDSTROM
State News Staff Writer

William L. Walker, general counsel to the government's Cost of Living Council, insisted Friday that reports of a shortage of beef were exaggerated.

But few people in the Lansing area seemed to believe him as hundreds this weekend rushed to supermarkets and local butchers to stock up on meat in anticipation of a possible beef drought next week.

"The customers are stacked four or five deep right at the counter," Jim Keban, a truck driver now working at the counter at Van Alstine's Quality Beef Farm in Okemos, said Saturday.

"The meat shortage is true — it's here and it's bad," Keban added. "I'm supposed to be a truck driver but we're not shipping anything out so I'm working at the counter."

Don Popoff, owner of Consumer Beef in Lansing, said that his business has shifted from restaurant purchasing to large purchases from individuals with freezers trying to stock up on beef.

"The restaurants can't buy any choice cuts because they aren't available," Popoff said.

Rick Root, manager of the International House of Pancakes in Meridian Township, said that he hasn't had too much of a problem getting steaks in the last week, but he expects more difficulty in the next several weeks.

"We've got a sign up about the shortage and we expect it to get very tight in the next three weeks. Both of our suppliers told us they would have trouble supplying us," he said.

"It's very difficult for us to get steaks," Rick Kramer, asst. manager of East Lansing's Starboard Tack restaurant, said. "We should be all right until next week, but I hear after that they won't be slaughtering any more cattle."

Other meat retailers and wholesalers indicated that sometime around August 20 may become the critical time for meat supplies.

In anticipation of that critical shortage, many suppliers have had to limit the amount on customer orders.

"We're holding people to five pounds of ground round, two round steaks, two sirloins," Keban said. "Around 4 o'clock we ran out of liver."

Douglas Peet, owner of Peet Packing and Farmer Peet's meat, and one of MSU's major meat suppliers, warned that he may have to shut down operation around August 20 if he doesn't get any more beef.

"I've two train cars full, and that should last until around the 20th," Peet said Friday. "Right now I've got enough to fill orders and trucks, but it's getting tight."

"If I don't get any more beef, that will leave me with just fresh pork. I might be able to keep the pork operation going after the 20th, but I don't think that will make enough money to pay the bills. I may just have to close the whole operation and that would throw a lot of people out of work."

Peet did not say how many people would be out of work if he has to close his operation.

But Lyle Thorburn, manager of dormitory and food services, said that MSU hasn't been affected too badly by the shortage.

"Thank goodness we haven't," he said. "But remember during the summer we don't have as many places serving. But we're hoping that this whole shortage will be over when school starts."

The shortage is caused by cattle producers who are refusing to bring their cattle to market as long as the freeze on beef prices continues.

The freeze is in effect until Sept. 12. Pressure has been mounting in various circles, including Congress, to try to force President Nixon to lift the freeze.

However, Treasury Secretary George Schultz said on Sunday that the freeze would continue until September 12 as scheduled. He said Nixon has no plans thus far for lifting the freeze.

Once the freeze is lifted, however, meat suppliers warn that prices will likely explode.

"For example," Popoff said, "sirloin is at $1.79 a pound. We had it on special this weekend for $1.59 a pound, but after the freeze ends sirloin will go over $2 a pound. I can't say where it will go exactly but it's going over $2."

Asked if he thought meat prices would ever go down, Popoff replied: "Oh yeah, in a couple of years they should level off."

Popoff also said that consumers should expect chicken prices to rise about 13% cents in the next week.

"The problem there is that grain prices have gone up and so poultry producers have to raise the price on chicken," Popoff said.

Local shortages

The cash register at the International House of Pancakes, 2300 East Grand River Ave., bears this warning that customers may have to make a second choice if certain items, especially meats, are not available.

Pentagon pushes development of arms not limited in SALT pact

By WASHINGTON STAR-NEWS

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon is vigorously pushing the development of a whole new family of strategic weapons not covered by the strategic arms limitation agreement signed last year by the United States and the Soviet Union.

The Defense Dept.'s intense interest in the development of a broad range of highly advanced cruise missiles was revealed in an interview by deputy Defense Secretary William P. Clements.

Cruise missiles are being developed to be launched from planes, surface ships, submarines or land bases, Clements said. With a range of about 1,000 miles, they will fly at supersonic or subsonic speeds and at low or high altitudes and will be highly maneuverable.

Strategic missiles now in the U.S. inventory fly a ballistic course, soaring high into space and then falling back to earth, following a path like that of an arrow shot into the air. The cruise missiles, in contrast, are like small airplanes with the capability of a great variety of flight patterns and maneuvers.

Pentagon plans for development of strategic cruise missiles — as contrasted to shorter - range tactical missiles for use on ships — were first revealed about a year ago in a request to Congress following completion of the first round of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks. At that time, however, only the submarine - launched version of the new weapon was mentioned.

Many observers have considered the interest in cruise missiles primarily a "bargaining chip" to be negotiated away in future arms limitations talks with the Soviet Union. But Clements gave no indication that he so regarded the new missiles.

"This technology is on the frontiers tomorrow," Clements said. "This is where we are in front and we must not lose our advantage. The technological gap is in our favor."

Though the Russians have moved much more vigorously than the United States in deploying small cruise missiles on their ships — largely as a shortcut to offset the advantage given the United States by its aircraft carriers — Clements said the devices under development by the United States are far advanced over anything the Russians have.

The enthusiasm with which Clements described the future prospects for the new weapons was somewhat surprising in view of two recent developments: on July 6, Clements had stopped development of an air force version of the new missile; and last week, the Senate Armed Services Committee had voted against appropriating the $15.2 million asked by the Navy for its version of the missile.

Clements insisted, however, that his decision was part of an effort to strengthen, rather than weaken, the cruise missile development program. And, though the chief management responsibility for development of the new missiles has apparently been placed on the Navy, Clements said the first cruise missiles would probably be deployed in airplanes.

The new missiles are so versatile, he said, that they could be fired from outside enemy defenses or brought near targets by planes such as the B - 1 bomber now under development.

Some Air Force officials had recently suggested that the missiles could be carried on military versions of big planes such as the Boeing 747.

"I feel we have not done our job in articulating our programs. We have not done an adequate job of explaining in Congress what we have in mind," Clements said. "But I think they will be enthusiastic when they understand."

