

Rep's proposal to govern land use criticized as maze of bureaucracy

By TOM HAROLDSON
State News Staff Writer

What four years ago was an area of sprawling farms and virgin woods has evolved into the city of Southfield, located next to Detroit, a network of subdivisions, highways and land development. Many older residents are not too happy over what has happened to Southfield, but lack the ability to put a stop to it.

In finger-jutting Leelanau County in northwest Michigan, the residents are up in arms over widespread land development that has changed a once sparsely populated resort area into a haven for tourists and get-rich-quick entrepreneurs.

Such examples of land abuse, which result from weak state laws governing land use planning and regulation has prompted a state legislator to propose an administrative structure to establish a land use plan for the state and end haphazard land development. But the legislation is receiving a cool reception from Gov.

Milliken's administration.

The legislation, sponsored by state Rep. Philip Mastin, D-Hazel Park, would set up a series of bureaucratic channels for implementing state land use and eventually curb growing land development in Michigan with a series of watchdog agencies.

And, while Milliken and A. Gene Gazlay, director of the Dept. of Natural Resources, agree in principle with Mastin's goals, they oppose his plan because of what they term the "massive bureaucratic maze" he would establish to coordinate land development.

Presently, there is no state plan that decides which land is protected, other than a few public acts characterized by loop holes and vague language. The lack of planning leading to widespread development has raised the fears of citizens in parts of the state such as the Upper Peninsula and Leelanau County, where residents are concerned that their area has become a haven for vacationers and land developers.

Mastin, who introduced the bill last February with the support of 60 cosigning representatives, argues that such a plan with a defined set of bureaucratic channels is necessary to regulate and prevent land development abuses such as those in Leelanau — the home of Sleeping Bear sand dunes — and the Upper Peninsula.

"Michigan is losing vast amounts of farm land, unique land areas and important land every year because there are no state laws to adequately control development," Mastin said. "Local zoning officials are finding their hands tied by the courts who tend to rule for land contractors and against the officials."

He added that because local zoning laws are not backed by state law, the courts usually rule that the ordinances are ineffective in controlling unwanted land development. Backed by the state and the land use commission, Mastin said, local ordinances and zoning laws could stand up to such undesired development.

He also said that Congress is studying legislation that would allow states to develop their own particular land use plan, rather than having the federal government dictate standards. Failure to develop such a plan, under the studied legislation, would result in a loss of federal funding for public works.

"The bill stipulates that states not adopting a land use plan would stand to lose 7 per cent of federal funding for public works, if the plan is not adopted within the first year," Mastin said. "The loss of funds increases the longer states wait. Thus there is considerable financial pressure that could be applied by the government if the legislation is adopted."

He said his bill attempts to allow local government officials and land use planners to provide their own particular input into how their area will be developed.

"State and local planners can work together in developing land use plans in their area," Mastin said. "The bill is not intended to establish virtual state control over all land use planning. On the contrary, the local units can benefit by

Presume Agnew innocent, Nixon urges

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon said Wednesday that Vice President Spiro T. Agnew should be presumed innocent, and he denied he had ever asked Agnew to resign.

Noting the "rather white-hot atmosphere" swirling around Agnew, Nixon said he hopes Agnew "will not be tried and convicted in the press and on television by leaks and innuendoes."

The President defended Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry Petersen, the chief Agnew target in the controversy over news leaks on a Baltimore grand jury investigation of alleged kickbacks and bribes given Agnew.

"If I did not support Mr. Petersen's handling of the investigation," Nixon said, "he would have been removed at this time."

At his hastily called half-hour news conference, his third in five weeks, Nixon also said:

●Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky should reconsider his decision closing special transit facilities for Jews leaving the Soviet Union because "We simply cannot have governments, small or large, give in to international blackmail by terrorist groups."

●Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will visit Peking Oct. 26-29 to pursue trade and other issues of mutual concern. Kissinger also will visit Japan while in the Far East.

●He will travel to Europe himself "in three or four months" and also to Japan before the end of next year with the precise timing of the trips dependent both on foreign consultations and on "my responsibilities on the domestic front."

●Three declarations of principle, rather than one, are being negotiated for signing during his visits to Europe and Japan. One is intended to update the Atlantic Alliance, another deals with economic issues and the third is a general declaration to "breathe new life and new purpose and new spirit" into relations with U.S. allies.

●He will not endorse any Republican contender to succeed him in the White House until "they have been tried in the field of battle" in the presidential primaries.

●He wouldn't discuss possible changes in his economic game plan and declined to take sides in a debate over whether the nation's unemployment goal should be four per cent or five per cent.

The President was smiling and appeared relaxed when he appeared in the crowded White House briefing room on less than an hour's notice. Unlike his previous two news conferences on Sept. 5 and Aug. 22 which were televised live, Wednesday's session was filmed and taped for later broadcast.

Nixon noted that the allegations "do not relate in any way to Agnew's activities as vice president."

A White House spokesman said there was "no relation whatsoever" between the timing of Nixon's news conference and the televised testimony of Republican political saboteur Donald Segretti.

Training center fund raising starts

By DIANE SILVER
State News Staff Writer

A ceremony kicking off fund-raising activities for the construction of a new MSU Advanced Management Training Center in the Detroit area will be held at noon today in Troy.

President Wharton and Edward N. Cole, president of General Motors Corp., will be among the 100 executives attending the ceremony at the building site in the Detroit suburb.

The building, in an unprecedented arrangement for MSU, is being totally financed and built by a private foundation made up of MSU alumni and Detroit area businessmen. After the center's completion, it will be turned over to MSU and run by the University's Graduate School of Business Administration.

If the needed $4 million is raised, construction can begin early in 1974 with the first classes commencing in early 1975. Nearly half of the funds have already been pledged by Chrysler, Ford and General Motors.

The project was initiated by Detroit-area businessmen and graduates of MSU's nine-year-old Advanced Management Program several years ago, said Don Christensen, assistant to the Dean of the Graduate School of Business Education.

"People, like the president of General Motors, recognized the management program's success and hoped one day to build a facility like this," Christensen said. William Randolph, director of MSU's current Detroit-based management program, said that the foundation was set up because "the group of alumni who formed it want to do this as a gift to the University."

One unusual feature of this project is the lead the three major auto company's are taking, said Robert Perrin, vice president for University relations.

Cole, especially, is taking a major role by guiding the fund drive.

Cole said that the center "will fill a proven need for systematic updating of managerial competence to match the knowledge explosion and new techniques in today's fast changing business world."

The foundation will probably be dissolved after the center is completed because its sole purpose is to build the center.

The center will also be a first step in fulfilling President Wharton's goal of bringing MSU's programs and resources to all Michigan residents.

"The new center is an important cornerstone in MSU's expanded program of lifelong education to provide all people of the State of Michigan with a wide range of educational opportunities."

"It's presence in the greater Detroit area will enable business people throughout southeastern Michigan to pursue new paths of learning and keep pace with the

20 PLANNED FOR MSU

Bicycles donated to city

By LINDA SANDEL
State News Staff Writer

East Lansing residents who have to get someplace in a hurry and don't have a personal set of wheels may soon be able to jump on a community-owned bicycle and pedal to their destinations.