Similarly, he said, he is confident the over - all defense program will do well in Congress this year despite sharp setbacks in both the Senate and House.

Richardson cites crime fight defects

WASHINGTON (AP) — Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson says the government has failed to develop ways of judging the effectiveness of crime - fighting efforts and cannot even measure the volume of crime.

Richardson said that correcting those faults will be among his major priorities in the job he began two months ago.

His statement in an interview were his first public remarks since taking office about the shortcomings of the crime fight launched under former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell as a major thrust of President Nixon's first term.

Richardson had no direct comment on Mitchell's leadership of the effort.

He said that before the government can find ways to curb crime, it must know how much crime there is.

The FBI crime index measures only a fraction of the murders, rapes and thefts committed in this country, he said.

Numerous critics have complained that the FBI crime statistics are inaccurate and have accused the Justice Dept. and local police agencies of manipulating the figures for political advantage in election years.

But no attorney general in recent years has so strongly discounted the FBI reports. Richardson did so only a few days before he is to announce the completed figures for 1972.

"We have no mechanism in place for measuring the volume of crime committed," he said. "We have the FBI index which measures the number of crimes that are recorded in police documents. But it is universally recognized that only a fraction of all crimes committed are reported to the police at all."

He noted that the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration is testing a way of using polling techniques to compile crime data.

He said he is encouraged that the experiment may lead to more accurate crime data.

Richardson complained that the Vacationing students may tilt outcome of city council primary

By JIM BUSH
State News Staff Writer

Vacationing MSU students may determine the winners in Tuesday's East Lansing City Council primary, even though they will not be in town on election day.

More than 3,000 absentee ballot applications — nearly one - tenth of East Lansing's 34,144 registered voters — have been filed at City Clerk Beverly Colizzi's office, and well over two - thirds of them came from students, according to one student group.

If, as Colizzi predicts, voter turnout for the primary are light, then these absent voters may well decide which four of the seven remaining council candidates advance to the November run - off election.

Registered East Lansing voters may go to the polls from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Tuesday.

Colizzi says the 3,000 absentee ballots constitute nearly three times the normal number for a summer primary election.

Voter Assistance, an ASMSU organization, claims credit for over two - thirds of the ballots. The student organization canvassed MSU residence halls last spring and dispensed absentee ballot applications.

Margaret McNeil - Nelson Brown campaign workers are confident that their candidates will receive most of the absent votes, and because of it, they are claiming their chances for victory are good.

While Brown - McNeil workers have made a concentrated effort to woo the absent student vote, they are not alone. Candidates Mary Sharp, an incumbent, and James A. Roberts have also mailed literature to absentee voters.

Sharp, who is seeking a third four - year council term, and Roberts have sent out 2,000 flyers each to voters on the absentee list.

Several of Robert's fellow candidates have speculated that the young lawyer, who is conducting his first political campaign, is receiving large sums of money from realtors — Roberts is the deputy director of the Michigan State Housing Development Authority — or liberal Republicans.

However, Roberts denies "the speculation."

"I've heard a lot of rumors that suggest that my campaign is being financed by Republicans or real estate developers," Roberts said Sunday. "However, I am not receiving any substantial amounts of money I'd characterize as being from moneyed interests."

Roberts is the only candidate to print his flyers in color on glossy paper. He said his largest single contribution was about $100.

Roberts also denied another rumor that Councilman George Colburn is supporting him or that he is telling people that Colburn is helping him. Colburn has said he supports no one in the primary.

Another councilman, George Griffiths, confirmed Sunday that he is supporting Brown and McNeil.

In another campaign development, a mid - June meeting of three East Lansing residents, the representative of John Polonsky and three other candidates — Paula Johnson, John Bjoen and Roberts — was apparently an unsuccessful attempt to form a slate of candidates for the primary.

Johnson and Spencer Abraham, one of the three residents, said that the possibility of forming a slate was discussed and dismissed by all the candidates present.

Nixon lawyers' arguments predicted

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Nixon's lawyers are likely to argue Tuesday that Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox's subpoena for White House tapes is not enforceable and therefore should be quashed.

Neither Cox nor Charles Alan Wright, the constitutional law professor from the University of Texas who will represent the President, has even any public hint of what argument will be used.

U.S. District Court Judge John J. Sirica gave the President until 10 a.m. ET, Tuesday to respond to Cox's request for an order requiring Nixon to comply with Cox's subpoena.

After the legal brief supporting the President is filed, Cox will be given time to respond. Then, a date for oral argument will be set.

The President's brief is likely to cite the 1867 case in which the state of Mississippi asked the Supreme Court to enjoin President Andrew Johnson from enforcing the Reconstruction Act.

The court rejected the request.

Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase wrote, "Consider what internal conflicts would arise if the judicial department sought to restrain the President: if he refused to obey, that must be the end of the matter; if he did obey, he might be impeached."

In arguing before the court in that case, Atty. Gen. Henry Stanbury urged the court to reject the petition noting that the only precedent appeared to be the subpoena Chief Justice John Marshall allowed to be served on President Thomas Jefferson.

Though Marshall upheld the legality of the subpoena he rejected any efforts to force compliance when Jefferson said he would not obey it.

President Nixon gave a hint of his argument when he notified Sirica he would not comply with Cox's subpoena. Wrote the President:

"The independence of the three branches of our government is at the very heart of our constitutional system. It would be wholly inadmissible for the President to seek to compel some particular action by the courts. It is equally inadmissible for the courts to seek to compel some particular action by the President."

Though the case of Mississippi v. Johnson seems to support that view, the opinion specifies the court lacks the power "to enjoin the President in the performance of his official duties."

Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr., D - N.C., chairman of the Senate Watergate committee, has argued that the President has no right to ignore orders from the courts or congressional committees that concern activities outside his constitutional duties.

Ervin argues that neither politics nor criminal activities are part of a President's constitutional duties.

The President's lawyers could make a two - fold response.

First, they might argue, presidential decisions are carried out by subordinates clearly subject to court orders. In a series of recent court decisions, judges have ordered administration officials below the President to release impounded funds and to cease the dismantling of the Office of Economic Opportunity.

And if the wrongdoing is carried on directly by the president, they might argue, the remedy found in the Constitution is not to take him to court, but to impeach him. Once removed from office, says the Constitution, a president is subject to prosecution for crimes committed while holding office.

The apparent difficulties of enforcing a court order directed at a president have led the courts, historically, to try to avoid disrupting the constitutional balance among the three branches.

The late Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter wrote in 1952 that "clashes between different branches of the government should be avoided if a legal ground of less explosive potentialities is properly available."

"To start with a consideration of the relation between the President's powers and those of Congress — a most delicate matter that has occupied the thoughts of statesmen and judges since the Nation was founded and will continue to occupy their thoughts as long as our democracy lasts — is to start at the wrong end."

In one of the major reapportionment cases decided in 1962, Frankfurter argued the court

Grenades kill 2 in Athens

Palestinian terrorists tossed hand grenades and fired pistols into a crowded Athens airport lounge Sunday, killing two Americans and wounding dozens of other persons in an unsuccessful bid to hijack a plane to the Middle East.

The initial attack was aimed at passengers about to board two Trans World Airlines flights to Tel Aviv, officials said.

The terrorists surrendered to police after holding 35 hostages for two hours during which they negotiated for a plane from behind a marble bar in the transit lounge.

Police surrounded the airport after the blasts and two men identified as Arabs surrendered after the two-hour standoff. The terms of their surrender were not immediately announced.

Police said one grenade was thrown from a balcony overlooking the lounge, indicating more than the two terrorists may have taken part in the attack.

The victims were identified as Jennie Salandis, 20, of New York, and Albert Kersen, 53, of New Jersey.

Japan will not rearm

Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka said Sunday Japan will not acquire nuclear weapons in order to become a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council or to protect its long supply lines at sea.

Appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," he said that Japan is under constitutional restraints not to rearm or to send its forces abroad. President Nixon, in a communique signed with Tanaka last week, pledged U.S. support to Japan to become a permanent member of the Security Council along with the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and the People's Republic of China. All are nuclear powers.

Tanaka said Japan will continue to depend upon the security treaty with the United States which provides a nuclear umbrella for Japan's protection in exchange for the use of bases in Japan for U.S. ground, navy and air forces.

Tanaka was here last week for talks with Nixon, and his TV interview was taped in advance for Sunday.

U.S. continues bombing

U.S. aircraft, including B52 bombers, continued operations Sunday over Cambodia at the Cambodian government's request, the U.S. Pacific military command reported.

As usual, the command refused to provide any details of the operations. Congress has ordered U.S. bombing over Cambodia halted by Aug. 15.

Sunday marked the 152nd straight day of activity for the heavy bombers over Cambodia.

Beef price freeze remains

Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz said Sunday the freeze on retail prices of beef will remain in effect until Sept. 12, the date set by President Nixon despite the growing absence of red meat from supermarkets.

Shultz first said the lifting of the freeze before Sept. 12 "remains to be seen," but then said: "that date stands."

"The last I talked to the President that was the date that had been set," Shultz said. "As far as I know he hasn't shifted his view."

He explained that by saying a decision on the Sept. 12 date "remains to be seen," he reflected a "recognition of the fact that lots of questions have been raised and lots of pressure has been put on."

He spoke on the ABC television program "Issues and Answers."

The scheduled witness before the Senate Watergate hearing today is former FBI Acting Director L. Patrick Gray III. Former Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst is listed as next. The hearing, starting at 9:30 a.m. EDT, will be broadcast live on NBC.

Defense Dept. spending criticized

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON—The General Accounting Office says the Defense Dept. spent $24 million on promotional activities that were not included in its 1972 public-affairs budget.

GAO, in a report Sunday to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the Pentagon has a different definition of "public-relations activities" than that generally used by other government agencies.

For example, the report said, the Defense Dept. did not consider performances by the Navy's Blue Angels flight team or by the Air Force Band as public relations activities.

Four special aerial teams, including the Blue Angels, cost $5.3 million to operate in fiscal year 1972. Five ceremonial military bands cost $10.6 million.

In releasing the GAO report, Foreign Relations Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., noted Congress had imposed a $28-million annual ceiling on Pentagon public relations spending.

"But the GAO findings illustrate how difficult it is to bring about effective congressional control over any entrenched Dept. of Defense practice, whether it is persuading the public to support more military spending or tolerating cost overruns on weapons systems," Fulbright said.

The Pentagon's fiscal 1972 budget for public relations was estimated at $22 million.

In listing selected activities that were not considered public relations at the Pentagon, GAO said it was not concluding that all were public-affairs activities.

"However, they are promotional in nature, and some of the costs discussed in this report... are, as a minimum, the types of costs that should be considered for inclusion in the Dept. of Defense's public-affairs program and reported as public-affairs expenditures," the report said.

The report noted that the Office of Management and Budget defines public relations activities to include those that publicize or promote the objectives and operations for which the agency is responsible or in which it has an interest. But the Pentagon definition limits "public relations" to providing news media information about military activities designed to contribute to good relations between the military and the civilian population.

JUSTICE DEPT. ANNOUNCEMENT

Kent State probe to reopen

Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson announced Friday that the U.S. Justice Dept. will reopen its investigation of the shootings at Kent State University in Ohio on May 4, 1970.

In the shootings, Ohio National Guardsmen killed four students and wounded nine others during a campus protest against expansion of the Vietnam War into Cambodia.

Richardson said he had concluded from a review of department files that "there are some areas where an additional inquiry is desirable."

"This does not mean that we have reason to believe that the prior decision to discontinue active investigation was wrong or made for improper reasons," he continued, "nor does it mean that we think the additional inquiry is likely to lead to a different prosecutive judgment."

The inquiry had been rejected by former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell two years ago and was called "unwarranted" by the White House three months ago.

J. Stanley Pottinger, who will direct the investigation, spoke of the possibility of using a grand jury to weigh criminal charges.

An Ohio grand jury exonerated the National Guard in October 1970, but indicted 25 persons on riot charges.

The FBI report on the incident suggested that ill-trained young guardsmen had fired in a disorganized fashion, perhaps in panic, but without warning to the students and before the guardsmen were in any danger themselves.

The original Justice Dept. report found that none of the victims had been associated with the three-day disturbance that brought the guard to the campus and that there had been no sniper fire, as guard spokesmen originally asserted.

Weekend police action light but extraordinary

Area police action was light over the weekend, but the incidents reported were somewhat less routine.