After the trip is completed the newly-painted white bicycle need only be left for any other person who happens to be in need of transportation.

Twenty such community bikes were presented to the East Lansing City Council Tuesday by John Belaski, owner of Crossroads Cycle, who is the driving force behind the community cycle idea. And Belaski plans to give 20 more bikes to MSU.

For the past seven or eight months

Belaski has been buying used bikes, old bikes and bikes in need of mechanical attention.

He and volunteers from the Crossroads Cycle Shop, 210 Abbott Road, have spent their own time repairing, painting and mounting signs on the bikes explaining that they are free and available for community use.

All the sign requests is that the bicycles are left somewhere in East Lansing or on the MSU campus for other people to use.

"What I really want to emphasize is that this project has been a community effort," Belaski said. "Many volunteers from the community, my store staff and the city government have given much time and hard work to the project."

Belaski said he wanted to do something for a community that has been good to him both personally and in business during the past five years.

"I wanted to say thank you to East Lansing," said Belaski. "I love biking. It's nonpolluting, healthful, noncongesting and good exercise. Maybe it's idealistic of me, but I'd like to share some of that fun with this community."

City council accepted Belaski's potential solution to city mass transit problem calling it an exciting gift.

He also plans to increase his free fleet by giving MSU 20 community bicycles in the near future, but is not sure what campus unit he should approach to make the offer.

Several volunteers have talked with the MSU Dept. of Public Safety on the possibility of obtaining bikes from the salvage yard for the community system, but details have not yet been worked out.

Some legal problems involving the community bikes and city or University liability remain to be solved.

Belaski said he does not believe bicycle ripoff will be a problem because the bikes are old.

"Two other cities, Copenhagen and a small city in Canada, have successfully used this program and solved legal problems," Belaski said. "I'm sure East Lansing can solve them too."

Belaski discovered the community bicycle idea after spending several years in Copenhagen. The success of the program there, his interest in community service and a firm belief in the positive effect business can have on a city led him to push the idea in East Lansing, he said.

Model Cities of Lansing has contacted Belaski about the possibility of using the program in the model cities area to improve transportation and stimulate community feeling.

Belaski believes that people could help solve urban transit problems by parking their cars on the edge of the city and riding bicycles through the city center which would be off-limits for all cars.

Anybody's bike

John Belaski, standing, owner of Crossroads Cycle Shop, speaks at the Tuesday city council meeting where he donated 20 bikes to the East Lansing community. The bikes will be parked around the city, available to anyone needing transportation.

Unit proposes alumni, faculty trustee posts

By MIKE GALATOLA
State News Staff Writer

The ASMSU proposal to get four student liaisons on the board of trustees has spawned a proposal that faculty and alumni should also sit on the board.

The MSU chapter of the American Assn. of University Professors, represented by Roy T. Matthews, associate professor of humanities, told the Academic Council at its Tuesday meeting it believed faculty and alumni could provide the trustees with valuable input.

"The faculty constitute a primary constituency in terms of their professional expertise," Matthews read from the association resolution. "The alumni can contribute on the basis of their perspective on the educational process."

"We urge that any constituency advisory board include students, faculty and alumni," the resolution concluded.

But Larry Bartrem, executive assistant to ASMSU president Ed Grafton, said Wednesday that the faculty relate much differently to the trustees than the students do.

"The faculty and the board are in an employee-employer relationship, while the students have a clientele relationship," Bartrem said.

"The students are paying for the services MSU is providing and they have a right to determine in part how those services are rendered," he continued.

But the faculty are being paid for the services they provide, Bartrem said, so their relationship with the trustees would come under a labor relations heading.

"I don't think the board wants to be a bargaining unit at every meeting it holds," he continued. "This could be one result of the faculty sitting on the board."

Bartrem also questioned the need for an alumni seat on the board.

"I wasn't aware that the alumni had pressing needs which were so great as to justify a seat on the board," he said.

Gulf Oil Co. to close up stations outside of Detroit

Friday at 8 p.m. ends the period for registering to vote in the Nov. 6 East Lansing City Council election.

All Michigan Gulf Oil Co. stations outside the Detroit metropolitan area will close by December and most out-state Gulf distributors will cease operations within the next year, according to a report presented to the Joint Legislative Committee to Investigate the Energy Crisis.

R.B. Phillips, executive vice president of Gulf Oil Co.-U.S., told the special committee that the northern and central Michigan area, along with the State of California "is a real disaster area" for profits. The firm controls seven per cent of Michigan's fuel market.

In turn, 267 Gulf stations will be sold to independent dealers or closed by December. Only one Gulf station, Larry's Gulf, 504 W. Michigan Ave., now remains in East Lansing, out of five listed in the Firm to appeal $4-million ruling

Detroit Edison Co. said it would appeal a $4-million judgment charging the company with discrimination against blacks. U.S. District Judge Ramon Keith's decision, described by an Edison official as "wrong on the facts, wrong on the law and wrong in the extreme remedies it has ordered," said that the company had engaged in "systematic discrimination" and told the company to hire and promote more blacks.

Atlanta mayoral race runoff set

Black vice mayor Maynard Jackson will face incumbent Sam Massell in a runoff election Oct. 16 to decide who becomes Atlanta, Ga.'s mayor.

Jackson, who could become the city's first black mayor, led an 11-man field in Tuesday's election, but failed to get the necessary majority. Jackson got 46.6 per cent of the vote, followed by Massell, who polled 19.8 per cent.

Black candidates, who won five of 18 city council seats, face white candidates in runoff elections for three seats and black opponents in runoffs for four seats.

Roosevelt denies plot role again

Elliott Roosevelt told the senate government operations subcommittee that charges that he helped plot an assassination attempt against the prime minister of the Bahamas were "vicious lies" and a "hoax."

The son of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt urged the subcommittee to prosecute for perjury two men who linked him to a purported attempt on the life of Bahamian Prime Minister Lynden O. Pindling.

Last Calley appeal starts today

Lt. William L. Calley Jr., convicted of murder in the My Lai massacre, will begin his final appeal today before the U.S. Court of Military Appeals, the top military court.

Calley, 29, was sentenced to 20 years at hard labor for murdering at least 22 Vietnamese civilians and assaulting a Vietnamese child with intent to murder.

Calley's lawyer will argue that Calley had no malice, so that what happened at My Lai on March 16, 1968, was manslaughter, not murder.

Tunney finds food budget small

Sen. John V. Tunney, D-Calif., spent only $1.25 a day for food the last two weeks, — and found he soon thought of nothing but eating.

Tunney began observing his food budget after witnesses at hearings on high food prices said $1.25

Tunney said he is introducing legislation that would allow Congress to restrict food exports and strengthen the price control enforcement program.

Shultz leaves Soviet deadlock

Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz left Moscow after failing to break a deadlock threatening to stall improved Soviet-American trade relations.

He had tried to explain congressional refusal to authorize tariff cuts for Russian goods unless free emigration of Russian Jews and other Soviet groups was allowed.

Meanwhile, the Israeli government said Austria's decision to close the Schoenau transit camp "constitutes a serious impairment of the foundations of morality and international law and is liable to encourage additional acts of violence."

Schoenau camp near Vienna continued to process Soviet Jews emigrating to Israel. There was no word on when the camp, which processes an average of 40 to 120 people a day, will close.

Segretti sorry for 'dirty tricks'

FROM WIRE SERVICES

WASHINGTON — Political saboteur Donald H. Segretti listed his "dirty tricks" against Democratic presidential candidates for the Senate Watergate Committee Wednesday.

Then Segretti apologized and said the tricks had no place in politics.

Segretti, 32, a Los Angeles lawyer, testified under limited immunity from prosecution that he received after pleading guilty this week to federal charges of political sabotage.

Segretti said he was recruited for his activities by Dwight L. Chapin, then President Nixon's appointments secretary.

He said he had agents in five states and employed tactics like phony letters containing faked charges, planting a stink bomb in campaign headquarters, inserting classified advertisements under fictitious names and distributing signs, bumper stickers and pamphlets under the names of nonexistent committees.

At one point he said he paid 11 persons and later said the figure was 28 for operatives in Florida, New Hampshire, California, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and Washington, D.C.

He told the committee that "my activities have been blown out of all proportion by the news media... I have been abused by rumor, character assassination, innuendo and a complete disregard for the privacy of myself, my friends and my family."

Segretti said he told then-presidential counsel John W. Dean III about his activities last October when the Washington Post was preparing to publish a number of details. After the story was published, the White House dismissed comment.

Segretti said the original federal Watergate prosecutors asked him no questions about how he was paid when he appeared before the grand jury, though they had discussed it briefly beforehand. A juror brought up the question, Segretti said.

He corroborated testimony that he was paid $45,000 in salary and expenses by Herbert W. Kalmbach, President Nixon's personal lawyer, after being hired by Chapin and Gordon Strachan, another White House aide. He had been friends with the two men while attending the University of Southern California.

Segretti was the second witness in the "dirty tricks" phase of the Watergate hearings. Committee staffers said the next witnesses will be Robert M. Benz and Douglas Kelly, Segretti agents in Florida.

CBS carried Wednesday's hearings live after the other two commercial networks dropped out of rotating coverage. But CBS said it did not plan to carry Thursday's session.

Segretti said as far as he knows Nixon was ignorant of his activities, even though he kept appointments secretary Chapin informed every step of the way.

Not long after Segretti finished a 10-page prepared statement that ticked off a long list of hoaxes, the committee itself was hoaxed. A telephone caller's report of a bomb in the hearing room caused Chairman Sam J. Ervin Jr., D-N.C. to break off the morning session. No bomb was found.

Segretti denied having anything to do with the so-called "Canuck letter," an apparent dirty trick that was a factor in the political undoing of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie.

JUDGE CALLS SPECIAL SESSION

Agnew jury warned about media

FROM WIRE SERVICES

BALTIMORE — The federal grand jury investigating Vice President Spiro T. Agnew was warned by a judge Wednesday to disregard news stories.

U.S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffmann, assigned to handle the inquiry into allegations of kickbacks and bribes, summoned the jury to an extraordinary public hearing and lectured them on their responsibilities.

Earlier, Hoffmann had met privately with lawyers for Agnew and the Justice Dept.

Hoffmann gave Agnew's lawyers broad authority to subpoena Justice Dept. officials, newsmen and others to find sources of news leaks.

The subpoenas for depositions, which may be issued at any U.S. District Court, must be kept sealed and not made part of any public file, Hoffmann said.

"In the present-day grab for priority in getting news items, the news media frequently overlook the rights of others, especially where criminal matters are involved," Hoffmann later told the 18 jurors present from the 22-member panel.

Then the jurors were escorted by federal marshals back to their room on the fifth floor of the courthouse.

Agnew, who has denounced news leaks about the investigation and blamed Justice Dept. sources, has moved to halt the grand jury investigation on the grounds it is unconstitutional to indict him or try him in any criminal court. Hoffmann has set a hearing for Oct. 12 on this legal move, which the Justice Dept. opposes.

In a related development, the House of Representatives was reported ready to vote late next week on whether to demand an inquiry into the allegations against Agnew. Democratic House leaders, who said they did not want to interfere with the courts, turned down a request from Agnew last week for a full investigation.

Suit against impoundment reaches Supreme Court

WASHINGTON STAR-NEWS

WASHINGTON — Though the Watergate tapes case has yet to reach the Supreme Court, the justices are already faced with a decision on how to deal with the issue of the limits of presidential power.

The issue has been raised in a lawsuit that challenges the right of President Nixon to impound funds appropriated by Congress.

In the next few weeks, the justices are expected to decide whether to rule on the pending impoundment suit, wait for another impoundment case to come along or duck the touchy political issue altogether.

The current suit involves $65.3 million in federal funds earmarked for the state of Georgia. The state claims that the Nixon administration has illegally impounded the money.

A ruling on the suit could affect the entire amount of money impounded by the administration — an estimated $9 billion to $14.7 billion — and could pass judgment on the legality of presidential impoundment in general.

Georgia, skipping over the lower federal courts, filed the suit directly with the Supreme Court last May. The state invoked the highest court's "original jurisdiction" over disputes between a state and the federal government.

RESPONSE TO DISCRIMINATION CHARGES

City council to review hiring policies

By LINDA SANDEL
State News Staff Writer

In response to charges that the city of East Lansing practices discrimination in its hiring procedures, city council Tuesday will advise the public of the policies and procedures.

The Public Interest Research Group in Michigan (PIRGIM) accused the city Tuesday of using two job application forms — one that is given to both men and women and another given only to women.

The second form specifically questions female applicants' office skills.

PIRGIM asked the city to discontinue use of the second form entitled, "Female Employment Applicants Office Skills."

It also asked that the city revise its general form so that all applicants can answer office skills questions regardless of sex.

"I am shocked that we were not given an opportunity to check and correct this situation immediately," Councilwoman Mary Sharp said. "I was not aware of this procedure and it is subject to proof, but if this discrimination exists, it should be stopped."

The council adopted a motion introduced by Sharp which asked that the city establish an affirmative action program aimed at correcting discrimination against minorities and women.

Such a program is required of all employers under federal antidiscrimination guidelines.

Francienne Walker, member of the PIRGIM board of directors at MSU, said that PIRGIM would follow the situation closely and would be in contact with Sharp about implementing the affirmative action program.

During the meeting's open public forum, Randall A. Kalember, 330 N. Harrison Road, introduced a new, open coalition which he said will attempt to tighten up "relaxed ethics" in city politics.

The organization, known as the Student Coalition Aimed at Reducing Exotic City Ripoff Weaponry (SCARECROW), made its first public complaint during the council meeting against the "victimless crimes" caused by the East Lansing parking system.

SCARECROW asked the city to authorize and establish a commission to review and revise the city parking system.

It also requested that the city restrain its representatives and agents from issuing tickets for alleged violations while the system is under review.

Councilman George Griffiths said he would look into the project in the near future.

The council also received notice of the Ingham County Road Commission plans to relocate and to rebuild the Kalamazoo Street bridge between Harrison Road and Clippert Street. The construction project involves rechanneling of the Red Cedar River.

Project plans were referred to the Traffic Commission, Planning Commission and the Environmental Equality and Esthetics Task Force for consideration.