East Lansing police handled three separate reports of bats loose in area homes, two in downstairs rooms. A woman caller made a trip to the station with a dog she thought her neighbors did not want. She said its howling was giving her a headache. The neighbors were on vacation.

An East Lansing resident had her sunbathing at the gravel pits off Burcham Drive interrupted by four young men in a Volkswagen van. She filed a complaint charging them with assault.

University Police handled a call Sunday morning which interrupted the voyeurism of four small boys who were attempting to discern the results of the female sunbathers through the women's intramural building locker room windows.

A new entrance to Parking Lot O was the cause of a bicycle accident involving a student unaware of the change. The cyclist, who claimed he did not want to enter the lot, rode through a barricade where the old entrance had been and slammed into a concrete barrier. He emerged with a bruised right knee, a bruised nose and two bruised forearms. The bike was totaled.

Grafton lashes out at ASMSU board

By TERI ALBRECHT
State News Staff Writer

Undergraduate student government president Ed Grafton has charged ASMSU board members with "lazy irresponsible action" in failing to make appointments to several all-University committees.

Grafton said that because of the board's lack of action he has independently made several interim appointments without board approval.

The board is responsible for selecting students to fill a number of seats on each of 12 University wide committees.

But Grafton last week attributed the delay to what he termed "laziness of the board to find responsible students."

"The entire board is responsible through our Search and Selection Committee for actively recruiting committee members. The board just has not been doing a good job since the March elections - they haven't expected to do any work," he said.

The committees which still have vacant seats include one seat on the Military Education Advisory Committee and an at-large seat and a second seat representing married students on the All-University Traffic Committee.

Other seats include a selected student from the Office of Black Affairs for the Student Employer Advisory Committee and three representatives to the Health Center Advisory Committee for minority groups, married students and foreign students.

Allegations have been made that the board's delay in selecting committee members has impeded work for the committees.

One committee chairman said Sunday he has had problems with ASMSU student appointees not coming to the committee meetings, but the lack of a student representation has not impeded committee progress.

"It's a shame that the students aren't participating. We have enough other members to vote but the students don't get a voice in our work, especially since we are only charged to meet once each term," Richard Coelho, chairman of the Military Education Committee, said.

Grafton said he has taken the authority that if the board does not make the appointments, he can make temporary interim appointments until the board takes action.

"The code of operations gives me certain powers such as this for external affairs, and even though it is not a good way to make appointments, it speeds action in these committees," he said.

He said he made these interim appointments for the Financial Aids Committee and the All-University Traffic Committee.

Grafton explained the process involved in officially making committee appointments.

Deborah Hartshorn, representative from the College of Human Ecology and chairman of the Search and Selection Committee, advises in student publications that petitions will be accepted for positions on various committees. Through the petitions applicants are personally interviewed by board members and final action is taken by board vote approving each potential committee member.

Judge backs up own law school

INTERNATIONAL

Michigan Supreme Court Justice Thomas M. Brennan Sunday defended his role as founder of a private, nonprofit law school which critics claim is financially and scholastically inadequate and raises questions of conflict of interest.

Brennan started the school with the help of several other judges and attorneys as a night-school operation in a building near the Capitol which is shared with an insurance agency. The current 75-member student body has classes in one finished classroom - another is expected to be ready for the fall term - and has access to a modest 10,000-volume library.

Several persons, including the former acting dean of Wayne State University and the dean of the University of Michigan's law school, also raised questions of possible conflict of interest between his position as president of the Thomas M. Cooley Law School and his $42,000 position on the state Supreme Court.

Before leaving Wayne State recently to take a new job at the University of Hawaii, Donald E. Gordon asked Chief Justice Thomas M. Kavanagh to submit the issue for "discussion and disposition" before the full court.

Brennan, an affable, 44-year-old former Wayne Circuit judge, noted the former Supreme Court justice for whom the school is named, worked for a time as dean of the U-M Law School while on the high court. He also said he has complied with the judicial regulations against abuse of his office by not using his name on invitations to a $100-a-plate Founders' Society banquet in June on behalf of the school.

Brennan admitted his school has not been accredited by the American Bar Assn. or the Assn. of American Law Schools, but he said the ABA does not investigate a school until it has been in operation a full year.

Critics have accused Brennan of impropriety in putting his wife on the law school payroll full-time at $700 a month.

Brookover to 'clarify' voter signup directive

Mayor Wilbur Brookover will deliver a statement "clarifying" a recent East Lansing City Council directive on voter registrations at council's meeting tonight.

Council on July 17 requested City Clerk Beverly Colizzi to accept voter registrations obtained on Sundays, holidays and outside the city limits. The measure was prompted by Colizzi's refusal to accept several registrations obtained at the city's Bike

Day on July 4. Brookover at the time said he did not want residents to infer that council endorsed the registration of voters on Sundays. He could not be reached for comment on his scheduled statement Sunday.

In other action at a meeting moved up a day because of Tuesday's council primary, council will appoint nine members to the city's new Housing Commission.

The commission, which was created on June 26 along with a package of ordinances designed to improve local living conditions, will resolve tenant-landlord disputes and enforce East Lansing's new stricter housing maintenance and density standards.

Once the members are appointed they will begin a study of whether rent control is necessary or feasible in East Lansing as a result of the new ordinances, as directed by council.

St. John's urged to protest arrests

Parishioners of St. John's Student Parish in East Lansing have been urged to send telegrams and letters protesting the arrest of 86 nuns and priests at a farm worker protest in California. A special delivery letter from the National Federation of Priests' Councils addressed to Father Tom McDevitt described the arrests of the nuns and priests during a peaceful demonstration in support of the striking United Farm Workers on Tuesday.

The council's president suggested that telegrams be delivered, not phoned, to either Judge Blaine Rettig, Fresno County Courthouse, Fresno, Calif., 93721 or Sheriff Melvin Willmirth, Fresno County Jail, Fresno, Calif., 93721.

Pickets were arrested for disobeying court injunctions by standing closer than 100 feet apart or using bull horns or megaphones to attempt to reach strikebreakers in the vineyards.

Brown, McNeil and Sharp merit nod in primary election

Tuesday's city council primary hasn't given East Lansing voters anything to get all hot and bothered about. But three of the seven candidates — Nelson Brown, Margaret McNeil and incumbent Mary Sharp — deserve the support that will put them on the general election ballot for Nov. 6.