In other action, the council granted a license to Dooley's Restaurant, 131 Albert St., for a pool room housing 4-6 pool tables. The restaurant is scheduled to open in mid-October.

A request from the George Eyde Construction Co., that a parcel of land on Abbott Road north of M-78 be rezoned was referred to the planning Commission. The company wishes to build 136 living units on the property.

In addition, the city council Tuesday night voted to rescind the city's present animal ordinance and allow Ingham County to take over the dog - catching domain.

County dog - hassling won't start, however, until publication of the new city policy which City Manager John Patriarche said won't be for at least two weeks.

In the meantime the "dogs life" in East Lansing will be pretty easy.

Naert said that the county would begin limited coverage of East Lansing within the next week.

He added that the police department has been covering the city's emergency animal problems and will continue to do so until the new county program goes into effect.

Crest manager arrested under new anti-smut law

Seven nights of "Southern Comfort," "Love Camp 7," and "The Toy Box" proved to be all Meridian Township officials would take.

Township officials — who adopted an anti-pornography law in mid-August — moved Tuesday night to stop the Crest Drive-in from continuing showings of the three movies, which township attorney Theodore Swift believes violate the township's new law.

Police officers arrested the Crest's manager, Randall Posorek, charging him with violation of the township's new law, which bans display of "pictorially offensive, sexually explicit materials." Posorek was arraigned in Mason District Court.

The Crest had stopped showing "Mary Poppins" fare Sept. 27.

COMMENTARY

Under Uncle Sam's mustache, a smile

By RUSSELL BAKER
New York Times

Here is an alarming little news story. It is about eight men who went to Florida in 1972 with a mind to stage some sort of protest against the Vietnam War.

It was not an illogical place for protest. Both Democrats and Republicans held their conventions that summer in Miami Beach, largely because Miami Beach is an artificial city cut off from the world by a natural moat, and this moat mentally arose mainly from a sense among men who ran the country that they had behaved so badly about the war that sensible persons might be tempted to make an embarrassing scene about it.

Politicians dislike scenes in election years. They want to hear their excellence praised before the multitude, and this was the game plan in Miami Beach, at least for the Republicans. From inside the moat they filled the television screens of six continents with self-praise of a density and volume that would have made a pharaoh blush.

All that is politics, and perfectly all right, the politician's trade being, on occasion, to fool all of the people some of the time — but only for their own good, mind you, only for their own good. The eight men in this alarming news story were in politics, too.

Very quickly, however, they ceased being in politics and became in jail. The Justice Dept. had them indicted on charges of conspiring to do violence within the moat, which they never reached, of course, on account of their major problem with the law.

They were tried this summer in Gainesville. After deliberating briefly, a jury found them not guilty. This was 14 months after their arrest and five weeks of trial.

Lovers of American law customarily give themselves airs at this stage of this repetitious story, for, they say, it shows that the American legal system manages finally to serve justice. And yet, very little justice was done in this case, or in many others like it which have ended in

In fact, Uncle Sam is something like the man in the cigar commercial who keeps threatening that he is going to get you. When Uncle Sam sets out to get you, he is going to get you. He doesn't know how. Maybe by putting you in prison, maybe by letting you escape prison and merely men were deprived of their right to make their protest?

How about being required to spend 14 months of their lives preoccupied with lawyers and absorbed with the threat of imprisonment? Who among us can afford to be distracted from his normal work for more than a year while the government attempts to put us away?

Whether defendants in such cases are convicted or not probably makes small difference to the government. The punishment for being indicted is severe enough to make a man swear off disagreements with reigning politicians for the rest of his life, which is really what governments want.

The Nixon administration's use of these indictments to preoccupy, harass and bankrupt opponents of the Vietnam War has been part of a general policy of injustice pursued by the Justice Dept. since the early 1960s to compel people to quit complaining about Vietnam and love the war.

The remedy seems obvious enough. If the Justice Dept. is going to function as an Injustice Dept., then the government ought to provide a comparable source of wealth and power for the aid of persons whom the government sets out to get.

The legal costs of being a defendant ought to be paid in full by the government if it fails to get you. Why should an innocent person have to go to a bankruptcy because John Mitchell does it like his looks? Travel costs should be paid, too. Hotel bills and bail fees, compensation for time missed from the job and compensatory damages for worry and fretting and time lost from active opposition to the government.

Why not, in fact, permit the bringing of extremely expensive, time-consuming indictments against any attorney general who has you indicted for a political crime and can't make it stick? With a clear understanding, of course, that he has to pay all his legal costs out of his own bank balance, even if a jury clears him.

If the government can't get you fair and square, it ought to have to think twice before it tries.

Legislators need to quickly style index of political do's and don't's

Ethics is a difficult word to define and the state Special Senate Study Committee on Political Ethics has its hands full defining it for legislative action. But with an election coming up next year, time is running out to achieve some positive changes.

This committee was formed last January to study and recommend ways of defining and enforcing political ethics. Its preliminary final report was published last August.

The report centers around four areas of ethical concern in politics: open meetings, lobbying, conflict of interest and campaign financing. All are difficult areas to define and the committee is feeling the pressure to come up with concrete suggestions on improving current laws.

The most pressing area of concern is lobbying. This is where political ethics most commonly break down.

Quite a few years ago, Atty. Gen. Frank J. Kelley came up with what he believed were some of the most flagrant acts of unethical lobbying.

The normal practice of lobbyists is to purchase meals and drinks for legislators.

Lobbyists on occasion share hotel rooms with legislators and pay the bill for the accommodations. Some maintain a hospitality suite which is available for legislators.

Lobbyists assist legislators and relatives of legislators in obtaining jobs with the lobbyists' employers. Other favors, such as greens fees at golf courses, boat cruises and gifts of imported liquor, are regularly supplied by lobbyists or their employers for the legislators' benefit.

As a result of such questionable practices, legislators often end up indebted to the lobbyists and return the favors of winning and dining by being more partial to the lobbyists' concerns.

The committee says it is taking its time and trying to come up with really effective legislation. This is great if it succeeds, but time is running out. An election is coming up next year and most of the Senate will soon be busy campaigning.

If this ethics study is still in the planning stage when elections start rolling around, there is a great chance it will be shoved under the table until there is a more opportune time to work on it. This would be a tragic mistake.

There is a need for political ethics legislation, and the sooner the better. A list of political do's and don'ts would further legitimize relations between lobbyists and legislators and make elected lawmakers more accountable to the public interest.

Lifelong education starts in Troy

MSU's dream of lifelong education was given a shot in the arm today by the announcement of a new Advanced Management Center to be located in Troy.

The center, to be built by funds donated by Chrysler, Ford, and General Motors and some small businesses, will be operated by MSU's Graduate School of Business Administration. The 20 acre site was donated by Chrysler Corp.

The Advanced Management Program, to be housed in the new center, is designed to prepare professional executives for greater responsibility within their companies.

Currently, this program is housed in rented buildings around the Detroit area.

Lifelong education, designed to provide everyone in Michigan with a wide range of educational opportunities, has been one of the long-range plans of the University for the last few years. This center will bring it one step closer to reality.

MSU must continue to explore and take advantage of offers like the Advanced Management Center to insure that lifelong education will continue to expand and encompass people of all ages.

POINT OF VIEW

Children learn best creatively

By FRED BELINSKY

Instructor at Goodman School
Editor's note: This is written in response to the point of view of Patricia Nardi, which appeared in the Sept. 28 State News, under the headline "Students pay price to attend free school."

I don't know you but am disturbed by the apparent inflexibility of your attitude toward schooling and its relationship to life. My disturbance for the most part is not directed at you, but rather the fear and knowledge that people like you in powerful positions can and do make decisions that destroy personal differences of opinions and alternative institutions.

We at Goodman Free School certainly have different ideas about what we are looking for ourselves and for the children we teach. We do not accept the "nine to five reality of the world" and are not "training our graduates" to prepare for it. There are thousands of people, believe it or not, who are doing what they like at the times when they feel most like it and supporting themselves at the same time. People like Billy Jean King, Pablo Picasso and B.B. King are only three examples of people who seem to have found happiness in their work.

It is true that at the Goodman school we play a lot. We believe that learning is not a 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. drag that we have to "face up to." In our opinion, learning is a function of life, and if we can live openly, honestly and creatively at Goodman then learning, including the basics, will fall naturally into place.

I think it is ironic that the little girl mentioned in your letter is a housewife and good friend of mine. I can assure you her feelings on Goodman school and Marble school are much more profound than they were made out to be in your letter.

Like all of us, her feelings about things change all the time and right now she is having a learning experience in the public schools. I only wish that the people in the public schools could as easily choose to have a learning experience in a free school.

I hope you don't passively accept the whole world, but rather realize that you can have an impact on its change if you can avoid being mechanized, regimented and stifled in great part by oppressive institutions.

Whether Goodman school people or public school people will be "better equipped to handle real-life situations" seems a moot question. We at Goodman have chosen to take control of some of the decisions along the way pertaining to the education of our children.

LETTER POLICY

The State News welcomes all letters. Letters should be typed to a 65-space line and triple spaced. Letters should be signed and include hometown, student, faculty or staff standing and local address. No unsigned letters will be accepted. Letters may be edited for clarity and conciseness to accommodate more letters on the page, but definitely will not be edited for content.

Running books across the Red Cedar

To the Editor:
Some people, out in the "real world" may think that instructors have an easy time and carry out God knows what incomprehensible pursuits snugly sheltered from the worries of a hustling life.

Not so at MSU, where dealing with the MSU Bookstore provides us with the rich uicer - building opportunities of more glamorous trades, such as your river - boat gambler or cocoa futures broker.

My record is by no means exceptional, I fear, it is just that I have never given up chasing the impossible dream: a handbook corresponding to the order, in the right amount, arriving for the first day of class. Having confessed my bias, here is my record:

May 1970. Bookstore orders my McGraw - Hill book from Macmillan. Error had to wait until customer spotted it in September. Hundreds of students without books for weeks...

April 1971. Bookstore orders Canadian book from Paris (written in French, you know...) via New York. Students, without books for weeks. When books arrived price had gone up from $3.95 to $7.50.

(Transportation, you know...)

September 1972. McGraw - Hill book late (another one). Students without books for weeks...

April 1973. Appleton - Century - Crofts book on time, but could not be located in back room. Students without books.

September 1973. New management, new bookstore image, reform and service. Out of more than 300 McGraw - Hill books ordered, 70 come on the shelves. Hundreds of students without books.

New policy: for courses in series, books are ordered only for the first one. You have to fill in blanks for the other, but the bookstore will not order them.

Even for your first course, you will get only half of what you ordered because your book list was passed on to the competition in town and they want a piece of the action too.

This instructor's patience has been tried one time too many. He is going to take to the underground. I hereby announce that I am contemplating drastic action - violating copyrights, running books in from across the river, having them hand-copied by Black Forest gnomes, or ordering them from an adult bookstore. All of which would be illegal but certainly safer than dealing with the MSU Bookstore.

Council cautious over construction plan

By CHRIS DANIELSON
State News Staff Writer

If events of past months are any indication, the Ingham County Road Commission's proposal to widen a half-mile stretch of Kalamazoo Street and to straighten a section of the meandering Red Cedar River is certain to engender widespread local interest.

Under preliminary plans submitted to the University in August and presented to the East Lansing City Council Tuesday night, Kalamazoo Street will be widened from two to four lanes from the entrance of University Village in East Lansing to Clippert Street in Lansing Township.

The narrow two-lane bridge that now crosses the Red Cedar will be replaced by a longer four-lane bridge to be built 200 feet east of the present structure.

The $700,000 project will be partially financed by federal funds.

Since the river serves as part of the boundary between Lansing Township, East Lansing and MSU — and involves land owned or controlled by each unit — the project must be approved by all three bodies.

Environmental concern over several local road construction projects has mushroomed since May, and area residents have succeeded in delaying the realignment of the Michigan Avenue — Harrison Road intersection and halting the proposed extension of Ann Street.

Therefore, it came as no surprise when the city council referred the road commission plan to several committees for possibly months of study and discussion Tuesday night.

Prior to council's action, several residents, including traffic commission member Charles Massoglia, environmental and aesthetics quality task force member Ben Hickok and Michael Hodges, professor of landscape architecture, urged the council to refer the matter to the appropriate committees for intensive study.

"We had to jump the gun a bit because, in view of the Michigan Avenue — Harrison Road thing, we didn't know what they were going to do," Hodges said.

Councilman George Griffiths said after the meeting that "the whole idea of reconstructing Kalamazoo Street is a misplaced priority."

"The Kalamazoo Street problem is not nearly as bad as the railroad crossings on Harrison and Hagadorn roads," he added.

City Manager John Patriarche said that the construction plans would be formally submitted to the city planning commission Wednesday and to the traffic commission Oct. 29.

Both meetings are open to the public and will be held at 8 p.m. in the city council chamber.

The planning commission is expected to refer the plans to the environmental and aesthetics task force, Patriarche noted. He predicted that committee study could take as long as six months. County road commission engineer Robert Caltrider said he expected local hearings to hold up work longer than the commission would like.

Meanwhile, the Campus Parks and Planning Dept. has been reviewing the construction plans. Department director Milton Baron said that the project involves a section of low lying land known as the Red Cedar Natural Area.

He said that the plans had been approved by the Michigan Dept. of Natural Resources, the Army Corps of Engineers and the University's resident ecologist.

"The project has a great value to the University," Baron said.

Baron cited the elimination of a two-lane bottleneck on one of the main east-west routes between MSU and Lansing, and the curtailment of annual flooding problems as two of the greatest benefits.

"Flooding closes the road as often as several times a year," he noted.

He said that the county would construct bicycle paths, sidewalks and bus turn lanes in the area, and fill in the old river bed.

These improvements — in addition to landscaping of the affected area — would be carried out in accordance with the University's suggestions, Baron added.

Two MSU groups will review the plans in the next week, including the Building, Lands and Planning Committee — which advises President Wharton, he said.

Committee chairwoman Anne Garrison said she knew of no reason why the academic unit's next meeting at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday in the fourth floor board room of the Administration Bldg. would be closed to the public.

Final University approval of the project would come from the board of trustees, Baron said.

Lansing Township officials were unavailable for comments Wednesday.