Tomorrow's warm-up election will send the top four vote getters on to the November runoff where two candidates will be chosen to fill two seats on city council. After interviewing all of the candidates, the State News feels that three most deserve to get past Tuesday's primary and present their promise to listen to all viewpoints and then set machinery in motion for change.

Her desire to find alternative housing solutions is encouraging. Rather than tearing down sub-code houses and building apartments, McNeil proposes to have the city step in and issue bonds for loans to groups of people for cooperative dwellings.

McNeil and Brown also deserve to be commended for their innovative platform, but some of their solutions to problems tend to be naive.

MARY SHARP, seeking a third consecutive four-year term, has shown herself to be headstrong and outspoken. She on a stale issueless campaign that infects many primary elections.

James Roberts is running for council because he says he is interested in some of the issues the council should be dealing with. Roberts, running a slick, high-impact campaign, comes across as a political opportunist taking advantage of the so-called polarization between students and permanent residents.

John Bjoen is another candidate who has failed to show a complete understanding of the city's problems. His proposal to start a Human Resources Center is worthy, but he has yet to grasp the politics involved in East campaigns to the people. NELSON BROWN, an outspoken liberal who is sick and tired of local government being unresponsive to people's needs, voices issues that sorely need attention on council. His desire to increase the involvement of residents in the decision-making process of city politics should be one of council's most urgent objectives in the next year.

Brown is no stranger to politics. His decision to run for city council comes after 10 years of activism in political affairs. He is one of the founders of the Coalition for Human Survival and a member of the city Human Relations Commission.

A key point in Brown's platform is a plank that would give council direct hiring-firing power over heads of city agencies. Administrative heads would get their direction from council, instead of from the city manager. While such a proposal poses many problems, it should generate some interesting campaign discussion before the general election.

A firm believer in participatory democracy, Brown could be a viable force in council in coming years.

MARGARET MCNEIL, running in tandem with Brown and backed by the Coalition for Human Survival, is a candidate that voters cannot afford to pass by. She has promised to seek the ideas of all local residents on issues and calls for the partial disarming of police.

McNeil is a firm believer in grassroots democracy. She has promised as a councilwoman she would spend time going door-to-door regularly to solicit opinions. She does not promise to work miracles, but does knows her mind and speaks to the point with an oftentimes caustic tongue.

She can be effective in bridging the gap between students and property owners if she puts her mind to it.

Sharp has a progressive outlook on city affairs. She is in favor of using the city's borrowing power to fund low-cost public housing with long-term, low-interest bonds. And she also acknowledges reluctantly that the city may be forced to employ rent controls if rents continue to soar sky-high in East Lansing.

When first elected to council eight years ago, Sharp, as she candidly admits, was the "flaming radical." Now she has mellowed and is a moderate. She has been criticized by some factions as being unresponsive to community concerns but she has been a vocal, potent council member.

After Brown, McNeil and Sharp, the other four candidates stand pale in comparison.

John Polomsky may know the ins and outs of creative problem solving (the bastion of his campaign), but he has yet to demonstrate an understanding or awareness of the problems that face East Lansing. He is running Paula Johnson, manager of Hosler's, calls herself a champion of the students. If so, why does she insist that tenants also bear the responsibility for upkeeping houses, especially those she says smell? Also, her position on local issues tends to be reactionary.

The student vote coupled with over 3,000 absentee ballots could play a major role in Tuesday's primary. In setting the field for an interesting general election campaign, do yourself a favor and get out and vote.

POINT OF VIEW

Not to criticize but to learn

By the MAJORITY of IRANIAN STUDENTS

Editor's note: This Point of View represents the collective opinion of students who call themselves the majority of Iranian students. It is written as a rebuttal to the Friday, July 27, Point of View of the Iranian Student Assn. headlined "U.S. sale of arms to Iran may start a new Indochina."

We, the majority of the Iranian students in the greater Lansing area and at Michigan State University, do not adhere to or accept the Point of View given by some students, namely those of the Iranian Student Assn. We object to their views for the following reasons:

In general, a simple student whose experiences are limited to reading literary books and resources can not claim a mastery in the field of politics or know how to govern a nation with an Iranian political environment. Needless to say, the politics experience counts. One can only achieve a status in the field by a continuous involvement and possession of a vast amount of knowledge.

Those students who have been struggling to find any possible way to become a permanent resident of the United States, prior to becoming a citizen, are no longer considered Iranians. They are criticizing not for the sake of constructive criticism but rather for the sake of revenge.

They are condemned for their lack of patriotism by staying away from their place of birth. It is fair to say they should keep away from interfering in the internal affairs and political policies of other countries.

It is much to our surprise that those students sympathizing with the citizens of Iran are expressing their sorrows for their countrymen. They should return home and help where they are needed most, rather than staying here indefinitely for selfish reasons and making excuses with their associates.

They should not be criticizing their

TWO CENTS WORTH

Loving concern for her fellow man?

To the Editor:

I would like to call to the attention of all East Lansing and MSU residents one of the most selfish and apathetic exhibitions I have ever witnessed.

On Friday, July 27, my wife and I were driving home on East Grand River Avenue. As we turned onto Gunson Street we saw four or five young men beating up a much smaller person across the street. These men appeared to have support from at least 10 more men in a pick-up truck.

We thought the fight looked serious, so I went into Larry's Shop Rite, 1109 East Grand River Ave. and asked the cashier in the office to please call the police. Before the cashier could complete dialing, Helen Fortino, the manager, told him to go back to work, that he had customers waiting and that it was none of their business what was going on outside.

Fortino then told me that I should go "next door" to use the phone. After the police arrived (thanks to the efforts of some other concerned citizen) and got things under control (which eventually required approximately 10 police vehicles) I returned to the store and tried to discuss the matter with Fortino. I was told to leave the store or she would call the police to have them remove me!

I could not believe what she was saying. Fortino seemed completely unconcerned with the fact that some person was getting beaten up across the street from her store. She would not allow her employee even one minute to possibly save the life of another person. She seemed more interested in making sure that one of her customers would send her a post card from Florida.

Since witnessing this behavior on Fortino's part, we will no longer shop at Larry's Shop Rite regardless of the convenience. We cannot support a person who is this callous toward others, and we urge any other people who shop there and feel the same way to do likewise.

Impeach the President

To the Editor:

I have just sent the following letter to Rep. Charles Chamberlain, R-East Lansing, and urge all readers to write similarly.

"I urge you to support a Resolution of Impeachment against President Richard M. Nixon on the following charges:

"1. That he conspired in planning of the burglary of the offices of Dr. Fielding, the commission of this crime involving the crossing of state lines by the burglars.

"2. That he conspired with members of the White House staff to cover up the involvement of staff members in the burglary at the Democratic National Committee headquarters.

"3. That he attempted to suborn justice by offering the directorship of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to Judge Matt Byrne while he was presiding in the trial of Daniel Ellsberg.

"Witnesses at the Senate Select Committee on the Presidential Election have made these charges. The evidence we have so far would not be enough to convict anyone of these charges, but is sufficient for impeachment, the equivalent of indictment. It would then be for the Senate, the trial court in such cases, to gather all the evidence in the case and come to a final conclusion.

"This letter is, in part, a result of President Nixon's refusal to release documents and tapes having bearing on this case. His refusal has impeded the work of the Senate Select Committee and of special prosecutors Archibald Cox. These documents and tapes would be evidence which President Nixon would be required to present to the Senate in connection with an impeachment trial.

"Many will say that impeachment will lead to a constitutional crisis. The crisis is already here, caused by President Nixon's insistence that he is above the law and need not submit evidence, even for criminal prosecution."

Porno problem not cured by old 'hide it' approach

Reactions to the Supreme Court's recent ruling on obscenity are coming in like the tides.

Soon they will engulf the nation in what promises to be the worst clash over censorship since America's bleak book-banning days when James Joyce's "Ulysses" was forbidden reading.

The immediate reaction among the purveyors of pornography—as they have come to be labeled—was conclusive and predictable. Adult book stores began to clean up their shelves and clean out their inventories.

In Lansing, vocal mayor-up-for-re-election Gerald Graves declared all-out war on smut peddlers. Ingham County Prosecutor Raymond Scodeller solemnly declared he was looking into the implications of the court ruling.

And in Meridian township, the township board of supervisors is

"We're not so much against selling the stuff, as we're saying 'hide it,'" township attorney Theodore Swift has been quoted as saying. "Maybe that's an artificial approach like sweeping dirt under the rug—I don't know, but I think the ordinance is a step in the right direction."

preparing to act on what may well be the first local anti-pornography legislation in the country based on the new Supreme Court community standards guidelines.

"We're not so much against the stuff, as we're saying 'hide it,'" township attorney Theodore Swift has been quoted as saying. "Maybe that's an artificial approach like sweeping dirt under the rug—I don't know, but I think the ordinance is a step in the right direction."

For much too long society and agents in government have sought to deal with social ills through this "hide it" approach. The failure of this "sweeping dirt under the rug" syndrome can be found in the nation's ghettos and reservations, in the mounting drug epidemic and in the continuing tragedy of venereal disease.

It is, at best, a stopgap measure that hurts more than it helps.

Meridian Township certainly is deluged with pornography. There are only a handful of newsstands in the entire township and the former X-rated Crest Drive-in has taken R-rated blood fests.

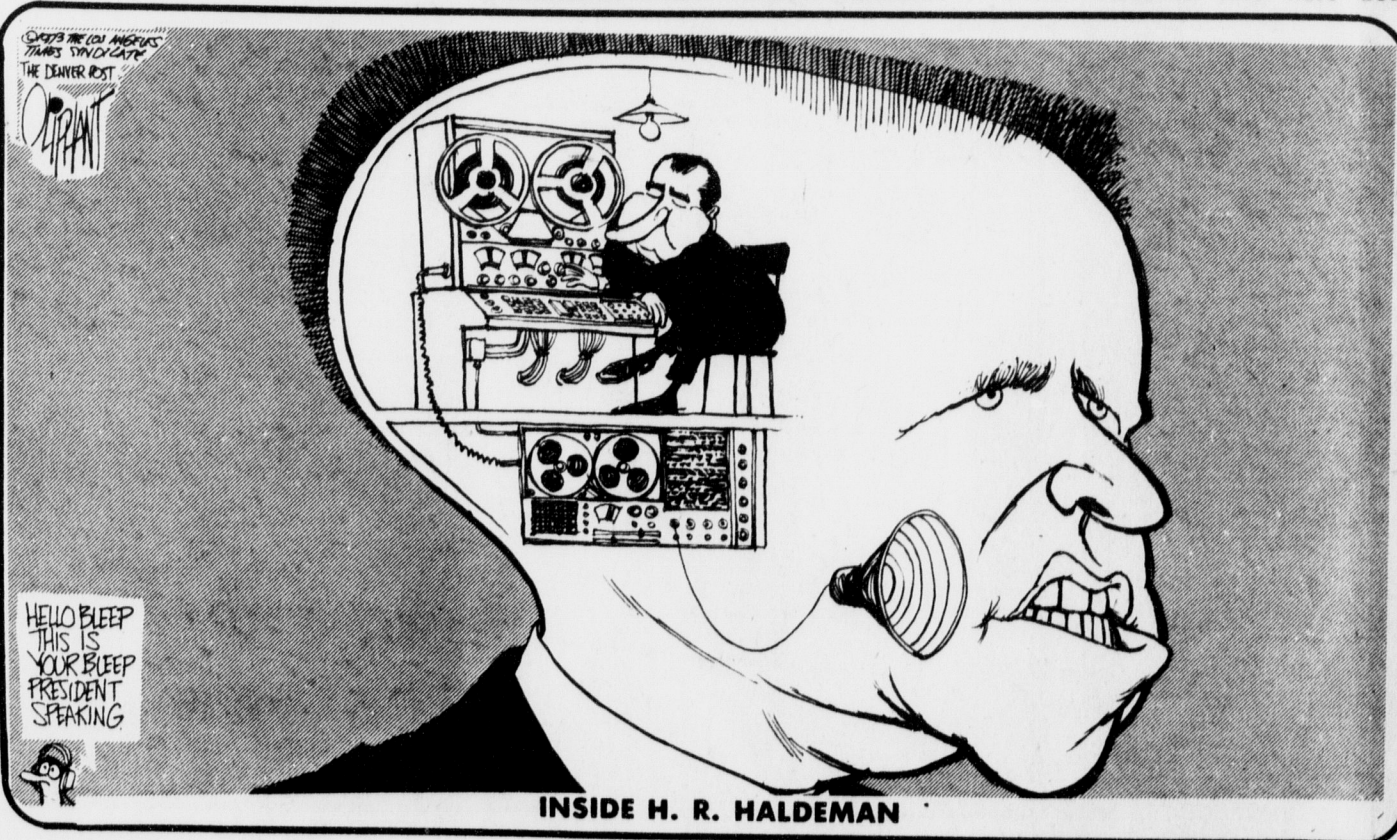

In this case the township board pulling out the proverbial baseball to swat a fly.