DESPITE NONACCREDITED STATUS

Advertising of law school OK'd

By LINNEA BOESE
State News Staff Writer

The State Board of Education clears the way Tuesday for Supreme Court Justice Thomas E. Brennan's law school to continue advertising its degree program even though the school has not yet been accredited by the board.

Board members were disturbed that Thomas M. Cooley Law School stated in its 1973-74 bulletin that it "confers the degree of juris doctor upon its qualified graduates" without mentioning it is not accredited.

Brennan sent a justification of the statement to the board following the board's request for an explanation.

The conflict between the board and the law school centered on interpretations of a board resolution which allowed the school to open but withheld its right to grant degrees until the board had inspected and approved the school.

Annette Miller, Huntington Woods, was the only dissenter in the board's approval of a report from John W. Porter, state superintendent of public instruction. The report included a letter from Brennan.

She said that the Lansing law school was misleading students by not qualifying its statement in the bulletin, and called Brennan's justification a direct challenge of the board's authority to oversee the school's operations.

Porter told the board that the statement in the bulletin was justified because the board still has time to inspect the school and ask it to correct any deficiencies before its first graduating class in 1976.

The board could take legal action to prevent the school from awarding any degrees if it failed to comply with the board's requests, Porter said.

With the conflict resolved for the present, the law school will continue to advertise its degree program and wait for a visit from the board and the American Bar Assn., to which it has applied for provisional approval.

Brennan said the board's action was satisfactory and shows its recognition that the school "is on the right track."

Brennan will resign from the Supreme Court in December to head the law school, which opened in January with 223 students. He was criticized earlier this year for allegedly using his Supreme Court position to promote the school.

Holden, Brody cafeterias hiring for lunch-hour staff

By TRISHA KANE
State News Staff Writer

College students are perpetually job hunting and always complaining that the economy is tight and jobs are scarce.

But change in this trend of flooded job markets has occurred in several MSU Residence Hall cafeterias.

Jim Merton, Holden Hall food service manager, has over 50 job openings for his lunch crew and the Brody Complex cafeteria is also short of help.

"The main problem is that we limit our hiring to students," Merton said, "and schedule conflicts occur when students are needed to work from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m."

Holden cafeteria needs a staff of about 95 workers to rotate daily and hourly schedules.

With only 40 workers, lunch service is slow, tables are dirty, and food pans are empty.

Brody Complex Manager Thomas Dutch is running ads in his weekly hall newsletter to solicit student workers.

"We are willing to let students work partial or split lunch shifts," Dutch said, "or any hours that can be worked into a class schedule."

He said Brody residents would receive first priority for jobs there, followed by residents of other residence halls and lastly off-campus students.

"We are in desperate need of help," Dutch said. "We'll take anyone who can work the lunch shift, and if a student can work 20 hours a week, they would be filling about three openings." The ruling which orders the Office of Financial Aids to monitor student payrolls has scared many students away from on-campus jobs, Dutch believes.

The ruling, which took effect last year, states that once a student reaches a financial quota of earnings set by the office, they are forced to quit their jobs.

Dutch also blamed higher wages off-campus as a cause of the need for cafeteria help in Brody Complex. Both managers said applicants are scarce for residence hall crew jobs, which pay $1.90 hourly wage.

Robert Underwood, residence halls manager, said the only shortages he was aware of were in Holden Hall and Brody Complex. He could give no explanation for the shortages and call them "peculiar."

A survey taken of other residence cafeterias showed that probably all are adequately staffed and experiencing staff fluctuations which are common for the beginning of a term.

ASMSU officials deny rumors concerning lawsuit against MSU

Unconfirmed rumors saying ASMSU is considering a law suit against the MSU administration were denied Wednesday by ASMSU officials.

The rumors indicate that the suit would focus on the University housing requirement, but Larry Bartrem, executive assistant to ASMSU President Ed Grafton, said there is no basis to the rumors.

The housing requirement, a traditional ASMSU concern, basically states that all freshman and sophomore students must live in University-supervised housing unless they live at home with their parents and commute to school, are married, are military veterans with one or more years of active service or attain the age of 20 by the last day of registration fall term. University-supervised housing includes residence halls, fraternities, sororities, religious living units and cooperatives.

"Certainly one of our major concerns is student housing," Bartrem said. "It's one of student government's biggest concerns. But right now we're just too busy working on the trustee liaison proposal, the ASMSU budget and other things. We just don't have the time to pursue that avenue at this time."

Sources say, however, contrary to Bartrem, that ASMSU has spoken in private about such a suit and has consulted with its attorney, Ken Smith, on the subject.

How you express yourself depends upon your camera.

Today almost everybody is getting into photography. And it's not the snapshot variety. People are doing sports stories, nature stories, portraits — you may even have a friend who's doing photographs through a microscope. Or a telescope.

You also know that everybody has his own idea about which camera is best. That's why it's important for you to know about the Canon F-1. Because it's the system camera that's fast becoming the favorite of professionals. And the new status symbol among photography enthusiasts.

The whole F-1 system includes over 40 lenses and 200 accessories. It's capable of doing virtually everything in photography. So whatever idea you have for a picture, the F-1 has the equipment to make sure you get it.

Because it was conceived from the beginning as a system, it works as a system. All the elements are quickly and easily interchangeable. No matter which lens or accessory you use with the F-1 body you won't have the feeling that something has been "tacked on."

What's more the F-1 is comfortable to handle. Years of research went into the design of the F-1 body and placement of controls so your fingers fall naturally into place. You'll appreciate this comfort when you're on assignment. It's also an important thing to keep in mind if you're investing in a camera you plan to keep a long time.

Canon has been in the optics industry over 37 years. We make microscope equipment, amateur and professional movie cameras and TV lenses. It's this experience that helps make our still cameras the best selling cameras in Japan. In America, it's just a matter of time.

See your dealer for more information. He'll also show you Canon's other SLR cameras like the FTb and TLb. Both of which offer accurate metering, easy film loading, a wide range of lenses and the same standard of engineering that goes into the F-1.

Water polo growing sport

By STEVE STEIN
State News Sports Writer

Helped greatly by the national exposure it received during the last Olympic games, water polo is one of the fastest growing sports at American high schools and colleges today.

MSU's young water polo club, a member of the 10-team Midwest Water Polo Conference, begins play this weekend in Chicago with a 17-man squad composed of only one senior and two juniors.

"We had a larger turnout this year than we have had in recent years," said Dave Porteous, a senior, and asst. player-coach. Junior Ken Danhof is coach.

The team still has room for other players.

"This year will be a rebuilding year, but we'll come into our own pretty soon. I anticipate we'll have a strong bench — everyone will see a lot of action."

The club was one of the few teams in the country when it started nine years ago.

"The sport lacked exposure, but now its up and coming game," Porteous said. "There has been an increase in high school water polo. Now, we are getting people who have experience."

John Barson, associate dean of osteopathic medicine, is the club's adviser. He said half the freshmen on the Spartan club were top high school players.

The game of water polo is not a complex one. It combines aspects of basketball and hockey — and is characterized by rough and aggressive play.

Six swimmers and one goalie are in the playing area, which is 25 yards long (width depends upon the pool) and all in deep water. The object is to pass the ball around, maneuvering it into the other team's goal. There are eight-minute stop-time quarters.