But the danger runs as deep and pervasive as an ocean current.

As Justice William O. Douglas in his dissent to the latest on interpretations on pornography: "Obscenity, at most, is the expression of offensive ideas."

"I see no constitutional basis for fashioning a rule that makes publisher, producer, bookseller, librarian or movie house criminally responsible, when he or she fails to take affirmative steps to protect consumer against literature or motion pictures offensive to those who temporarily occupy the seats of the mighty."

It is perhaps an unfortunate commentary on our society that the purveyors of porn function so successfully. But it is also a commentary on society's credit that up until now people have been given the free choice to pay to read or view the material which is now to be administered by "those who temporarily occupy the seats of the mighty."

Solemn rite

Daikichi Terauchi, a Buddhist priest, reads a service in a solemn Buddhist rite to observe the 13th anniversary of the death of America's glamorous movie star Marilyn Monroe at the Kaikichi - Dera temple in Tokyo Sunday. Hundreds of movie fans attended the ceremony. A portrait of Monroe can be seen in front of a Buddhist statue.

Lansing voters to cast ballots for a mayor, council members

Lansing voters will also be going to the polls Tuesday to cast ballots for mayor, council members and six proposals.

Four men are running for the office of mayor. They are: John T. Anas, 60, city council member; Gerald W. Graves, 50, incumbent mayor; Joel I. Ferguson, 34, city council member and Jack R. Merrill, 43, former urban renewal planner for the Model Cities Program.

Two of these candidates will remain in the race to compete in the November general election.

Voters will decide six propositions. Proposition A deals with when council members' terms of office would begin. Proposition B deals with the organization of the city council and Proposition C relates to the election of a mayor pro tem.

Proposition D would allow the Planning Board and Planning Dept. to administer and enforce the Lansing zoning ordinances.

Propositions E and F are similar in nature, but have one simple difference. They would allow police and firemen to retire after 25 years on the job regardless of age.

In proposal E however, the 25 - and - out is tied to a three - quarters mill tax increase to pay for the program. Proposal F, supported by police and firemen, asks no tax increase.

Redeployment plan detailed

By FRED BARNES
Washington Star-News

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State William P. Rogers has revealed that Cambodian troops will withdraw from "exposed positions" once support from American bombers ceases on Aug. 15.

Rogers, in an affidavit made public Saturday, said the bombing halt will necessitate a "redeployment of Cambodian armed forces, and in some cases civilians whom those forces are protecting, from exposed positions to positions where they can defend themselves and be resupplied."

The redeployment plan appeared to be roughly similar to an "enclave" program once proposed for the South Vietnamese army. Under that program, the army would have defended only major enclaves and left the rest of the country to the Vietcong.

The affidavit was submitted to the Supreme Court as part of the Nixon administration's argument for an order allowing the bombing of Cambodia to continue until Aug. 15.

By an 8-1 vote, the court supported the administration position Saturday, blocking a federal court judge's ruling on July 25 which said the bombing was unlawful because Congress had not authorized it. Congress had compelled the President to stop the bombing on Aug. 15.

Rogers' affidavit was more explicit than official statements had previously been in showing how the United States and the Cambodian government would try to adapt to the end of the bombing.

The secretary said "intensive planning has been undertaken with the United States government and between representatives of the American and Cambodian governments."

While the government on Friday had disclosed that the administration intended to continue to give Cambodia's government as much help as is permitted by law, it had not revealed that stepped-up deliveries would be made in the two weeks before the bombing halt.

All of the plans, Rogers said in his affidavits, "are for the purpose of improving the government of Cambodia's self-defense capability through assistance programs."

Release of tapes urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Democratic member of the Senate Watergate committee said Sunday there is no evidence that would now justify impeaching President Nixon and the public would not support such a move.

But Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, D - Ga., said a heavy cloud of doubt and suspicion will be removed from the White House only when the President releases tape recordings of relevant presidential conversations and submits himself to examination.

"I don't think the tape issue ever will be laid to rest until they are make public," Talmadge said. "I think the President is making a great mistake in not making the tapes available to the committee and to the public."

The Watergate committee has subpoenaed those tapes and will go to court this week in an attempt to compel the President to produce them. Talmadge was interviewed on the CBS television news program, "Face the Nation."

Former acting FBI director L. Patrick Gray III returns to the witness table for cross - examination today. He is to be followed by former U.S. Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst.

Lawyers' arguments predicted

should not get involved in the apportionment of Congress and state legislatures.

"The Court's authority — possessed of neither the purse nor the sword — ultimately rests on sustained public confidence in its moral sanction," wrote Frankfurter.

"Such feeling must be nourished by the Court's complete detachment, in fact and in appearance, from political entanglements and by abstention from injecting itself into the clash of political forces in political sentiments," he said.

But Frankfurter was in the minority on that decision. Most of the justices decided to brave the political thicket, convinced in part by then Solicitor General Archibald Cox.

Richardson cites shortcomings of crime fight department lacks the staff and the procedures to measure the effects of crime - fighting programs.

In the past, he said, the department has plunged into one or another aspect of the crime fight without weighing the impact on other components of the criminal justice system.

"One of the ironies of this department is that it has been preaching this sort of proposition to the states and it has given to the states hundreds of millions of dollars to improve their ability for comprehensive criminal justice planning," Richardson said.

"And yet, though this department embraces all of the elements of the criminal justice system except the courts, we have been doing none of this ourselves."

For example, he said, "if you invest a greater effort in making arrests through the improvement of police procedures, . . . what does that do to the rest of the system?"

"You may actually undercut the objectives of better law enforcement if all you have done is improved police capabilities," he continued.

"You've got all the shiny new cruisers, you've got the improved radio equipment, you're sending police to college, you've got the new laboratory and yet your law enforcement situation overall is worse than if you had nothing."