Porteous said Olympic coverage showed there is a lot of rough play under the water. "This is very common — it's an extremely rough, very nasty game," he said. "The referees check fingernails before the game and players had better wear two suits. You also should get a suit two sizes too small."

A player is ejected with five personal fouls, and the other team gets a free shot on goal after each 10 team personal fouls.

"The rough part is spectacular, but if its too overt, you can be thrown out of the game," Porteous said. "The sharp, quick passes to set up goals are very impressive."

"It's similar to basketball because you set picks, screens and have fast breaks."

"Much hinges not on swimming, but how long you have played — how well you handle the ball," Porteous commented.

Porteous said MSU is one of few schools which does not allow varsity swimmers to compete in water polo. Both Indiana and the University of Michigan allow it.

"Water polo helps you get into shape, have fun and break the monotony of training," he said. "It's a psychological boost."

The conference championship meet will be held at the Men's Intramural pool Nov. 9 and 10.

MSU will play U-M immediately after the Oct. 13 football game here.

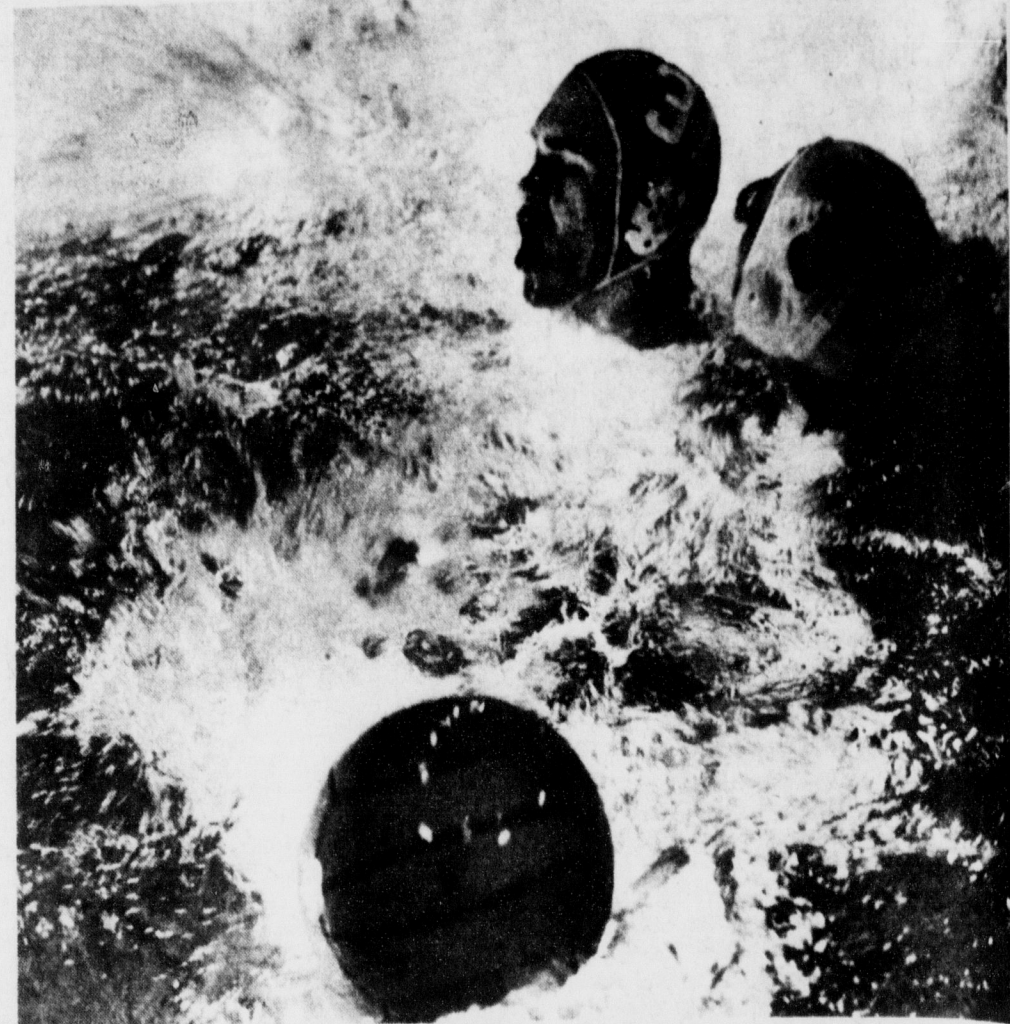

"Teams like coming here because we have excellent facilities," Porteous said.

MSU faces Loyola Friday and then three schools Saturday, Minnesota, Chicago-Circle and George Williams, all in dual meets.

Barson said the squad has good size.

Danhof is 6-5, 225 pounds. Other players Barson and Porteous expect big things from include sophomore Bill McCord (6-4, 195), junior Paul Sorensen; freshmen John Walsh, a goalie, and Tom Barson, both from East Lansing, and frosh Richard Ledbetter (Midland), Stan Ludwig (Ferndale), Ralph Eck (Lake Forest, Ill.) and Gary Noel (Allen Park).

Watery battle

Water polo, though a team sport, can turn into an individual struggle when two opposing players battle for possession of the ball. Here, two members of the MSU water polo team go after the ball during a practice session. "It's a team thing, and a personal thing, too," Dave Porteous, player-coach, said. "You have to work against the guy guarding you."

Third meeting Topless

Detroit teachers explain defiance of court order

DETROIT (UPI) — The nation's largest and longest school strike dragged into its 30th day with both striking teachers and board of education negotiators reported "hopelessly" deadlocked.

More than 10,600 teachers went on strike Sept. 4, leaving more than 270,000 students on an enforced vacation that not even a court order could end.

Teachers returned to a Wayne county circuit court Wednesday, the third day of legal arguing, to explain why they defied an earlier order to return to their classrooms.

If found in contempt of his earlier order, Judge Thomas J. Foley could jail teachers union leaders for as long as 12 months and fine their union thousands of dollars.

While the court arguments continued, both sides stopped talking about a new contract.

But a state mediator said the teachers and school board are "hopelessly deadlocked" on several issues, including pay, life insurance and limits on class size.

On pay, teachers were reported seeking as much as 9.7 per cent increases while the school board was reported unwilling to go any higher than 5.5 per cent.

WSU president criticizes suggestion of tuition hike

DETROIT (UPI) — The president of Wayne State University Wednesday criticized a recent recommendation by the Committee for Economic Development that tuition charges be doubled at public colleges and universities.

"The students we serve at Wayne State University have, by-and-large, marginal support for their college education," George E. Cullen Jr., Wayne State president. "We want to encourage these students to come to us and to stay with us, no matter how many years it may take."

"But we can't provide the education they need if we are forced to raise tuition to the levels suggested by the committee. Its intentions are good, but wholly out of touch with the realities of today, Cullen added.

Cullen said the committee's recommendation "appears to be in direct opposition to a report from the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education which urges public colleges and universities to provide more and varied educational training opportunities for a greater variety of citizens."

Public higher education has always been committed to providing higher education to everyone who wants and needs it, and at the lowest possible cost," Cullen said.

He added that it would be impossible to meet the growing needs for education and training among older and working people on the one hand and then to increase tuition on the other.

Volunteer service helps area tenants

East Lansing-area tenants with housing problems can now find answers to their questions in a drop-in or phone-in service provided by the Tenants Resource Center.

Trained volunteers able to answer questions about security deposits, maintenance, evictions and the new East Lansing housing maintenance code staff the resource center's office between 1 and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday in a basement at 501 M.A.C. Ave.

The Tenants Resource Center grew out of housing research done by a few East Lansing residents in recent years, Mark Charles, one of the center's founders, said.

"We felt there was a real need for question answering and opportunities to pass along what we've learned," Charles said.

The answering service has helped five to 10 people a day since mid-September, Charles said.

"Damage deposits are the most common problem," he said. "People think they're entitled to all of their deposit or more than the landlord has given them."

Charles said a new state law that says security deposits are the tenant's property should help solve some of these problems. It places restrictions on what the landlord can do with the deposit money and regulates the way it is returned.

An intensive 16-hour training program will be held this weekend to teach volunteers the basics of housing law, the nature of the East Lansing housing situation and how to help people by phone.

Charles said volunteers should call the resource center, 337-7247, for more information.

Advanced Management

This is an artist's rendering of the new $4 million MSU Advanced Management Center which will be constructed on a 20-acre site in Troy.

The project will be privately financed and then donated to MSU for operation by the Graduate School of Business of Management. Classes should begin in early 1975.

MSU Advanced Management Training Center has fund raising kickoff

technological advances that are daily reshaping their existence," Wharton said.
The core of the center's program will be the existing Advanced Management Program which has been operating out of rented quarters in the Detroit area.

This program is a two year course leading to a master's degree in business administration. People who already hold responsible management positions take part in the program to fill in the background information they need to move up in their company.

Participants are selected and sponsored by their company. Ford, General Motors, Chrysler, Michigan Bell, IBM, and several smaller companies, including Detroit-area hospitals, have participated. A spokesman for the program noted that the number of participants from large companies is limited because they prefer to have all types of jobs represented in the classroom discussions. Participants continue their regular job while spending eight hours per week in class. 120 executives are currently participating in the program. The 30,600 square foot building will be built on 20 acres of land immediately north of I-75 Freeway at the southeast corner of Crooks and Square Lake (19 Mile) roads. The site was donated by Chrysler Corporation. The center will incorporate the newest audio visual educational equipment, a business library, computer and console room for training.

telephone book one year ago. Larry Dreffe, owner of the East Lansing station said he had not been directly informed of Gulf's plans to discontinue his lease, but he said his customers have kept him up to date.

The joint committee investigating the energy crisis has many options to meet the burgeoning fuel shortage but the chairman of the committee admits all of the options are grim.

State Rep. William Fitzgerald, D-Detroit, admits that, with Gulf leaving the northern region "high and dry," his committee may have to re-evaluate the free enterprise system.

"Gulf says they can not make a profit in the northern area. If they can not make a profit how do they expect newly functioning independent dealers to make a go of it?" he asked.

Phillips told the committee Wednesday that Gulf distributors would deliver gas to independent dealers for the next year, while closing all their own stations.

His committee has been holding hearings since July to determine the extent of the energy shortage in Michigan. Members have learned that the state is one million gallons of gas short of the necessary allotment and that school districts in the northern area may have to close down for lack of fuel to power school buses among other things.

The committee will submit a preliminary report to the legislature when it reconvenes in late October and later submit its full report with possible recommendations for legislation.

Mandatory fuel allocation is a strong possibility, Fitzgerald said.

"We are only a legislative committee; I do not have any delusions of grandeur," he said. "But we have a duty to do something for the State of Michigan."

Fuel allocations will probably crimp the diesel, jet and kerosene fuel markets first, and then hit passenger cars, according to Fitzgerald. "It's better to keep a guy warm in his house than in his car," he said.

How close homes will come to a fuel crisis Fitzgerald does not know. "It all depends on how bitter the winter gets," he said.

Rep's proposal on land use called bureaucratic

stronger laws backing them up."

While opponents of the bill agree with Mastin's contention that a state land use plan is necessary, they will not agree with the mechanics of bringing that plan to creation.

"The Mastin bill is bureaucratically cumbersome but it is only the mechanics of the bill that I disagree with," Gazlay, director of the Dept. of Natural Resources said. "I agree with his philosophy that tougher laws are needed to control rising and abusive land development. But I can't agree that an entirely new bureaucratic process is needed."

Gazlay and Milliken's land use aide Mark Mason feel that amendments to existing laws are a more viable solution and essentially easier to legislate. They suggest that existing state agencies could be legislated to handle the same functions that Mastin would allocate to his proposed channels.

Mason said that Milliken is formulating his own land use planning proposals and will present them in the near future. He added that specific attention will be given to supporting agricultural taxation relief, outlining sanctions on shoreline and unique-areas land use and other individual legislative proposals dealing with land use planning.

"The governor is most concerned with land-use planning in Michigan and is studying various proposals to alleviate the land development boom, Mason said.

The main aspects of the Mastin bill include:

A seven member land use commission, housed in the Dept. of Natural Resources, that would establish a state land use plan after receiving input from subordinate agencies involved in coordinating the land usage.

An advisory council, consisting of 40 members representing business, citizens, labor and land groups in the state. This council would provide the various interest groups a forum for making their ideas on state land use planning known.

A state land adjudicatory board, an independent agency within the governor's office, which would hear and decide appeals from local governments involved in an aspect of the land use plan.

ALSAC A WINNER

No losers in Bull Bowl

By CHARLES JOHNSON
State News Sports Writer

When the Pigs and the Freaks clash Sunday in the fourth annual Bull Bowl at Spartan Stadium, don't expect to see anything but a good, hard-hitting football game.

The game, which will benefit Aid to Leukemia Stricken American Children (ALSAC), will have comedian-singer Danny Thomas on hand to present some special awards at halftime.

Just three days before the contest, both teams are wrapping up more than two months of preparation.

The Pigs, composed of area police officers from all agencies, will be going after their second straight victory after eking out a 14-13 win last year before 20,000 spectators.

The Freaks, made up of a cross section of students and Lansing-area young people, have had to live with the losing feeling for a year and will be trying to rack up their third triumph after capturing the title in 1970 and 1971.

Chuck Rose, coach of the Freaks and one of the coordinators of the benefit game, is optimistic about his team's chances.

"We believe that we're going to be ready for the Pigs this time around," Rose said. "Last year we just made too many silly mistakes and killed ourselves. I don't see that happening this year."

"We're not as big physically this year as we have been in the past, but undoubtedly the enthusiasm is the best since we've been having this benefit," Rose added.

Jim Quinn, campus police officer and member of the Pigs, sees the outcome as a tossup, but emphasized the Pigs don't plan to go out there oinking.

"We've looked very tough in practice and I think the same thing will show out there on the field this Sunday," Quinn said. "The team has been practicing for two months, three times a week for two hours and you can believe that we're going to be out there to win."

East Lansing outlets for tickets are: Cambell's Smoke Shop, the Brewery, Campus Bookstore, Canterbury Shop, Beggars Banquet, Campus Sport and Surplus Shop, State Discount and Brother Gambit Slick.