Such a blind approach, he said, overloads prosecutors and courts, leaves many suspects on the streets awaiting trials, encourages plea bargaining to bypass trials, and ultimately shatters public faith in the criminal justice system.

Richardson said government often fails to define clearly the job it is attempting to do.

"A lot of problems arise from the failure to be clear about that," he said. "The job, as far as the criminal justice system is concerned, is reducing crime, reducing the social cost to people of being victimized by crime."

Fire causes death of local newlywed

A 19 - year old Lansing newlywed died Sunday morning of burns resulting from a fire at 1118 Prospect St. early Saturday morning.

Nancy Wakefield was pronounced dead at Lansing's Sparrow Hospital where her husband Jerry, also 19, is listed in critical condition with second - and third - degree burns over 80 per cent of his body.

Lansing firefighters were called to the scene at 3:34 a.m. Saturday and found the couple inside, apparently overcome by smoke one official said.

The fire caused $3,000 damage to the rented apartment and $500 to the contents. Fire officials said the blaze was probably started by a lighted candle.

Herb blasts Bush's tactics

By LYNN HENNING
State News Sports Writer

There has been no reconciliation, to be sure, between former MSU sprinter Herb Washington and Jim Bush, coach of the U.S. touring track team.

The storm that had been brewing for weeks between the two finally broke last week when Washington and MSU teammate Marshall Dill quit the American team in Africa and returned to the United States, sending Bush on a tirade that completely surprised Washington.

Bothered constantly by a recurring Achilles heel injury, Washington decided he was doing himself and the U.S. team no good. He then made arrangements with AAU officials to leave. They gave him and Dill permission to return to the United States.

But after learning of their departure, Bush launched a verbal attack at the two.

"They asked to go home and we got them out of here as fast as we could," Bush was quoted as saying. "I will recommend to the AAU that they be disciplined. These two athletes have been disagreeable throughout the European tour."

"In any event, it will be the last time they are heard of in a U.S. national team."

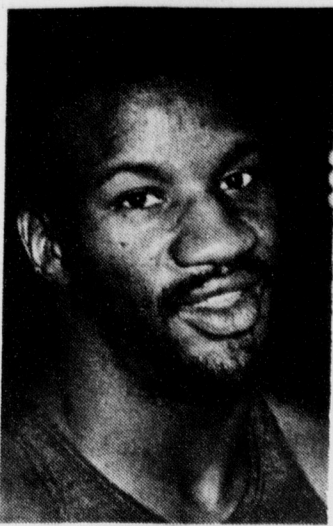

Washington says Bush consistently has failed to look at the other side of the story, something which contributed to his and Dill's departure to begin with.

"Jim Bush was aware as anybody on the team that my heel was giving me trouble," Washington said.

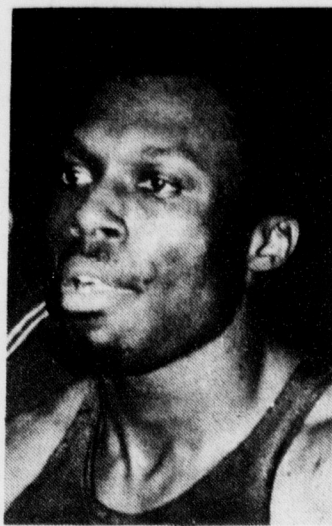

Hole in one

Warren Belding, East Lansing senior and campus groundskeeper, recorded a hole-in-one last Thursday night on the 140-yard par three fourth hole at Indian Hills Golf Course.

Belding aced the hole with an eight iron.

Washington

Dill

"But he never once asked me what the matter was. I had it taped, I was taking cortisone shots, and I was limping so bad that people were asking me all the time what was the matter with me."

"I just decided it was so bad that it would be best to lay off for a while. And the doctor said if I rested it would be okay. So I just figured there was no sense running the possibility of snapping it (Achilles tendon). . . I don't plan to run until January now."

Communication problems hung between Bush and Washington almost from the start of the tour. At the time Washington departed, they were not on speaking terms.

"It started back in Russia," Washington said.

"Somebody had told him I wasn't running (against the Soviets). Bush took me out of the 100- and 300-meter races, saying that somebody told him I wasn't running."

"So I went to Bush," Washington explained, "and told him: 'You maintain that you always get both sides of the story, but you haven't done so. Your credibility as a coach is questionable and my respect for you as a man has diminished. Until I've told you different, I will run.'"

Washington says that Bush's comments were especially surprising since AAU officials had okayed his and Dill's departure.

"At no time was anything said indicating that we were going to be disciplined," Washington said. "Steve Prefontaine and other athletes had left the team and nothing had been said."

"Another thing," Washington emphasized, "I wasn't going to come back and tell everybody about all the problems we had had with Bush. Why did he shoot it all over the wire services? The guy should tell the other side of the story. If he had practiced what he'd preached, there wouldn't have been any further problems."

Washington says he doesn't regret not telling Bush in the first place that the two were leaving.

"Not at all, not at all. He acted like a little kid. I didn't feel then nor do I feel at this time that I should have gone to him. I couldn't trust him. He still could have twisted it around."

Dill was running behind U.S. sprinters Steve Williams and Mark Lutz, and was being used mainly as an alternate, explained MSU asst. track coach Jim Bibbs. The back-up role along with some summer academic requirements, apparently served to persuade Dill to return.

Washington said he will continue to place his injured heel under the care of Dr. James Feurig of the MSU Health Center. He doesn't anticipate a complete recovery until the first of next year.

Meanwhile, Washington will continue working as a sports reporter for WJIM. CBS has reportedly contacted Washington on possibly joining one of its affiliates in Chicago.

"I just hope this incident won't affect those chances," Washington said.

Gymnasts' clinic meets on campus

Gymnasts from across the United States, Canada and Mexico will converge on the MSU campus for the 16th annual National Summer Gymnastics Clinic, which began Sunday and continues through Thursday.

Under the guidance of some of the nation's top clinicians, programs in judging, coaching, theory, performing and competition will be conducted for gymnasts of all ages.

Highlights of the five-day clinic include the "Nite of Stars" on Thursday as well as demonstrations of new compulsory routines, uniforms and equipment through out the week.

The competition, which begins at 6:30 p.m., is free to the general public.
